

AN INSTITUTION
OF General History: OR THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

The FOURTH PART.

CONTAINING

The Original and Kingdoms of the Heruli, Goths, Lombards and Franks in Italy; the Affairs of Britain; the Original of the Saxons, Angles and Jutes, their Heptarchy; the Monarchy of the English Saxons, that of the Danes, with its end in restoring of the English Saxon Line down to that of William the Norman, with the Polity, Customs, Laws and Language then in use.

AND ALSO

That of the Constantinopolitan Roman Empire, from the Promotion of Nicephorus to the Death of Constantine Ducas XII. A. D. MLXVII. being the Year after the Conquest of this Nation by Duke William the Norman.

By WILLIAM HOWEL, LL. D. sometime Fellow of Magdalen College in Cambridge.

L O N D O N,
Printed for the Author's Widow by Miles Flesher. MDCLXXXV.

T O

The High and Mighty PRINCE

JAMES II.

KING of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

GREAT SIR,

AMONG the Crowds of Loyal Counties and Corporations that Address themselves unto Your MAJESTY, vouchsafe to permit a desolate Widow to approach into Your Sacred Prefence to Congratulate Your Happy and most Just Possession of the Throne of these Kingdoms, by laying a small Present at Your Royal Feet.

Which is due to Your MAJESTY by a double Title, both by right of Succession to our late Gracious Sovereign, by whose Royal Bounty this Work was encouraged; and also by designment of the Authour, who intended, had not his Death prevented it, to have Dedicated this Book To His Royal Highness JAMES the Duke of York, which I now most humbly offer To the Sacred Majesty of King JAMES the Second.

Whom I beseech the King of Kings long to preserve beloved of all his Subjects, dreaded by all his Enemies, and renowned to all Posterity in the History of Future Ages.

So prayeth with due Reverence

Your Majesty's most Loyal Subject

Mary Howel.

THE P R E F A C E TO THE R E A D E R

Giving an Account of this VOLUME.

W H I C H contains the History of the Kingdom of the Heruli in Italy to the Conquering thereof by the Goths, then their Original and Kingdom to the Destruction and Ruine thereof by Narses the Roman General and the coming in of the Lombards, with the Original and Kingdom of them down to the Conquering of it by Charles King of the Franks, who Governed there, and was Crowned Emperour by Leo Bishop of Rome: Next the Affairs of Britain from the departure of the Romans out of the Island to the Destruction thereof, and forcing the Inhabitants into the Mountainous places by the Picts, Scots and Saxons: the Original of the Saxons, Angles and Jutes that seized on this Land, their Heptarchy, which was united in the Monarchy of the English Saxons, and carried on till Conquered by the Danes, their Original and Kingdom here to its end, in restoring of the English Saxon Line to the end thereof, being Conquered by Duke William the Norman, giving an Account of the Polity, Customs, Laws and Language then in use, taken from the Original Tongue, with other critical Remarks suitable to the nature and usefulness of such an Undertaking.

With the Constantinopolitan Roman Affairs from the Deposing of Irene and Promotion of Nicephorus (where the Third Part ends) to the Death of Constantine Ducas XII. Ann. Dom. MLXVII. being the year after the Conquest of Duke William the Norman, setting forth the several Actions, Polities, Laws and things of Moment during ring the Reign of each Emperour, with such Kingdoms as fell off from the Roman power and protection, and those that started up to the terrour of it and all its Neighbours, all linked together in such manner and method as never was yet Extant, being the Labour and Study left under his own hand in Writing by the Authour, whereof we have been Eye-witnesses,

H. London.

Tho. Roffen.

Sy. Patrick, D. D.

Will. Denton, M. D.

Rich. Ashfeild, Gent.

A N

A N INSTITUTION
O F
General History:
O R
The History of the World.

The Fourth Part.

BOOK I.

Of such Kingdoms and Principalities as were Founded by Barbarous Nations in the Late Roman Provinces now contemporary with the Constantinopolitan Roman Empire.

CHAP. I.

Of the Kingdoms of the Heruli, Goths, Lombards and Franks Erected in Italy.

SECT. I.

The Kingdom of the Heruli in Italy,

The space of Eighteen years.

Odacer King of Italy and Rome.

ODACER King of the Heruli and Turcilingi having, as we have formerly shewn, Conquered and destroyed Orestes, and deposed Augustulus his Son, became Master of Italy, and of Rome, formerly the Mistress of the World, which hereby was also degraded, together with Augustulus, the Imperial Diadem being plucked from her Head, and the Robe torn from about her Shoulders. The Conquerour viewing the Remains of her Ancient Majesty, and contemplating the Lines of that Beauty wherein she had surpassed all Rivals, as much as the Light of the Moon doth that of the obscure and twinkling Stars, was confounded and amazed, could scarcely believe what he had done, or where he was; and conscious of the Extravagancy of his own Fortune, as well as of the vicissitude of humane Affairs in general,

B

Sect. I.

Secl. I. neral, durst not, it seems, be so bold as to take up and assume the Imperial Ensigns which now lay at his Feet, but contented himself with an Inferiour Dignity. Thinking the Imperial Robe now to be threadbare or infected with some deleterious Quality, which of late had suffered none to wear it long, though he might have chosen another, which by its newness might have been both warm and safe, yet he onely changed the Imperial for Royal, the Title of Emperour for the more modest and less envied one of King of Italy, refusing utterly all Ensigns of Royal Majesty. The Ancient Lady in her great affliction was pleased to see this humility in a barbarous Robber, comforted her self with the good Fortune of her Daughter, which still in the East retained her Imperial Dignity; she purposed to remove lower down towards the River, and quit those seven Hills on which she had been so much and so often exposed to Northern Blasts, and she had thoughts of taking another Course, which should be honourable as well as the former, gain her more applause and more suitable to her Age, and the Gravity of her present Aspect, to change the Title of Prince for that of Priest, and the Imperial Diadem for a Pontifical Miter.

2. Our new King of Italy as he thought to establish a new Kingdom, which should call him Founder, so of fixing the Seat thereof at some new Place, and of building a new City which he intended to call after his own Name Odoacer. But either finding the Vanity of this Project, or being diverted from it by greater Cares, he took other Courses, for securing his Interest. The Goths which had been called into Italy by Valentinian, to defend the Country against the Hunnes, he endeavoured to oblige by bestowing on them those Lands which formerly, but ineffectually, had been promised them. He granted to Erich, King of the Vesgoths, that part of Gall lying betwixt the Alpes and the River Rhodanus, and onely remaining under the Authority of the Romans. With Gundobade King of the Burgundians he made a League and Alliance. On the Italians he laid Taxes and Impositions sufficient to maintain an Army against foreign Invasions. Then to prevent intestine broils, he deprived the Roman Senate of its ancient Authority, and took away at first the use of Consuls, that he might diminish the Roman Spirit and Courage, by abolishing such Rites as put them in mind of the great Performances of their Ancestours. As to other matters, he retained the old Names and Offices of Magistracy, and maintained the Church in its ancient Rights and Immunities. When he had done these things, and as he thought laid lasting Foundations of his new Dominion, he left Rome to the Government of Basilius the Prefect and Patriitian, and removed his Court to Ravenna. There he had not been long settled, when Zeno the Emperour, hearing how his matters succeeded, envied his good Fortune, grudged him his new Possessions, and utterly refused to own, acknowledge or ratifie his Kingly Title to Italy. Such therefore was the Reverence as yet born to the Imperial Name, that this got him the Repute of an Usurper, a Tyrant and an unlawfull Prince; which made him enter into new Councils for strengthening himself, and add Fear and Awe to that Love which hitherto he had especially desired to gain from his Subjects. For an Example of terror he put to death at Ravenna Brachilus a Comes, who some say spurned against his Government. Hereby it was perceived that he knew his measures, and understood how to manage his Affairs, and thereupon he began both to be feared and respected at home and abroad; inasmuch that Genferich King of the Vandals in Africk desired his Friendship, and to obtain it granted Sicily to him to be held in Tribute.

3. Odoacer, as we said, refused to name any Consul for the West, and it happened for several years that sometime one single one was created in the East, and sometime there was none at all. The Italians resented it, that by the willfulness of their present Master, they should be deprived of that highest Office of Magistracy and Honour, and therefore to please them, he preferred Basilius the Prefect to that Name and Dignity, which he also executed without a Colleague, in the year of our Lord CCCLXXX, in the seventh of the Emperour Zeno, and the fifth of Odoacer. Now was it five years since Julius Nepos, being deposed from the Empire of the West, lived quietly in Dalmatia by the knowledge and approbation of Odoacer, who wished him all repose and security imaginable. But at this time Viator and Ovida, who had the Title of Comites, bearing him malice, circumvented him at his Country-house, set upon him and murdered him. Odoacer whether acted by generosity of Nature, or by Jealousie, and apprehension of so evil an Example, took it in great Disdain, and the year following, for which he named Placidius Consul, sent some Forces against them, and having Secl. I. having easily overcome them put Ovida to death. This fame year the Inhabitants of Liguria complained to him by Epiphanius Bishop of Pavia, that Pelagius the Præfatus Prætorius had doubled the Impositions upon the Country. By the Intercession of the said Bishop they obtained a Relaxation, and this Prelate having bestowed much cost and pains in repairing the Churches formerly ruined in his City by the Wars, obtained also of Odoacer a Remission of Tributes for five years, as an encouragement to the Citizens to rebuild their Private-Houses.

4. After this, Odoacer found an occasion for employing his Arms, and it was against the Rugi a Northern People. He did it with such success, as we are told, that he took Prisoner Phæbas their King, together with his Wife, and led them in triumph to Rome; but Frederick their Son made his Escape, and went to Theodorich King of the Ostrogoths, who then lay in Mæfia, and by this time had his thoughts so much upon Odoacer and Italy, that he presently shewed they were very serious and active. This Theodorich had been some time in Zeno's Court at Constantinople, and was, it's said, highly honoured by him, inasmuch that he made him Consul, and not long after he took a resolution to invade Italy. But as to the Inducement there are two different Assertions. The one is of those who affirm that Zeno had always a great Kindness for Theodorich, and freely granted Italy to him to reign there, after he should have driven out the Heruli with Odoacer their King. The other makes Theodorich to have been ingrateful towards the Emperour, from whom he endeavoured to wrest the Empire of the East, to have brought into danger the City of Constantinople by Fire, and burnt many other Places. Having missed of his Aims there, he turned himself upon Italy, envying the prosperous Estate of Odoacer, who had lately overthrown the Rugi. From what Enagrus writes, one may guess that Zeno was not always his friend; but what should be the occasion is uncertain. Eustathius an Historian it seems laid the blame upon the Emperour, and Marcellinus on Theodorich. The Writers that were his Countrymen will have him sent by the liking, well wishes, and encouragement of Zeno: we shall present the Reader with the Story clothed with such Circumstances as we find it.

5. Whilst Theodorich therefore solaced himself with the Pleasures of Zeno's Court, his Ostrogoths lived at a quite different Rate, being by a League tied up from making any Depredations in the Roman Dominions; and not sufficiently provided for by the pay which the Emperour had agreed to give them. They curse the League, cry out against their King's Alliance, and to Constantinople they send Messengers, who with tears in their Eyes complained to him of the Poverty and Necessities to which they were reduced, and desire him to quit those pleasures wherein he had intangled himself, and if he regarded his own Interest, and their Preservation, to return to them with speed; for else they must enter into some new Course, and seek out other Habitations. Now say the Gothick Historians, and those that follow them, Theodorich moved herewith betook himself presently to Zeno, to whom he laid open the sad Estate of his Countrymen, and told him that seeing Italy was overrun by the Turcilingi and Rugi, and Rome the late Mistress of the World, and ancient Seat of the Empire, was now invaded to the Heruli; if he pleased to give him order to redeem and recover it out of their Hands, he would do his utmost endeavour, and therein employ his Kill and indigent Ostrogoths. If he should accomplish his Desires, the Honour and Renown would belong, as due, to his imperial Majesty; and if he miscarried, he would be rid of so many Stipendiaries, and save his money in his Coffers. This Zeno heard with Trouble, being very unwilling to part with him, but as well to give him content, as in Compliance with the publick Interest, he gave him leave, and dismissed him with great presents, to his designed Expedition.

6. Thus writes Jordanus the Goth from the relation of Cassiodorus, or out of respect to his Countrymen, and such as follow him. But Sigonius, all relations considered, closeth with that of Marcellinus, that Theodorich now fatiated with the Honours and Favours heaped upon him, consented to the Petition of his Countrymen, and returning into Mæfia made war upon the Emperour, whilst his men were fresh, and their appetites were sharpened by the prevalent Power of necessity, and expectation. He marched as far as Constantinople and Melambius, and wasting the Country round about returned to Novæ a Town of Mæfia, from which he had set forth. At this time Odoacer, being told that Frederick the Son of Phæbas, or Feleteus, King of the Rugi, was after his flight returned home into his own Country, sent Onusius his Brother with a strong party of men against him. Hereupon Frederick not able to endure the shock retired to Novæ, and made his application to Theodorich. Omfus easily conquered the Rugi, whom he constrained to pass into Italy, and then the Lombards under Conduct of Gudeach their King seized on their Country. Zeno all this while, as Sigonius tells you, was highly sensible of the Affront done him by Theodorich, but prudently considered there was no dealing roughly with such a Spirit; and therefore in the year when Dinamius and Siphodius were Consuls, or the CCCLXXXVIII of Our Lord, he wrote to him most loving Letters, and kindly invited him to return to Court. Theodorich, if thou wilt look into it, Reader, notwithstanding all the Mischief he had done, closed with his invitation, went to Constantinople, and there excused his Misdemeanours by that necessity to which his Goths had been reduced. Zeno was as ready to give as he was to ask Pardon, and to grant him any other thing for the employment of his Men, and the raising of his own Fortunes. Animated by this Reception, he moved the Conquest of Italy to him, using such Arguments as we formerly mentioned, inculcating that it would be more seemly, that he his faithfull Servant, and his Son, should possess that Country; than Odoacer keep the Senate and Common-wealth in slavery. Zeno to free Illyricum from the Goths was very willing he should try his Fortune, and by an Authentick Writing passed Italy over to him, bestowed on him a sacred Cap, and recommending to him the Roman Senate and People gave him leave to depart and begin his Journey.

Sect. 1.

Theodorich overthrows the Gepidae and Bulgari.

7. Theodorich and his Goths were ready for their march, when an unexpected Accident diverted them, and for some time retarded their Expedition. Transilla King of the Gepidae, and Busa of the Bulgari either jealous of his growing greatness, or solicited by Odoacer, who desired to remove the danger from his own Doors, indeavoured to crush his Design by falling upon him on a sudden, when he little expected such Treachery. Yet was he not at all daunted with the great danger which impended, but boldly attacking them when they were divided, in one engagement overthrew Transilla, and in another battel defeated the Bulgari, a sort of People newly come out of Scythia. Animated by his Success as an Omen of his future Grandeur, with greater vigour he prepared for his Italian voiage, and when all things were ready, set forth from Mesja in the middle of Winter, in the Consulship of Probinus, and Eusebius in the CCCLXXXIX year of Our Lord, as is evident from the Chronicon of Cassiodorus who lived at this time, though Sigonius calls this Expedition into the following year. From Mesja the whole Multitude of Ostrogoths removed with their Wives, Children and Baggage, and travelling through Syrmium and Pannonia came by Land to the Borders of Italy, for they had no Ships to transport them in the nearest passage. Proceeding as far as the River Sontius which runs not far from Aquileia, they there made a halt and incamped, because of the convenience of pasture. Here Odoacer presented himself on the farther side, resolving to stop their progress, and for that purpose he secured the Bridge, where at this day is seen a Town called Goritia. But notwithstanding all he could do, Theodorich forced his way over, and presently giving him battel drove him back into his Camp, which to form he made all Preparations. Odoacer perceiving his Intentions, and that he was unable to maintain it, quitted the place, and taking advantage retired to Verona, for there was no Fort nor Garrison near at hand; the Devastations made by Attila not being yet repaired. Whilst he was thus employed in defending his Borders against the Goths, Gundobade the King of the Burgundians, pretending he was circumvented in a League made with him, took the Advantage now offered, and invading Liguria and Emilia, wasted and plundered the Country; then hearing of Theodorich his Success and Progress, he hastily retreated with his Booty into Burgundy.

8. Theodorich having taken order for securing the Borders, as he saw agreeable to his own Interest, followed Odoacer, and laid down before Verona. Odoacer had by this time rallied his dispersed Forces, and recruited them so with new Levies, that seeming to himself as able to grapple with him as before, he came out of the Town and gave him battel; wherein he was again overthrown with great slaughter of his Men, and forced to betake himself to his heels; and a great number of his Soldiers, which escaped the Fight, took the River Atthesis in desperation and haste, and were swallowed by the Floods. Verona was quickly delivered by the trembling Citizens to the Conquerour, who made no stay in the Town; but still pursued Odoacer, and near the River Abdua forced him the third time to engage, with the same Success as formerly. Odoacer in so great Straits yet comforted himself a little in the City of Rome, of which if he continued Master, he hoped he might maintain his Reputation, and better endure the shock of Defeats him again, and takes Verona.

A third time.

Sect. 1.

of Fortune, which he would fain believe could not be lasting, it was so violent and severe. He resolved therefore to hasten thither, but when he came he found the Gates fast locked and bolted, and the Walls manned against him, the Senate and People some think having intimation of the Emperour's pleasure concerning Theodorich. Inraged at this Repulse, he burnt and demolished as much of the Suburbs as the time would give him leave, and then made for Ravenna as his last Refuge. This City also one Libitta kept for Theodorich, and lay incamped before it for that purpose. But Odoacer acted by the indignation as well as extreme Necessity of his Affairs, resolved to drive him from his Post, and after a sharp conflict, wherein many perished on both sides, he slew Libitta, and took both his Camp and Ravenna, which he entered on the tenth of July. Here he labours to fortifie himself, when in the mean time Theodorich marches to Milan, which having got into his hands without much trouble, a great part of the Italian Soldiers there came to wait on him as the true and rightfull Lord of Italy. Amongst others was Epiphanius Bishop of Pavia, whom he received with great respect.

9. Here when he seemed to have conquered the greatest Difficulties, and to have arrived almost at the pitch of his good Fortune, an untowardly Accident plucked him by the sleeve, and put him in mind of the Inconstancy of humane Affairs. For his Italians, who so lately came to acknowledge him for their Prince and Sovereign, persuaded by one Tuffa a man of Consular Dignity, revolted again to Odoacer; which struck him with great terror and amazement, and caused him to quit Milan, in the fidelity and strength whereof he could not so much rely, and go to Pavia, where he thought he could better secure himself and his Friends. Odoacer takes the opportunity, and sits down before the Town. Epiphanius the Bishop labours all he can to compose the Difference, and procure such Prisoners to be restored as were taken on both sides, without Ransome. Now whether by his Ghostly Counsel Odoacer was moved, or rather discouraged by the Valour and Success of the Goths whom Heaven seemed to favour, he raised his Siege and marched back to Ravenna. Theodorich spirited afresh by so unexpected a Retreat, resolved not to trifle in that manner with his Fortune; and slight his opportunities, but leaving the Women and Baggage at Pavia followed the Enemy to Ravenna, which he blocked up in three several Places, not being well able for the situation to get up and storm it. For the City lying two Furlongs distance from the Sea is hardly accessible on any part: the Haven full of Rocks and Shallows, the ground about it fenny and waterish, as well by the flowing in of the Sea, as Rivers taking their Course thorough it. Therefore Theodorich took up one Post at Pinetus three Miles from the Town, placed another Party at Palatiolum, and had a third Guard at the Bridge of Candidianus, waiting for such opportunities as the Siege should produce. Odoacer perceiving he was over matched in Valour and Conduct, if not in numbers, was unwilling to make any Sallies, yet constrained to do something for his Reputation, he issued out, and fell upon the Party lying at the Bridge, where he was so warmly received, that he found it expedient to make a quick retreat into the City. Theodorich foreseeing, that the Siege was likely to be drawn out in length, would not spend all his time in so lazy an employment, but leaving sufficient Guards to maintain his Posts, marched to other Towns possessed by the Enemy, became Master of them, and having taken Ariminum, improved the Advantage offered him thereby of stopping all Provisions from being carried by Sea to Ravenna. These things got him much Reputation, that Gundamund King of Africk, (the Successour of Humerich that Arian Persecutor who was eaten up of worms) sent Ambassadors, made peace with him, and left off wasting Sicily, which he had invaded.

Takes Ariminum and other Cities.

10. The Siege was carried on very gently; few considerable Acts of Hostility intervening, only light skirmishes which the Besieged made to exercise his men, and tire out the Enemy, till Theodorich returned from his Expedition against the other Cities. Having taken them all, Cesarea excepted, which Odoacer had furnished with a very strong Garrison, he returned to his former Post at Palatiolum, on the twenty ninth of August, and removing his Family thither from Ticinum or Pavia vigorously renewed the Siege. Hereby Odoacer was so straitened for want of Provisions, that having made many ineffectual Sallies, at last, armed by Necessity and Desperation, in the silence of the Night he led out his whole Army, which Theodorich was not so negligent as not to perceive, and therefore drew his Forces together, and made himself ready to receive him. Here evidently appeared what influence Necessity and Passions have upon humane Actions. Such as formerly were Odoacer kept out of Rome.

Theodorich takes Milan.

Odoacer besieges him in Pavia, but rises presently.

Theodorich besieges Odoacer in Ravenna.

SECT. I.

Driven to his Camp by Odo-acer.

But he reinforces the Siege.

An Agreement that they shall reign together.

Odoacer slain.

were not able to receive a charge from the Goths, now bow them all down before them, and compelled him who had been wont to give them the chase to take him to his heels, and fly amain towards his Camp. Hither when he came, his Mother presented her self in the Gate with intention to stop him, asked him whither he was going, and told him there was no place of safety for him, except she should take up her Clothes, and receive him into that part from whence he was brought forth into the World; with these words he was both ashamed and irritated to such a Degree, that rallying as many of his Men as he could get together, he charged the Enemy with such violence, that he drove him back into the Town, and reinforced the Siege as strong as ever.

11. Now were all the Difficulties and Hardships, which usually attend a tedious League, renewed both to those without and them within: in the City great sterility bordering upon extreme Famine, in the Camp weariness and Impatience contracted by so many fruitless labours and skirmishes. The Bishops fail not to interpose their Endeavours for an amicable composition; through their Intercession Messages are sent from both sides, and at length, at the desire of Theodorich, Odoacer consents that he shall reign with him in equal Authority and Power as King also of Italy. Hereupon on the twenty seventh of February the Siege is raised, and Theodorich entering Ravenna lived friendly and peaceably with Odoacer his Colleague for some little time. But then he grew weary of that Fellowship, of which the Throne is wont to be impatient, and having invited him to a Feast, when he demanded his share consigned to him by the League, pretending some Conspiracy against his own Person, he caused him to be slain together with his Son and the Principals of his Friends, about seventeen years after the Deposing of Augustulus, A. D. CCCXCIII. Procopius plainly writes that he was treacherously slain, but Cassiodorus and Jordanus seem to make it more than a pretence of Theodorich. Nay the * former says that Odoacer did really plot against his life, and the † latter barely relates that he put him to death. But the one was in great favour with him, and executed the place of Secretary in his Court, though a sober and grave Writer; and the other being a Goth, and his Countryman might be cautious of saying any thing which might reflect upon his Nation. But Odoacer so died, and Theodorich easily made himself Master of Italy, whose Government we are now to relate. But so far as much as the Goths made now, and had made such a noise and bustle in the World, had done such things, made such Conquests and founded several Kingdoms, its highly requisite that we premise something concerning the Original and first Motions of this People, taking in also those of other Northern Nations in the way as they fitly present themselves. For out of the North they swarmed like so many Vultures, Kites and other Birds of Prey, fell upon the Eagle, and after fore bickering, having spoiled him of his Western Plumes, at length outed him of the Nest it self, and so held it and the Regions about it, till a Cock of generous breed, though also of Northern extraction, cleared Italy and other Countries of them, and trimming himself with the Western Plumes, set up, and was owned, for a Western Eagle.

* His Conf.
(i. e. Albini)
Theodorich Reverentem ingressus Odoacrum molien-tem sibi iusdici interemit.
† Postmodum hac luce gri-navit.

SECT. II.

The Original of the Goths and other Barbarous Nations, that invaded and seized Italy.

From Scandia the Goths and other Nations issued.

Two Kingdoms therein of the Sueones and Sittones.

Ofrogoths and Westrogoths.

1. THE Northern Climate out of which these Goths and others derived their Descent, who invaded the Southwestern Parts of the Roman Empire, was that Tract of ground which the Ancients thought an Island, but since has been found to be a Peninsula, known by the Names of Scandinavia, Scandia, Scanza, Scanzia and Scantia, because the Inhabitants made use of high and steep Rocks in the Room of Castles which they called Scanzzen, to which the Word being added which signifies Land, thence came that of Scandinavia. The Greeks called it Baltia from the inward Sea, for an Irruption of the Sea it signifies; and Procopius thought it to be Thule. It's a great space of ground compassed on the North, and the East by the Sea; and the Botnick Bay and the Baltick Sea fence it on the West and South; as also by Rivers which pour themselves out into the Botnick Bay, and the Russian or white Sea.

2. Tacitus placeth two Kingdoms in this Tract, viz. of the Sueones and the Sittones. The former are also variously called Sutones, Suethani and Suethidi, by our English Writers Suedi and Suehedi, by others Suithonæ, homines Suetici, and Sueci worst of all. The Sueones or Suethi were so called as laborious and getting their livings by the sweat of their brows; and the Sittones, on the contrary, from a fitting Jeditary or idle Course of Life. The Kingdoms were divided by the Mountain Seno so named from the seven Hills; and the Countrey of the Sittones was called Norwegia or Nordwege because situate to the North. After Tacitus his time other Nations might peirce themselves into Scanzia, as did the Heruli and Rugi, and afterwards the Dani who had been a Colony of the Suedi, but retained and possessed themselves of part of the Countrey not long before Justinian's time, Procopius and Jornandes being the most ancient Writers that mention them, and the latter saying that they drove the Heruli out of the Seats which they had possessed in Scanzia. Now besides the Sueones and Sittones, several other People are found to have been Inhabitants of Scanzia, as the Goths which from their Habitations Eastward and Westward, carried the Names of Ostrogoths and Westrogoths, by the Latines corruptly called Visigoths. They had the Name of Goten or Guten, which signifies Good, from Strangers for their great humanity to such as they entertained. That the Goths inhabited Scanzia is evident from all sorts of Writers and other Testimonies, and there had their Name, as other People for their inhumanity to Strangers received contrary appellations, as the Zuadi Witti and Thaifali. Of the Goths other Nations descended, or were the same with them, and from some Accidents received other Names as the Longobards, and Wandals. And these Names they took after the Migrations of those Scanzian Nations which they made far and wide, and thereby made themselves so considerable as to be known both by their old and new Names, and much more by the Effects of their victorious Arms.

3. For their first Motion or Expedition we are in the dark, and as in the Originals of all Nations, some truth is involved in many and great Fictions and Poetic Romances, so we may probably conjecture in this of theirs. One story we are to mention, because a late learned and ingenious Writer hath taken much pains to make it probable. And it hangs upon this hinge of Truth, that the Goths or Getes in most ancient times out of Scandia made Inroads not only into the Chersonesus, the Islands of the Baltick Sea and the more Northern Parts of Germany, but into several Parts both of the Asian and European Sarmatia and Scythia, whence driving out the Inhabitants they there seated themselves, as well as in Thrace and several other Provinces. Upon this Foundation the Northern Writers raise particular stories, which we cannot tell how to call false as to the main of them, but are very Romantick in their Circumstances. As into other Regions, they say the Goths pierced (in very old time it must be) into that Part of the Asian Scythia where there was a City afterward called by them Asgard, the

SECT. II.

Vide Græci Prolegomena in Hist. Genæsiæ, Vardæorum, &c.

Sberingham in Disceptat.
de Origine Gætiæ Angli-cæ.

SECT. II.

A Colony out of Scandia to Asgardia.

Woden.

Wonderfull things said of him.

What Judgment is to be made of his Story.

the Inhabitants whereof Asgardiani are by some thought the same with those whom the Greeks knew by the Name of Aspurgiani, both sorts of Authours placing them near to the Lake Maotis, where the River Tanais with great fury empties himself into it. Some think Ptolemy the Geographer called the City by the very Name of Afcard or Afgard. The Country in which it stood was in a peculiar way called Afia by Strabo, and the People Asei and Afotæ by other Writers, being also called Turcæ whom Mela makes the same with the Tyrsagetæ, those whom at present we call Turks, having long time after entered into those quarters after they were defeated by the Goths, upon their return back into Europe. These Aspurgiani had their Kings, the Dominions of whom extended to the farther Mountains of Scythia within Imaus, where the Aufones, Syebi and Iotæ inhabited, whom Strabo comprehends under the very Name of Aspurgiani.

4. Of this Afgardia or Aspurgia in process of time was King one Othim, who had many other Names, according to the several Gothick Dialects, but that whereby he is commonly known is Woden, from which the third day of the week is called Wodensday. Now most wonderfull things are said of this Woden, no more Famous and Romantick stories being told of any Heroe. What wonderfull Power he had in Magick in transforming himself and other things, is not fit here to be related; his ways of enchanting were peculiar. Of his Government fine things are told; as also his Acts and Conquests in the Eastern and Northern Parts are celebrated, he being said to be Lord of that part of Scythia lying toward the South. At what time the Romans grew terrible to the World, by his Magick knowing that he and his Posterity should for a long time Reign in the Northern Parts of the World, he committed to his two Brothers Ve and Velir, the Government of Afgardia, and went into Russia, whence he proceeded into Saxony, and thence into Gothia Suetica or Suetland. The Prince of this Country was one Gyluo, by whose consent he and his followers planted there. Here, by his Inchantments, Rhimes and Songs, he did such incredible things, that his Name became famous and reached all Countries, and afterward the Suedi and other Northern Nations sacrificed to him and his twelve Assistants, which he chose to keep him in Magical Rites and Government, and wickedly paid to him their Duty and Devotion which was due to the Lord of Heaven and Earth alone.

5. Now to make a Judgment of this Story, it is very probable that some famous Man or Men there was of this Name, which indeed became wonderfully revered by the Northern and other German Nations. These Countries, as is observed and is sufficiently evident, have been much given to Magick and Inchantments, Charms and Tricks, many Monuments of their ancient Places of Burial, with their Runic Inscriptions sufficiently testifying enough of this matter at this very day. That some of the Goths were called Turcæ we hear, and it is not improbable, that in this return out of those Scythian Quarters some retained this Name, though the reason of it was in the dark. For in the County of Lincoln upon the River Trent, a few Miles from Gainsborough, there is a Town now called Torksey, which the Saxons in their Language knew by the Name of Turkesgga or the Island of Turks. In the Northern Countries many places bear the Name of Woden. It is not utterly to be neglected, that the Removals and Travels of the Goths, out of the more Northern Parts into Germany, and the adjacent Islands are said farther to be made out, both by the Inscriptions in Runic Characters, which are extant both in the said Islands and in Sueden, as well as by the Annals of these Quarters. Moreover great Pillars were in Sueden not long since to be seen, which the Inscriptions upon them manifested to have been erected by them in Memory of their Worthies, which had lost their Lives in Greece, Thrace or other places. It's believed by some that from Woden, and his Companions who were Scythians, Suedia came to be called Nova Scythia, and the Inhabitants of the Cheronesus or the Cimbri to be termed by the Greeks, Celtoscythæ, being first known to them by the Name of Cimmerii, and why by this? but that because they were first in Scythia called Cimmerii, and into Germany and those parts travelled from the Bosphorus Cimmerius.

6. To be sure the People inhabiting Scandia, had those of the same Names with themselves, living in the Scythian Regions, and which must necessarily be deduced from the same Original. That those three severally denominated People which invaded and conquered this our Island were of Scandian Original, none can doubt, viz. the Jutes, Gutes or Getes (the same with the Goths) the Angli and Saxons; and from Ptolemy the Geographer it appears, that in Scythia or Cimmeria there were three several People which were known by these very Names. He speaks speaks of Iotæ lying upon the Sea of the Rhimini. Of the Saxones under the Masfæan and Alan Mountains. And though by name he mentions not the Angles, yet the Suebi he doth, or Suevi, part of which Nation the Angli are rationally thought to have been, being so called from the Angle or Corner on which they seized in Germany. This is accounted no small Argument, that these People came into the Northern Parts of Germany at no other time, nor under any other Conduct than that of Woden, that before the time of his Expedition so such Names as these do occur in Northern Writers, but after they became famous, especially the Saxons. In the Sacogothick Annals, those of Norway and Denmark, the memory of them flourishes; but amongst the ancient Greek and Roman Writers the Saxons are known, as also the Jutes by the Name of Cimbri, though the Suebi by that of their own. In Sarmatia, and especially in Livonia are many Towns, the Names of which are Saxon. And for the Maritime Parts, they speak the Language there at this very day; the same which about Pontus and those Northern Quarters of Afia, was spoken even in the time of Ovid, the Poet, who being banished thither, became a Proficient in the Language of the Getes. Well, this might be when Strabo placeth the Macropogones or Longobards in Cimmeria, about Syndica, near to which Woden is said to have reigned in Aspurgia. In Germany there is Trier, in Saxon Die Trier, and such there were in Scythia also. The Charis also lived in Germany, not far from the Suevi, Angli and Chamani, and Ptolemy placeth them also in Scythia next the Masfætes, without the Mountains Imai.

7. To these things might be added, that the Humours, Manners and Inclinations of the Gothick Nations or Cimbri, did much suit with those of the Asiatick Scythians. And all considered, that there were migrations there can be little doubt; the same People being found at so great distance. Now whether first these Nations passed from Scandia into Scythia, or out of Scythia into Scandia, may be some question; but it seems not difficult to be resolved, that setting aside the first planting of the World, they first went from Scandia; because the vast Tracts of that Country Germany, and the Islands speaking that Language, challenge the other sorts of People of the Asiatick Scythia to have been their Colonies, for they were but few in number in comparison of their Neighbours, who spake in Language and lived far differently from them. Admitt it then as possible, that such a man as Woden there might be, it would be of consequence, if we had any light concerning his return into Scandia. A Tradition there was amongst the Saxons, that they came by Sea into Germany, but it is urged that no Footsteps of any other Invasion or Migration is to be found; but this of Woden. Some make it to have happened four and twenty Years before the Birth of Christ, about the time that Pompey wasted Syria; but if Woden delivered Denmark to his Son Skjold, whence the Kings of that Country were anciently called Skjoldinger, this Skjold, according to the Danish Chronology, lived almost a thousand Years before Pompey; and accordingly Woden with his Asiaticks must have preceded the Danish Kingdom, and to Saxony, Suevia and Jutia have given their proper Names. By this account Woden must have been ancienter than Hommer; but how will this consist with the Genealogies of our own English Saxons Kings, the Founders of the seven Kingdoms here, all which are derived in descent from Woden? But Hengist, the first that came into Britain, arrived not till about CCCCL Years after Christ's Birth, and he is said to have been but the Anepos, or Great Grandchild of Woden, as Cerdic, the Founder of the Kingdom of the Wessexons, the Tenth from him: Whereas by the former account Woden must have preceded the Birth of our Saviour above a thousand Years.

8. To dispatch therefore this Story of him, let us close with the opinion of them, who think that as amongst the Greeks, there were several there bore the Name of Hercules, but were all confounded together, and what was done by all was ascribed to one. It fell out in the same manner as to the matter of Woden. It's thought that there were three which bore this Name, all deified by Idolaters. The first, descended from Saturn and the Trojan Kings, called Afianus; and Odin his gaine or Woden the Ancient, who never came into Europe, but his Name and Rites were hither brought by others. The second of Upsall, to whom in Swedeland was a Temple dedicated shining with Gold, who was also called Afianus, but a stranger of the Scythians. The third was called Mathodan or Midwoden, of whom Saxo Grammaticus maketh mention, who, the other Woden being abroad, play'd tricks, and took occasion to feign himself a God, but after his return fled into Phaonia, and there was slain by the Inhabitants. Some produce a fourth Woden, who being beaten by Pompey out of Afia into the Northern Parts, taught the People the Arts and Laws of the Africans, and was therefore had in especial Honour. And yet this flight from the Romans is ascribed to him of Uppsal, though they lived in far different Ages. Let us take then, or leave this Story of Woden, with the Migrations into Asia, and back again out of that Countrey, and returning also to Scandia, take notice of these Motions of the Gothick Nations, which are warranted by unquestionable History, or probable least.

Woden.

Sect. 2.

9. It is not amiss to premise, that upon passing into other Countries, the same People got several Names; as either Strangers made terminations to their old ones, or as they observed something they thought most remarkable in them: According to the way of severally terminating words; and bringing them as near as can be to the Genius of a strange Language; the same Goths are in several Writers called Guta, Gutones, Gorhones, Gyithones, Guttones and Gutonica, as the same Country is termed Gothia and Gudlandia. And in like manner; the Franci and Francones, Vasci and Vascones, Bristi and Frisones, Suedi and Sueones are the same. After the first migration of them North Eastward to the Lake of Mæotis, where even at this very day they retain both the Names: Manners and Language of Goths, as their Country that of Gothia, they seem to have sent out that Colony which planted it self between the Rivers Albis (by those Goths called Guthelba) and Vistula, where they preserved their Country Name. Grotius guesseth that above three Hundred years before our Saviour, they first went out of Scanzia, Godonavia or Gothland; and coming into the Continent of Germany, drove out the Vimringi, and there left a Colony which Zucius calleth Gothrones. That the Islands adjoining they very anciently Peopled, there is no doubt, as also the Sea coasts, where the Ælvi inhabited, who had this Name, and their Country that of Æstonia, from lying Eastward from them. Hence he believes they made Incursions as far as Mæotis, and into Dacia, but when he cannot say; but that it was before the time of the Antonini. He faith he learns this from Spartianus, who in the Life of Caracalla writes that the Gothi were called Getai, as many others also have hinted, because the nearness of the Name deceived the Romans (though Geta be a Name of Thrace, and Goth a German word) and the Goths held those places which anciently bore the Name of the Geres. Hence in the Reign of Philip, Jornandes brings them into Mæsia and Thrace, and it appears that from this time, Part of the Goths remained in Mæsia, who by Jornandes are called Gothi Minores, and who receiving Letters from the Greeks, delivered them to the other Gothick Nations.

Their Invasi- on.

10. Amongst the Roman Writers, after Spartianus, he observes, that the first mention of the Goths is made by Aurelius Victor ( published by Sextottus, ) in the Reign of Decius, at what time out of Dacia, they poured out themselves into the neighbouring Thrace, being by Zotimus and Zonares called Scythians, as by their Original they well might, and did pass for such. In the time of Aurelian and Gallienus they proceeded farther, and wasted Greece, Macedonia, Pontus, and Asia, several particulars being related by divers Authours. From others it appears that Claudius being Emperor they fell upon Marcianopolis in Mesia, and then wasted both Macedonia and Illyricum, besieging Cassandria and Theſſalonica. Both Maximian and Constantine the Great received them into friendship and society, and the latter made use of them against the Sarmatae, and under Theodosius the younger, part of Thrace fell to their share. Procopius tells us that the Goths, called Tetraxitae, lived near to the shore and Straits of Mæotis, and farther from them, the Goths and Vifigoths, and Vandals, and all the other Gothick Nations anciently named Scythians, as all the other Nations of those Parts with some difference, in some of Sarmatians, Melanclanians and other Names. On the other side of the Lake lived the Chimmerians or Humæes, who it's said being perwaded by two young Men, that pursued a Stag, that the water was fordable which they had not thought before ) instantly took Arms and passed over. He adds that the Vandals were gone before and seated in Africk, and the Vifigoths were in Spain. And so they fell upon the Goths, who dwelt in the Champaign, killed many and chased away the rest. Such as escaped passed the River Iſter, with their Wives and Children into the Roman Territory, where they did much mischief. Afterward the Emperor planted them in a Country of Thrace, and sometimes they aided the Romans in quality of Confederates, receiving yearly Pensions, whereby it appears that the Goths ( so Procopius observes ) came not as Men conquered, but upon the Articles of a League. Sometimes also they made causeless War upon the Romans, till under Theodorich they removed into Italy.

Ex hac igitur
Scauzia insula quasi officina Gentium, aut certè velut vagina nationum cum Rege suo nomine Beriz, Gothi quondam memorantur egressi.
Fornandes de Rebus Geticis.
c. 4.

Capitaneus Gothiae dicitur in publicis monumentis, vide Grotium ubi prius ex relatu Josephi Barbais na-bilis Veneri, qui in illis vixit Regionibus.

Hist. Gorbic.
lib. 4.

11. Great

Sect. 24

11. Great Mischiefs did the Goths bring to the Roman Provinces by their Invasions and Inroads; but the greatest mischief of all happened by the Empire, its opening it self to receive them. I mean when Valens received them into Thrace, as we have at large related in our second Part, in the year CCLXXVI. Having by his leave passed the Danube, whither they were driven from their own Seats by the Hunnes, they presently turned head against their Entertainer, and afterward proved to many Vipers in the Bowels of the Provinces, still taking occasion to stir, and could not be quieted by any Seats or Entertainment given them, no though the greatest of them were preferred to the greatest place of Magistracy and Dignity, till they made themselves Leaders or Kings, and travelling Southwestward, at length seized upon the Provinces as Lords and Masters thereof. This the Reader may remember, from what hath been copiously related to him in this work, concerning their Motions in the time of Honorius, the Invasion of Italy, and taking of Rome by Alarick, their Actions in Gall and in Spain. It is to be observed that the Story told by Procopius, concerning the Deer being pursued by the young men, and ( what thereupon happened ) the Invasion of the Seats of the Goths by the Hunnes, and their flying to the Danube, is by C. 24. 25. Jornandes made the same with their flight thither in the Reign of Valens, whom they petitioned to be received within the Roman Pale, what ever Procopius talk of the Vandals being now seated in Africk, and the Vlsegoths in Spain. It is also farther to be taken notice of, that the Migrations out of Scandia were in more ancient times, and that those irruptions which brought ruine to the Roman Provinces, and gave beginnings to the Principalities erected by these Barbarous Nations therein, were from the Eastern quarters. Jornandes distinguisheth thus of their Habitations: Those that aboad in the first part of Scythia by Mooris, are known to have had Filimer for their King; they that inhabited in the second soil of Dacia, Thracia and Moesia had Zamolxes, whom most Writers of Annals testify to have been a wonderfully learned Philosopher. Besides this he had formerly spoken of their planting in that part of Scythia, which bordered on the Sea of Pontus. But now at the time that they grew so terrible to the Empire, after that of Valens, they began to be known to the World, by the afterward terrible Names of Vlsegoths and Ostrogoths.

Whence came the Names of Ostrogoths and Westrogoths.

12. They were known indeed more by these Names, after their parting into several Quarters of the Empire, but the Names were much ancienter. And that from their situation of West and East, they were first called Wefstrogoths and Ostrogoths in their own Country is most probable, and Grotius concludes it from Formandes his Description of Scandia (who therein indeed mentions the Ostrogoths though not the other,) and from Poplicus, who about the time of Claudius makes mention of the Aufrogoths, with whom the Ostrogoths are the same. They were joined together till the Reign of Ermaurick, and that of Valens, the Emperour; but then the Vifigoths or Wefern Goths departed from the Ostrogoths and fought by the Hunnes, asked Valens leave to pass the Danube. And the Wefern Goths (corruptly called Wifefgoths and Vifigoths) they were who being received, and treated ill as they pretended contrary to the Agreement defeated and killed Valens. After this they seized on Thrace and Dacia Ripensis, not by a precarious

The Progress of the West goths.

Right, but by way of Dominion, and even in the time of Gratian. Alaricus cum dicitur part of them under Conduct of Frigidigerus invaded Theffaly and Achata, and another part led by Alatheus, and Safrack fell into Pannonia, and compelled Theodofius to make a Peace. This Peace being not lasting, Alarick their King having waited Thrace and Greece, after Radagaisus invaded Italy through Pannonia, as we have shewn at large, and first after the Galli Senones took Rome in the time of Honorius.
He that succeeded Athabafe did the like, and presently invaded Gall, which was forsaken by the Wandals. There the Western Goths settled a Domition, and afterward transferred it over the Mountains into Spain, where they also erected a Kingdom. Of which Dominion and Kingdom we must treat particularly, and therefore here must leave the Westrogoths for a time.

The Kings and Progresses of the Ostrogoths.

Amalus.
Isarna.
Ostrogothia.

the 3. The Ostrogoths seem to have been the more considerable Party, the race of the ancient Kings, obeyed by both sorts till this Desection, proceeding from them, and namely the Family of the Amali, so much celebrated among them. Amalas (to pass by some other Kings more ancient, the Names of whom are to be found in Fornander) was the Son of Augis, and it seems so eminent as to give a Name to his Successours. He was the Father of Iarna, and Iarna of Ostrogotha, who in the Reign of Philip the Emperour with his Ostrogoths (Fornander yes, knowing not, whether from him or their situation they received this Name,) for

Amali Cæſte Iſar-na, ferro propinquus.
Ooſt, Angl.
Eaſt, Latin.
hinc formatur Austria.

Sect. 2.

The Gepide of Gothick Nation.

that being Confederates of the Empire their Stipends were not paid them, passed the Danube, waisted Mæfia and Thrace, and forced Marcianopolis to compound with him, and redeem it self. The Nation of the Gepidæ seeing him thus victorious envied him this good Fortune, and made war upon their Kinmen, as Jornandes, calls them, though by the word Parules, and how they came to be their Kinmen he tells you, he saith, in short if you ask the question. He puts his Reader in mind, that at the beginning of his Book, he shewed how the Goths proceeded out of the Island Scanzia with Berick their King, transported onely in three Ships to the Bank of the hither Ocean. Of these three Vessels, one, as often happens, failing slower than the rest, gave Name to the People; (which landed in an Island of the River Vistula, and afterward proceeded farther) for in their Language Slow is signified by Gepanta. Hence came it to pass that by little and little, and corruptly it came to stick to them by way of reproach. For the Gepidæ without doubt derive their Original from the Stock of the Goths; but because, as was said, Gepanta signifieth something slow and sluggish, the Nickname of the Gepidæ thence arose, which I dare not believe, saith he, to be the falsest thing that is. For they are of a slow humour and disposition, and more heavy as to motion of the Body. Such is the Relation of Jornandes concerning the Name and Original of the Gepidæ. He agrees with Procopius herein, who declaring which were the greatest and most famous of the Gothick Nations, reckons the Goths, Vandals, Visigoths and Gepædes. He adds, that anciently they were called Sarmatians and Melanchlenians; that they varied all in Names, and nothing else, being all fair bodied with yellow hair, tall and with good faces; that they had the same Laws, Customs and Religion, being all Arians, and all spake the Gothick Language. He supposes them to have been anciently one Nation, and their Names to have been distinguished afterward by their several Princes. Formerly, he saith, this People inhabited about the Danube; then the Gepædes held the Places about Singedon and Sirmium on both sides the River, where they were when he wrote his History.

14. There are other Testimonies sufficient to prove, that the Gepidæ were a Gothoscanian Nation. They also as we have seen, invaded and waisted the Roman Empire. They were once Associates with the Romans, but joined with the Lombards and broke Truces, after which they made great stir in the World till they were overcome, and in a manner destroyed by the Lombards, in the time of Alboin, who married Rosamunda the Daughter of Conimund their King. But to return to our former Story: Fastida the King of the Gepidæ being puffed up with the good Success he had against the Burgundians, whom he almost destroyed, broke the League with the Goths his Kinmen. He sent to Ostrogotha, to whom both the Ostrogoths and Visigoths were subject, to tell him, that he was too much strained in room, and he must give the Gepidæ Land, or prepare for War. He answered he should be sorry to make War upon his Kindred, but he would part with no Land, and thereupon a bloody Battel was fought, wherein the Gepidæ were shamefully beaten, and the Goths contenting themselves with Victory, moved not during the Reign of Ostrogotha. After his death, Cnina divided them into two Armies, and sending one into Mæfia, with the other consisting of seventy thousand Men, he himself fell on Eufesum or Nona; whence being removed by Gallus, a Captain, he went to Nicopolis a City Trajan had built upon overthrowing the Sarmatæ, near the River Jater. But Decius the Emperour marching towards him, he removed into the Parts of Hæmonia near adjoining, purposing for Philippolis. Decius intended to pursue him, and resting his Men at Berræa, Cnina with his Goths, fell like a Thunderbolt upon him, and forced him to fly into Mæfia. Cnina having long besieged Philippolis, at length got the Governour Priscus to join with him, and pursued Decius; where Gallus being Captain of the Limit had recruited his Army. And they came to an engagement, wherein first the Son of Decius, and afterward the Emperour himself was slain, and ended his Life and Reign together.

15. After this the Goths invaded Asia, where having burnt the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, and demolished Chalcedon; they retired into Thrace, and waisted that Country. They assisted Maximian the Emperour against the Parthians, and Constantine the Great against Licinius, forty thousand of them serving under him, who continued in the Roman Army by the Name of Fœderati. The rest things they did under the Conduct of their Kings Ararick and Aurick, after whom came Giberick a notable Person. He overthrew the Wandals his Neighbours with Vistula their King, who was defended of the Race of the Asdingi, renowned amongst them. Such of the Wandals as remained after the Overthrow, begged Pannonia

Ararick, Aurick, Giberick.Mali Gepanta pro Gepanta nunc legitur.
Est enim Gepente Germani qui moram fecit. Grot.Vandal. lib. 1.
ad iulium.

Hermanarick.

The Original of the Heruli.

of Constantine the Emperour, to whose Succession they were obedient forty years, till being invited by Stilico they fell upon Gall, but settled not therein. Giberick being dead, after some time Hermanarick was King, one descended of the most noble Family of the Amali. He conquered so many Northern Nations, that by some he was compared to Alexander the Great. Having subdued many (the Names of whom Jornandes gives us, but might have as well suppressed them; so strange they are) he could not omit the Heruli, but needs must fall on them also. The Historian tells us from a far better Authour, Ablan whose whole hath miscarried, that this Nation of the Heruli, dwelling near the Fenns of Mæotis in waterish places, had its Name from them, which by the Greeks are called Hebe: a People, he adds, by how much more swift and agile, so much more abundantly proud; for there was then no Nation, which chose not its light armed Soldiers out of them. But formerly in the same work Jornandes writes, that they were driven out of their Seats by the Dani, which Seats were in Scanzia, for of the Inhabitants thereof he speaks in that Chapter. With him Procopius agrees, that they inhabited formerly beyond the River Ister, serving many Gods, and holding it no impiety to appease them with humane Sacrifices. He adds, that they had Laws different from other Men, when Men were grown aged or sick, they were not to live; but intreat their Kindred to put them out of the World. The Kindred made a Pile of wood and set the Man on the Top, and sent one who was a stranger to him in blood to dispatch him, then set they the Pile on fire, and the flame being done gathered up his bones and buried them. When one of the Heruli died, his Wife (if the would be thought virtuous) was to strangle her self over her Husband's Tomb; otherwise she was esteemed infamous, and an Enemy to her Husband's Kindred.

16. In time they over-topped the bordering Barbarians in Populoufness and Power, and vanquished them in fight one by one, foraged their Countries, and kept them under. They subdued the Lombards being Christians, and made them pay Tribute either out of Covetousness or Vainglory, it being a thing not used by the Barbarians in these Parts. In the Reign of Anastatius, having none left to subdue, they remained quiet for three years, but for that reviling and provoking their King Rodolph, he made an unjust War upon the Lombards, not charging them with the breach of Treaties or any other Pretence. The issue was that many of the Heruli were slain with their King, and the rest flying were almost all cut in pieces. Upon this they left their Country, and passing through all the Land beyond the River Ister, fate down in the Country of the Rugi who had left it, and were gone with the Goths into Italy. But the Land being waste they removed to the Gepidæ, who at first permitted them to plant by them, but afterwards wronged and abused them, which moved them to pass Ister, to dwell by the Romans there. Anastatius received them, and afterward when they committed wicked Acts, he killed most of them, sending an Army, and would have destroyed them all, but their Leaders begged their Lives, and to be taken for Auxiliaries and Servants of the Empire, and so some escaped alive; yet neither aided nor served the Romans. Justinian coming to the Empire, gave them a fertile Country and Goods, made them also his Associates, and persuaded them to be Christians; upon which they grew civiler, and applying themselves to the Laws of Christianity, served the Romans as Auxiliaries. But still, saith Procopius, they are false to us and covetous, not thinking it any shame to wrong their Neighbours. They use impious Mixtures with Men and Beasts, being indeed the wickedest of all Men and Wretches, wretchedly to perish: Some of them continued the League with us, and the rest revolted upon this Occasion. To shew the savageness of their Nature, they killed Ocho their King suddenly; without alledging any thing, but that they would no more be under a King.

17. And indeed their King before had onely the Name, otherwise little advantage above a private Man. All sate at meat with him, and put licentious Affronts upon him, the Heruli being the most indiscreet and lightest Men alive. But this foul fact they instantly repented, finding no possibility to live without Governours and Generals. After much consultation they resolved to send for one of the Bloud Royal, from the Island of Thule. For the Heruli being overthrown by the Lombards, and leaving their Native soil, some dwelt in Illyricum, but others past not the River Ister, but thought it better to plant in the uttermost borders of the habitable World. These conducted by many of the Bloud Royal, passed through the Nations of the Slavi, a large desert Country, the Varni, and those of the Danes (the Barbarians using no violence against them) and coming to the

Sect. 2.

Judicio publico, Gibrick, Domi's pollen.
Hermanarick,
miles.
Hermanarick, militibus pollens.

C. 3.

De Bello Goth.
lib. 2.Their Wickedness.Ararick, ho-more pollen.
Aurick, verustate pollen.
Hæst. Dui-gen, ceter in

Sect. 2. the Ocean, and getting shipping, arrived at the Island Thule, where they staid. Thus writes Procopius of the Heruli, who by Thule means the Peninsula of Scandinavia, which he calls ten times bigger than Britain, fairer most of it was waste, but in that which was inhabited, were seated thirteen populous Nations, and over every Nation was a King. Amongst them the Herulian wanderers planted themselves; and those who continued amongst the Romans, having murdered their King, sent some of their chief Men to the Island of Thule, to bring over one of the Blood Royal if they could find any there. From amongst many they brought one, who dying by the way of sickness, they went back and brought another named Todasius, accompanied with his Brother Aordas, and two hundred Heruli. They being long upon their Journey, the Heruli about Singedon, conceiving it might be inconvenient to introduce a King from Thule without Justinian's consent, sent to the Emperour to Constantinople to give them what King he pleased. He sent them Suartuas one of their Nation, who had long lived at Constantinople, and him at first they received joyfully, as King, and obeyed him in the usual Directions. But within few days hearing of the coming of the Ambassadors from Thule, they revolted from Suartuas (who had commanded them to goe out and kill them) to the New Comers, and he was forced to fly back to Constantinople. The Emperour set himself to restore him, and thereupon the Heruli revolted to the Gepide. So much writes Procopius of this People, of whom we often speak in the Course of our History upon occasion. It seems they lived beyond the River Ister, and afterward some of them passed into Scandinavia, from which possibly also they descended amongst other Gothick Nations; for amongst Gothick Nations Procopius reckons also the Scirri and Alani, De Bellis Goth. lib. 1. initio. for amongst whom he puts Odoacer, as one of them, and saith he was of the Lifeguard to the Emperour; and him other Authors call King of the Heruli, who invading Italy were we suppose more Civiliz'd, than those of whom Procopius writes.

18. Well! upon the Heruli, Hermanarick King of the Ostrogoths made war, and though their swiftness prevailed against other Nations; yet it submitted to the slowness and stability of the Goths, and they served Hermanarick amongst other Nations. After them he subdued the Veneti who became his Servants, though afterward in the time of Jornandes, because of the Sins of his Age they raged every where, being, though sprung from one Root, germinated into three Names of Veneti, Aules and Sclani. By his prudential valour he conquered the Asiri, who inhabited on the longest bank of the German Ocean, and as if it had been effected by his own Labours, he commanded all the Nations, both of Scythia and Germany. Not very long after, as he relates from Orosius, the Nation of the Hunnies raged against the Goths with more than bitter fury; and to be revenged on them for that and their other Pranks, he gives you an account of their Original also, as he found it related by Antiquity. Filimer King of the Goths the Son of Gandarick the Great, being their fifth Prince after their going out from the Island of Scanzia, having with his People entered into the Scythian Territories, found amongst them certain Witches, which in his Countrey Language he called Alorumnes, and having them suspected he thrust them away from his Company, and compelled them to depart into the Wilderness far from his Army. Unclean Spirits seeing these Women wandering in the Desert lay with them, and procreared this most furious brood, which at first continued in the Fens small and inconsiderable, as it were a kind of Men, neither known by any other word than that which signified an Image of Mankind. From Priscus the Historian, he adds, that in the Fens of Mæotis, this Cruel Nation possessed the farther Bank being expert in hunting and no other labour, only when it grew into Multitudes, with Frauds and Rapines it disturbed the neighbouring Nations.

19. Concerning the Original of the Hunnies we must leave Jornandes to himself, but concerning their Seats his Relation is confirmed by other Writers. Procopius Hist. Goth. lib. 4. tells us, that the two Straits of Mount Caucasus, which let in the Hunnish Nations upon the Romans and Persians, were called the one Tzar, and the other the Caspian Gates. That the Countrey extending from Mount Caucasus to the Caspian, Gates the Alani held, subject to none, but as Confederates they served the Persians against the Romans and all the World. That under Mount Caucasus dwelt the Gabrian Hunnes, and some other Hunnish Nations; and hence they said, issued the Amazons, and made a Camp at Themiscyrus by the River of Themidon, near where in his Days stood the City of Amisus. But now saith he are left no Amazons in the Countries about Mount Caucasus. Strabo, he adds, and some others have made made much discourse about them, but they seem to speak most truly, who think that there was never any such Mannish Race of Women; nor that Nature in Mount Caucasus only swerved from its sacred Laws; but that the Barbarians of these Parts making an Expedition against Asia, brought their Wives along with them, whom they left in a Camp near Themidon. That they themselves overrunning much of Asia were so encountered and defeated, that none escaped to the Camp; and that there their Wives being sorely put to it by the fear of the People adjoining, and by want of Victuals, took on them Countenances of Men, and armed themselves with the Furniture left by their Husbands, and with the same performed some commendable Actions, compelled by necessity, till they were all slain. This is his opinion, and that the Amazons were Wives that went to war with their Husbands, the Experiment whereof, he saith, happened in his own time. And commonly the additions which descend to Posterity, are the Images of those which were before. For the Hunnies, in their Inroad upon the Romans, often coming to a Battel wherein some of them were slain, and the Romans searching the dead Bodies, have found Women among them. Other Armies of Women were never, neither infesting Asia nor Europe. Neither was it ever heard that the Caucasian Mountains had all their Men wasted at any time. Afterward, speaking of several other Nations, he subjoins that beyond the Sagins, were many Hunnish People in a Countrey called Eulysia, possessed by these Barbarians in the maritime and in-land Parts thereof to the Lake Mæotis, and the River Tanais, which disembogues into the said Lake, and the Lake into the Euxine Sea. Anciently the Inhabitants were called Cimmerii, but in his time Uturgurians. But the Reader may remember how we have already spoken much of the Uturgurian and Caturgarian Hunnes, from the same Procopius, who gives another Character of the Hunnies in general than Jornandes doth; for speaking of the Aules and Sclani amongst other things, he saith that they were remote from knavish Craft and Malice, being like to the Hunnies in this very Innocence also. At length they drove out the Lombards, and planted themselves in Pannonia. But let us hear what other dreadful things Jornandes relates in his Account of the War betwixt them and the Goths.

The Original of the Hunnies according to Jornandes.

20. They being Hunters, some of them exercising themselves this way on the farther Bank of Mæotis found a Deer, and pursued her, as was said, before to the farther side; for here he brings in that Story. Having by this means discovered the way into Scythia, they fell like thunder upon several People he mentions, the Names of whom are hard to be understood, and amongst others they subdued the Alani equal to them in Valour and Skill but unlike, as to Humanity, Course of Life and Shape. For whereas possibly they could not by force have mastered them, having afrighted and astonished them by the Terror of their Countenances, they scared them into flight. They were fearfully black to look on, but carried upon their Shoulders a deformed Lump (if it be fit to call it so) and no face which had rather little pricks or holes than any Lights or Eyes. Their ugly aspect betrayed the boldness of their minds, who were cruel against their own Children, the first day they came into the World. For they cut and mangled the Cheeks of their Sons, that before they should receive the Nourishment of Milk, they might be constrained to endure the pain of a wound. Hence they grew old and beardless, and became youths without Comelines, their faces being so furrowed with the Knife, that the scars hindered the growth of Hairs. They were little in shape, but active and nimble, and Excellent Horsemen, broad shouldered and fit for shooting and casting of darts; they had strong Necks, and proudly they bore them. In humane shape they lived in beastly Cruelty.

21. The Gates at the sight of a People the most active of all others, and the Controller of Nations were afraid, and consulted with their King how to be freed from them. Hermanarick though Conquerour of many Nations, yet when he deliberated concerning the coming of the Hunnies, was deceived by the treacherous Rexolani, who took occasion to shew their falseness, though they served him amongst others. Punishing one Saniulc a Woman of that Nation, her two Brothers Sarus and Ammius, to revenge her death, gave him a wound in the side of which he languished; and thereafter Balamir King of the Hunnies taking advantage moved against him. With thought of this and the anguish of his wound, as also old Age, he was overcome, and died in the hundred and tenth Year of his Age. The Vithogths now had left their fellows, though formerly they had been joined with the Ostrogoths, and against them the Hunnies prevailed upon his death,

The Occasion of fighting amongst.

Jornandes his Description of an Hunn.

Sect. 2.

Winithar.

Hunimund.

Thorsifmund.

The Ostrogoths have Pannonia assigned them.The Goths Minors.Their Brothers and Kings, Walemir, Theodemir, Widimir.

death, who were seated in the Eastern Coast and called Ostrogoths, the Visigoths being by the leave of Valens gone over the Danube, and received within the Roman Pale. The Ostrogoths after their departure continued in the same place subject to the Hunnes, and were governed by Winithar of the Posterity of Amalus, who imitating the Valour of his Grandfather Ataulf, though inferior in felicity to Hermanarick, fought prosperously against the Aulae, and at first against the Hunnes, though Sigismund another great Man would not break his Faith, but joined with them. But in the third Engagement Winithar was slain, and Balamber, King of the Hunnes, kept under the Goths in quietness, yet so as by his Consent they had still a Regulus of their own. After Winithar they were governed by Hunimund, the Son of the most potent Hermanarick, who fought prosperously against the Suevi, and was succeeded by his Son Thorsifmund. He obtained a great Victory against the Gepidae, and is said to have been killed by a fall of his Horse. He died in the flower of his Age, and the Goths so lamented him, that for the space of forty Years they had no King in his place, his Kinsman Wendular the Brother's Son of Hermanarick was famous for his three Sons defended of the Race of the Amali, viz. Walemir, Theodemir and Widimir, who loved each other with Brotherly affection. But they were subject to the Commands of Attila King of the Hunnes, and neither they nor any Scythian Nation could be freed from his Dominion, but by his death so much desired by all Nations in common, and by the Romans too, a death which was as profitable as his life, had been wonderful.

22. After his Death his numerous, or as Jornandes calls them, innumerable Sons, fell out about his Conquests, and lost them all, being overthrown by Ardarick the King of the Gepidae in Pannonia. For Ellac the Eldest was slain, and the rest after the Defeat fled to the shore of Pontus, where the Goths had formerly lived. Many Nations were joyfull to be freed from so grievous a Yoke, and several of them were kindly received by Marcian the Emperour, and had Countries distributed amongst them. The Gepidae had the Seats of the Hunnes, and being Masters of all Dacia, required no more of the Empire but Peace and yearly Presents, as valiant and deserving Men; which he willingly granted, and which continued to be paid till the time of the Historian. The Goths seeing that the Gepidae challenged the Territories of the Hunnes, and that the Hunnes also kept their ancient Seats, chose rather to ask Territories of the Roman Empire, than to endanger themselves by invading those of others, and received Pannonia, which being stretched out in a long Champain had on the East Mesja Superior, on the South Dalmatia, on the West Noneum and the Danube on the North. The Country was adorned with many Cities, of which the Chief was Sirmis, and the last Vindomina. The Sauromatae or Sarmatae, the Cemendri and some of the Hunnes sat down in grounds assigned them at the Castle Martena. The Sciri, Satagarii and others of the Alans with their Captain Candax received Scythia the less and the inferior Mesja, the Notary of which Candax the Grandfather of Jornandes was; and Guthages the Son of his Grandfather's Sister was his Magister Militum, being defended also of the Amali. And he tells us that he himself though unlearned, had been a Notary before his Conversion. The Rugi obtained Scandiopolis. Of the Sons of Attila remaining, one planted in the utmost Part of the Lesser Scythia, and two others in Dacia Ripensis. And many of the Hunnes every where put themselves into the Roman soil. There were other Goths, who, as he saith, were called Minores or the Lesser, a vast People who had Vulfilas for their Bishop and Primate, who was said to instruct them in good Letters, and in this time of the Writer they were in Mesja, inhabiting Eucopolitana.

23. We have now brought the Ostrogoths into Pannonia, and there Jornandes tells us that such as were subject to Walemir, and his two Brothers Theodemir and Widimir, though the Places of their Habitation were divided, yet their Councils were united. But the Sons of Attila now regarded them as so many Slaves run away, and came on purpose to look after them. They fell upon Walemir alone, his Brothers knowing nothing of it, but he gave them such Entertainment that few of those that attacked him escaped with their lives, but Hunimund Captain of the Suevi passing on to harra's Dalmatia, made bold with some of the Herds of Cattel belonging to the Goths, Suevia being Neighbour to Dalmatia and not far from Pannonia, especially that Part where the Goths then resided. Theodemir, the Brother of Walemir, thought this was not to be endured, not so much for the Cattel, as lest the Suevi should thence take heart, and grow more insolent; therefore he waylaid them by night, and taking them napping by so unexpected an Attacke so mangled them, that Hunimund he took Prisoner, and such as escaped

Wit-bari Venedorum Domini.Hundreda concrete Hun Centuria Hun nimund cen-sie or fine Proprius
Thorsifmund Ferox etc.Wal-mir Bene Princeps, Theodemir
Epulsi supe-rans, Widimir laid Princeps.

Sect. 2.

Walemir slain.

Theodorich
doth wonders.

Widimir dies.

Theodemir
dies.

ped the Sword he made Servants to the Goths. Yet he was so mercifull as to pardon what was past, and being reconciled to the Suevi adopted their King for his Son, and sent him home with them. But Hunimund was so ungratefull, as forgetting the paternal obligation, he stirred up the Sciri who lived above the Danube to join with him, to take up Arms and invade the Goths, with whom they had lived in Peace. The Goths looking on both as Friends were surprized with the War, but compelled by necessity, betook themselves to their Weapons and revenged the Injury. They had the misfortune to lose Walemir their King, who in the Battel riding hard to animate his Men, his Horse fell, and the Rider being cast to the ground, was slain by the Lances of the Enemy. But to revenge his Death and themselves, they managed the Fight with that earnestness, that almost all the Sciri were cut off.

25. Hunimund and Alarick Kings of the Suevi fearing what might be the effect of this Success, rallied the remainders of the Sciri, and with the assistance of the Sarmatae, Gepidae and Rugi, made War upon the Goths. Walemir being dead they betook themselves to his Brother Theodemir as their Head, who calling to his assistance his Brother Widimir, gave Battel to the Confederates and obtained a notable Victory, killing ten thousand of them upon the place. To be revenged on the Suevi, in the Winter he pass'd a Foot Army over the Danube upon the Ice, and fell suddenly into their Territories, which on the East had for nearest Neighbours the Barbari, on the West the Franks, the Burgundians on the South, and the Thuringi on the North. With the Suevi the Alemanni were Confederate and joined, but Theodemir overthrew, wasted and almost subdued them both, and then he returned into Pannonia where he joyfully received his Son Theodorich, whom the Emperour Leo had sent from Constantinople with great Gifts. This Theodorich, being now in the eighteenth year of his Age, got together of his Father's Guard and such as loved him, almost six thousand Men, and without his Father's knowledge, passing the Danube, fell upon Babai King of the Sarmatae, who was grown proud for a Victory he had got over Camundus a Captain of the Romans, killed him, and plundering his House, and getting what other booty he could, returned with Victory. Then fell he upon Sigindunum, a City which the Sarmatae had seized, and getting it into his hands, restored it not to the Romans, but kept it in his own Dominion.

26. The neighbouring Nations were now so wasted that no more booty remained to be got, and the Goths being inured to War were so distressed in Peace, that they wanted both Cloaths and Victuals. With a great noise they all flocked to their King Theodemir, and prayed him to lead them out into what Quarter he pleased. He sent for his Brother, and casting lots appointed him to go into that part of Italy where Glycerius acted as Emperour, and he himself as the stronger would march against the stronger Empire, or that of the East. Widimir presently invaded Italy and died, leaving for his Successour Widimir his Son, whom with Gifts Glycerius persuaded to quit that Country, and going into Gall there to join himself with the Visigoths his Kinsmen; and with them he made up one Body, and so they held Gall and Spain that no other prevailed against them. Theodemir the elder Brother passed the River Sans, and threatened to make War upon the Sarmatae and others if they molested him in his passage; and none daring to oppose him, he took Naissus the chief City of Ilyricum, and sent his Son and other Captains to other places, who became Masters of Olprana, with Heraclea and Larissa. Theodemir yet was not content with this prosperous estate of himself and his Son, but leaving Naissus with a Garrison went and laid Siege to Thessalonica, wherein he inclosed Clarissus a Patritian sent thither by the Emperour with an Army. Clarissus seeing himself unable to grapple with him, sent to him, and by Gifts procured him to remove the Siege. Now was a League made betwixt the Romans and him, whereby he had given up to him places to plant his Goths in, of hard Names; as, Ceropelle, Europa, Mediana, Petina, Bercum, and others called Siam. There the Goths with their King lived in quietness; but not long; for Theodemir fell deadly sick in the City Cerra, and having called to him the Goths, and appointed Theodorich his Son to succeed him, departed this world.

27. The Emperour Zeno understanding that Theodorich was King over his Nation was well pleased with it, and sending for him to Constantinople, held him in great esteem amongst the chief Nobles of his Court. After some time Jornandes tells us farther, that he adopted him for his Son in way of Arms, or to increase his Martial honour, gave him a Triumph in the City at his own charge, and made him Ordinary Consul, which was esteemed the chiefest Good, and the first Digni-

Sect. 2. ty in the world; and not onely did he doe this, but erected also a Statue to the fame of so great a Man before his Palace. Theodorich thus enjoyed plenty and all good things, but knowing his Goths in Illyricum to be ill at ease, he chose rather to get his Living by labour according to the custome of his Nation, than to enjoy the good things of the Romans in idleness, when in the mean time his Countrey-men fared meanly. He applied himself therefore to the Emperour; and humbly desiring liberty to speak, demanded what reason there was why the Western Parts, which had been subject to his Predecessour, should now lie under the tyranny of the King of the Turcilingi and Rugi. He prayed him to lend him and his Nation thither, and thereby to rid himself of so great charge; and if by God's assistance he should succeed in his Enterprize, the Glory would be his. He told him it was better that he being his Servant and his Son, if he overcame should hold that Kingdom as by his Gift, than that one whom he knew not should under the yoke of a Tyrant oppress his Senate and part of the Commonwealth with a slavish Captivity. If he overcame he would hold it as his Gift, and as by his Favour; and if he miscarried, the Emperour should lose nothing but be a gainer by the bargain, being delivered from such expence as he was at. The Emperour hearing this, though he was sorry to part with him, yet would not displease him but granted his Request, commending to him the Roman Senate and People. Hereupon Theodorich departed to his Goths, and led them into Italy, as we have formerly shewn; where besieging Odoacer in Ravenna, he so straitned him, as this same Authour writes, that he begged pardon, which first he granted him, and afterward deprived him of Life. And in the third year after his Invasion of Italy, having privately advised with the Emperour Zeno, laying off the Habit of his Nation, he took Regal Ornaments, as one who reigned over both Goths and Romans.

Theodorich becomes Master of Italy.

28. Thus we have seen the Original of the Goths, and have drawn down their story to their coming to found Kingdoms in the Roman Empire. Concerning their Manners and Dispositions they had their Name from being Good as it imports, and Grotius hath taken some pains to prove that so they continued when in great power. Of this in the course of our History we have seen something, and more are to see e'er we have done with them. For their awkward Habit take it as Sidonius Apollinaris describes it. "They are red with Saffron, they are shod with high Shoes made of Hair which reach up to their Ankle-bones: Their Knees, Thighs and Legs are without any covering: Their Garment high and strait, of divers colours, scarcely reaching to the Hamm stretched out: Their Sleeves onely cover the tops of their Armes: Their Cassocks green, with a red Welt: Their Belts hang on their Shoulders: Their Ears are covered with wreaths of Locks: they use hooked Lances and misfile Hatchets. Here we cannot but take notice that the Wandals and Longobards, or Lombards, were of the same Original with the Goths. Procopius saith expressly that they were Gothick Nations as well as the Gepidae, and he had reason to be instructed in their descent, being acquainted with Gelomir their King, and the Nobles brought Prisoners to Constantinople. He tells us the Language of the Wandals was Gothick, and doubts not but that they were anciently one People, distinguished in Names, but agreeing in Original and Manners. He relates that together with the Goths they came out of their ancient Countrey to the Fen of Mæotis. Jornandes reckoning up the People of Scandia mentions the Vinniloth, which as Grotius observes, signifies the Possession of the Winili, for so they are also called; and Winili, and Vinili by some Authours. Wandal signifies a Wanderer, who continues not in one place; and so they seem indeed for some reason to have had the Name: and not onely they, but other people in Germany and elsewhere might be so called also for the same reason: but no where means those Wandals who for some time held Spain and Africk, as we have largely seen, and were subdued by Belisarius.

The Wandals of the same origin, with the Goths.

29. Of those that were originally of Scandia, part as was said in old times fared down with the Goths at the Fen of Mæotis. Of them who invaded Spain and Africk the Ancestours in the space of a year came from the Ocean where they inhabited, into Dacia so much vexed by Incursions. Jornandes saith these Wandals were called Aldingi. They came into Dacia in the Reign of Aurelius Antoninus the Emperour. In the time of Aurelian they inhabited at the Danube, and making a League with the Romans, promised them Succours. Constantine gave them part of Pannonia, and hence they poured out themselves into Gall, when Flavorianus was Emperour. Thence they proceeded into Spain, such of them as were called Silingi into Bætica, and the rest into Gallaecia and the neighbouring Regions, Godigisich being their King. Gontharis succeeded him, who subdued the Alani that then were potent in Spain. To Gontharis succeeded Gowrick commonly called Genferick the the Conquerour of Africk, who confirmed his possession thereof by a League with Valentinian the Emperour. What things he did, and how far he reigned, the Reader may remember, as also what was done by, and happened to, his Successors out of that account we have given of them in our Second Part; for there being little of consequence concerning them, but what also involved the Affairs of the Romans, we thought it not fit to make a particular History of that their Kingdom in Africk, which was soon again reduced by Justinian. Now we shall onely add concerning them farther what Grotius hints, that some memory of the Dominion of the Wandals in Spain is still preserved in the Name of Andalusia, which anciently was Wandalosia, and in the Wandalick Tongue was Wandaloth.

Sect. 3.

And the Longobards.

30. As there might be several People which had the Name of Wandals, from their changing of Seats and Habitations, so also in Germany and elsewhere, others to whom that of Longobards was given, from the length of their Beards. But those who made such a noise in the Empire, and seated themselves in Italy, from whom Lombardy still is so called, were of Scandia also, descended from the Gepidae, of whom, if Grotius observe right, first mention is made in the time of Theodosius, by Prosper Aquitanus. From Procopius it appears, that with the Gepidae their Parents, they had Seats on this side the Danube. Paulus Warnatridus writes that they were called first Winili before they had the Name of Longobardi. In the sixth year of Justin the Emperour the Gepidae were utterly crushed by them, and their Kingdom came to an end. By these same Longobards was the Son-in-law of Justin and Pandarius overthrown. After Tiberius had succeeded Justin they came into Italy and made Antarick King over them. What progress their Arms made there in the times of Tiberius and Mauritius we have seen already, and how they founded a Kingdom, and that they held all Italy, in a manner, except Rome and Ravenna, and continued their Dominion for two hundred years. God willing, we are to see in the particular History of their Kingdom. But the Goths were their Predecessours therein, and their Kingdom first is to have place; for we have brought already Theodorich into Italy, and there placed him on the Throne of Odoacer.

SECT. III.

The Kingdom of the Ostrogoths in Italy.

The Space of Sixty years.

*O*doacer being dead, Theodorich easily made himself Master of Italy; which done, Dalmatia and Rhetia; formerly in the Hands of his Enemy, submitted also themselves to his Power. Sicily was something stubborn and unwilling to acknowledge her new Lord; but by the means of Cassiodorus his Lieutenant he brought her into subjection peaceably and without bloodshed. There remained now onely one Rub to be removed, and that had been laid in his way by the rashness and folly of his own Men, who being left in Pavia, upon notice of his Success at Ravenna, transported with the News, flew out of that City to congratulate with him; which the Rugi, who had served Odoacer perceiving, took the advantage, and seizing on the Town, plundered it with all the Countrey adjoining. But the Stars of Theodorich were too powerful to suffer him to miscarry in this adventure, and make shipwreck of his Fortunes in the very Haven; therefore leading his Army down to Pavia, within a few months he easily reduced it, used his Victory with moderation, and by the sequel of his Actions shewed, that though War seemed to be his Masterpiece, yet he delighted not in it for its self, but used it as a means to procure a firm and lasting Peace. Sheathing then his Sword and taking the Sceptre, he first endeavoured to confirm his Estate, by Leagues and Alliances with his Neighbour Princes. In the first place with the Emperour, who readily admitted of his Friendship and Society; then with Clodovee King of the Franks, whose Daughter Andefleda he desired and obtained in Marri-

Theodorich be- comes Master of Italy.

Vide Sigonius de Occidentali Imperio. l. 16.

Sect. 3. age. His own two Daughters which he had by a Concubine he bestowed, the one on Alarick King of the Westrogoths in Gall, and the other on Sigismund Son of Gundobald King of the Burgundians. When he had thus secured his Government, both within and without, he set about the modelling of his Policy, and herein he used the advice and diligence of Aurelius Cassiodorus, a most learned man, whom he had made a Patritian, and adorned with the greatest honours of Comes, Consul, and Præfeli Prætorio. Him he retained by him as his Counsellour, both for modelling the State, and governing it when he reduced it into form and order. By his advice he made new Laws, it's said, and reformed bad Customs, and by his direction, if not his Hand, were written his Letters and Commissions, the choicest of which he preserved and published in twelve Books still extant, being so many monuments, not only of this new Gothick Model, but even of the ancient Roman Policy it self.

2. Indeed the greatest alteration which Theodorich made in Italy seems the waving of the Imperial Title, and settling and continuing that which Odoacer had begun and assumed before him. Otherwise the same form of Government, and the several sorts of Magistrates he left as he found them: viz. the Senate, Consuls, Patritians, Præfeli Prætorio, Prefeli of the City, Quæstor, Comes Largitionum, Comes Rerum privatarum, Domesticonum, the Magistri Militum, Equitum and others, as is evident from the forms of their Commissions, wherein the Nature of their Offices is expressed, and fuller and better than any other Author now extant, (as the Reader may perceive by what he hath already perused in our Second Part,) to be seen amongst the varia Epistole of Cassiodorus. These Offices with others he ordinarily conferred on Romans. Suits and Controversies arising in the Provinces, if amongst Goths he would have determined by Goths, if amongst Romans by Romans, and if betwixt a Goth and a Roman by those of both Nations, sent down into the Countrey for that purpose; all which he overfaw himself, and administered Justice with all Severity and Impartiality. To such Heruli and other Barbarous People, as being brought in by Odoacer, desired to continue in the Countrey he assigned new Seats and Possessions, giving those they had formerly enjoyed to the Goths his Countrymen. Those Italians who had kept their Faith once given to Odoacer immutable he not only pardoned, but some of them he promoted to the greatest Honours. Indeed such as broke Faith to himself by revolting he abhorred, and according to the Roman Law took from them the Power of making Testaments. What Tributes Odoacer had imposed he still required, and laid a new Imposition upon the People called As publicus, which yet he would remit to such as any Calamity had rendered insolvent, or as he saw occasion. Following the Example of the late Emperours, and Odoacer, he made Ravenna the Seat of his Kingdom, to which having now a Title not only by Conquest, but by the Gift of the Emperour, as is said, and the Consent and Choice of the Senate, he laid aside his own Countrey Habit, and assumed the Purple with other Ensigns of Royalty; to accommodate himself to the Humour of the Italians, and remove that prejudice which different Habits and Fashions might beget in the fancies of the People. And though in his Opinion he was an Arian, he not only not troubled but favoured the Orthodox, striving every way to gratifie them as he did indeed all his Subjects; as well by the former Methods of Conduct, as by releasing Prisoners, redeeming Captives, and other Acts of Clemency and Bounty; whereby all manner of ways he obliged his People, and obtained their Love and hearty affection.

He obliges all his Subjects.

Some Errors.

3. But as humane Councils are imperfect and uncertain, even as all sublunary Affairs are subject to change and perpetual Inconstancy, that he was deficient in his Measures, appeared quickly in one or two particulars. The Burgundians having invaded Liguria, had thence led away Captive all the Inhabitants, and thereupon the Countrey lay altogether waste, and remained in a desolate Condition. He had taken, as formerly was said, the Benefit of the Law from such as had revolted from him, who being very considerable not only for their Number, but Interest and Relations, it made a great disturbance, discomposed the Affairs as well of his Friends as others, and much discouraged the People in all Places. At the Solicitation of Laurentius Bishop of Milan, and Epiphanius of Pavia, he published a general Pardon, and thereby seasonably applied a Remedy to one of the Distempers, and because there was no Course to be taken, for replanting of Liguria out of Italy it self, which the Wars had so much exhausted, he resolved rather to have empty Coffers than to suffer that Countrey to lye desolate, to be both an Eye-sore, and obnoxious to the Attempts of any Enemy. He sent Epiphanius whose Vertues he knew to be much admired by the King of the the Burgundians on an Embassy to him, furnished with money for redemption of the Captives, and he being very welcome improved the advantage afforded by his Reputation to such an height, that by his Christian Eloquence and Fatherly Exhortations, he persuaded Gundobade to release the Prisoners without Ranfome. The King alleged that it was quite contrary to his Interest, both as a Prince and as a Souldier, and granted his request with this restriction, that such as had been taken in Fight should pay their Ranfome to those that took them, lest he should disoblige and utterly discourage his Souldiers, by remitting what was their due and not his, and taking from them the price of their Lives and Fortunes. Upon publication of the King's pleasure, so great multitudes returned home, that the Towns of Gall seemed to be unpeopled. Out of the Territories of Lugdunum or Lyons alone in one day departed four hundred men, and out of those of Saxony, and the places adjacent, so many in all as made up the number six thousand. Toward the sum that was to be paid for the redemption of such as had been taken by private Souldiers, Syagria a Woman of great sanctity, and Avitus Bishop of Vienna contributed: how many these were could not be computed, because many of them fled away. All in his way homeward, Epiphanius took the City of Geneva, whither Godegisal, imitating the King his Brother, dismissed such as were in his power; with which stream as it were, the former great current being enlarged, filled all the ways leading into Italy. Epiphanius returned in the Head of them as in a glorious Triumph, and coming to Theodorich obtained a relief of the necessities of his Captives, especially those of the better sort. All which Euodius, an eye witness and fellow Traveller, hath related in the Life of that Bishop.

Theodorich goes to Rome.

4. But long is it since we heard any thing of Rome, formerly the Stage of the greatest Triumphs, as well as the Seat of Council, and the School of Policy. Now at length arriving at the D. year of our Lord, the Eighth of the Emperour Anastafius, and the Eighth of Theodorich, an Idea and Resemblance of the former Triumph presents it self unto us; an Image of its ancient splendour, and that infinite concourse of people which of old from every Nation flocked unto her, when yet all she received were but her own Citizens and Domesticks. The thing that draws us thither is a Journey of Theodorich himself, whom we cannot but follow in this kind of Pilgrimage undertaken to pay his Devoirs of Admiration to that Queen of Cities, of which he had often heard, read much, but had never had the contentment to see her. All Italy at the news of this Progress seemed to be moved, and ambitiously ready to encourage that zealous respect he bore to the ancient Seat of its Empire and Majesty. There seemed to be a contention betwixt those that inhabited in and about Ravenna and such as lived at Rome, whether they should bring, or these should fetch their King to the City. With a most splendid Train, and such an appearance as of a long time had not been seen, he made his Entry, and was received with incredible joy and applause of the Citizens, who omitted nothing wherein they could doe him honour. At the Court he was welcomed by an eloquent Oration, made by Bostius the most eloquent Scholar and Oratour of this Age, to which he answered in a very obliging Speech, professing his study and endeavours for advancement of the Dignity and all possible advantages of the Senate. Thence proceeding into the Circus, as far as the place called Palma Aurea, he spake most lovingly to the People; which done, he entertained the Senators at a triumphal kind of Feast, and gave a Largess of Corn to the Commoners. Several days he spent in viewing the Antiquities of the City, with which his eyes could not be fatiated, professing that the Forum of Trajan alone, though to one that saw it every day, could appear no less than a miracle, and that when he had mounted the Capitol, he saw all humane wit and policy furnished. He took especial notice of, and commended the admirable Fabrick of the Baths, and the wholesomeness of the Waters. He grieved to see the ruins of the Buildings, but chiefly of the Walls, to the repairing of which he contributed great sums of money. Neither did his care extend to Rome alone; to all the Cities of Italy his munificence reached, wherein he took order for building strong Castles, and stately Palaces; and to this end wrote his Letters to all his Subjects to suffer Stones to be gathered out of their Fields, and to preserve old Marbles which had formerly been used in decayed Houses. He seemed so far ravished with the remains of the Majesty of old Rome, that he said it was a peculiar crime, for any one who could fix his habitation there, to be long absent. Yet his Affairs calling him away he returned to Ravenna, having much quieted the stirs raised about the election of a Roman Bishop, which, joynd with his great desire to see the place, had called him thither.

Sect. 3.

Sect. 3.

Anastasius the Emperor invades Italy by Sea.

5. In the mean time Anastasius the Emperor, ordering his matters quite contrary to the Maxims of Theodorich, had the quite contrary fortune, being as much hated as the other was beloved by his Subjects. Whether out of envy to the King, or bearing him a grudge for holding from him Pannonia, which he claimed as belonging to the Eastern Empire, he took occasion to quarrel with him; and as Marcellinus hints, in the Eighteenth Year of his Reign, sent out a Fleet to Sea, with orders to waste the coasts of Italy. To balance his power the better, he encouraged Clodovee King of the Franks in his Attempts against the Goths, and the more to court him dignified him Consul for the said year, of which honour it is said he would not accept. As for Theodorich, not only his demeanour towards his Subjects, but his rules and methods of waging War were diametrically opposite to those of the Emperor. His custom was to be present himself in Expeditions, except some notable matter hindered; and to purchase Peace not with Gold and Silver, but with Steel and Wood, his Sword and Bow. The Bulgari, whom Anastasius had bought off from waiving his Dominions, having nothing else to do, passed out of Thrace into Pannonia, which waiving and haraßing at their pleasure, they seized on the City Sirmium. Theodorich having notice could not goe in person against them, the Affairs of Italy and Gall requiring his stay at home, and his Eye to be upon the motions of the Franks and the Burgundians; but to preserve the place of his Nativity, and keep the War from his own doors, rather than out of any respect to the Emperor, whose hands were now full with the Persian War, he sent Petza a Comes with considerable Forces, who the year following very happily finished the War, recovering both Sirmium out of the hands of the Bulgari, and the whole Province. Having so happily dispatched this War he relieved Mundas, whom Sabinianus had besieged in a certain Castle in Illyricum. Theodorich gave the government of Pannonia to Coleffeus a Comes, a Copy of whose Commission Cassiodorus preserved, and is still extant amongst his various Epistles; from which the Reader may perceive what the power was which those Governours exercised, extending both to matters of War and Peace, and that the girding with a Sword was the mark and badge of their Office. After this Commission follows a Letter directed to all Barbarians and Romans inhabiting Pannonia, acquainting them that he had made Coleffeus their Governour, and requiring them to take notice of and obey him as such.

Theodorich reduces Pannonia.

Makes Coleffus Governour.

6. There being a quarrel betwixt Alarick King of the Visigoths in Gall, and Clodovee King of the Franks, and both of them being his near Allies, he omitted no arguments to persuade them to take up the matter, denouncing War in a manner to the aggressour, and promising relief to the oppressed, as is to be seen in his Letters collected by Cassiodorus. As it usually happens in such a case, he who was least in fault, and most unfit to decide the controversy by force of Arms gladly accepted the mediation, but he who had more reason to be confident, rather upon the strength of his Sword than the goodness of his Cause, made Excuses, framed Delays, and in conclusion utterly refused to be concluded by Arbitration. Theodorich addresses himself to the Burgundian King, as also to those who commanded the Heruli and Thuringi then inhabiting near the Alpes, and invites them to join with him in the Mediation, using Arguments drawn from the Exigency of their own Affairs, which would not be a little endangered by such Success as the Frank promised to himself. But while these Neighbour Princes thus think of Mediation and Balancing, Clodovee resolves not to loose his opportunity but passing the Loire begins the War, and in a great and bloody Battel deprives Alarick both of Life and Kingdom, whose Son Amalarick, things being in so desperate a Condition, withdrew himself into Spain, there to expect when an opportunity of recovering his Estate should be presented by better Fortune. Theodorich pitying the Condition of the Youth sent Theudas, an Officer of his own, to take care of him, and resolved if he could not recover those Cities of Gall, which were already lost, to prevent the Progress of Clodovee, and secure the rest which still remained in the Power of the Goths.

Sends Theudas to protect Spain.

7. To this purpose he published his Proclamation, that the Ostrogoths his Subjects should be ready by the latter End of June to begin their Journey, claving them with such Expressions as these, There is no need of persuading Goths to fight, purely of acquainting them with the thing, which is rather a Pleasure to a warlike People. In the Consullship of Venantius and Celer, or the DVIII. Year of our Lord, his Army, under Command of Hibba a Comes, passing the Alpes raised the Siege before Caracas, relieved Arles, and taking in Tolouse, Orange and Marcellus, left that Part of the Countrey lying upon the Rhone in the Hands of Clodovee, from whom Theodorich was not able

Lib. 3. Ep. 23. Commission tibi provincie, an arma progre- gere, iure com- puto. Prege- ri iustitia auspicio ad Sirmiumque Pannoniam quendam fe- dem Gotthorum preficere il- lustris Ciga- lii Dignitate precipimus. Vid. 3. Ep. 1. 2, 3, 4.

Significanda magni sunt Go- thi quantum de- denda certa- mina.

able to recover it. Sending many Thousands of Prisoners to Ravenna, he seized on Sect. 3. such as he recovered to the use of Amalarick his Nephew, placing Governours where he saw occasion as well in Gallas in Spain, which was divided betwixt the said Amalarick and Gisalarick. But while he thus busied himself in Gall, Romanus the Comes Domesticonum, and Rufinus a Comes Scholæ, with and hundred armed Ships and as many Flyboats, wherein were aboard Eight Thousand Soldiers, invaded the Coasts of Italy, as was formerly hinted, and having attacked Tarentum to no purpose, got good booty and so retired; whether sent on purpose, or on their own accord, Signonius accounts it uncertain, though Marcellinus wrote that they were sent by Anastasius, and it doth not seem probable that Robbers and Pirates should put to Sea with so great a Power without the Knowledge and Approbation of the Prince. Theodorich having little or no Diversion given him hereby, the Year following hired a great Number of Gepidæ to reinforce his Garrisons in Gall, and took special care that in their Passage through Liguria, and the Countrey of the Veneti, Cassiod. var. 1. 5. Ep. 10, 11. they should do no injury to the Inhabitants. To this purpose he directed his Letters yet extant to Veranus Saio to see them keep good Order in their March, and wrote to the Army it self, acquainting them that he was once minded to give them Provisions for their Journey in Spacie, but afterwards considering that Victuals either might not conveniently be had, or else spoiled by the way, he had now ordered them three Solidi in Gold by the week; a small Allowance one would think, or else his Forces were not very numerous.

Sends Gepidæ into Gall.

8. Theodorich having allowed his Gepidæ three Solidi a Week for their Passage, gravely, and like a Prince that was solicitous for the good of his People, admonished them by Letters to carry themselves moderately, and as became those that fought for the Safety of all Italy. But they measuring Decency by Convenience alone, and accustomed to Depredations, could not keep their Hands from pillaging the Inhabitants of the Cottian Alpes in their way, which Milde- Presidentissimus Principis ost. 13. c. Cassiod. var. lib. 4. Ep. 36. manour touched the King as near as if he in his own Person had been the Sufferer. And as a prudent Prince who ought to neglect his Profit for a time, rather than utterly to loose his Revenue, he cauteh his Letters to be written to Faustus the Præpositus, or Præfatus Prætorio (to whom he giveth the Title of Illustris Magnificencia tua) wherein he lets him know that he remitted to the said Inhabitants of the Alpes Cottie the publick Money payable in the third Indiction. He compares the Army to a River, which though it doe much good flowing in its own peculiar Chanel, yet enlargeth its Passage and doeth much mischief, when it riseth beyond its due Proportion, bearing down all before it. By the third Indiction is meant the third Year in fifteen, according to which Number the Emperours computed the times, after that the reckoning by the Olympiads came to be obsolete. Who began this Computation is uncertain. It's commonly ascribed to Constantine the Great; but Cedrenus will have it invented by Theodosius. Of those who father it on Constantine, Panninius fetcheth the Original of the Indictions from his Victory over Maxentius, Joseph Scaliger from his Exhibition of his Munera Quinquennialia to the time of his Vicennalia, thinks the Number of fifteen was invented. Barnius affirms that there is no reckoning of Years by the Indictions to be found before the seventh Year of Constantine, wherein he overcame Maxentius; that Conforinus, who writes of all manner of Supputations, saith nothing of them, nor do any Ecclesiastical Monuments till the sitting of the Roman Council under Julius the Successour of Sylvester; but from the Greek Fasti it manifestly appears that from the said seventh Year of Constantine, and the Consullship of himself, and Licinius, the Indictions began to be reckoned in the Calendar.

Several Opinions about the Original and Number of Indictions.

9. Now for better understanding this matter it is to be considered, that the Indictions were famous for two things, viz. the Payment of Tribute or the Ordinary Tax, and the Supputation of Years or Distinction of times. In respect of the first, they seem of a much earlier Date than the times of Constantine, and introduced by Augustus Caesar, who, as Dion Cassius witnesseth, a little before Our Saviour's Birth began a Recription or Tax; first of such as lived in Italy, and were worth Ducentia Sestertia, omitting then such as were not so rich or inhabited the Provinces, 1562 l. 101. for fear of Insurrections. From which shortly after being delivered by the settlement of his Affairs, when his Treasury was now very low, he imposed the Tax upon all the World. Perceiving that Commotions might hereupon be raised, several Persons were sent away into several Provinces to look to the Peace, and amongst the rest Sulpicius Cyrenius was taken from his Attendance upon Caius Caesar, and dispatched into Syria, M. Lollius being appointed Governour to young Caesar in his room. That in this sense Indictions were not of a much later date, appears from Quem vide ad Ant. 312.

Sect. 3. from Julianus and Paulus the Lawyers, from what they answer concerning Lands obnoxious to this Indiction or Payment. But what sort of Payment this was or how it was fessed, whether by Poll or a Tax upon the Estate, hath been doubted. It's most probably conjectur'd that it was levied both ways, at first, a certain Estate in Land and a certain Age (though various at several times) being required of those that paid it. For the Chief Collectour took notice of all Persons who were to pay and who not, and at what time they had already begun or were to begin to pay, registering their Names. The Syrians, as appears from D. 12. de Cen. Vlpian, were obliged to pay Tribute, the Males at fourteen and the Females at twelve Years of Age, or the time of Puberty. Afterward, the way of payment by Poll called Capitatio, came to be more distinguish'd from the Land Tax called Jugatio, and that in the time of Vlpian.

10. Granting then that the Indictions, as they noted or imposed Payment of Money, were before the time of Constantine, yet that so anciently they were made use of for Supputation of times doth not any where appear. But how should they come to comprize the Period of fifteen Years, or so many together to be called the first, second, third Indiction and so forward, till the fifteenth be reckoned, and then to begin again? Some with Scaliger guess the reason to have been, because Constantine reckoned from his Quinquennalia to his Vicennalia. Others, as Paulus Petavius, because Men being not fessed of old, till they were fourteen Years old complete, the Sels or Tax could not be laid or estimated but for fifteen Years at most, those who should be taxed at the next fifteenth Year being yet unborn. And Baro-Vide Barn. nus cannot possibly (he saith) assign any other reason than this, that whereas sixteen Years were formerly required for a Soldier to serve before he could challenge a Milition, Freedom from the Capitatio, or the Privilege of the Emeriti, Constantine, who had much kindness as he himself professeth for the Veterane Soldiers, cut this term shorter by one Year, and appointed fifteen for their Service. That all these fifteen Years should be reckoned by so many Indictions thence probably came to pass, because of every of these Years Annona indicabatur, Provisions either in Specie or in Money were imposed and laid upon the Provinces by Rescript or Edict of the Prince, and so they were called Indictions ab indicendo; care being taken by several Laws, that before the beginning of the Indiction, true and Authentick Breves should be made for prevention of Fraud and Cheating in the Collectours. Hence this Indiction came to be called Distributio and Fisco. Baronius farther conjectureth, that the Reason why the Indictions began on the twenty fourth of September was, because that then Harvest being every where got in, the Emperours were wont at that time to indict, impose or lay the Taxes upon the several Provinces. But Petavius affirms that the beginning of an Indiction was the same with that of a Year, and that thereupon the Romans computed their Indictions from after the Winter Solstice, but the Greeks from the first new Moon after the Autumnal Equinoctial, who having not their Months fixed as had the Romans but moveable, and their first Month beginning with the first New Moon after the Autumnal Equinoctial, which most commonly happened on the twenty fourth of September, it came to pass that the Roman Indiction had a divers Epoche from that of the Greeks. The Emperours that succeeded Constantine followed the Greek Account, as also did their Subjects; but the Bishops of Rome always observed their own, and still retain, we are told, their ancient Custome. The Indictions were so notable, and the Supputation by them, that it was very convenient to make this Digression upon them. But of their beginning diversly in divers Countries we have spoken in our second Part; Let us return to the Kingdom and Government of Theodorich.

Felix made Consul with Secundinus.

11. For the Year following or the DXI. of Our Lord, in the fourth Indiction, Theodorich to oblige the Countrey of Gall, and reward the Virtue of Felix a deserving Person of that Nation, joined him in the Consulship with Secundinus, who was named for the East. Concerning this Person he wrote an Epistle Commendatory to Anastafius the Emperour, still extant, for his approbation, together with another directed to Felix himself, both Commonitory and in way of Commifion. Herein he commends him for his frugality, which had enabled him to undergo the Expences of the Dignity to which he doth also encourage him, they being great. For the same Year and the same fourth Indiction he made Argolicus Prefect of the City, that he might, as he tells him in his Patent, succeed to his Father's Honours, bidding him consider how great a matter it was in the beginning of his Preferences to have grayheaded Rome committed to his Government, and charging him to carry himself so justly, modestly and generously, that he might no way disgrace his Employment, but maintain his Dignity amongst so many

D. 12. de Cen. Vlpian.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

many grave and understanding Persons as the Roman Senate afforded. In another Epistle he commands him to give all furtherance to one John, with whom he had agreed for cleansing the common Sewers of the City of Rome, concerning the prodigious Magnificence of which he spends many words, affirming that they exceeded even the Miracles of other Cities. In a third he orders him to give leave to Paulinus a Patritian to re-edifie the publick Store-houses, which were fallen down for Age and want of Care, that they might be preferred for the use of Posterity. About the same time he wrote to the Senate of Rome, and having assured the Fathers, that as he took care for redressing all grievances, especially such as concerned their City, so he could not but mind them of several Omiffions, which by Information of divers well meaning Persons were come to his knowledge. As that the waters of the Forme were now made use of to turn Mills and to water Gardens; that the slaves appointed by Princes to that service were seized and employed by private Men, and that Brads and Lead which had made Eternal Jones King of Thessaly, and Midas King of Phrygia their first Inventours, being employed by adorning the Walls, were pilfered away and imbezelled. He tells them therefore that he had sent one John, (probably the same with the other) to have information, concerning these matters, and bids them join with him, to promote that for which they of their own accord ought to have petitioned.

Theodorich reprehends the Senate at Rome.

Doeth several Acts of Charity.

12. Being now much intent upon Acts of Charity and Publick Works, as he had before been kind to the Gravassani and Pontonates, he remitted the Tribute of this fourth Indiction to the Inhabitants of Arles, who endured the penalty of that glorious siege as he expresseth it, and with them to all in Gall under his Power, giving many reasons to Gemellus to whom the Order is directed, for his dealing so favourably with that People; but chiefly this, that rather the Equity of their Cause, than good Nature induced him so to doe. About this same time he sent one Matadas a Comes, to protect and defend those of Marfelles from all Acts of Violence and Oppression, commanding them to receive and obey him in such Capacity. The year following foreseeing in what danger Italy might be through the many Excurfions and Depredations made by the Northern Nations, and considering how he himself had shewn the way, to any that would invade these Quarters, he caused the Castle of Veruca situate upon the River Atles to be fortified. Moreover at this time, as Sigonius will have it, he married his Sister Amalafreda to Trafamund the Vandal King of Africa, as also his Neice to Hermisfred King of the Thuringi. And taking notice of Symmachus a Patritian, how excellent an Architect he was, and how industrious he had been in adorning the Suburbs of Rome, with private Buildings, he thence takes occasion to persuade him to embrace a more Noble Subject of his Abilities, in repairing the Ancient Theatre, which through Age, the consumer of all things, was so much decayed. In the Letter the King, or rather Cassiodorus, fell into a Rapture, when he considers the force of time, which one would have thought, should sooner have worn out Mountains than so strong and admirable a Fabrick. Having admired its arched Roofs, he falls into a Discourse of the Original of Theatres, because he hath to doe with a Learned Man. He tells him that when of old, Countreymen in Festivals were wont to sacrifice in their Groves to several Deities, the Athenians first brought up this Countrey practice into the City, calling that a Theatre in the Greek Language, which may be exprest in Latin by the word Visionum, as which at a distance, and without any impediment might be seen by the People. The Front hereof was called Scena, from the darke shade of the Grove, where, at the Spring, Shepherds were wont to sing their Songs to several tunes. In those times flourished Mufick and Sage Sentences of those most prudent Ages, but afterwards this honest Discipline, avoiding the Conversation of naughty Persons out of Modesty, retired.

The Original of Theatres.

13. Thence he comes to shew both whence the Tragedy and Comedy received their Names, to speak of the Muses, the Mimus and Pantomimus, wherein we must not follow him, and at length tells Symmachus, that whether it should be thought fit to underprop the Fabrick or repair it by new Buildings, the Expence should be out of his Chamber, both that the Architect might be renowned for so good a work, and Antiquity seem decently repaired in his own time. And this we thought fit to infer, that the Reader may see the generous Humour of Theodorich, and the Learning of Cassiodorus though a little affected, whose style is not so much barbarous as was the time, wherein Latin through long continuance, which altereth all things, and much more through the mixture of foreign and exotic ibid. Ep. 30.

Sect. 3.

ibid. lib. 3. Ep. 32 & 40.

Ep. 34.

Cassiod. Var. 1. & Ep. 51.

Sect. 3. tick words, if we look at the true idiom and phrase, was quite changed from it self, and acknowledged its vassalage and subjection to the barbarous Northern Nations as well as the Cities and the Country it self. And hence this learned and worthy person was so sensible, that in his Preface to his Epistles he both acknowledged it, and deprecates the disdain and indignation of his Reader. This same year to fruitfull acts of Clemency and Magnificence, Theodorich did still more good in remitting to the Inhabitants of Campania the Tribute they were wont to pay, and this he did in consideration of the loss they had sustained by the eruption of the Hill Vesuvius. Concerning this there is a Letter or Order extant directed to Fauftus the Prefect, wherein he tells him that the Campanians having received this damage had petitioned him to that effect. That he was ready to grant their request, if he could be rightly informed of the accident, and how to judge of the particular damages done thereby. He commands him to send some person of approved fidelity into the Territories of Nola, or Naples, to survey the Grounds, and take an estimate of the loss, that he might know how to make a proportionable allowance out of the Tribute.

14. Then doth he tell the History, and recount the sad circumstances and effects of the usual Eruptions. He premitteth that the Country, left it should enjoy perfect felicity, was continually alarmed with that calamity, yet was it not so terrible as else it would have been, because it gave fair warning of the impending and approaching mischief. For such strugglings and motions there were within, that Vapours breaking out with a mighty noise terrified all round about the place. The Air, saith he, is all thickened and darkened with that sooty Exhalation, so that it gives notice of its rising to all Italy. Ashes through that cald fire throughout the great Sea, and terrene Clouds being gathered, it rains drops of Dust in the transmarine Provinces: it being then clearly discovered how much Campania it self suffers when the mischief is felt in another part of the World. You might there behold, as it were, Rivers of Dust to run along the ground, and dry Sand to flow with fervent violence, as if it had been liquid streams. You would be amazed to see the plain Fields swell as high as the tops of Trees, and those Meadows sadly wasted with hot Embers which lately by their pleasant greenness allured the Eye. That everlasting Furnace belcheth forth purple but barren Sand, which though adust with continual burning, yet cauleth to take Root and fructify those several Seeds or Stalks it receiveth, and with great celerity repaireth what it had formerly wasted. What strange Exception is this to the general rule and course of Nature, that one Mountain should roar to such a degree, that so many parts of the World should be terrified by the change of the Air; and that so it should cast about its own substance that yet it should receive no loss nor diminution! It bedews the Regions far and near with Dust; vomits out heaps upon the Neighbourhood, and yet this Mountain, exhausted by so many and so great evacuations, continues to be an Hill for so many Ages. Who would believe so great pieces of Earth, lying in the plain, should have bubbled up out of so profound depths, and no otherwise than as light Chaff spit or blown out of the Mountain's mouth? Elsewhere great Mountains burn privately, and in their own place; here almost the whole World must know of the matter. Wherefore seeing that the Inhabitants are not to be credited in a thing which may be attested by the Universe, let your prudence make choice of a man who may both rehearse them, and prevent all fraudulent and surreptitious dealings. Thus doth Cassiodorus though in an odd sort of Latine elegantly describe and paint out to the life all the Accidents of this Eruption, which, and that deservedly, makes Baronius Ad Ann. 471. reprehend John Bodin for taxing Procopius of lightness and inconsideration, in that he writes how the Althes of another Eruption flew as far as Constantinople.

A Description of Vesuvius.

15. This too famous Vesuvius takes its rise from a pleasant and open Champion (being made or nourished of Earthquakes and Burnings) where the pleasant Sebeticus empties its Waters into the bottom of the Tyrrhenian Sea, and that in the lower part of Campania the Happy, a Country never sufficiently commended for its admirable fertility, in which respect Pliny calls it the place of perpetual contention betwixt Ceres and Bacchus, and by Merula it is styled the Paradise of Italy. This Mountain, or Hill rather, elevates its self for about four miles, its highest top not being one mile perpendicular from the Sea, in compass about twenty four, so separated from all other Hills as if it scorned their conjunction and alliance, or rather they were afraid of it as a dangerous Neighbour. The skirts of it are beset with fruitfull Vines, beautiful Trees, pleasant Flowers, and wholesome Herbs, all over but where it looks upon the East, which side being either originally, or through through the accession of this new adventitious Earth, more steep than the other, bears onely wild Trees and brushy matter. On the top it is divided, or rather encompassed with another hollow Hill, shaped in the figure of an Half Moon, from which it is parted but with a small Valley or Plain called the Attrium, it being probable that anciently it was all united in its self, and plain and even, as both Strabo describes it and Dion Cassius witnesseth; in process of time this division being made by Stone and Althes, which it vomited out of its own Bowels. From this Plain, as well the one as the other of those highest Ridges, is barren, naked, and all covered with Althes and broken Stones, which continually rowl downward, which makes it very difficult to climb up, so high, as to come to the prospect of the ancient Vorago or Hole, although there grows Broom, which affords some shelter against the Torrent, and here and there cauleth better footing.

Cassiod. Var. lib. 4. Ep. 50.

Of the Country about it.

16. At this day the Mountain is encompassed with a well peopled Country, and noble and elegant Cities, adorned with rich and sumptuous Edifices, and in many places with large and stately Palaces, each whereof seems rather the Habitation of a King than the Pleasure-House of some private Nobleman; so rich are they in their Furniture, exquisite in their Fabrick and Workmanship, and deliciously seated amongst Gardens, Grotto's and Fountains. But as nothing is perfect in this World, but the best and most pleasant things subject to change and inconsistency, Campania the Happy is in this respect unfortunate, that it fosters so great a mischief in its own bowels, which Time, the finisher as well of miseries as pleasures, hath had no power to conquer and subdue. Whether this Fire find matter within the Bowels of the Mountain it self, or rather burning below in some inferior Valley makes onely a passage through it, and a vent for discharging the Vapours and Althes which arise from the bituminous matter, Sulphur and other Minerals lying in the Country round about, and by its hot Fountains and otherwise giving arguments of terrestrial Fires, as Seneca was of opinion, it's not our work here to enquire. If we could tell the Reader when either the Eruptions of this Mountain or Aetna began, it would be more proper to our Design; but here we are destitute of Intelligence; for the inward cause having been the same in all Ages, many such Accidents may have happened before these Monuments of Antiquity received their Being, which communicate to us the most ancient Observations about this Country. It's scarcely worth the while to take notice what the pretended Perosus of Annius tells us, that in the last year but one of Aratus the Sixth, King of Alyria, Italy burnt for many days in three several places about the Istria, Cyme and Vesuvius, and that these places were by the Janigeni called Palestana, that is, the burned Region.

Ep. 70. de Eruptione.

The several Eruptions when.

17. This is indeed agreeable to the Etymology of the word Vesuvius, signifying Fire or Spark, in the Greek Tongue, as a late Writer tells us, in which respect the Volsi in their ancient Speech called it Vesbia, which as those who are skilled in that Language affirm, is the same with Fire. Several others write of the Antiquity of these Fires proceeding from this Mountain, and whence the Country should be called Campi Phlegrei, but when they first began, they do not take upon them to tell us. Diodorus Siculus and Strabo seem to speak of them as having happened in times remote, such as they had heard and read of, and the Hole and Althes onely demonstrated to the eye, that formerly such things had been. This perhaps was also the reason, why Pliny who was so diligent in reckoning up the several places of this nature, yet makes no mention of this though it was so near him, and his curiosity at length, to pry into the mysteries of so great a wonder, brought him to his end. But he intended onely to make mention of such as continually vomited forth their flames, which this Vesuvius doth not; and perhaps it might have smoked in his time, but because it did not much endanger the neighbouring Country he passed it over in silence. To be sure, Tacitus, describing the pleasantness of the Isle of Capri, the place of the fenial and voluptuous retirements of Tiberius, speaks of this Hill as not having formerly done that mischief, which it did afterward in the time of Titus. Hence Writers conclude, that before the time of Tiberius there happened no such burnings as to destroy the natural beauty of the Mountain, at least had not been so long a time as sufficed to the reparation of it. And this they inforce from a Verse of Martial, which seemeth to hint at some such thing.

18. John Boccace speaking of Vesuvius, tells how it broke out into flames before the reign of Titus in the time of Nero, having first sent forth a thick smook, which ended at last in a shower of Althes that filled all Campania, and the Sea it self. Seneca speaking of this very time, which fell in the LXXV. year of our Lord, in the

Sect. 3.

*Annal. l. 5. Profectus dicitur pulcherrimum suum, antequam quoniam ardens faciem laci videretur. * Hic est pennis viridis vesuvius umbra. l. 1. epigr. 105.*

Lib. di Mem.

Nat. l. 6. ca. 3. 27.

Sect. 3. Confulship of Regulus and Virginus, and on the fifth of February, makes no mention at all of the burning out of that portentous Earthquake which ruined a great part of Pompeia, and much endamaged all the Country. It's fuppofed therefore that Boccace miftakes the Name of the Emperour, although the experience of modern times affureth us, that fuch Earthquakes are ordinarily accompanied with Eruptions of Vefuvius. But to be fure sixteen years after, about the year of our Lord LXXXI. in the time of Titus, happened fuch an one as could not be concealed; it's effect being fo fharp, as made thofe that lived in that time both to feel and fpeak. Of this have written Pliny junior, Suetonius, Zonaras, Oroftus, Tacitus, Valerius Flaccus, Statius, Silius Italicus, Martial, Aufonius, Eufebius, and many others. So frange were the accidents, circumftances and effects of this Eruption, as cannot well be expreffed. Suetonius gives an Abstract of them, but Xiphilin the Epitomizer of Dio is more exprefs, who having firft defcribed the Mountain, and then the ordinary and common figns and effects of its conflagration, affirms that they were nothing in comparifon of what happened at this time.

The dreadful one in the time of Titus.

19. Before the Eruption a great number of men of unfual bignefs, fuch as Giants, fays, were feen to wander about the Hill, the Country and neighbouring Cities, both by day and night. After followed a very great drought, and prefently fo dreadful Earthquakes, that the tops of Mountains became level to the adjoining Grounds. Then were heard fubterraneous founds, like to Thunder and the bellowing of Beasts, the Sea roared, the Heavens made a noife, and great crackings and rufhings were heard, as if the Mountains had all fallen together. Then firft of all began mighty Stones to be caft up to the top of the Hill, which being removed out of the way, fuch vaft quantities of Fire and Smoak burft out, that the Air was filled, and the Sun darkened no lefs than in the greateft Eclipse, the Day turning into Night, and Light into fo prodigious Darknefs. Hereupon the people, according to the fuperftitious humour of thofe times, thought the Giants were fallen out amongst themfelves, the rather becaufe the Image and representation of them were to be feen in the Smoak, and a noife of Trumpets feemed to be heard. Some thought the World now returned into its ancient Chaos, or was to be confumed by Fire; yet unwilling to die, and covetous of Life, when the whole World feemed to perifh with them. They ran out of their Houfes into the High-ways, out of the Ways into their Houfes; from Sea they hafted to the Land, and from the Land to the Sea, ftill imagining, according to the refflefs humour of mankind, that new things would be better than the prefent condition.

20. So vaft a quantity of Afhes at length fell, that both Land and Sea, as well as formerly the Air, feemed therewith overwhelmed, which did great mischief, not onely to Men, their Fields and Cattel, but deftroyed in a manner all Fish and Fowl. Two Cities, Herculanum and Pompei it covered, and buried therein the Inhabitants alive, as they were fitting in their Theatres. Nay fo incredible was the quantity, that it flew as far as Aegypt, and Syria, not to mention the nearer parts of Africk; as for Rome it fo thickened and darkened the Air there, that the Sun was thought to be eclipsed, to the ordinary fort, and the more underftanding were confounded at the accident, knowing nothing of what had happened in Campania: therefore they imagined that Nature was diffolved, and that Heaven and Earth would come together. And although at Rome they were more feared than hurt for the prefent, yet afterwards a grievous Peftilence followed, as the dreadful Effect of fo difmal a Caufe. The beginning of this Eruption fell on the firft of November, about one a clock, in the firft year of Titus his Reign, as appears from an Epiftle of Pliny junior, wherein, fetting down the occafion and manner of the death of his Uncle (who wrote the Natural Hiftory, and going too near to pry, was choaked with the Smoak and Duft) he relembles the firft appearance of that huge and ftrange Cloud unto a Pine Tree, for to no other, he faith, he could fitly compare it, it feeming to have, as it were, a long Trunk, and Boughs fpreading out above it. Sometimes it appeared white, otherwhilts dusky and spotted, according to the mixed proportions of Earth and Afhes. Reckoning up the feveral accidents which accompanied this Prodigy, amongst the reft he faith that the Pumice Stones flew about the Ears of men in the open Fields, yet having confulted together what to doe, they held it fafer during the Earthquake, when their Houfes tottered and reeled as if they had been drunken, to be without than within doors, arming their Heads with Pillows and Bolsters againft the blows they expected. In conclusion, fo dreadful was this Conflagration, as well in its felf as circumftances, that Cleuvius affirms the Hill ever fince have have burned, and others that from this time it became forked or horned at the Top. Ecclefiaftical Writers make ufe of it to exprefs the Infernal Fire, and particularly our Learned Doctor Jackson upon the Creed affirms this burning of Vefuvius to have been as a Beacon to give warning to all Flefh, and from the admirable Conformity betwixt the Predictions of the Prophet Joel and the Narration of Pliny, he doubts not to fay that now was fulfilled that Prophecy, I will fhew Wonders in the Heavens, and on the Earth, Blood and Fire and Pillars of Smoak, as alfo that this was the beginning of the terrible Day of the Lord foretold by the Prophet, wherewith the World was a long time shaken by fits, as it were by a deadly fever, as may appear from the like Calamities in Trajan's time, recited by Dion Caffius.

Another in the time of Severus.

21. The next Eruption of this fubterraneous Fire that is taken notice of, happened in the time of Severus; and as Lycophenes gueffed in the Year CCIII. and the tenth of that Emperour. The Hiftorian relates that now Vefuvius fhined with mighty flames, and roared with fo huge a Noife that the found reached as far as Capua; this being poffibly the time whereof Galen writes, that a great Quantity of Afhes was carried from it as far as the Sea. The next breaking forth of this combuftible matter was in the time of Diocleſian, about the Year CCCV. when it flew over all Europe, if Maiolus be to be credited, who writes that the Fire was extinguifhed by the Prayers of St. Januarius, how truly, feeing no other Authours make mention of this Eruption, we fhall not enquire. Of that which followed next after, and happened on the fixth of November in the Year CCCLXXI. many Authours have written. We are told that adjoining Towns and Regions were laid waſte by this burning, and that fuch a Fear and Conſternation feized the People, that they betook themſelves for many Years to Supplications and Proceffions, that they might avert the Wrath of Almighty God. Befides what happened in this Year two other Eruptions are ſpoken of in the CCCLXXII. and CCCLXXIII. of Our Lord, which fome conjecture to have been one and the fame, and that it either continued or broke out at ſeveral times for fo long together. However the matter ſtood in reference to time, moſt dreadful were the Accidents of this, or theſe Conflagrations. Marcellinus affirms the day to have been turned into Night, and that all Europe was covered with the ſmall duſt which flew about in the Air, and the Inhabitants of Conſtantinople, to prevent the like Judgment for the future, kept an Anniverſary day of Prayer and Supplication the fixth of November. This confirms what Procopius relates of the flying of the Afhes as far as that City, for which he is rafhly taxed by Bodin; though Leo the Emperour was ſtruck with ſuch Conſternation, that he could not reſt quiet in the Town, but went and journaled at Mamantis, and theſe Afhes were blown into Africk as far as Tripolis, if not in the ſame Year, in that which followed. The next Conflagration was that which gave occaſion to this Diſcourſe, and happened in the Days of Theodorich, which ten others have followed in ſucceeding Ages. But the greateſt by far as can be known was, that which fell out lately in the Year M. DCXXXI. on the fixteenth of December, the manner whereof and the direfull Effects, are deſcribed in the Italian Language by Gioviano di Luca, a Doctor of the Laws and Apoſtolic Protonotary as he is ſtyled, who hath taken pains to collect out of Hiftory all the other Conflagrations mentioned. But we have made too long a Digreſſion, which the remarkable neſs of the Subject extorted.

Theodas vicious in Spain.

22. Spain being now at this time held, and governed by the two feveral Interests of Gifalarick and Amalarick, the two Gothick Kings, the former it ſeems not content with his ſhare, reſolved to have all or none, and for that purpoſe took Arms againſt his young Neighbour. But his Deſigns were not fo deeply laid, nor his Preparations ſo quick and furpizing, but Theodas the Governour or Proteſtour of Amalarick eaſily diſcovered them, and was fo well provided, that he gave him Battel and a great Overthrow, and forced him to quit the Country. Gifalarick betook himſelf to Traſamund the Vandal King of Africk, who kindly entertained him, and jealous of the Power of Theodorich ſupplied him with Money. This Theodorich much ſtomached, and wrote a Letter to him, wherein he upbraided him with ingratitude; in that having been fo obliged by him he requited him by entertaining his Enemy. He had honoured him, by beſtowing his own Siſter on him in Marriage; whereas he had given but his Daughters or Nieces to other Princes: which Siſter he extolls not fo much for her high Birth and Quality, though ſhe was defended of the Stock of Amalus, as the Excellency of her Mind, being a Woman equal to him her Husband in Prudence, and not fo

Sect. 3.

Lib. i. c. 24.

I Joel. 2. 30.

De Prodigiiis. l. 2.

L. i. Coll. 16. p. 284.

Doctor di Leg. et, 2 Protonotario Apoſtolicis. In Napoli per Secundino Rencapolo.

Theodas, Populi impetrans. Troſt. Mand. Conſultans ei.

conſiderable

3. considerable for her Royal Estate, as admirable for her rare Policy and Councils. He admonisheth him seriously to confider of the Injustice he had done; left the King of Italy should be provoked to doe something, which might manifestly break that good understanding, and peace that had been formerly betwixt them, for as much as an unlooked-for Injury, and the finding of Treachery where one expected Friendship and good Offices cannot be endured. He desires him to give heed, to what he had ordered his Ambassadors to say to him by word of mouth. Gislarick (or Gefaleck) it seems by this Letter, having got what supply of Money he desired, was gone into other Countries to find out some good Advantage for recovery of his former and better Fortunes. Yet Trafamund excused himself so plausibly, that he gave full and abundant satisfaction to Theodorich, which he expresseth in another Letter published by Cassiodorus next after the former, wherein is mentioned also a Present of Gold sent by the Pandal King. This Theodorich refuseth to accept, expressing what great delight he took in restoring it, and some Vanity, in setting forth his own Commendations for so doing, concluding with an Exhortation to his Brother-in-Law to be more cautious and exact for the time to come. In the mean time Theudas, by his order, governs all Spain in the Name of Amalarick.

23. The year of Our Lord DXV had M. Aurelius Cassiodorus Senatour for Consul, of whom we have already spoken, and by whole means and procurement we have discoursed so much other matters, especially of Italy, and the Western Provinces. To so high a Dignity he did not come per saltum, or leaping over the Heads of such as were far above him, through the wantonness of Fortune, but by degrees and as Vertues themselves are wont to increase, for so Theodorich his Master expresseth it in his Letter to the Senate. His first step in preferment was the Comitua privatarum, which Office having managed prudently, innocently and without Corruption, he was advanced to the Comitua sacrarum Largitionum. Having in this place also demeaned himself with such Moderation, that he shewed what was just and equal, both by his Example and Precepts under the former King, by Theodorich he was preferred to the Dignity of Prætor, in discharge of which Trust, having left a pattern of Modesty and Moderation to such as should come after, he came to be Correktor of the Bruttia and of Lucania his own Country. At length he arose to the Dignity of Præfectus Prætorio, as also the supreme Honours of a Patritian and Consul discharging the Office of Secretary still as appears by the Letter lately mentioned, wherein as well as in that which precedes it he is commended, though truly, for the greatness of his Family, the honourable Actions of his Ancestours, and his own Personal Vertues. But it was the Custome for Princes to extoll their Candidates, and blazon their Vertues and great Achievements to the Senate, that they might seem not to have conferred Dignities and Preferments, upon unfit and undeserving Persons.

24. About this time, it's uncertain what Year, Theodorich subdued the Allemanis, and forced them to pay Tribute, as Agathias hath written, and appeareth from the Kings Letters directed to the Inhabitants of Suevia, wherein he lets them know that he had made one Fridelade their Governour, for restraining thefts and robberies wherewith they were much disturbed. Within a year after the Consulship of Cassiodorus, while he still cherished the Fortunes and Hopes of Amalarick his Nephew in Spain, he was informed that Eutharick, the Son of Vitimer and Grandson of Beremund, lived in that Country. For Beremund the Son of Thurismund defended of the Family of Amalus, leaving Scythia, as Jornandes writes, went and lived in Gall with Theodorich the Succellour of Valia King of the Westrogoths, by whom being honourably entertained, he left a Son called Vitimerick, who was Father to this Eutharick, a Person excellently qualified both in Body and Mind. Theodorich hearing him much commended was very desirous to see him, and when he had the satisfaction, glad he had found out one who was both of his own line, and every way deserving his Alliance, he gave him in Marriage Amalasuenta his Daughter. Two or three Years after he made him Consul, and Anastatius the Emperour, to please and oblige the Old Man, presented him with the Robe called Tunica palmata, and adopted him as his honorary Son in the way of Arms. In the mean time Hermisfrid, King of the Hervuli, put to death his Brother Berthar, and after that calling Theodorich King of Gall to his assistance made an end of Belderic his other Brother; but when he had done his work, and Theodorich demanded part of the Country conquered according to the Articles of their Alliance, he refused to make good what he had engaged, and thereupon mortal and irreconcilable differences arose betwixt them.

25. Betwixt

25. Betwixt the Emperour Justin and Theodorich, there was maintained from the first a good Intelligence and Correspondence, as appears from mutual Offices of Kindness and Amity. Justin himself bearing the Title of Consul in his second Year, took Eutharick the Son-in-Law of Theodorich for his Colleague, and farther graced him by a titular Adoption, as a Letter shews, which afterward was written to the Emperour by Amalarick the Son of Eutharick, whom Amalasuenta his Wife bore the Year preceding his Consulship. Being designed Consul, Eutharick went to Rome, there to enter upon his Office, which before he approached he was met by all the Ranks and Degrees of the City, who strove by all means to doe him Honour, as one whom they expected to see shortly upon the Throne. He on the other side omitted nothing to gain their good Opinion, discharging his Office with all possible Liberality and Magnificence; for some way or other he gratified the Senatours both Goths and Romans, and pleased the People with Shews on the Theatre, particularly with such wild Beasts procured out of Africk, as Rome had never seen till that time. Having done this at Rome he returned to Ravenna to his Father-in-Law, and there also strove to exceed himself in Liberality and obliging Actions. Some time after Theodorich was vexed in his mind by News received out of Africk, where the Wandals had imprisoned his Sister Amalfreda after her Husband's Decease, and put all the Goths to death who went over with her upon the Account of the Alliance, under pretence of a Conspiracy. Theodorich having not sufficient strength at Sea for Invasion of Africk, could not revenge the Injury as he desired, and in the mean time Hilderick the King contracted a fast friendship with Justinian, Nephew to the Emperour, and who managed all Affairs in the Extreme Age of his Uncle.

26. Hitherto we have beheld Theodorich so to demean himself, that one might not fear to propound him as a pattern to other Princes, and his Actions as so many Copies for them to write after, such his prudent Conduct, his Valour, Magnificence, Bounty, and which Cemented all, his Justice, Equity and Moderation. Now we must see him degenerating from himself, and blurring those Lines of Government which he had so exactly drawn; so hard is it for Man that is placed on high, not to be giddy and intoxicated with Ease, and the Fumes of continual Pleasure. Yet had he shewn any discretion in the choice of a Subject, wherein to exercise the mutability of his humours, he had been the less unfortunate, because more excusable; but the hard Measure he made, falling upon one who deserved better than any of that Age wherein he lived, in this respect Fortune it seems ow'd, and paid him a very ill turn. This Person was Boetius a Patritian who had twice or thrice been Consul, and such a Man as one ought carefully to describe, lest we doe him injury. Of so noble an Extract, that therein he excelled all his Contemporaries, deriving his Pedigree from Mantius Torquatus, which of later times had been enobled more by Anicius his Great Grandfather, and others of that most potent and noble House, to behold the Power and Interest of which most Eminent Persons came into Italy, an House which so abounded with Wealth, that Zosimus the Historian envying the Greatness thereof, writes that this Family of Anicii possessed in a manner the Riches of all the Romans. In his younger years he studied at Athens, where the Profession of Philosophy had been restored, which as he neglected not in general, but searched into the depths of all Sects and Opinions, so especially he addicted himself to that of Aristotle, and therein spent most of those Eighteen years which he passed away in that University. The Name of that Philosopher, was formerly scarcely known to those that were merely skilled in Latin, as he himself saith; but he translated his works, and illustrated them with Commentaries in that Language, hereby sufficiently evincing that of all Roman wits, he best understood the Scale, and could fathom the Depths of the Peripatetic.

27. For the Reader must not think that the Philosophy of Aristotle, which in these later Ages hath obtained the Principality in the Schools, was always of such Reputation as we have seen it in our time. At the beginning of Christianity the Sect of the Stoicks much prevailed, but especially, the Opinions of Plato, which in the primitive times were of such Repute, that the greatest Ribs, the true Religion met with, were laid by those Prejudices that were thence received. For although much furtherance it received from such Philosophers as were converted, in refusing the Vanities and Impieties of Paganism, yet the great Writers against it were of that Sect, and both Tertullian and Origen of old complained, all or most of the Heresies which crept into the Church, took their Original from the Fetters of (this) Philosophy. Long was it e'er the Schools became

Perr-

SECT. 3.

The progress of Peripatetic Philosophy.

Peripatetic, and Philosophy had ceased to be Pagan, e'er she forsook the Academy and the Porch. At length she courted Aristotle so much, that she made him ample amends for her former Neglects; and here, as formerly she had done much mischief as well as good in the School of Plato, so the indeavoured to obliterate the Opinions and Notions of Aristotle upon the Christian Faith, witness Gilbert or Gislebert, the Bishop of Poitiers, of whose Profession of Philosophy and the Heresie he thence sucked, let Ecclesiastical Writers speak. We shall only observe farther concerning this Subject, that the Peripatetic Philosophy was vehemently believed and promoted by the Schoolmen who found it most agreeable to their Quirks and Niceties, and possibly the real and essential Difference and Substantiality it placeth betwixt Substances and their Qualities (upon which Doctrines some Novelties in the Church have been founded) was the great Reason it hath been advanced, not only above true Reason but the Holy Scriptures themselves. As much concerned are they to answer a text or place in the Philosopher, as in St. Peter or St. Paul; and Theology hath not only received its Model and Method but even Rules from him. So hath this Sect prevailed in later Ages, that from it Writers have received their Terms and Manners of Speech, which makes it necessary that young Students be therein first instructed and well grounded before they advance to other Exercises, and make any Attempts upon Experimental Philosophy, or Divinity it self.

Vide Cassiod.
Var. lib. 1.
Ep. penult. 1.
2. Ep. 40.Multa erudi-tione sagina-tum.Greek Authours translated by Boetius.

28. But to return to Boetius, none draws his half fac'd Picture so much to the life, as he who afterward destroyed the Archetype, I mean Theodorich the King who gives him such Encomiums, and heaps such Commendations upon him, as the sense and apprehension thereof could only be obliterated by the power of Jealousie. He not only commends him for his skill in the Precepts of Aristotle, but for his perfections in all manner of Learning, whereof he makes him to great a Hellus, that he useth a word applicable to such Creatures, as upon which the Nourishment they have received hath been very well bestowed. The knowledge he ascribes to him is as well practical as speculative, and herein appeared his worth, that he was not content to be Learned alone; but would have others partake of that which made him so considerable. Therefore he taught to speak Latin, a better foreign Author was considerable amongst the Greeks; for instance Pythagoras the Mathematician, Ptolemy the Astronomer, Nicomachus the Arithmetician, Euclid the Geometrician, Plato the Divine, Aristotle the Logician, and Archimedes the Mechanick, about whose Works the King, or Cassiodorus for him, spends many words, the effect of which is that Boetius perfectly skilled in his Doctrine of Motions should make two Clocks, whereof one should explicate the Motion of the Spheres, and the other the Diurnal Course of the Sun, both which were to be presented to the King of the Burgi. Such is the Testimony given by one that turned his deadly Enemy, but this as we formerly termed it is but an half fac'd Picture, representing only an Idea of his Intellectuals, what he was for his Morals we must also discover, to present him in all his Proportions. First then as a means to make him good as well as knowing, to the former secular Learning he added the Knowledge of Theology and the Holy Scriptures, as appears from his Books concerning the Blessed Trinity, and against the Errors of Nestorius and Eutyches.

His Morals.

29. What Influence this Knowledge of Christianity and true Philosophy had into his Life and Actions is sufficiently evident from his Management of Matters during his last Consulship, and the great hatred he contracted by his Impartial Justice, and defending private Persons from the Injuries and Oppressions of unreasonable Men how powerfull soever. Such were Conigastus and Triguilla the Master of the Kings Household, and other greedy and ravenous Goths, from the Claws of whom he rescued many miserable Italians, and to the great Indignation of such Monsters, protected his innocent Countrymen, as well from publick as private Impositions and Rapines. When during the Rage of a most Cruel famine, a great Summ of Money was required of the Inhabitants of Campania to their utter undoing, he opposed the Project of the Præfatus Prætorius with such Zeal and Contancy even before the King, that it was quite dashed and laid aside. When the greedy Courtiers had already devoured the Estate of Paulinus, a Man of Consular Dignity, in hope and expectation, he rescued it out of the Mouths of those greedy Leeches. Albinus a Person of the same Quality, he defended against the Accusations of Cyprianus the Informer, and by his Wit and Eloquence, protected him when the King accused him of High Treason, and referred his Trial to the whole Senate at Verona. Thus swimming against the stream he met with great opposition, both from King and Courtiers, and having enraged them by crossing their Designs,

Vide Sidoniam
de Cons. Imp.
1. 16.
Boetius de Consolatione.

SECT. 3.

Designs, he was at length swallowed up in the Gulph of his Princes Jealousie and Indignation. Once out of his Office, in the succeeding Consulship of Maximus, he was accused by Basilius, Opilio and Gaudentius, of whom the first for no good deed had been dismissed the King's Service, and undertook this Employment to redeem himself from his Creditors, and the other two having been condemned to Banishment had taken Sanctuary, and thereupon were ordered by the King's Edict, if by a day prefixed they departed not from Vienna, to be stigmatized in the Forehead and then driven away. Yet the very same day did these Villains accuse Boetius, and their Accusation was admitted; which tended to this effect, that he had endeavoured to advance the Power and Interest of the Senate above that of the King, having hindered an Informer from bringing in an Impeachment of Treason against the Fathers: and Letters were forged to make out his Intentions and Aims to be for the Recovery of the Roman Liberty. Theodorich either privy to this Villany, or lightly giving credit to those sordid Witnesses and feigned Crimes, rashly condemned this innocent Man, and confiscating his Estate banished him to Ticinum or Pavia, where comforting himself as well as he could with his Philosophy, he made a Book concerning that Consolation, and committed to writing those passages for information of Posterity, as well as of the present Age.

His pretended Crime.He is banished to Pavia.

30. Having imprisoned Severinus Boetius at Pavia, he caused Symmachus his Father-in-Law, and a Person of great Learning and other worth to be apprehended, committing them both to safe Custody, for they were not both committed at the same time, as some have thought, but Symmachus enjoyed his Liberty, whilst Boetius had too sad occasion to bewail his own Condition, and congratulate the Liberty of his Father-in-Law, as he doth in his Book de Consolatione. Nor long after Theodorich caused them both to be beheaded, and if thou wilt believe, Reader, the Relation of Martianus, who wrote his Life, and received it as a Tradition from the Church of Pavia, Boetius after his Head was off, took it up with both his Hands, and being asked who it was that struck him, answered The Ungodly, and so walking into the Neighbouring Church and kneeling down before the Altar, when he had received the Sacred Mysteries, he expired, and after his Death was honoured for a Saint. And why may not this Story be as true as what we find concerning St. Denis, which whoseever will not believe may goe and see, if he please, the Crosses erected in the several Places where he reited himself with his Head in his Hand, betwixt Paris and the Town which now bears the Name of that Martyr. The very same is also told of our St. Alban, who was beheaded for his Religion as St. Denis was. But so fell this Noble Pair of Senators, surpassed by none other in any Indowment whatsoever, which renders Mortals both Excellent and Glorious. Concerning one of them we have already seen, what their great Enemy (as he proved) testifies, and for Symmachus, the same Hand gives him large Commendations, true no doubt, because Procopius faith in few words the same things and more, although the reason the King gives in one of his Epistles, be not so solid as were the Buildings for which he so much extolls him, when he desires him to take upon him the Care of repairing the Theatre formerly mentioned. That he was well skilled in Theology appears from Boetius his dedicating his writings to him concerning the Trinity, wherein he makes him Judge and Censor of his Books; and that he was well seen in all the Sciences, from Priscian the Grammarian of Cæsarea, who taught about this time at Constantinople, and dedicated also to him the Book he wrote of Weights and Measures.

The Character of Symma-chus.

31. But concerning the Worth and Innocency of them both, there is one Testimony behind, and that is the too late Repentance of Theodorich, whose sorrow, as Procopius tells the story, was in its occasion and height full as remarkable as the Punishment had been unjust. Not many days after their Execution, when the King went to Supper, he had served up to his Table the Head of a Fish of an unusual bigness. This Theodorich (as he calls him, and by his right Name) fancies to be the Head of Symmachus lately put to death, who, as it were biting the nether Lip, seemed to threaten him in a gaffly and cruel manner. Seized hereupon with Horror and Amazement, and falling into a Cold-sweat he hastied to his Chamber, and lying down upon his Bed commanded his Attendants to cover him with many Clothes. Then did he reveal the whole matter to Epidius his Physician, lamenting the Sin he had committed against Symmachus, and soon after died, this being the first and last wrong he ever did his Subjects, in pronouncing sentence thus against men without Examination. Thus Procopius both excuses and commends, censuring him for the Rashness and Injustice of the Fact, and yet herein exceedingly praising him, that the Fact was single, the whole Course of his Life and Government having been regulated and poised by Justice and Moderation. Though his putting those

Antiquorum diligentissimus imitator, Ma-deratorum nobilissimus in-terpres, &c.
Cassiodorus lib.
4. Ep. 51.
Ex Prisciano Grammatico qui nostro tempore Con-stantinopoli Doctus fuit, ista collecta Jussu Cassiod. de Orithographia. c. 12.
pag. 101. sonus operis im-pressi Geneva.
Edit. Goth. lib.
1. ad initium.Theodorich dies of Melancholy for having put them to death.

Sec. 3. two Persons to death was inexcusable, yet his sorrow and repentance was remarkable, though the thing favoured of Rashness and Cruelty, yet his after-thoughts were signs of Mercy and good Nature; besides, the Extravagance of his Fancy as to the Head of the Fish, seems to have been an Effect of the Fickleness or tenderness of his Conscience. This however must be said, that Italy never enjoyed more serene and happy Days, never more Splendour in the highest pitch of her Greatness, never more solid and lasting Peace with Ease, Pleasure and Security, than under his Government. That few which obtained a Kingdom by Force and Violence, preserved themselves and it by such Calmness and Sweetness of Councils and Actions: In conclusion, that few so beloved by their Subjects were so terrible to their Enemies, both which Procopius testifies of him. He died it is said on the Second of September, in the 34th. of his Reign, and the Seventy second of his Age. When he saw his end approaching, having sent for the chief of the Gothick Nobility, he declared for his Successour Athalarick the Son of his Daughter Amalasuenta by Eutharick lately deceased, commanding them to receive and obey him as such; to love and cherish the Roman Senate and People, and to maintain Amity, and good Correspondence with the Emperour. His death is reported to have been portended at Naples, by the fall of the Head from off his Statue.

Athalarick succeeds his Grandfather.

Letters written by the Regent to Senate and People.

32. Athalarick then a boy of Eight Years of Age, succeeded his Grandfather. His Mother was the Regent of the Kingdom, being a Woman adorned with all Beauties and Accomplishments both of Mind and Body. Of Countenance and Aspect composed to such Majesty, as would strike the beholder with Veneration. Of such fluency and sweetness of Speech, that being skilled both in the Latin and Greek Tongues, she ravished the Minds and Affections of her Hearers; in sum, for Wisdom and other Indowments which fit and qualify a Person for Government, far above her Sex. By her order, Ambassadors and Letters are dispatched, in the Name of the young King to the Roman Senate and People, and to the neighbouring Princes, in League and Amity with her Father, signifying his death, and how the Child succeeded by virtue of his last Will and Pleasure declared in the presence of the Nobility, whence the choice was so unanimously approved, that it seemed rather a manifestation of the Will and Pleasure of Almighty God. That this Example of the Nobility, was readily and cheerfully followed by both his Gothick and Roman Subjects, who had not only promised but sworn Obedience to him. The Senate therefore he desires to imitate so good a Pattern, telling them he had sent to them Sigismar a Comes with others, who in his Name should also make oath to preserve to them their Rights and Privileges, and he bids them ask boldly of him whatsoever they thought would increase the Security of their present Estate. The People he courts in like manner, requires also from them an Oath of Fidelity and Allegiance, and promises under no less an obligation all Offices of Justice, Equity and Clemency; to cherish the Goths and Romans alike, and maintain them in Equal Rights and Privileges, making no other distinction, than that the Goths undergoing the Travails and Dangers of War for the Publick good, the Romans should enjoy quiet and security within the Walls of their own City. He puts them in mind, how by the mutual Oath of Prince and People, the Memory of Trajan's Government was renewed, who as appears from the Panegyrick of Pliny, at his Entrance upon the Consulship, both swore himself and received the Oaths of the Magistrates, Senate and People. To Tiberius the Præfatus Prætorio of Gall, and the Provincials, as they are called, under his Jurisdiction, he promiscuously by Oath the like good Government, having exhorted them to Fidelity and Obedience, and written his Letters to Vilforinus their Bishop, to stir them up, and provoke them to be good Subjects, both by his Precepts and Example. He begs also his Prayers, that the Heavenly King would be pleased to confirm to him his Earthly Kingdoms, that he would suppress his Adversaries, forgive him his Sins, and mercifully consolidate and preserve what he had so bountifully and gloriously conferred upon his Parents.

33. Such was the beginning of Athalarick, or rather Amalasuenta (or Amalasuenta, as she is commonly called) his Mother; who, either as pious and humble Penitents are wont to do, conscious of the Frailty of Humane Nature, imposed upon her self and Son the strong Bonds of an Oath, to check and pull them back when they should exceed the Bounds of Equity and Moderation; or, not ignorant, what Disorder and Difficulties fall upon Kingdoms in the Minority of Princes, provided for his Security and Establishment as prudently as she could, counting thus his Subjects into the strongest bonds and ties which could be laid upon their Consciences, by this plausible Stipulation and Exchange of Oaths. That Athalarick, nobilitate polit.

Adi & confusio lib. 8. Ep. 1, 2, 3. usque ad 9.

Her care for his Education.

She makes Requisition.

Theodatus King.

the latter Consideration effectually moved her, the Dictates of Nature may sufficiently satisfy, and that the former did not want its effects also, the Course of her Actions doth sufficiently manifest. For her principal care seemed to be for his good Education, and the seasoning of his tender Years with good Learning and religious Precepts; committing him to the exact Discipline of most grave and sober Masters, who should instruct him according to the Roman Customs, and their manner of the Institution of Youth, though the Goths were therewith offended. That such there were at this time who could very well do it, we cannot doubt, because of that Publick School which had lately flourished at Rome, wherein were professed Law, Eloquence, and the Liberal Arts by most Learned Men, maintained at the publick Charge. But of late their Stipends had either been denied or very badly paid, which coming to the Knowledge of the Regent, she directed Letters in the King's Name to the Senate of that City, expostulating the neglect of so considerable a matter, and requiring the punctual payment of these Salaries for the time to come. Forasmuch as Arts are nourished and maintained by Rewards, she tells them it is Wickedness to defraud the Teachers of Youth of any thing due to them; who ought rather to be farther excited by an Augmentation of their Encouragements. She commands for a greater certainty of their Allowance, that they be paid every half year, and that if any Officers retain the Money longer than that time, they be responsible both for Principal and Interest. Her Reasons are, that Learned Men are not to depend upon the proud and disdainful Humour of others, that it is a shame that Players should be provided for, who serve only for pleasure and recreation, and they be neglected who are the Formers of good manners, and breeders up of Eloquent Wits for the Service of the Court. But especially that they may not be distracted by solicitous thoughts, and necessary Cares for a Livelihood, which must render their pains more ineffectual.

34. Having sufficiently provided for her Son's Instruction by way of Precept, she herself became his Mistress in the other more significant and effectual part of Example. She not only kept off her Hands from invading the Lives, Rights, Privileges and Estates of the Subject, but restored to the Children of Symmachus and Boetius, what had been so unjustly taken from them, and in general protected and secured the Roman and Italian People from the Rapacious practices of the Goths; who as Strangers that have their Fortunes to make in a conquered Country, sought to build their Families upon the Ruines and Desolation of the Natives. To Amalarick the King of Spain, and her Nephew by her Sister, who stood in need of some Encouragement and Assistance, (Theudas his Guardian having, by his Marriage with a great Lady of the Country, made himself in effect more King than his Pupil,) she gave part of Gall lying beyond Rhodanus, and retained that on the nearest side for her Son; what her Father had taken away from the Inhabitants of Carcaffon, she restored, and remitted the Implications he had laid upon them. Foreseeing also that by retaining that Part of Gall now mentioned, she should draw an heavy War upon the Kingdom, and the Franks into the Bowels of Italy, she yielded to their King's pretensions, and delivered it up into his Hands. Shortly after Justinian came to the Government in the East, being assumed as Colleague in the Empire by his Uncle Justin. As soon as his promotion was heard of in the West, Amalasuenta dispatched Ambassadors to him, to congratulate his good Fortune, and to desire a Continuance of that Friendship and Alliance which had been betwixt their Predecessours; if the Epistle be rightly directed as now we have it in Cassiodorus. And what she desired on her Son's behalf was readily granted, as we may conclude from that good Correspondence, that was betwixt them as long as Athalarick lived, and the Gains which were stamped at this time, wherein is on one side to be seen the Image of Justinian, and on the other the Name of King Athalarick.

35. We have already shewn how the Goths mistook of the breeding of their young King, and desiring to wrong the Subjects, would have him brought up after the Barbarian way. How hereupon he was debauched by ill Company. How Amalasuenta his Mother was brought into great Difficulties, and purposed to deliver Italy into the Hands of Justinian. How Athalarick her Son died of a Consumption, and thereupon the procured Theodatus the Nephew of Theodoric to be King, and how in way of requital he basely caused her to be murdered. We shewed in its proper place, that Justinian upon this occasion resolved to make war upon the Goths, having lately subdued the Vandals in Africa; that Messagers passed betwixt him and Theodatus, who put a Guard upon the Emperour's Ambassadors, and

Sec. 3. Vide Cassiodorus varior. lib. 9. Ep. 1.

Vide Baronius ad Ann. 527.

Hujus vol. lib. 1. c. 2.

Sect. 3. and in conclusion that Belisarius by order passed from Sicily into Italy. The Reader must also remember that he pressing upon the Goths, they chose for King one Vitigis, who caused Theodatus to be murdered. Vitigis drew the Franks to his Party, but made war, though valiant enough, unsuccessfully against Belisarius, who at length carried him and his Wife along with him to Constantinople. Into his Room was Ildebold the Nephew of Theudas King of the Westrogoths, and Governour of Vérona preferred, who killed Uraas the Sisters Son of Vitigis, and was himself killed by Vilis a Gepida. After him was made King one Erarick, by Birth a Rugian, and consequently of a Gothick Nation, a Man of good reputation amongst the Barbarians. He would for a good Reward have delivered up Italy to the Emperor, but after a short Reign of five Months was killed by the Goths, who chose Totilas to be their King. He proved a severe Scourge against the Greeks, then warring in Italy. He was the Brothers Son of Ildebold, a Man very Warlike and Active, as we have described his Actions at large. He carried himself with much Gallantry and Justice. He took Rome more than once, wasted Sicily, and at length died of his wounds, after the Battel fought with Narfes, received by Asbadas a Gepida. He Reigned eleven Years, and in him fortune shewed Fickleness and Inconstancy. The next and last King was Teias the Son of Fridigern, who did wonders in Battel against Narfes, but was killed, and the Kingdom of the Goths in Italy received its period with him.

The Kingdom of the Goths in Italy wholly destroyed.

36. So was the Kingdom of the Ostrogoths, overturned in Italy by the Vigilancy and Conduct of Narfes, that famous Eunuch, after it had continued some fifty nine Years. How this was done, hath been discoursed at large in our Account of the Wars of Justinian, to which here we have nothing to add, little occurring concerning the later Gothick Kings, but in reference to the Wars of Italy, managed against them, chiefly by Belisarius and Narfes the Officers of that Emperor. The Goths after the Death of Teias were headed by Aligern his Brother, but without the Title of King; and they stragled some time to no purpose, though they called in the Franks to their Assistance. Their Kingdom being destroyed, the Sovereignty and Command of Italy returned to Justinian the Emperor, who governed it by Narfes, as a Province of the Eastern Empire. Narfes having suppressed the Goths and driven out the Franks, set himself as to Actions of Piety and Religion, so to repairing Towns which had been demolished in War, to the restoring of Buildings both sacred and profane in Rome, and other places. But as of other things, so of these we have no particular Account, for the following Years are so barren of any History, that as Sigonius witnesseth, in all the Antiquities of Italy and the West, nothing is more rude and uncertain, our best guides Procopius and Agathias having taken their leave. But, from the overthrow of the Gothick Kingdom in Italy, which happened in the Year DLIII. to the coming in of the Lombards, or Lombards, which fell out in the DLXVIII. passed fourteen Years, all which time Narfes seems to have governed, and spent it well, as we are told, in mending what had been marred by the former Wars. In these Wars that great mischiefs happened both to Places and Persons cannot be doubted. That those that were faithfull to the Emperor suffered much may easily be conceived, and particularly we are told of the Family of the Titiones. This Family flying their Countrey, lost all they had, leaving a great Estate, and when the Goths were driven out, it seems made their Application to Justinian to be restored to their Lands and Possessions. Now it was a Rule in Law, that a Prescription of thirty years was a sufficient Bar against any pretender, let the Estate come by how it would, and this it seems was pleaded by such as had got into possession. But the Emperor taking the case into consideration, granted a Rescript of Privilege to the said Titiones, which broke the Prescription; and this Rescript, being the onely Monument of that dark time, Cajacius hath communicated to us, who received it as he tells us, from the most Learned and acute P. Galesius a Spaniard. It being a Rarity in several respects; we shall not conceal it from the Reader. To Narfes it is directed thus.

37. Flavius Justinian, Cæsar, Imp. Alanicus, Gothicus,andalicus, Africanus, ever Augustus to Narfes the Patritian in Italy. With great anguish of mind we perceive, that our City of Rome having been in former times much emptied, hath continued long desert, and in a manner desolate, and that from it almost an infinite Number of Illustrious Families, have betaken themselves to divers Climates of the World, to shun the direfull Cruelty and savage madness of the Goths and Wandals, amongst which the most Eminent and most Noble Family of the Titiones, leaving the City in which it had happily flourished before for many Ages, in the glorious ous Equestrian Order, was forced to fly to foreign Nations. Namely out of that Family, above an hundred and twenty Persons passed over to the Vindelic and Retii, chusing rather valiantly to undergoe hard Exile, than enjoying at home with the Enemy of the Roman Empire their own goods, to live in filthy and dishonest slavery. Now we being desirous to obviate such Calamities and Miseries dispatched away the most glorious Belisarius the Patritian into Italy against the Goths, that by him we might free the City, and Italy it self, from so great Slavery, Captivity and Slaughter. And so it fell out, that in that Engagement which Belisarius had with Vitigis King of the Goths, and wherein he remained Victor, the King being taken Prisoner, the Strenuous, Valiant and Noble L. Galbinus Titio, valiantly discharging the Duty of a Tribune of Soldiers, died gloriously fighting, leaving three Sons, Aulus Anduatus, C. Tubero, and L. Reucardus, who all under thy Command in Italy, fought for us and the Roman Empire with the greatest Fidelity against our Enemies. Wherefore seeing that in a Prince there can be nothing more Clement, nothing more Decent, nothing more glorious to be wished for, than to have a respect for, and confer just and grateful Favours on such, whose Parents, by fighting manfully for the Empire and their Countrey, most religiously died; and whereas those Brothers and their Progenitours were spoiled of their large Estate, by the wicked Enemies of the Roman Empire, which they enjoyed in the City, amongst the Cemoniani, especially the Insubres, Vercellenfes, Taurini and Lugares, for long spaces of time, We will, Command and require, as thou esteemest our favour, and art zealous for our Honour, that having made a diligent search, thou put them again into possession of their Estates, and goods of their Ancestours, having no regard at all to those by whom they are seized, and restore these Brothers to the City, their Honours and Dignities; and especially the Equestrian, in which they have flourished with great Commendation from their Great and Great great Grandfathers, and to place them again in their Houses, removing any that may detain them. For all those who from the beginning take Possession by force, and thereby lay unjust Foundations, do not acquire just Possession by the use of time, neither they who derive action from them; and we will not that such Occupiers be assisted by any Prescription, although of the longest time, from which we derogate, and by our fulness of Power will have Derogation made, that the said Brothers may serve us with the same Fidelity and Valour, which they have derived from their Parents. We will have therefore this our Pleasure, or rather just and deserved Restitution, inviolably observed under Penalty of an hundred pounds of Gold, and have commanded it to be strengthened by our Imperial Seal. From the City of Constantinople on the Ides of February, in the six and thirtieth Year of our Reign, in the Year of our Lord DLXV, signed Justinian, and underneath, Procopius. This is very remarkable, and little or nothing is there farther of Italian matters, till the coming of the Lombards into Italy; of the occasion thereof, and their progress till their settling therein a Kingdom, we have already discoursed amongst matters relating to the Constantinopolitan Empire.

A Rescript of Restitution granted to the Titiones by Justinian.

Obs. lib. 10. c. 12.

S E C T. IV.

The Kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, from the Expiring of the Command of Duces, and the Promotion of Authari to be King, to the End of this Kingdom.

The Space of 206 Years.

Sect. 4. THE Lombards having fetled their Domination in Italy, were ten Years, as we have said in the History of the Empire, without a King and under Duces or Captains. But these ten Years expired, into the Dignity and Title of King they advanced Authari the Son of Clepho formerly mentioned, whom they surnamed Flavius, for the more grace of the matter, as Paul their Historian tells us, or to mollify the sound of his barbarous Name, with a surname familiar and easie, as others conjecture; for this of Flavius became afterward common to all their Kings. Now all the Great Men contributed half they had to the maintenance of his Port and Dignity. And this is to be admired in the Government of the Lombards, that there was no such thing amongst them as Violence and Oppression. No Treachery, no Compulsion was practised. No Man was deprived of what he had by Thefts or Robberies, but every one went about his business securely, without the least fear or apprehension of Danger. So Paul writes; but we remember that he himself was a Lombard, and speaks possibly in favour of his own Nation, so he doth when he commends and applauds for their Valour and Deportment, the Party which fought under Narfes, whereas Procopius tells us, that they were sent back in disgrace for their unruliness. And however he conceals their Faults, and commends them for their great Justice and Moderation, it appears from Ecclesiastical Persons, that after they were become Masters of Italy, they did many horrid Acts; and upon this account Gregory the Great calleth them a most wicked Nation. But possibly the truth lies betwixt both Extremes.

2. Mauritus the Emperour, not being in a Condition himself, hired Childeberr King of the Franks for fifty thousand Solidi, to dispose of them. The King with a vast Army breaks into Italy, but Paul saith, that the Lombards dealt with him by Messengers, and persuaded him to take Money and be gone. He promised to return the Solidi to Childeberr, with whom the Lombards made a League, but had work enough cut out for them by Droctulf, who being a Suebian or Aleman by Birth, for his Goodness of his Stature had got the Honour of a Duke; but to revenge his Captivity had lately revolted to the Emperour, and carried over to his Party a considerable Number of their Men. Lying now at Broxillus a Town situate upon the Poë, thither Authari removed with his Army, and straightly besieged him. The siege continued long, and he held them to it; but at last he was compelled to quit his Quarters and betake himself to Ravenna; which having done, Authari took Broxillus and dismantled it, and made truce with Smaragdus the Patriarch the then Exarch of Ravenna, for three Years. This notwithstanding, Mauritus sent the second Time his Ambassadors to Childeberr, and persuaded him to break the League and fall upon the Lombards. He invaded Italy, but as they were on their march toward him, the Alemans that were in his Army fell out with the Franks, and the Disfension grew so great, that they parted and returned back without having any thing done.

3. At this time happened such Inundations in several Parts of Italy, as the like had never been heard of since the Universal Deluge. Multitudes of Men, besides other living Creatures, were destroyed. The River Athesis flowed as high as the Windows of St. Zeno's Church near Verona, part of the Wall of which City was also broken down; and after two Months it perished almost all by Fire. The River Tiber was so overcharged, that it rose higher than the very Walls of Rome, defaced ancient Buildings, and overturned the Granaries belonging to the Church, wherein great Quantities of Wheat were lost. A Multitude of Serpents follows.

The Pestis Inguinaria

pents together with a Dragon of a vast Bigness, swom down the River (Paulus Diaconus saith through the City) into the Sea, where killed with the Salt-water, they were cast upon the shore. This happened in the Month of November, and in January following a dreadfull Plague called Pestis Inguinaria, from the Privy parts which it invaded, fell upon Italy, especially Rome, and destroyed an infinite Number of People, on whom Arrows were seen to be darted from Heaven, if credit may be given to no less a Man than Pope Gregory. This was the Plague, as some would have it, wherewith Men being seized fell into great fits of sneezing, and so suddenly died, whence the Custome proceeded of praying, as still we do, for such a sneeze. But that this was in use long before amongst the Pagans, who invoked their Gods upon the same occasion, is attested by Pliny, not to speak of more ancient Writers, and therefore it could not take its rise from the Mortality whereof we now speak.

4. Much about this time Authari King of the Lombards, sent Euin the Duke of Trent to waste Histria, whence he brought very rich Plunder. Others of his subjects were then employed in besieging Franco, one of Narfes his Captains, in the Island Amacina, where he had continued twenty Years, but after a siege of six Months, was forced to yield it up, and to depart with his Wife and Baggage to Ravenna. Authari aswell as his People being much enriched began to look high, and asked the Sister of Childeberr King of the Franks to be given him in Marriage. Childeberr receiving his Presents, promised he would send her, but failed of his word being sued to by the Gothick King of Spain, to bestow her on him; and sensible it seems of the Injury, and how good Cause he had given Authari to be angry with him, he sent to the Emperour, and promised now he would do his utmost for removing the Lombards out of Italy. And he sent an Army to make good his promise, but the Lombards, concerned now more than ordinary to shew their Valour, made greater slaughter of them, than ever was heard to have befallen that Nation, and very few returned home. Flavius Authari now incouraged by this Success sends his Ambassadors into Baioaria, to ask in Marriage Theudelinda the Daughter of King Garibald, who readily granted their suit, and after their return Authari himself makes a Journey thither Incognito to see her. Not long after his return, troubles arising betwixt Garibald and the Franks, Theudelinda with her Brother Gundwald retired into Italy, where Authari met her with Royal Pomp, and consummated his Marriage at a Place called Sardis above Verona, on the Ides of May.

5. At this time, for what Cause is uncertain, Auful the King's Kinsman was slain at Verona, and not long after Childeberr, to gratify the Emperour Mauritus, sent another Army of twenty thousand Men to subdue the Lombards. Of these Men Anduald, Olo and Cedinus were the chief Captains, whereof Olo laying siege to the Castle of Bilitio, was shot with an Arrow under his Pap and died, many of his Countrymen in their Excursions being met with and slain. Anduald with six inferior Officers came before Milan, where he met with the Emperour's Ambassadors, who promised him relief after three days; but three and three they expected them to no purpose. Cedinus going the way toward the left hand took five Castles from the Inhabitants of which he exacted an Oath. They pierced by Placentia as far as Verona, and many Towns they demolished contrary to Articles, leading away the Townsmen Prisoners. But the Summer now grew very hot, and the Franks not accustomed to the Italian Air, were much afflicted with the Dysentery whereof many of them died, and having been three Months in the Country to little purpose, the Lombards securing themselves in their strong holds, and their King particularly in Pavia, they were necessitated to return home, which they did with so great Difficulty, that they were first constrained to sell their Cloaths off from their backs, and then their Arms to purchase Victuals in their passage. About this time it is that Paul thinks the famed Conquests of King Authari happened, as that through Spoletum he proceeded as far as Beneventum, and having made himself Master of all that Country, kept on his Progress as far as Rhegium, the last City of Italy, and nearest to the Sicilian Island. There, as the story went, stood a certain Pillar within the water, to which he rode so near as to touch it with the Point of his Lance, and said, Thus far shall extend the Borders of the Lombards. The Pillar was reported to be standing in the days of the Historian, and to be known by the Name of Authari his Column.

6. The first Duke of the Lombards which settled in Beneventum, was Zotto, who held the Government for twenty years. Authari sent to make a League with Guntram King of the Franks, who referring them to Childeberr his Nephew, or their

Sect. 4.
Authari made a King.

Childeberr being hired against the Lombards, he had Money on both sides.

Another fruitless expedition of Childberr.

Dreadfull Inundations.

Francie destroyed.

Authari Married.

Another fruitless Expedition of the Franks.

The Conquests of Authari.

Sect. 4.

Theudelinda, Populus multus.

Gundwald, Be-neventania po-tens.

Authari, Gra-tie fidelis.

Zotto, Suerii muncipium fiscocant Angl. tram King of the Franks, who referring them to Childeberr his Nephew, or their could

Sect. 4. could finish their Negotiation, Authari dies at Pavia, by poison as was reported, on the Nones of September, after he had reigned fix Years. As soon as he expired, notice was sent away to Childebert, and a Peace desired of him, who at length yielded unto the request of the Lombards in this matter. They had so much Kindness for Theudelinda their Queen, that they permitted her to retain her Royal Port and Dignity, and to chuse out of their own Nation a fitting Man to be her Husband, and their King; whereupon after good advice had with the wisest of them, the made choice of Agilulf Duke of Taurinum, the Kinsman of Authari, a very valiant Man, and in every respect fit for Government, who was married to Theudelinda and her Kingdom in the Month November, and afterward publicly crowned at Milan, in a full Assembly in May following. Agilulf, or Ago, as he was called for thornels, being confirmed in his Power, sent Agnellus Bishop of Trent into France, to redeem such as had been taken Prisoners in the Territories lying about that City, and some he brought back, whom Brambilis the Queen of the Franks, had ransomed with her own Money. Eun also, the Duke of Trent, he sent Ambassadour to make an Alliance and Confederacy with that Court, which he effected. The same Year happened a great Drought from January to September, which was followed by as great a Famine, and a great swarm of Locusts covered the Countrey about Trent, of a greater bigness than usual, but fed onely upon the Grass, doing little prejudice to the standing Corn.

Agilulf his Success against several Dukes. 7. Agilulf in the mean time puts to death Minulf, Duke of the Island St. Julian, for having revolted formerly to the Franks; and reduces Gaidulf, who had rebelled and fortified himself in his City of Pergamus. Though he gave Caution now that he would be quiet, yet he secured himself again in the Island Comacina, whither the King pursued him, and beating out his Men got into his Hands a Treasure, which had been there laid by the Romans. But Gaidulf escaping him returned to Pergamus, where after some opposition he again made his peace, and was received into favour by Agilulf, who was also so fortunate about this time, as to reduce into order Ulfari, another Duke or Captain who had revolted. The same Year the Plague called Pestis Inguinaria, again broke out at Ravenna and other places, killing as many Men as it had formerly done. Agilulf makes peace with the Avars, and a Winter follows so excessively cold, as the like had not been known. Moreover in the Countrey of the Briani, bloud instead of water dropped from the Clouds, and Rivers seemed to flow with it as prefaces of those Miseries, which were shortly again to fall upon Italy, the Peace being broken. For not long after Romanus the Patritian and Exarch of Ravenna goes and visits Rome, quibus significatione in multis. Sive tamen manet in pristina significatio, apud Agilulf. Sicut a quid Belgas. Agel-bulf. Liber Auxiliator. Idem contra-ric Ago, Paulo hic monente, Paulus Diaconus. lib. 4. c. 1. Minn-olf. F. minis Auxili. acor. A Man. Femininum Mennus, nam quod Angli hodie dicunt in plurali Men, auquiserit Mannum. hule Mer- mine, maris femina; ut excellen- tiam et Minnen seminarum amore tangit, id enim Grota monente pro- prie et anti- quus signifi- cat. Gaid-ulf Com- jugis Auxili- ator. Ulf-ari, Auxili- tis Dominus; Wolf-lari, Luporum Dom- inus. Mauric-uf, Ni- ger. Vide Baron.

The Empe- rour's Officers drive his Sub- jects to revolt.

8. From an Epistle of this Bishop to Constantina the Empress, it appears that the Miseries which the Emperour's Subjects in these Parts endured under his cruel Officers, were as great as any of them almost suffered from the Barbarous Lombards. The Burthen of the Taxes and Impositions were so heavy upon those of Corfica, that they were forced to sell their very Children to make Money, and all little enough to satisfy the Ravenous Collectours, which not able to bear, they fled to the Lombards in Italy, and in a manner left the Island desolate. In that of Sicily one Stephen the Charitulary of the Sea Coasts committed such Rapines, as the Bishop affirms all his particular Acts of Violence and Injustice could not be contained in one Volume; and desires her to be a means to the Emperour, that those things might be redressed for the preventing of Judgments otherwise like to fall upon himself, and his Sons, and that Italy might rather want supplies of money, than that they should be raised in that sinful manner. From Gregory his Writings it is farther evident, that the Emperour's Ministers who being at a great distance distance from their Master, promised themselves impunity in their evil courses, opposed him in his endeavours for making peace with the Lombards, who, whatever Paul the Deacon hath written, for two years and more wasted the Roman territories with fire and sword, and did great mischief in Campania, where many Captains being taken, he took care for the redeeming of such as were too poor to pay their Ransom, several Prelates of this time contributing to so good a work. In the third year, having often attempted to make a Peace, at length he obtained a Truce, with hope that the King would at length sign the whole Treaty; but not willing to be cheated with good words and fair promises, he orders all his Friends to stand upon their Guard. This Truce continued till the year following, and then a Peace was made, or another Truce rather, seeing it scarcely deserves the name of a Peace, which was to endure but for two years, and yet the Bishop rejoicing that poor Italy should have but some time to breathe in, by Letters still extant gives the King thanks that he had heard his petition. That this Peace he so much rejoiced in was in effect almost as good as none appears from this; after the signing of the Treaty he still complains of his being pressed with the sword of the Barbarians, besides the pains of the Gout and other loads of Cares that lay heavy upon him. The reason was this: though Agilulf the King had sworn positively, yet Arnulf the Duke of Spoleum would not swear but with restrictions, and upon conditions, which cast the good Bishop into great fears again, as appears by his Letter written to Theodorus the Curator of Ravenna, wherein he also expresseth the Jealousie of King Agilulf that he favoured too much the Cause and Party of the Exarch being indeed Mediatour betwixt them.

Lib. 4. Ep. 33. Indit. 1.

Gregory Bi- shop of Rome maketh a Peace with the Lom- bards.

9. About this time a blazing Star was seen for a month together, at morning and evening. Not long after, Eun Duke of Trent died, and was succeeded by Gaidoald a very good and religious man. The Bainarii in those days fell upon the Sclawi with two thousand men, but were all met with and put to the Sword by Cacanus; and now first of all, faith our Authour, were wild Beasts resembling Horses and Oxen, brought first into Italy, and gazed on as wonders by the people. Cabali Alva. Not long after Cacanus King of the Hunnens sent and made a League with Agilulf rics & Bufuli in Italian de- at Milan, and Romanus the Patritian dying, Gallicinus succeeded him as Exarch, lasti Italia pa- and made peace also with this King, as also did Theoderic, King of the Franks, pulis miracula furans. Agilulf had the more reason to embrace the amity of his Neighbours, because his own Subjects endangered his Estate at home. For Zangrulf Duke of Verona re- Zangr-ulf, in- bell, whom he over-powered and put to death, as also Gaidulf Duke of Perga- firma Auxi- mus, whom having twice spared, he now took in the same fault again; as also liatur. Warnacant, whom that he might by this severity give some stop to this grow- ing mischief, he commanded to be executed at Pavia. Much about this time a- nother great Plague seized Ravenna and other maritime places, and the following year a great mortality to the people that lived near Verona: Spears, as it were, of blood were seen in the Air, and the Nights were as light as Day. The year fol- lowing Arulf, who had succeeded Faroald in the Dukedom of Spoleum died, and Faroald's two Sons contending who, should possess his Father's place, Theudelap obtained the Victory and it together. Zotto the Duke of Beneventum in like man- ner dying, King Agilulf sent one Arigis to succeed him, a Kinsman of Gisulf Duke of Forum Julii, whose Sons he had brought up. Shortly after, the Daughter of Agilulf was together with Godescalc her Husband, of the City of Parma, taken Arigis, Honor- prisoner by some of the Exarch's men and carried to Ravenna, her Father buying fortis. Agilulf off, Ca- himself in gathering together Ship-Carpenters, which he sent to Cacanus, King of misum adju- the Avars, to make him some Vessels, wherewith he transported men, and made cor. God-Schalck, himself Master of a certain Island in Thrace. Dei Servus.

The Queens magnificent Buildings.

10. In the mean time Theudelinda the Queen diverts her self with magnificent Buildings. At Modicia twelve miles from Milan, she caused to be erected a beautifull Church, which she dedicated to St. John Baptist, and richly endowed nomine nos erat Germanis. Scalck, Ser- vus in novo fudere spe. Hinc Mar- schalck & a- lia. Palace, it being near the Alpes, and cool and temperate in the heat of Summer. In the same Town she also made a Palace for her self, wherein she caused to be painted the Atchievements of the Lombards, which paintings plainly shewed that at this time they cut their Hair, and shaved all up from the Neck to the upper part of their Head, their Locks hanging down upon their Faces to their Mouths, which they parted and laid on each side their Foreheads. Their Cloaths, faith Paul, were loose and for the most part of Linen, such as the Anglo-Saxons wear, having large Seams and interwoven with various Colours. Their Shoes were open almost to the end of their Toes, and buttoned or laced together. Afterward they began

The Habit of the Lombards.

Lib. 7. Ep. 30. Indit. 2. Arnulf idem quod Ari-ulf, sed a plurali, Honoris duxi- liator. In vep. Alem. Arv. Lib. 7. Ep. 102. Indit. 2.

Gaide-mald, conjugy impe- rari.

Time primum Horfes and Oxen, brought first into Italy, and gazed on as wonders by the people. Cabali Alva. Not long after Cacanus King of the Hunnens sent and made a League with Agilulf rics & Bufuli in Italian de- at Milan, and Romanus the Patritian dying, Gallicinus succeeded him as Exarch, lasti Italia pa- and made peace also with this King, as also did Theoderic, King of the Franks, pulis miracula furans.

Zangr-ulf, in- firma Auxi- liatur.

Warnacant, whom that he might by this severity give some stop to this grow- ing mischief, he commanded to be executed at Pavia. Much about this time a- nother great Plague seized Ravenna and other maritime places, and the following year a great mortality to the people that lived near Verona: Spears, as it were, of blood were seen in the Air, and the Nights were as light as Day. The year fol- lowing Arulf, who had succeeded Faroald in the Dukedom of Spoleum died, and Faroald's two Sons contending who, should possess his Father's place, Theudelap obtained the Victory and it together. Zotto the Duke of Beneventum in like man- ner dying, King Agilulf sent one Arigis to succeed him, a Kinsman of Gisulf Duke of Forum Julii, whose Sons he had brought up. Shortly after, the Daughter of Agilulf was together with Godescalc her Husband, of the City of Parma, taken Arigis, Honor- prisoner by some of the Exarch's men and carried to Ravenna, her Father buying fortis. Agilulf off, Ca- himself in gathering together Ship-Carpenters, which he sent to Cacanus, King of misum adju- the Avars, to make him some Vessels, wherewith he transported men, and made cor. God-Schalck, Dei Servus.

Fa-wald, fa- milie parent, Faro idem con- versit. Theud- talap, ad populum accurrens.

Arigis, Honor- fortis.

Agilulf off, Ca- himself in gathering together Ship-Carpenters, which he sent to Cacanus, King of misum adju- the Avars, to make him some Vessels, wherewith he transported men, and made cor. God-Schalck, Dei Servus.

non dixer- que non nominare nos erat Germanis. Scalck, Ser- vus in novo fudere spe. Hinc Mar- schalck & a- lia.

Sect. 4. began to wear Hofe, over which when they rode they drew a sort of Breeches called Tubangi birrei, but this fashion they received from the Romans. Hitherto the City of Padua had valiantly stood out against them, but now it was all burnt, and by order of King Agilulf, levelled with the ground, the Garrison Souldiers being permitted to goe to Ravenna, Agilulf his Ambassadors returning from Cacanus brought the ratification of a perpetual Peace and Amity made with the Avars, who sent theirs also to the Kings of the Franks, requiring them in the League made betwixt the two Nations, to comprize also the Lombards. Now did the Lombards, Avars and Slavians invade Hiftria, which they wasted with fire and sword, at what time Theodelinda bare a Son to Agilulf, whom being born in the Palace of Modicia, they named Adalaald. After this the Lombards took the Castle of Mount Silex, and much about the same time Galaticinus being beaten from Ravenna, Smaragdus returned, who had formerly been Patritian, as Paul calls him, or Exarch of that City for the Emperour.

Cremona levelled.

Mantua deficient.

A Truce betwixt Agilulf and the Exarch.

The Truce renewed.

11. That sort of Peace which we find was made betwixt Agilulf, Gregory the Roman Bishop, and the Exarch, was openly broken by the latter, who took Parma, and therein Godecalc and his Wife, the Son-in-law and Daughter of the King; at which time also he sent some Troops and seized on Brexillum, which had been forsaken of the Lombards. Agilulf, as he had reason, was very much concern'd, and resolv'd to set upon the Romans with greater fury than ever, and take from them those Towns which the Arms of fierce Alboin had left unconquered. From Milan then in the month of July he set forward and laid siege to Cremona, being assist'd by the Slavians, which Cacanus King of the Avars had sent him, and took it on the nineteenth of August. He levelled it with the ground as he had done Padua before, and then turned upon Mantua, the Walls of which he so long battered also, that he took it about the middle of September, sack'd it and defac'd it in a lamentable manner. Afrighted herat, they that held the Castle of Vulturina yielded it up, and those that had seized on Brexillum set fire to it and departed. Matters thus proceeding, the King's Daughter was set at liberty by Smaragdus the Exarch, who by command of Mauricius the Emperour, had succeeded Callinicus, together with her Husband, and all that belonged to her; and a Truce was made from the month of September till the April following. The King's Daughter from Ravenna went to Parma, and falling into Travail, thereof died, to the no small discontentment as well of her Father as her Husband.

12. So great were the Troubles in Italy betwixt the Exarchs of the Emperour and the Lombards, that the people were miserably harass'd betwixt them, and little or no rest could they have by virtue of any Treaty or Truce that could be made. Gregory the Bishop of Rome having a deep sense of these miseries, and having often in vain expected aid from Constantinople, when he heard of the death of Mauricius rejoiced, and sent away speedily a Messenger with Letters to claw Phocas the Murderer and his Wife, that he might obtain some effectual means for reducing the Lombards into order, and quieting the Country; and on the twenty fourth of April the Images of Phocas and his Wife were solemnly brought to Rome, and after the Senate and Clergy had made their Prayers for their prosperity with great joy, the Bishop caused them to be placed in the Palace, in the Oratory of St. Casarius the Martyr. About this time Theodelind bare a Son to Agilulf, whom he called by the name of Adalaald, being Christened upon Easter-day. Now the Truce was at an end, and an heavy war seem'd to threaten the Exarchate of Ravenna, when yet Agilulf considering how hard the enterprise of taking that City would be, still gave his consent that the Truce should be renewed. And there was great need of it both in respect of the present season, and the state and condition to which Italy had been before that reduced. The Summer was so excessive hot and dry that all the Corn was burnt up and spoil'd, and such a dreadful cold Winter followed, as in a manner destroyed all their Vines.

13. But such had been the lamentable Estate of poor Italy for several Years before, that this might seem to give the last blow to it already in a dying Condition. So Gregory the Roman Bishop, who died this very year, in his Exposition of the Prophecy of Ezekiel, describes it to us. "We every where see nothing but mourning, hear nothing but groans, Cities are destroyed, Castles demolished; the Country depopulated; the whole Land reduced into a Desert. In the fields there are no Husbandmen, in the Cities no Inhabitant, and yet the small Remains of Mankind, are even now struck at without Intermission; some led into Captivity, some maimed, and others slain. And in what plight Rome is, though once the Mistress of the World, we see, even spent with great and mani-

Postea vero caperunt hostes sui super quas viginti annos tenuerunt. 1. 4. c. 23.

Adalwald, nobilitate polens. idem contraxit, ut nomen Paulus Ade.

Paulus Diaconus de Gestis Longobard. 4. 4. c. 29.

Exaudi Christe. Phoca Augustus & Leonia Aug. vna. Adalwald, nobilitate polens, idem contraxit ad ut nomen Paulus.

"fold mischiefs, by loss of Citizens, Incurfion of Enemies and frequency of Threats. "All potent Persons are taken away from her. Where is now the Senate? Where is the People? All order of Dignity in her is extinct, and yet as that remains every day the Sword, daily innumerable Tribulations do press her, and after that men fail the very Walls do fall. So dreadful a face of things was in Italy, the effect of the late Conquest, for when the Victory is obtained, and the Country won, the miseries of the conquered People are not then ended but begun, more grievous are the courses which Conquerours take to preserve, than those whereby they first obtained. But now Agilulf by means and perswasion of his Wife especially, seems to be well inclined for peace, and applies himself to other Methods, tending to settle and secure that in his Family by love; which hitherto had been kept by terror.

14. He began to think of his own Mortality, and how he might provide for the security of his young Son Aldonald, which at length he concluded would be best effected, by setting the Crown upon his Head in his own life time. For this purpose he assembled the Estates together at Milan, where in the open Cirque the Infant was saluted King by the People, in the Presence of the Ambassadors of Theodebert King of the Franks, and invested with Royal Ornaments. With the Franks the Peace was renewed, and a perpetual League sworn on both sides, a more joyfull day was never seen in Italy, so bright and pleasant a Sun-shine, after so great and terrible a Tempest. But though a League, as we said, was made with the Franks, it was upon very uneven Terms. For the Lombards paid to the Franks, and so had long done a yearly Tribute, which Agilulf disdain'd, as much below him who had made himself famous by so many Victories, sent three Ambassadors with abundance of money into Gall, wherewith the Principal Courtiers were bribed, that Clothair the King was perswaded for thirty thousand Solidi to sell it, and release the Nation for the time to come. There was much about this time some Action betwixt the King's and the Exarch's Forces, for the Lombards as soon as the Truce was out, suddenly surprized Orbitum and Balneoregium below going to the Romans. But Smaragdus the Exarch got them restor'd, and for twelve thousand Solidi, the Truce to be renewed for another year. Being now secure and at his ease he began a worthy work, for whereas hitherto Ferrara had been but an inconsiderable Village, but very conveniently seated upon the River Padus, or Poe, he compass'd it about with walls, and brought it into such Reputation, that it daily increas'd as well in bigness as fame, and afterward became the seat of most potent Princes, and so hath a long time continued. This same year, which was the six hundred and sixth of our Lord, died Boniface the Third, Bishop of Rome (the Successour of Sabinian, as he of Gregory the Great) and Boniface the Fourth of that Name succeeded him. He was consecrated in the Month of August, and in November following the Truce betwixt the King and the Exarch was renewed for three years longer.

15. For two years following though Italy rested from war, yet was it sorely afflicted by Famine and Sicknes; the Effects of too excessive moisture by reason of abundance of Rain. In that following, a Peace and Confederacy was made betwixt Agilulf and the Emperour Phocas, which continued for about two years, so long as the Tyrant lived. He being slain by Heraclius, John Lenugius a Patritian, was sent to succeed Smaragdus at Ravenna, who being a Man of a peaceable disposition, and finding Italy in quiet, laboured earnestly so to keep it, by the same means his Predecessour had done, constantly renewing the Truce with the Lombards, as there was occasion. By this means Italy continued in good repose for four or five years more, till it was disturbed again upon a foreign Account, after this manner. Cacanus the young King of the Hunnes, impatient of rest and greedy of booty, with a select Party of Soldiers, came out of Pannonia, and fell on a sudden into the Dukedom of Forum Julii. The news thereof being brought to Gilulf the Duke, he was not at all wanting to himself, but gathering an Army, as he could, met the Hunnes, and adventur'd to give them battle, wherein his Fortune answered not his Courage, for being compass'd by the Multitude of the Enemy, he was slain in the Place with almost all his Men. This being known, Romilda the Duke's Wife with his Sons, and the choice of the Nobility shut up themselves in Forum Julii, and the other Towns were reinforced by others, that fled out of the Country. The Hunnes having waited all at their pleasure, at last came before Forum Julii, and laid siege to it. Here it happened that Romilda the Duchess getting a sight of Cacanus from the Walls, was so taken with the beauty of the young man, that falling desperately in love with him, she offered to him by a Messenger in case he

Agilulf makes his Son a Child King.

Tribute to the Franks bought off.

Agilulf enlarges Ferrara.

Truce with the Exarch renewed.

The Duke of Forum Julii slain by the Hunnes.

Sect. 4.

Paulo Balneoregii. Paulus ubi urbs venit.

Gistulf, Cor mium adjutor.

Vide Paulum Diaconum hunc. qui rem fuit narrat. lib. 4. c. 38.

4. would marry her, to deliver the Town into his hands. He promised her Marriage, and accordingly got into the Town, but then breaking his word he plundered and burnt the place, made the Lombards prisoners, and giving her the satisfaction of enjoying him for one Night, then delivered her up to twelve Hunnes to be satisfied with what she had desired, and at last, thinking her not fit to live, caused her to be hanged upon a Gibbet. Her Daughters fared better for their Chastity, being spared by the Hunnes, who thought they stunk, because out of design they had bound putrid Chickens betwixt their Breasts.

Romilda the Dutchess deservedly put to death.

Hec insuper exprobrando ingens palem dignum est maritum habere.

The Exarch killed.

Eleutherius sent in his room.

Agilulf dies.

Adaluald his Son King after him.

A late Act of Gregory the Emperor's Officer.

16. The Son of the Duke, Tato, Caco, Rodoald and Grimoald, when they perceived the King's treachery privately withdrew themselves and resolved to fly. Grimoald the Child being notable, as they concluded, to fit his Horse, one of them was about to kill him lest he should alive fall into the Enemies hands. But he crying out, and promising to ride as fast as the best of them, he set him upon his Horse without any Saddle and bade him follow. But he could not ride so fast, but the rest escaping he was overtaken by an Hunne, and being by him carried back toward the Camp did a thing which one would not have expected from a Man, much less from him. For as the Trooper went before him with the Child's Horse in his hand, he gave him with his Sword such a blow on the Head that he left him for dead upon the spot, and turning his Horse he put him to his full speed, and so at length reached his Brothers. The Hunnes departing out of the Dutchy, led away Captives many Men, Women and Children, promising to bestow them in convenient places in Pannonia, but when they came upon the Borders, perfidiously put all the Men of ripe age to death, and led away the Women and Children. After their Retreat, the Sons of Gisulf returned, and Tato and Caco the eldest ordered the matters relating to Government. While this disaster happened to the Lombards they at Ravenna were not in quiet, where John the Exarch bearing himself very haughtily, and laying on the people heavier burthens than formerly they underwent, was by the Multitude killed in the Palace with such Judges as he had called together for deciding Causes. Neither were the Affairs of Campania more settled, where John Confinius the Duke of Naples, contrary to his Faith formerly given to the Emperour, seized that City, and with a strong Garrison held it out against him. The News hereof being carried to Constantinople, Heraclius sent as Exarch into Italy, one Eleutherius a Patritian, and his Chamberlain, a man of great wisdom and virtue. This same year was too remarkable for several other accidents. In August there was a great Earthquake, and this was followed by as great a Plague, a kind of Scab called Elephantia, which so disfigured the Faces of the diseased, that they could not be known from dead Bodies. Three eminent persons also died, the Bishop of Trent, Duke Gundoald the Brother of Theodelind, and King Agilulf himself, after he had reigned twenty five years: a person famous for his Wars, and as acceptable upon the account of his Orthodox Religion. This was the DCXV. year of our Lord.

Gundoald, Brother of Theodelind, was a famous person.

Agilulfus Rex qui & Agi appellatus. Paulus Diacon. lib. 4. c. 43.

17. Agilulf (or Ago) being dead, the Kingdom was confirmed to Adaluald his Son, who reigned under the Government of Theodelind his Mother. No Wars now are heard of, as he became her Sex applying her self more to the works of Religion than those of Mars, for which she is deservedly celebrated by Church-men. But her Neighbours could not be quiet. There was one Gregory a Patritian who governed those parts for the Emperour which lay near the Dutchy of Forum Julii. He pretended great kindness to Tato the Son of the deceased Gisulf, made him believe he would adopt him for his Son, and enticed him to Opigerium, the place where he lay to perform the Ceremony by cutting his Beard according to the Lombard custome. But having got the poor young man into the Town, with Caco his Brother and others of their followers, he caused the Gates to be shut, and then sent Souldiers to fall upon them, whom they repulsed and so long defended themselves, till being pursued from Street to Street they killed many they had to doe with, and at last were themselves slain, which great achievement being performed, Gregory sent for Tato his Head, and then cut off his Beard to perform his godly promise. The report of this villany being spread abroad, Grafulf their Uncle hastened and seized on the Dutchy, Rodoald and Grimoald being yet so young as not to be fit for the management of matters, who within a while, for that their Uncle was, or they thought or pretended, very severe to them, fled to Archiebis the Duke of Beneventum, with whom they had been brought up in their Infancy, who kindly entertained them. The same year, which was next to the death of Agilulf, Eleutherius the Exarch came to Ravenna, where he made inquisition after the death of John, and punished with death such as were found guilty of the Murder.

Thence

Grat-hulf, Grimoald, Rodoald, Archiebis, Beneventum, &c.

Thence by the way of Rome, where he was honourably received, he went to Naples, where not being received, he besieged the other John Confinius in the City, which being at last constrained to surrender, he was put to death, and pardon was granted to the Citizens, who were forced to receive a new Governour.

Sect. 4.

18. With this Success Eleutherius was so puffed up as to forget that Virtue and Moderation once supposed to be prevalent in him, and to approve that Vice in his own Person, which he had so declaimed against, and punished in other Men. Having opportunity, the great Corrupter of Mankind, by reason of the great distance betwixt these Countries and the Emperour, he resolved to make for the Sovereignty of Italy, and knowing he must have the Soldiers at his beck to ayme at this, he paid them their full wages, a thing they had not been much used to, and by all other means possible endeavoured to oblige them. While he mused and contrived how to accomplish this great Design, the death of Deusdedit the Bishop, presented him as he thought with a fit occasion to begin the Work. In the interval, before the Election of another he resolved to seize on that City, and led his Men thitherward to get him possession, but in the way met with the News of Boniface the Fifth his Promotion, which made him alter his Councils, and make a flattering Speech to the Army, by which and great promises for this time he inveigled them, and assumed the Title of King, which to have farther confirmed, by investing himself with Royal Ensigns of Majesty, he would go on to Rome, the fittest place he said of all others to receive them. But when they were come as far as Luceoli, the Soldiers had better considered of the matter, and upon better thoughts detesting the Treachery fell into a Mutiny, which grew to that height, that they slew him as a Traitor on the twenty fourth of December, and returning to Ravenna, sent his Head to the Emperour. The Emperour Heraclius, named Isaacius a Patritian, his Exarch in his Room for the Government of Italy; and now being resolved of a War with Persia, made peace with Cacanus the Hunnish King. Some four years after, one Eusebius came or pretended to come Ambassadour from the Emperour, about some weighty affairs to King Adaluald. He getting intimacy with him one day when the King came out of the Bath, either following the Directions of Heraclius, or on his own Head gave him something to drink, which drove him into a Melancholy or Dotage. Perceiving this Plot to have taken, he made use of his Youth and Madnes, and feeding his Extravagant fancy, persuaded him to kill all his Nobles for his own security. He followed his Advice, and twelve he procured to be slain, which gave such an Alarm, that the Lombards fearing the mischief would increase, accused him as one that acted the part not of a King but of a Tyrant, and the year following growing more tumultuous, removed him and his Mother from the Government; which done they put into his place Arioald the Duke of Taurinum, who had married Gundeberg the Sister of Adaluald. A.D. DCXXIII.

Adaluald deposed, and Arioald made King.

Ar-walt, Honoris cenn.

19. This Revolution cast the whole Kingdom of the Lombards into very great Troubles, all that were concerned not concurring with those that did the Fact. The Bishops beyond the Poe were earnest for Arioald, and laboured to draw the rest to their side. But Honorius the Bishop of Rome, and Isaacius the Exarch, either by his procurement, or the Insinuations of Theodelind were for restoring Adaluald, and the rather induced, because the New King was of the Arian persuasion. Isaacius with an Army endeavoured his Restoration, and Honorius wrote to him, that as soon as he had done his work he should send the Dissenting Bishops to answer their Rebellion at Rome. But Isaacius failed of his Design, and Arioald kept his possession, governing himself with that prudence and temper, that notwithstanding the Attempts of the Exarch, yet he was so true to the Interest of his Kingdom, as not to break the Peace with the Romans. The ill Success cast Theodelind into so great a Fit of Melancholy, that, not able to bear up against it, it brought her into a Consumption of Spirits, and this to her Grave the year following. She was much lamented by all good Men, for her Excellent qualifications both of body and mind, and above all the great respect she bare to all things Sacred. Several years did Arioald Reign with great Peace both at home and abroad, till something happened in his own Court, which gave him and his Family great disturbance. One Adalulf a Nobleman solicited his Queen Gundeberg for unlawful pleasures, and was with much Scorn and Indignation rejected. He fearing the would accuse him, to prevent her, got to the King, and tells him a formal story, how Tato the Duke of Etruria, had conspired to take away his Life, and marry the Queen. Arioald, burning with rage and jealousy, shut up his Wife close close prisoner in the Castle of Amellum, where she continued three years, till she was released and restored to her former reputation. For Cletair King of the Franks taking pity of her, sent and expostulated with her Husband for condemning a Lady defended of the Royal Blood of the Franks, and despoiling her of her dignity without any cause or crime committed. Ariald answered it was not without cause, to whom Anloald one of the Ambassadors replied, that they would agree with him if he would but permit one of her Friends to try it with her Accuser in a single Combat. The custom of the Lombards was, as indeed of all these Northern Nations, to decide Controversies concerning Accusations in that manner; therefore he not being able to refuse the offer, Aripert her Kinsman produced one Pitto, Paulus Diaconus calls him Carell, as her Champion, who got the better of Adalsulf, and so the Queen's innocence being cleared, she was restored to her former Estate and Honour. And this added to her Fame, that she out-lived her Husband, who died some four years after, and had the honour to make another choice both for her self and the Kingdom.

A. D. 627.

Gundeberg, Benevola host pita.

20. For Ariald dying without Issue, the Estates assembled about an Election, and giving her the same respect as they had done to Theodelind of chusing her self an Husband, and the same a King for them, the pitch'd upon one Rothari, fit every way for so great an Employment, but tainted also with the Arian Heresie. There lay at this time within Italy and some Territories of the Lombards two Provinces, as yet subject to the Emperor; viz. the Alpes Cottiae and Opitergium, with all the Towns adjoining as far as Tarinsium. Rothari or Rothari, as Paul the Historian calls him, with a great Army invaded the Alpes Cottiae, and wrested this rich patrimony out of the Emperor's hands, whence bending his Forces into Venetia he took Opitergium, and the other Towns by surrender. The Exarch being surprized, and not able so soon to get his Troops together as to do any thing effectual for preservation of these places, yet thought himself in honour obliged to fall with all violence he could upon the Dominions of the Lombards. Rothari was sufficiently aware thereof, and having taken Perusia, with greater numbers of Men hastened to Emilia, and so homeward to give him battle, and found him out upon the borders at the River Scutanna. Here they engaged in Battle with this success that eight thousand of the Romans were slain and all the rest fled: a Defeat of such consequence that it put an end to all Wars betwixt the Kings of the Lombards and the Exarchs, till the time of Luitprand. The chief Inhabitants about Opitergium having lost their Dwellings and Estates, imitated the ancient Poeni and betook themselves to the Assarus of the Sea, and at the mouth of the River Planis built them a City, which after the Emperor's name they called Heracleia. Certain Country-men with their Cattel followed them, and because they could not all be contained within the Walls of the new City, built themselves a Town also which they named Egnilium. About this time Isaacius the Exarch, having happily suppressed a Sedition raised at Rome by one Mauritius a Chantry against him, died suddenly. The year following, his Death being known at Constantinople, Constant the Nephew of Heracleus, who having driven away Heracles, was owned Emperor by the Senate, sent Theodorus Calliopa his Exarch into Italy.

21. Now arrived the seventy sixth year from the Entrance of the Lombards into Italy, who all this while being more intent upon matters relating to War than Peace, and so concerned in securing their publick Estate from their Neighbours without, that they scarcely had time to contend amongst themselves about private Interests, had never been governed by any written Laws but only by Custom and such Rules as were kept in memory and defended by Tradition. But now having Peace abroad, as it ever happens, they became the more contentious at home, and ease and plenty made them quarrel and begat so many Suits that the former Customary Laws seeming insufficient, Rothari applied himself to collect them in Writing, and adding to them many other Decrees to answer such Cases as they could not reach, he published them under the name of an Edict at Pavia, in the six hundred and forty third year of our Lord, with this Preface. "Here begins the Edict which I have renewed with my principal Judges, in the name of God, King Rothari, the most Excellent Man, the Seventeenth King of the Nation of the Lombards, by the goodness of God, in the Eighth year of my Reign, and the thirty eighth of mine Age, the second Indiction, and after the coming of the Lombards into the Province of Italy, since Alboin King at that time by Divine Clemency came, the seventy sixth, happily, given at Pavia in the Palace. "How great our care and anxiety is and hath been for our Subjects, that hitherto "annexed doth declare. Then he tells how he was moved to make these Laws by the daily oppressions of the poor, and the insolence of those that had power to afflict their Neighbours, that every one might live in peace and keep what was his own without trenching upon others. He concludes with a Sanction that these Laws and no others should be in force, always saved and reserved power to himself to add thereto such as by himself, or by ancient Men could be called to mind. He commands that such Causes as were already ended should not be called again in question; but such as were not yet decided, or from that present twenty second day of November should take their rise, should be ordered and determined according to this Edict. And this he commands in general, that no advantage be taken by reason of any fault of the Writer, and to prevent all inconveniences of that nature, credit should not be given to any other Copies but such as should be written, approved or revised by Ansaldo his Notary, who had sufficient licence and authority in that behalf.

22. Some five years after the publication of this Edict died Aricch the Duke of Beneventum, after he had held the Dukedom fifty years, who left a Son, Aio by name, but he being a Man of a crazy Brain (Paul tells us by reason of a Potion given him by the Romans at Pavia) he commended to his Lombards, Radoald and given him by the Duke of Forum Julii, who, as we said, had fled to him, Grimoald the Sons of the Duke of Forum Julii, who, as we said, had fled to him, and now were in the flower of their Age, affirming it were better for them that they governed than Aio. Yet Aio succeeded his Father in the Government of the elder Brother and their Lord. The following year the Saracens and the Slavi invaded Italy. The Saracens came from Africa, who having much harassed the Island of Sicily led away multitudes of Captives. The Slavi from Dalmatia, on which they had seized, passed over to Syponus and wasted Apulia, where they encamped themselves; and about their Camp digged Ditches, which they covered over with light Earth as if it had been firm Ground. Aio hearing of their Invasion, with a party of Men, but without the knowledge of Radoald or Grimoald his Governours went out against them, and thinking to fall upon their Camp, he fell into one of the Ditches, and therein was overpowered and slain, after he had been Duke a year and five months. Radoald within a little time, hearing what had happened, gathers together a sufficient power, and coming upon them more warily than the other had done, kills of them a great number, revenges the Death of Aio, and drives the rest out of all the Dominions of the Dukedom, of which now he took the Title and the Protection. But he did not long enjoy the Honour, dying within less than two years, and left his Brother Grimoald his Successor. The same year Olympius the Exarch having beaten the Saracens out of Sicily died of sickness he had contracted by too much pains he had taken; which Constant the Emperor having understood, sent for Theodorus Calliopa and ordered him once more to go Exarch into Italy. This was the same year that the Saracens took Rhodes, and cast down the famous Colosse which was dedicated to the Sun, whereof we have already spoken: The six hundred and fifty first year of our Lord.

23. In that which followed King Rothari died, after he had obtained much honour both for the Wars he had managed, and the Laws he had made; and left Radoaldus his Son his Successor, a Man of a peaceable disposition, making no Wars, but some religious Contests with the Orthodox Bishops, being tainted, as his Father had been, with the Arian Heresie. There is little or nothing memorable of him, but that after he had been King five years and seven days he was killed by a Lombard whose Wife he had debauched. He having left no Children, though Paul tells us he married Gundiberg the Daughter of Agilulf and Theodelind, the Estates met about a new Election, and the choice fell upon Aribert (or Aripert) the Son of Gundwald, who was Brother to Theodelind. Neither is there any thing memorable of him, but that he built at Pavia the Oratory of St. Saviour, and died after he had reigned nine years, sixth Paul, although Sigonius allows him not above five at most. He most imprudently divided his Kingdom betwixt his Sons, two young Men, Bertarid (or Pertharit) and Godebert, or Gundebert, which gave occasion to very great Commotions. Bertarid was to reign at Milan, Godebert at Pavia. But the latter not content with the Part allotted him quarrelled with his Brother, and as in all such ambitious practices is common from less to come to more, and at length nothing would satisfy him but the whole Kingdom; which though he himself by plain strength could not compass, yet by the means of Friends he doubted not but at length to be possessed of the whole. He sent Garibald the Duke of Taurinm to Grimoald the Duke of Beneventum to desire

Sect. 4.

Ariald dies.

Rothari chosen King.

Wrests the Alpes Cottiae out of the Emperor's hands.

Gives a grievous defeat to the Exarch.

Isaacius the Exarch dies.

Theodorus Calliopa in his room.

The Edict of Rothari.

Anf-bnd, gratia fidelis.

Ar-prebe, honoris copiam, Agi-bulf, sibi auxiliatur.

Rothari, qui etis dominus.

The Saracens invade Italy. And the Slavi too.

Olympius the Exarch drives the Saracens out of Sicily and dies.

King Rothari dies, and Radoald his Son succeeds.

And Aribert him,

Who divides his Kingdom betwixt his two Sons.

Ann. Dom. DCXLIII.

Sect. 4.

Lib. 4. c. 45.

Ar. insulante. Ar. Ei, insula ab eo familiandine. Sic Grotius. Es autem est Aque Saxonice, atque insula. Est Eland no. bis Eland, ab Es Franci cum Eau. c. 46.

A. D. 651.

Red mald, qui etis compos.

Ar-prebe, honoris copiam, Agi-bulf, sibi auxiliatur.

Bert, Bred, Bred &amp; no. idem. Reita est equitatus in Legibus.

Gode-brecht, honorum copiam. Gode-brecht, benevolentia dicitur abundans.

Sect. 4. his help, and in case he would give him his utmost assistance, to offer him his own Sister to Wife. But the Ambassadour acted quite besides his Instructions, advising Grimold to come himself, and to decide the Controversie betwixt the two Brothers, by making himself Monarch of the Lombards, being as to Age more ripe, as to Counsel more prudent, and as to Strength, of greater Interest than either of them.

24. Grimoald being a man of an active and ambitious temper could not but listen to him, and at length his ambition quite conquered other passions, so that he became a Competitor for the Kingdom, and to make himself a Title, with a very powerful Army marched toward Pavia, having appointed his Son Romoald to be Duke of Beneventum in his stead. When he came to Placentia he sent Garibald before to declare his coming to Godebert, who consulting with Garibald about a fit place wherein to lodge Grimoald, he answered none was so fit as his own Palace for him, to whom he had promised his Sister. Accordingly Grimoald came and was received into the Court, but Garibald that was the evil Instrument betwixt them, perswaded the King that he should not admit him to his presence without having put on privy Armour, and then Grimoald he told on the other side, that except he came well prepared Godebert had a design and would kill him, wearing privy Armour for that purpose. Accordingly the next day when they came to meet, Grimoald found the King armed, and thinking it was upon design, as he had been informed, drew his Sword and slew him in the place, which done he made himself Master of his whole Dominion and all his Treasures, though he left a young Son named Reginbert, whom his faithful Friends concealed and reserved, if it might be, to another time, Grimoald making no great inquisition after him because an Infant. Bertrid the other Brother, hearing how matters went, despaired of withstanding such an Adversary as Grimoald, and ran away from Milan to Cacanus the King of the Avars, leaving his Wife Rodelind and Cunibert his young Son behind him, whom Grimoald banished to Beneventum. As for Garibald the Author of all these mischiefs such an end he had as he deserved. For there was one of the Family of Godebert, little in stature but a Man of extraordinary courage and resolution, who living in Taurinum, and hearing that he would come to Church on Easter Day, placed himself near the Font with a naked Sword under his Clothes, and as he came near the place, with all his might laid at him and slew him. He himself by the followers of Garibald was compassed quickly and slain; but so he revenged the Death of Godebert his Lord. And with their two Lives Paul the Deacon concludes his fourth Book of the Gestis or Actions of the Lombards, to whom, as his Countrymen, he bears no small affection.

25. Grimoald having killed Godebert, he bears no small affection.

25. Grimoald having killed the one Brother, and driven the other with his Wife and Son into banishment married their Sister, and with great applause of the Lombards declared himself King; which done, he sent back his fortunate Army to Beneventum, retaining onely the principal Officers to doe them honour. He did not doubt now to secure his Estate if he could but destroy Bertharid (or Perttharid) the other Brother, for which purpose he sent to Cacanus, or the King of Paulus Dint. betwixt the two Kingdoms, to banish him his Dominions. Cacanus not thinking Lib. 5. c. 2.
fit to be at difference at this time with his Neighbour, commanded the poor Prince to quit his Territories, which he perceiving he must out of necessity doe, and that he could not promise himself whereever he should go any constant maintenance or effectual assistance, thought it most fit to goe to him who had the most reason of all to supply him, and sent before him one Unulf his Friend to give him notice of his coming. Grimoald was very joyfull to hear of it, and commanded an House to be furnished at Pavia every way fit for his Reception. But his Friends were too friendly, flocking in great numbers to him night and day and shewing so much kindness as cast the Usurper into a very great fit of jealousy, which wrought so far that he appointed him a Guard, and the next night intended to make an end of him. Now it wonderfully happened that Bertharid had notice of the Design, and such a sagacious Wit as that of Unulf to assist him, by whose advice he changed his Cloaths, and passing by the Sentinels, got over the River, and so taking in the Pastures such Horses as he could come by, with such Companions as Unulf had provided him, escaped to Hasta, thence to Taurinum, and at last into France; where when Grimoald heard that he was arrived, he fretted much, as at a thing which had happened quite contrary to his expectations. Yet was he so generous and incomparably mercifull withall, that he did not onely not blame or quarrel with Unulf, but commended him highly for his constant fidelity to his Master, and gave him and another of his Servants leave, either to stay or go to him as he should think convenient. The King of the Franks, to whom Bertrid made his application, was so touched with a sence of his affliction, that the Year following he sent a strong Army, to replace him in his former condition. Grimoald buckled himself to resistence, but perceiving he was too weak to grapple with such a Power, when strength would not do, he used Craft, and thereby became Superiour to his Enemies. He himself made as if he fled out of fear, but left his Camp well furnished with all Necessaries, especially Wine in great Quantity, by which bait he hoped to catch the inconfidate Franks. And to he did, for they coming and finding no body there but so good chear ready for them, instead of pursuing the Enemy fell on it, and when their Bellies and Heads were full, betook themselves to their rest. Grimoald had notice hereof, after the second Watch, when they were in a dead sleep, came upon them and made so great a slaughter, that he left very few of them alive, to carry home the News of the defeat.

CHAP. I. with the Constantinopolitan Roman Empire. Grimoald. 49

26. The year following, Constantine the Emperour came into Italy, upon what account Opinions are various. Some, as we have already said, thought him by terrible Dreams and a frightfull Conscience, about his Brother whom he had murdered, driven from Constantinople to seek Diversion. Others believed he departed from that City out of hatred to the Inhabitants, who bore him no good will upon the account of Religion. And some, as Anastafius and Paul, were of opinion, that he came to drive the Lombards out of Italy. With a Fleet exceedingly well furnished he arrived at Tarentum, and thence led his Army to Beneventum, taking Luceria and several other Towns belonging to the Lombards in his way, and satè down before it, resolving to use all force and art imaginable, for storming of it. Romald the Son of Grimoald the King was now Duke thereof, who affoon as the Emperour approached, sent away to his Father Sesuald who had been his Governour, to let him know the great danger he was in; and now refusing to venture for the main chance, diverted the Besiegers, as he could, by frequent Sallies, and obviating their Strategems and Designs. Grimoald receiving the News with all speed he could got an Army together, and with as much haste marched toward Beneventum, sending the Messenger back with News of his coming, who being near his Journeys end, fell into the Hands of the Romans, who brought him to the Emperour's presence. Constantine demanding what he was and whence he came, he without concealing his business told him he was sent by the King to give his Son notice of his coming, which cast the Emperour into a mighty rage, and caused him to treat about Peace with Romald, that before his Father's coming, he might get safe to Naples, for performing the conditions of which he received, Gisla the Sister of Romald as an Hostage. But to deceive him he commanded Sesuald to go to the walls, and tell him nothing of his Father's approach, but on the contrary to affirm that he could not possibly give him any relief. He promised he would do so, but coming to the walls and asking for Romald, he had him be of good comfort, for his Father would shortly be with him, being that Night to encamp at the River Sangius, desiring him to be good to his Wife and Children, for these perfidious People would not suffer him to live. Accordingly the Emperour commanded his Head to be cut off, and with an Engine to be cast into the Town, where Romald caused it to be brought to him, and, having with Tears and Lamentations kissed it, to be decently buried.

27. Constans having done this great feat, for fear of Grimoald his coming departed for Naples; and in his way received some loss by Tranfemund the Count of Capua, his falling on his Men, and taking them in a disadvantageous Posture. Whether to be revenged for this or for other reasons, Sabarrus one of his Nobility desired he might have but twenty thousand Men, engaging with them to defeat Grimoald, of which the whole Court had to great apprehension. Grimoald being come to Beneventum, and having notice of this his undertaking, though he thought at first to have gone against him in Person, yet at his earnest desire sent Romald his Son, who met him at Formia, and gave him battel. For a long time the Success was doubtfull, till one Amelingus a Lombard, that carried the King's Spear, struck down a certain Greek from his Horse, and afterward taking him up on the Point of his Spear, held him aloft over his Head to the great Admiration of all the Beholders, and the Conspiration of the Greeks, who presently began to run, and left an undoubted Victory to Romald. Constans perceiving it labour in vain to meddle any more with the Lombards, that he might not seem to have come into Italy for nothing, resolved to goe and visit Rome. Both the Bishop and all the Citizens were glad to hear the News, it having been a long time

Seç. 4. Since an Emperour had therein set his foot, and they resolved to receive him with Extraordinary Honour. Vitalianus the Bishop with all his Clergy, and the Roman People met him at five Miles distance from the City, on the third day before the Nones of July in the sixth Indiction, and the six hundred and sixty third year of Our Lord. Having done his Devotions at the Churches, and visited all the places worthy of his Notice, after twelve days stay in the City; he departed and carried along with him all the brags he could find, defacing many great Monuments of Antiquity, and the Majesty of Rome, and not abstaining from the very Coverings of Churches. From Rome by Land he went to Naples, and thence by Sea passed into Sicily. Grimoald to reward the service done by Trafemund the Duke of Capua, gave him his Daughter to Wife, and Zotbo the Duke of Spoleum dying, that Dukedom as a Portion, which done he returned back to his House at Pavia.

28. During his Absence Lupus the Duke of Forum Julii, had plaid many pranks which were not to be passed over in silence. Into the Territories of the Venetii, he marched with a Party of Horse, and plundered the Church of Aquileia, with the wealth of which not contenting himself, being left by Grimoald in Pavia, he committed there many outrageous Enormities, verily believing that the King would never return alive from the Expedition. But hearing that he returned with a kind of triumph, he durst not abide his coming, but flying to Forum Julii, there he revolted and renounced his Allegiance to Grimoald, who being highly incensed against him resolved to reduce by force, and punish him, but unwilling in the least to bring his Lombards acquainted with Civil wars, he hired Cacanus the Hunn to come upon him, who accordingly the following year with an infinite Multitude invaded his Territories, and wasted all far and wide with an hostile Courage. Lupus was not yet backward to defend his People, but with such Forces as he could make opposed himself, and that with such strange Success, that fighting four days together, Cacanus at first received more loss, than he brought damage to the Lombards. But at this incensed, as at the greatest Infamy, with all Violence and better Conduct he set upon them again, and not only defeated them, but killed Lupus in the Battel. Accounting now all his own he overran the Countrey, and wasted all parts of it at his pleasure, till Grimoald being made to understand it sent to him, and putting him in mind of their former Covenant, admonished him, his work being now done, to draw his Forces out of the Dutchy of Forum Julii: Cacanus answered plainly, that he would not so quit a Countrey, which he had obtained by Arms, and with so much blood of his followers, with which answer Grimoald was highly offended, and got together as good an Army as he could, but nothing to be compared for Numbers to that of his Adversary. Being therefore so inferior in Numbers, he invented a way how to have his Forces represented to the Hunnish King far more numerous than they were. The Ambassadors of Cacanus, being present when he mustered his Souldiers, he caused them the next day to change their Cloaths, and so he did twice or thrice, which made the Ambassadors fully believe they were thrice as many as indeed they were, and they reporting it to their Master out of fear, he retreated into his own Kingdom. Lupus being slain, Warnefrid his Son by the assistance of the Slavi, fought to obtain the Possession of his Fathers Dukedom, but by the procurement of Grimoald was overpowered and slain. He then made one Weclari Duke of Forum Julii, and married Theodorata the Daughter of Lupus to his Son Romuald.

29. Grimoald being now at his ease, thought it time to animadvert upon those who in Expectation of a Change, had forsaken him in his march against the Emperour Constans. A Town called Forum Popilii belonging to the Romans, he depopulated because the Inhabitants had been very troublesome to his Men, during the War in their passing, and passing to Beneventum. Pretending an Expedition another way in the time of Lent he passed over the Hill Bardo into Treſcia, and on a sudden, when none expected it from the Apennine, fell down upon it on Easter Eve; at such time as they were busy in baptizing Children, and filled the City with such slaughter, that the very Deacons, that ministered at the Sacrament, were not spared. After this remembering how his two Brothers Tato and Caco had been circumvented and basely killed at Opitergium, he destroyed it also for Company. Two Years after Alceco the Duke of the Bulgari came with many Followers, but peaceably into Italy, and desired of Grimoald some grounds to inhabit, which request the King granted, assigning them the Towns Sepia, Bonianum and Aſſernia, which at this time were not inhabited in the Dutchy of Beneventum, and commanded his Son to admit him as Gastald, or the Count of them. The year following

A. D. 663.

Paulus quatuor. p. 16. Trifmund. Confilans et.

Lup. alius. 1. of. quies. Pinc. Lep. 17. Lup. m. d. in co. cab. Alteman.

Cap. 17.

Cap. 18.

Cap. 19.

Cap. 20.

Paulus Dia. lib. 5. c. 21. Warnefrid. c. 22. Cap. 22. Paulo Thend. rudo. Thend. rado. Populi. confilans.

C. c. 26. 27. 28.

Cap. 29. G. Gastald. ex. ponitur qui. curum gi. bernat. propri. possunt, qui. vident gerit. Ca. 3. Ca. ang. mensa sunt. 3.

Pro Dialectis. ovariis. Alii. Ca. habent in. G. Gastald. De Duce. G. Gastaldum. vocat. tari. precepti. Eni. usque. bo. die in his. ut. aliamus. locis. habitant.

ing Grimoald kept himself at home, and applied his mind to the fitting of Laws to the wants and temper of the People, to which purpose he revised the Edict of Rothari formerly mentioned, repealing some things, and adding many, which his Judges suggested to him to be both wanting, and necessary for the Administration of Justice. The Year that followed was Constantine the Emperour slain in the Month of July, and Constantine his Son continued his Reign as he had begun. Grimoald lived some three years after him, and then died after this manner. He had been let blood, and nine days after going to bend a bow to shoot at a Pigeon, three Veins in his Arm broke, and, as was reported, his Physicians applied some poisonous Plaster to the Sore, and so made an end of him; after he had reigned nine Years, as Paul the Deacon writes, but Sigonius begins his Reign in the six hundred and sixty first Year of Our Lord, and ends it not till the seventy second. He was a Man of very strong Constitution of Body, and had an Head as well furnished.

30. He left a Son by the Daughter of Aribert, named Garibald, who was very young. At the same time Bertarid was making a Journey from France into Britain, to visit the Saxon Kings. He had scarcely put off to Sea, when a Voice was heard from Land which asked for him, and advised him to return home, for Grimoald had been dead three days. Returning with speed to the shore, the Person that spake it could not be found; he therefore interpreted it as a Voice from Heaven, and presently put himself upon his Journey. And his Expectation deceived him not, for when he came to the Alpes, he found there the Guards, and all the Officers of the Court ready to receive him, whither he halted with a cheerful mind, and deposing the Boy Garibald, in the third Month after the death of his Father, with the great Joy and Expectation of the Lombards, he repossessed his Royal Estate, and called back his Wife Rodelinde, and his Son Cunibert from Beneventum, where they lay in Exile. Having reigned above seven Years, in his eighth he made Cunibert his Partner in the Kingdom, and with him reigned ten more, if Paul our Historian be in the right. Many years they lived in great tranquillity, and the State prospered; till at length their Quiet was interrupted by Alachis the Duke of Tridentum or Trent, who having overmastered the Count of the Baioarii, was so puffed up with his Success, that deposing the King he fortified his City all manner of ways against him. Bertarid hereupon, with what forces he could get together, besieged him in Trent, but he made so violent a sally out against him, as obliged him to break up his siege, and after great loss of Men to fly away for his Life. Notwithstanding this yet Cunibert, having had great Friendship and Familiarity with him from his youth, perswaded his Father to pardon and receive him into favour, and so true was the sacred Rights of Friendship, that when Bertarid several times contrived his Ruine, yet still he diverted the Execution, nay hoping still he would at last be faithful, and with intention to conquer him by kindness, he perswaded him to make him Duke of Brixia; though the old King bid him still take heed what he did, and told him he did not so much by these good Offices oblige to him a Friend, as strengthen an Enemy to his own destruction, for he would by the fresh help and assistance of the Brixians (who made a powerful Interest among the Lombards) at length push for the Kingdom itself. About this time one John was sent to succeed Theodore in the Exarchate of Ravenna, and some three years after Bertarid, the old King of the Lombards, died, a Prince to be commended for his Piety towards God, his Justice toward his Subjects, and his Charity to the Poor.

31. Cunibert his Son then continued his Reign, having married Hermelinda a Lady of the Stock of the Anglo-Saxons. No sooner almost was his Father dead, but he found how true a Prophet he had been in the Case of Alachis, who in return to all his kindness, and more than Brotherly-love, plotted how to deprive him of his Kingdom, and get the Crown upon his own Head. Having drawn into the Conspiracy two Brothers Aldo and Gransfo, the most considerable Citizens of Brixia, and several other Lombards, he watched his time when the King was absent, and contrary to his Oath of Fidelity seized on his Palace in Pavia, which done he took upon him the Royal Title. Cunibert having notice of this Treason, and altogether unprovided, as having never expected any such thing, went and fortified himself as well as he could in the Island Comacina, in the Lake Larium. In the mean time the Tyrant carries himself as he had begun, and hurried by his own Inclinations, never considered how it behaved him by a fair demeanour, to keep what he had already obtained. To the Churchmen he carried himself with great pride and severity, and could not conceal his Tyrannical and Ingratefull

Seç. 4. quantum & latine loquantur, lingue tam proprie nuntium amiserunt. Sic Paulus. Menſe Julio. Anno Regni 6. Indictione 11. A. D. 663. Paulus. lib. 5. cap. 33. A. D. DCLXXII.

Rode-linde, quies tranquilla. C. c. 26. 27. 28. C. c. 29. G. Gastald. ex. ponitur qui. curum gi. bernat. propri. possunt, qui. vident gerit. Ca. 3. Ca. ang. mensa sunt. 3.

Etic dum Dux esse in Tridentina civitate, cum Comite Baioario, quemque illi Gravissimum ducunt, qui Baioarum castella regibus commisit, cumque mirifica superavit. Paulus Diaconus. lib. 5. c. 36.

Paulus Diaconus. lib. 5. c. 38.

Seçt. 4. Humour, toward those that had been the Authours of his Advancement. On a <sup>Idem ibid. c. 39.</sup> time as he was telling Money in his Palace, the Son of Aldo happened to be there, and a piece falling down upon the Table, took it up and officiously gave it to him. He imagining the Child could not understand his meaning, said to him, thy Father hath many such as this, which if it please God, he shall e'er long give to me. But the Boy at his Return home told this, and other passages to his Father, from which Aldo concluded he had been grossly mistaken in his measures, and that if he did not by some speedy Act prevent it, death and the Ruine of his Family should be the Reward of all his Services to the Tyrant. Having communicated his thoughts with Granso his Brother, and others of his Friends, they thought fit to persuade Alachis to go out to hunt, and take his pleasure in the Forest, promising they would keep the City of Pavia for him, and moreover at his Return, present him with the Head of Cunibert that drunken Sot.

32. He was persuaded, and out he went to recreate himself in the Forest, which while he did, Aldo and his Brother repaired to Cunibert in the Island. Falling at his Feet they bewailed their Crime and Misfortune together, and begging his pardon, agreed on a day whereon to put Pavia again into his Hands. This they performed to the great Joy and Satisfaction of the Inhabitants, the Clergy especially, and to the as great dissatisfaction of Alachis, who after he had spent the heat of his Rage against Aldo, went into Isiria to raise Forces. Several Cities, some by persuasions, and others by force, he brought to join with him and the Army of Forum Julii, which was marching to the Assistance of Cunibert, by a strange while he diverted from their purpose, for, standing at a Bridge they were to pass, lying over the River Liquentia, as they marched stragling one from another, he forced them to swear Fidelity to him, and then kept every one from returning to his Companions to tell them the cheats, and give them notice of whom to beware. Not long after having got together a considerable Power, he moved against Cunibert, and they incamped the one against the other in the Fields of Coronata, where Cunibert sent and challenged Alachis to a single Combat, to save the Lives of so many which else of necessity must be destroyed. But Alachis remembering his Strength and Courage, when they were young together refused the offer, though he was also solicited to it by one of his followers, who upon his refusal disdain to serve such a Master, forsook him, and went over to his Enemy. The two Armies then being to decide the Controverſie, when Cunibert was about to charge, Zeno a Deacon of the Church at Pavia, bearing him great affection, and afraid he should miscarry, came to him, told him all their Safety consisted in his, and that if he perished in the Battel, the Tyrant would by divers ways of Torment put them to death, therefore he prayed him to give him leave to put on his Armour to counterſeit his Person, and to goe for him: if so be he perished the loss would not be great, and if he lived the thing would redound unto his Honour, having by his Servant obtained the Victory.

33. The King very earnestly refused, but overcome by the Prayers and Tears of several of the By-ſtanders, at length yielded, and Zeno being much of his height and shape, when he had put on his Armour, he could not be known from Cunibert himself. The Battel was fought with great Animosity on both sides, and Alachis bending all his malice, and the utmost force he could make toward the Wing, where, as he imagined, Cunibert stood, came up with and engaged his disguised Adversary, whom but little skilled in such affairs he slew, and in great jollity and triumph commanded his Head to be cut off, and set upon the Point of a Spear, that the Soldiers on both sides might perceive it. But when he came to take off his Head, the Head of a Clerk not that of a King appeared, whereat he was much amazed, and from his amazement fell into a great passion against all Churchmen vowing in case he got the Victory, he would fill a Pit with their Testicles. In the mean time Cunibert, perceiving his Men much dejected at the Report of his death, and that they began to fly, shewed himself to them, and revived their Spirits to such a measure, that they were ready and chearfull for a second engagement; when Cunibert again sent to Alachis, and to avoid the Effusion of Blood, once more offered to decide the Quarrel by a Duel. But he refused, joynd battel the second time, and therein was slain, and with him most of his followers; such of them as escaped, being swallowed up by the floods of the River Adua. The Army of the Dutchy of Forum Julii, was not at the Battel, for having sworn to Alachis, and yet it being against their Conſciences to fight for him, they neither assisted the one nor the other, but when they came to ingage, departed home. Alachis being thus slain, King Cunibert in triumph returned to Pavia, and having having made a sumptuous Funeral for Zeno the Deacon, reigned with all Prosperity, Justice and Moderation. In the Field of Coronata where the Battel was fought, he built a Monastery to St. George.

A Monastery built to St. George.

34. About two years after Romald the Duke of Beneventum, for what cause is uncertain, invaded Calabria belonging to the Emperour, and being without any considerable Fortification or Defence he took Tarentum, Brundysium and the whole Countrey round about, and not long after died, when he had Governed sixteen years, and left his Dukedom much enlarged to his Son Grimoald, who held it for three years longer, having married Wigilinda the Sister of Cunibert, and Daughter of King Bertarid. After the Death of Grimoald, Gisulf his Brother was Duke, and held the place seventeen years, whose Wife was Winiberta the Mother of Romald his Son. But much about the same time that Romald invaded the Territories of the Emperour great stirrs happened in the Dukedom of Forum Julii; where Rodoald had succeeded Landar, as he did Weclari, who was made Duke by King Grimoald as we said before. In the absence of Rodoald from the City one Ansfrit, from a certain Castle called Reantia, seized on the Government and Title of Duke without any Warrant or Authority from the King. Rodoald in much trouble at the Report, departed into Isiria, and thence Sailing to Ravenna, he so came to Pavia to Cunibert, who shortly had Intelligence that Ansfrit intended to be his Rival also for the Kingdom; but as he was making preparations for so great an Enterprize, he was taken at Perona, and being brought before the King, was deprived of his sight, and so banished. Then was Aldo the Brother of Rodoald made Duke of Forum Julii, and held it seven years, as Sigonius gathers from some other circumstances, though Paul the Historian writes that he Governed by the Name of Preservator or Protector of the place but for one year and seven months. Such prosperity had Cunibert during his Life, which lasted twelve years after that of his Father. He was a man very eminent for his neatness and goodness, and no less remarkable for his courage and dexterity in War.

Cunibert dies.

35. His Succesſour he appointed his Son Liutbert, and because he was young, left one Afrand a man of great Nobility and Wisdom to be his Governour, who held the place and managed it with great sincerity for the space of eight months. Then did Godebert the Son, Ragunbert by Name, whom when Grimoald slew him he left young, and who now was Duke of Taurinum, thinking he had good opportunity presented by the Infancy of Liutbert, set up for himself, and defeating Afrand and his Associates in battel, obtained the Sovereignty. During his administration of affairs, Gisulf the Duke of Beneventum with a strong Army invaded Campania; which waſting with Fire and Sword, he took thence great numbers both of Cattel and Captives, and proceeded so far that Johm the Biſhop of Rome was sorely frightened, and knowing the City was not strong enough to make any resistance, betook himself to intreaties, and he and his Clergy going out to meet him, prevailed with him to return back and dismiss his Prisoners. Ragunbert died within the year, and was succeeded by his Son Aribert, who more effectually prosecuted his Interest, than did his Father. He renewed the War with Liutbert, who had by this time got a very strong Party, for not onely Afrand but Otto, Tazo, Faro, and Rotharid Duke of Bergomum joynd with him. But all these he defeated in one battel at Pavia, Liutbert he took Prisoner, Afrand and Rotharid fled, the one to the Island Comacina, and the other to his City of Bergomum, whither Aribert pursued him, and having taken Landis a Town in the Territories, laid Siege to the City, and using all violent courses, at last took it by storm, and therein Rotharid, who by this time had assumed the Title of King. Having caused his Head and Beard to be shaven, he sent him away to Taurinum, where not long after he was killed by the King's command, who also presently after caused Liutbert his young Competitor to be stifled in a Bath. Then sent he his Army to Comacina against Afrand, who having timely notice, got him thence to Ravenna, and escaped to Theudebert the Duke of the Baiarid, with whom he continued nine years. But the Army of Aribert took the Island, and Afrand being escaped he raged cruelly against his Relations; he pulled out the Eyes of his Son Sigibrand. His Wife Theuderada by name, who in her womanish tattle had given out the should one day be a Queen, he disgraced by cutting off her Nose and her Ears, and dealt with Aurona her Daughter in like manner. Onely Liutprand his youngest Son, because he was a child, he spared and suffered him to go to his Father, Providence, as Paul the Historian observes, preserving him for great things in time to come.

Aribert his Son succeeds him.

36. Aldo

Ansfrit, Gra-tiosa Pax-Ansvel Anſi, Gra-tia in Novo Testamento & Dictionario.

Faro Julianorum autem ducatum postbat.
Aldo frater Ro-doaldi loci servatoris nomine per annos septem governa-
vit. lib. 6. c. 3.

A. D. 703.
Liut-berc vel Liut-beris Subditis capigit non Liutberti ut apud Sigonium.
Hailſpar, ci-tis comparans, utrumque Au-gustinus Teuonium.

Cap. 18.

Cap. 19.

Rotharid, qui ce pollens.

Cap. 20.

Cap. 21.

Lib. 6. c. 22.
Sigibrand, vi-ria invenſa.
du-rune, Cam-pustri femina.
Runa femina.
unde Fride-run in vocabulario.

Sect. 4.

Austria and Neustria what.Sits amongst the Lombards.

"and love of God have appeared good to us, and therewith we are pleased. The Style is so difficult that hardly can it be brought to correspond with the Englisb Idiom; but the Reader may take notice that this was the third Edition of the Laws of the Lombards, whereof we must speak more anon; he may observe also the Titles these Kings took, and that even in Italy, there was Austria and Neustria, as well as in France and in Pannonia, Parts of the Kingdom so called in reference to their Situation. For the word Ostfrick, which in Latin they barbarously, as I may say, turned into Austria and Austrasia, to those Teutonic People signified the Eastern Kingdom or Dominion. So was the Kingdom of the Mediomatices called by the Franks, and Pannonia by the Germans, part of which still, and that alone, retains the Name of Austria. In like manner Westfrick or Westreck, they changed into Neustria, it signifying the Western Dominion in opposition to the Eastern. From their Situation some were called Astij, East with us, and those that so called them being the same with what others pronounced Oost. The Northmaeni, Northendi, Alpes Norici, and Norici the People, from their Northern Situation had their Names.

40. For the space of about three years we hear little more concerning Liutprand, whom we may conclude intent upon the Laws, and such farther Reformati- ons as tended to the well being of his Subjects. But in the fifth year of his Reign, noise enough was made in Campania by the Duke of Beneventum, who by a Wife got Cumæ into his hands. Those of Rome were highly concerned at it, and the Bishop dealt with him both by fair words and money to restore it, and when that would not do, thundred against him by excommunication. But this also he despised, whereupon the Bishop was forced to betake himself to the Secular hand, procuring John the Duke of Naples to set upon it by might, which he did, and surprising it, killed therein three hundred Lombards with their Gastald, and took Prisoners more than five hundred which he led away to Naples, and sold the Town to the Bishop for seventy Pounds of Gold, as had been agreed. The year that followed Faraold the Duke of Spoleum took Narnia by cunning from the Romans, and pretending a Journey to the King surprized Classis, another Town belonging to Ravenna; but he was commanded by Liutprand to restore them both. Though the King did not, his own Son Trafemund punished him for his tremercy, despoiling him shortly after, and compelling him to take Orders that he might have his place. About the same time the Slavi made another Irruption into the Territories of Forum Julij, called Lauria, where Pemmo the Duke set upon them, and with loss but of one old man, Signalb by name, who in a former Fight betwixt them and Ferdulf had lost two Sons. Once and again he had done great Execution upon them, and now the third time, though his Captain and other Lombards forbade him, yet would he not be kept from speaking openly to the Slavi: Now I have sufficiently revenged the Death of my Sons, if Death should come I should cheerfully undergo it. And accordingly it came to pass; for he was the only man that died in the Fight; Pemmo having slain many Enemies, and unwilling to lose any more of his own men, made Peace with the Slavi in the same place. And from this time forward they began more to stand in awe of the Arms of Forum Julij.

41. Now for many years had the Kings and Kingdom of the Lombards been in peace, except some petty broils betwixt them and their nearest Neighbours, or that they contended one with another. The Exarchs and they had since the time of Rothari, maintained a very good correspondence together, the Romans and Lombards, though Neighbours, perfectly agreeing. But now was this Kingdom at the highest pitch allotted for it, and upon the brink of prosperity, which never continues but changes most commonly to the other extreme. Wealth and Ease had made the King and the Subject both confident and overweening, those ever thinking they have the greatest strength, who never made any trial of it; yet did they think their present condition mean in comparison of what they were in capacity to attain, and therefore they must up and be doing, and involved themselves in such a War as descending to their Successors, at length procured the ruin of their Name and Dominion. Liutprand having prepared all things beforehand for so great an enterprize, Invades the Exarchate on a sudden, and lays Siege to Ravenna the seat of the Governour. Paul who at present by favour of Leo the Emperour held that place, we are told by Signonius, was very much surprized, as from the highest prosperity being on a sudden cast into the greatest difficulty. But there was no such cause of his being surprized, if we consider but what the same Authour had related but a little before, he tells us in many words

A. D. 718.
Paulus Diaconus, lib. 5. cap. 44.Trot-Mund, consulans O.
Drajanum in Vocab. Alle-man. & Thrasianum, con-traße Thesig, Thuring, ibid.

Sect. 4.

Vide Signon.
de Regno Italia.
lib. 3. Ep. 97.
et 100.

that Leo the Emperour being at odds with Gregory the Roman Bishop, upon the account of Images took several Courtes to make him away, and for that purpose sent Paul, as Exarch into Italy, who having once attempted it, but to no purpose, the Emperour the following year sent him a Message, that if he could not kill, yet he should remove him from his Office and put another in his Room. Paul thus importuned by his Master, and bearing himself hatred to Gregory, because he had forbidden the Tribute to be paid which he had laid upon the Churches, sent one Marcicus the Spatharius of Leo, and whom he had made Duke of Rome, to that City with order to lay hold on the Bishop, and commit him to Custody. But matters were not so privately carried but that the Bishop, whose Power and Interest now began to be mighty in Italy, had notice of it. Therefore he hires the Lombards out of the Dukedoms of Spoleum and Tuscia for great Rewards, to stop the passage of the Exarch's Army. They with much Alacrity marching to the City possessed themselves of the Bridges Salarius and Milvius, and opposing themselves to the Forces of Ravenna, not only hindred them from returning to Rome, but constrained them and their Leader to return back to their own City.

42. This happened but the year before the Siege of Ravenna, and therefore whether the Exarch had reason to be surprized, or rather ought not to have expected some such matter, and whether the Bishop of Rome, who had already joyned the Lombards with him, was not concerned, we leave the Reader to judge. However Paul, whether aware or not of Hostility from the Lombards, most gallantly demeaned himself in the keeping of Ravenna, shewing himself ready to undergoe any thing rather than to yield up the place; insomuch that Liutprand despairing to doe any good, broke up his siege and departed to Classis, which being but slenderly provided he easily took, and having plundered it, laid it level with the Earth. But upon the Report of what had happened to Classis, the Citizens of Ravenna began to be very fearfull and dejected as if their turn was not far off; which being underitood by Liutprand, their fear became his confidence, and he drew back his Army to the City, which having had some taste of the fruits of Conquest, he thought now would fall upon it with more Alacrity. And so it proved, for they tired out by their frequent Assaults both the Garrison Souldiers and the Townsmen, which when Paul perceived, and despaired of receiving any Succours from abroad, he left the Town to the Discretion of the Inhabitants. The Besiegers having notice of his flight, knew it a fit time to renew their Violence, and with little more trouble carried the Place, which Liutprand permitted his Souldiers to plunder. And here they got plunder enough, wealth sufficient to glut their minds, and take off their edge from any farther adventures, contrary to the true Policy of a Captain, who ought to use his Men in this case as Huntsmen deal with their Hounds, to give them such a taste of the Prey as to stir up their Appetites, and make them more eager after the game, but not to fill them and make them lazie. This City being the seat of the Exarch, of Kings, Emperours and great Prelates, abounded with all Riches imaginable. Liutprand spoiled it of many rare Monuments of Antiquity, amongst which the most remarkable was a brazen Statue of an Emperour on Horseback, a Piece of admirable Contrivance and Workmanship, which he caused to be translated to Pavia, where it remains, and by its rareness something comforts the Citizens, for the decay of the Glory of that Place.

43. Ravenna being taken, most of the Cities of the Exarchate presently yielded, and from an Exarchate it was changed into a Dutchy, over which was set Hildebrand the King's Nephew, who because he was young, Peredeus a Duke was made his Governour. Paul the Exarch thus ousted of Ravenna, betook himself to the Venetians at Heraclia, where he implored the Assistance of Vrsus the Duke. All this while Gregory, the Roman Bishop, was a Looker on, after he had set the Lombards and Paul together by the Ears about his business. He had a design to chastise the Exarch, but not to encrease the Power and Dominion of the Lombards; his spleen excited him against the Emperour, and his Interest caused him to wish that both sides were more weakened and humbled, that his own Authority already in a fair way, might make the greater progress in Italy. Liutprand had made such a progress in the war as made him tremble, and he perceived it was high time to put a stop to the Carreire of his good Fortunes. He writes his Letters to Vrsus, the Duke of the Venetians, exhorting him to give aid to the said Paul, and now quite alters his style, making those be black who formerly were white, and him white whom before he could not enough tax and load with opprobrious Language. He tells him that by reason of sin the City of Ravenna, which was the Head of many Churches, was taken by the wicked Nation of the Lombards, and his worthy Son the apud Signon.

Extant liber
um quo suprà.
p. 101.

Lord

The Exarchate of Rome, jealous of the growing Power of Liutprand, turns against him.Liutprand invades the Ex-archate.

SECT. 4. Lord Exarch, as he understands makes his abode at Venice, therefore tells him that he ought to stand by him and with him in his stead, that the City of Ravenna might be restored to the ancient Estate, and the Imperial service of the Lords his Sons Leo and Constantine the Great, Emperours, and that for the Love of their Holy Faith.

44. The Venetians had good reason to be concerned also at the growth of so potent a Neighbour, and therefore the better to balance him, resolved to give their utmost assistance to Paul, rigging up a Fleet under pretence of fighting against the Saracens, at the Instance of the Emperour. Paul having sped at Venice according to his Wishes; yet as having been repulsed gathered together some Forces, and made as if he would besiege Imola, and under this pretence increasing his Army as much as he possibly could, removed on a certain day appointed betwixt him and the Venetians, and laid siege to Ravenna by Land, the Venetian Fleet doing the same by Sea almost at the same instant. Hildebrand and Peredeus though exceedingly surprized, et forced all that were able to bear Arms to the walls, where they behaved themselves with much resolution; but while they fought stoutly on the Land-side against Paul, the Venetians broke open the Water-gate and got into the City. The Defendants having notice made stout opposition here also, and a terrible Fight followed; till Paul coming about to the Assistance of his Friends decided the Controversie, and took the Town. Peredeus was slain, and Hildebrand fell alive into the Hands of the Venetians, who having thus gallantly demeaned themselves, departed home, before such time as Liutprand, having received Intelligence, could move from Pavia. Not long after this, Leo the Emperour, and Gregory the Bishop of Rome falling out about the Worship of Images, the Bishop excommunicated the Prince, absolved all his Subjects of Italy from their Allegiance, and commanded them neither to pay him Tribute nor any other Testimony of Duty or Allegiance. Hereupon the Romans, Campanians, and those of Ravenna and Pentapolis revolted, and rising in great Tumults laid violent hands upon their Governours. Paul the Exarch was killed at Ravenna, Peter the Duke of Rome had his Eyes put out, and in Campania the Duke Exbilaratus was with his Son Hadrian slain by the Romans, who were sent thither for that purpose.

The Bishop excommunicates the Emperour. Paul is killed. Great Rebellions.

Eutychius the new Exarch excommunicated.

The Exarch and the Lombards join and besiege Rome.

45. The year following Liutprand, taking advantage of these Tumults, made war upon some places of Emilia, betwixt Imola and Mutina, which hitherto had been untouched by the Lombards. He easily made himself Master of Monstebellus, Ferionianum, Buxetum and Perfictum, and at length of Bononia also, a Town built by the Etruscians when they possessed the Region on this side the Apennines, afterward the Seat of the Galli Boii, and then made a Latine Colony by the Romans, from whom it was taken by the Goths, then recovered, and now at length conquered by the Lombards. Thus far Liutprand having prospered as he could desire, passed by the Dominion of Ravenna and fell upon Pentapolis, which he overran from Ariminum, as far as Auximum without any resistance; and at length made a stop at Vicus Pileus for settling the Government of it, whither the Cities appointed their several Deputies to repair, but as they were on their way, a Party of Roman Souldiers light upon them, and cut them off every man. The Rumour of the Revolt in Italy coming to the Emperour's Ears, was received with suitable regret, and he ordered Eutychius a Patritian, to go thither as his Exarch, with Instructions how to punish the chief Authorours and Contrivers of it; which going about, he was also stricken with the Thunder-bolt of Excommunication by Gregory. This did the more incense him, for that having easily reduced Ravenna to the Emperour's obedience, he drew the Lombards to his Party, who the Year following took Sutrium by some Arts from the Church, for so we must call it now, Gregory having procured the Romans to renounce their Obedience to their Sovereign, and swear Obedience to him and his Successours; whereby Rome and the Roman Dukedom became transferred upon the Roman Prelates; of which more, in a more proper place. Gregory again got Sutrium out of their hands, but Eutychius made a stronger League with Liutprand, from whom Trafemund the Duke of Spoleterum having revolted, they covenanted, as well to suppress him as Gregory, and reduce the Rebels to their former duty owing to their several Lords. Falling first upon Trafemund he submitted himself, knowing he was not able to bear up against the Shock, so that the whole work now was with Rome, which they clofly besieged. Gregory found himself in the same condition as to resistance, and therefore resolv'd to take the same course to rid himself of the danger impending. He went out of the City to Liutprand, to whom he used many flattering words, telling him he did this for his sake, upon the account of his Eminent Piety, whereas had Leo's Army alone besieged the City,

A. D. 727.

Peredeus, laid Pentapolis legi.

The siege raised.

Friendship betwixt Charles Martell and Liutprand.

Death of great Men.

Liutprand besieges Rome.

At the persuasion of Charles Martell raised the Siege.

City, he would not have stirred one foot out of it. He spake vehemently against the Emperour, and propounded to the King the Example of Attila a furious Barbarian, who by the desires of a Roman Bishop, was diverted from Rome. He spake so effectually, that he not only procured Liutprand to break up the Siege, but made a seeming agreement and friendship betwixt him and the Exarch.

46. About this time Charles Martell the Major of the Palace in France, conceiving the Friendship of the Lombards to be very convenient for strengthening of the interest of his Family, sent his Son Pippin to Liutprand, that by the cutting off his hair, as the custom was, he might adopt him for his Son. And such were the fruits of this Friendship, that the Saracens invading Gall the year following, Liutprand at his request assisted him in Person with a considerable Army, and contributed no small matter to the Victory obtained over the Infidels. At his return he found new work made for him by the Exarch, who taking the advantage of his absence, resolv'd if possible, to re-take Pentapolis and Emilia. He himself invading Pentapolis, defeated the Army of the Lombards, and reduced the Cities. But Agatho the Duke of Perusia, whom he sent into Emilia, had the quite contrary success, being forced with great loss from Bononia, which he had besieged. The five or six years that followed, were famous for little but the Death and Succession of Great Men. Romald the Duke of Beneventum died after six and twenty years Government, leaving a young Son named Gisulf; whom some went about to make away, but the People always faithful to their Governours preserv'd his life, and put to death them that had conspired against it. Liutprand coming to the City took the Boy away with him, being too young for Government, and placed in his room Gregory another of his Nephews. Some time after, Rachis the Duke of Forum Julii invaded Carniola, which Paul our Historian calls the Countrey of the Sclavi, where he slew a great multitude of them, and wasted it far and wide. On a time they made a sudden Assault upon him, and his Armourbearer had his Lance, but he killed the first of them that gave the Onset with a Cudgel he had in his Hand, and therewith so affrighted them that they retreated. From this time he became every day more celebrated for his Valour.

47. At the same time broke out into Rebellion, Trafemund the Duke of Spoleterum, and made a strict League with Gregory the Third the Roman Bishop, and Successour to him who had assumed the Dominion of Rome, and the places to it belonging. As a Condition of this Alliance he gave up to the Bishop the Castle of the Gallienfes, upon the Account of which he had formerly had much trouble from the Dukes of Rome. Trusting to this Alliance, he refused to obey the Orders of the King, who conceiving that such a Revolt touched the very Inwards of his Concernments, speedily raised an Army and led it against him. But the Rebel durst not abide his Coming, but getting out of the City fled to the Bishop, who now glistered with his new Principality; desiring him to undertake his Patronage, who had protected his Predecessour from the Violence of the Exarch; and had entered into a most sacred League and Alliance with himself. The Bishop asking advice of Duke Stephen, with the Consent of the Roman Souldiers (who doubtless could not but desire Action) undertook his Protection; when in the mean time Liutprand seized on his Dukedom, and bestowed it on his Nephew Hilderick; which having done, he sent his Ambassadors to Gregory, requiring him to give up the Traitor into his Hands, or to expect him with an Army to fetch him. The Bishop thought it below him, and no way consistent with good Nature to give him up, and returned such an answer to the King, who when Winter was over, removed his Forces from the Dukedom of Spoleterum into that of Rome, where he laid siege to the City it self, taking Ameria, Orta, Polimartium and Bleda, he laid siege to the City it self, and encamping in Nero's Fields, drew many of the Nobility to him; the Hair of whom he cut after the Lombard fashion. Gregory being put to fore straits, first betook himself to the Artifice of his Predecessour, thinking by good words and intreaties to remove the Enemy from the Walls; but this device failing him, he had recourse to a more severe remedy; sending to Charles Martell, the Major of the Palace in France, the Keys of the Holy Sepulchre and other things of great request; beseeching him to send relief to him and the distressed Church, and free the City from the siege of the Lombards. Charles readily embraced the offer, as tending to the Advancement of his Reputation in the World, and sent a Message so acceptable to Liutprand, that he arose from before Rome, and keeping only in his Hands four Towns which he had seized, departed to Pavia in the Month of August, and the seventh Indiction. A. D. DCCXXXIX.

SECT. 4.

Ad Pontificem novo principatu fulgentem confugit, atque cum, &c. Sigonius de Regno Italici lib. 3. p. 110.

Exercitum ex Ducatu Spoletano in Romanum traduxit.

Seç. 4. 48. Trafemund, when the Siege was raised, resolved to make again for his Dukedom, being readily assisted by the Bishop, who by this means hoped to recover his four Towns, and by Godescalc, lately advanced to the Dukedom of Beneventum, by the People against the King's mind, in the room of Gregory deceased, who thought hereby to weaken the King, and strengthen his own illegal Title. At his first Invasion of the Countrey, he easily recovered several Places, and at length in December, and the Eighth Indiction, took Spoleum by surprise, and therein killed Hilderick the young Duke. He had a great Advantage for managing his Affairs presented by the Sickn of Liutprand, which was so grievous, that the Lombards despairing of his Recovery took Hildebrand his Nephew, and carrying him to our Ladies Church without the Walls, inaugurated him King. But an odd Accident happened at the Ceremony; for having a Spear delivered into his Hands, according to the Custom, a Cuckow came and fate thereon, which by Wisemen was looked on as prodigious, and betokening a mean Reign to their young King. Liutprand when he was recovered and had notice what was done, took it ill, but because the solemnity was past, made Hildebrand King together with himself. The following year was eminent for the Ends of three mighty Men in the World, Leo the Emperour, Charles Martel lately mentioned, and Gregory the Roman Patriarch; to whom succeeded one Zachary a Greek by birth. This Zachary was scarcely settled in his Chair when he sent to Liutprand, and demanded the four Towns to be redelivered, to which Message he answered, that when he should come to the Places, he would give him abundant satisfaction. Liutprand in the mean time resolved, not to suffer Trafemund so to carry the Dukedom of Spoleum; but the Year that followed made war upon him by the Assistance especially of Rachis the Duke of Forum Julii. Trafemund aware of their coming, went to meet them at the Place he thought they would land their Men, and when there he missed of his opportunity followed them to Forum Sempronii, and reached them in the middle of the Forest. Rachis and his Brother Aistulf, with their Forojulians brought up the Rere, and being first engaged, though the Commanders omitted nothing of their Duty, many of them were slain. Rachis by one Berto of Spoleum, was challenged to a single Combat, wherein he dismounted his Enemy, and suffered him to creep away on his Hands and Knees into the Wood. Aistulf was by two set upon on a Bridge, both whom he tumbled down into the River, and escaped. Trafemund found himself concerned to retreat to Spoleum, where he was besieged, and at length being forced to yield, was compelled to enter into Orders. Then did the King bestow the Title, and Office of Duke upon Asprand another of his Nephews.

49. In the mean time Liutprand restored not the Places before mentioned to the Bishop, who wondering thereat, resolved to doe as Gregory the second his Predecessour had done before him; to go himself in Person and speak with him, then lying at Interamna, in the Territories of Spoleum. Liutprand hearing of his coming sent Grimoald with a Complement and order to bring him on his way as far as Narnia, where he was to be received by the Army. He himself when he drew nigh to Interamna, went out to meet him, and after some friendly discourse dismissed him to his Lodgings. The next day coming again together, the Bishop clawed him with good words. "He related how for his Predecessours sake he had raised his Siege from before Rome, and commending him for his Justice and holy demeanour towards all men, put him in mind what a blot it would be upon his Memory, as well as a wound upon his Conscience, to break his word given to St. Peter, and to rob him and the Church, to which he had pretended to bear so good affection: "In sum he desired he would give up the four Towns he had so long held in his hands, and farther make a League with the Church, which if he did, he might be sure to have everlasting Salvation after death, and eternal Renown with all Posterity. We are told the Device so took, that Zachary obtained whatsoever he desired, not only the four Towns, but a League with the Church for twenty years; and moreover some Lands in Sabinum, which thirty years before had been taken away with others in Narnia, Ancona, Auximum and Humum, which they called Patrimonies, and the Valley known by the Name of the Great, in the Territories of Saturnium. The next day having lovingly dined together, the Bishop departed to receive the Towns from the Kings Commissioners, who were Hildebrand his Nephew Duke of Clusium, Tacpert, Raning, and Grimoald, Gastalds of Etruria. First he received America, then Orta, afterward Polmarium, and at length through the Borders of Tuscia belonging to the Lombards and the Sabini they came to Bleda. Thence returned he to Rome, where, as well he might, for joy he made a Solemn Procession.

Death of three great Persons.

Seç. 4.

A. D. 741.

cession. And these things were thus transacted in the Tenth Indiction, if we believe Anastafius who was Library keeper to some of his Successours.

50. Liutprand all this while did not forget Godescalc, who both had seized on the Duchy of Beneventum without his leave, and had assisted Trafemund also in his Rebellion. Having rid his hands of Trafemund, he led an Army against him, but he durst not abide his coming, but resolved to fly into Greece, which as he attempted, and had put his Wife and Household-stuff into the Ship, when he himself was to go aboard he was killed by those Citizens of Beneventum, that bore good will to Gisulf, and his Wife escaped safe to Constantinople with all she had. Liutprand coming to the City restored Gisulf his Nephew to the Title and Office of Duke, whom he had formerly removed for his Youth and Inability to govern. The following year and the eleventh Indiction, as Anastafius assures us, either impatient of rest, or out of an ambitious desire of farther Conquest, he again invaded the Exarchate, and having taken Casena, openly shewed that he intended once more to be Master of Ravenna. Eutychius the Exarch, as well as John the Archbishop, with the Citizens and the Cities of Pentapolis and Amilia knowing themselves too weak to make resistance, betook themselves to Zachary, whose authority they knew to be so sacred and inviolable with the King, that he would deny him nothing. He sent a Message to him to restore Casena, and to leave the Exarchate in repose, and it being rejected, he himself made a Journey first to Ravenna and thence to Parvia, where he caused the King to conquer his Inclinations, to restore Casena, and promise not any more to offer violence to the Exarchate. The Bishop shortly after his Return (of which, as also his Journey, Paul the Deacon makes no mention, though by reason of the Age he liv'd in he could not be ignorant of so notable a matter) had News brought him of the sudden death of Liutprand, who left this life after he had reigned one and thirty Years and seven Months. A man of great worth, if his extreme thirst after Conquest and Domination be excepted, though Paul to other great Commendations adds this, That he was a lover of Peace, which must be restrain'd to what he concludes his Book with, that with the greatest care he preserved Peace with the Franks and Avars. For together with his Life Paul shuts up his History of the A.D.s of the Lombards. He was Deacon of the Church of Forum Julii, in the Territories of which Luphis his Great Grandfather's Father seated himself, when with the Lombards his Country-men he came into Italy. Hedying there, left five Sons who were all taken away into Captivity by the Avars at that time, that Romilda the Wife of Gisulf betrayed Forum Julii into the hands of their King. Of these five only Lupis returned into the place of his Nativity (of the strange Circumstances of his Return, let the Reader if he list consult the Authour himself) where he married and begat a Son named Aricbis. This Aricbis had a Son named Warnefrid who by Theudelinda his Wife had our Historian, (besides another Son called Aricbis) whom we can easily believe to have been a Lombard by descent, though he had not told us. For Jornandes, the Historian of the Goths, and he, by the manner of their writing, sufficiently discover that Natural affection which men bear to the Stocks from whence they proceed.

Invades again the Exarchate.

Liutprand dies.

The History of Paulus Diaconus ends with him.

Hildebrand his Nephew succeeds.

Deposed, and Rachis made King.

He corrects the Laws.

51. Liutprand being dead Hildebrand or Hildebrand his Nephew (i. e. his Grandson, as Sigonius interprets it) succeeded him in the Government, whom he being formerly chosen by the People he had confirmed, as we formerly shewed. But his former Election and Confirmation were not of such moment with the Lombards, but that rejecting him of whom they themselves had made the choice, after seven months they deposed him, and made King in his room Rachis the Duke of Forum Julii, a man much admired for his Virtues. Rachis with universal applause having ascended the Throne, shewed that though he was fit for War, yet he desired Peace; and became the great Patron of Churches. And in the second year of his Reign finding the Laws (notwithstanding the several Alterations made by his Predecessours) to be defective, he summoned all the Judges of the Lombards, both out of Austria and Neustria, and according to their Judgment and Approbation, amended and added what was faulty or defective. The year which followed this, being the second of his Reign, on the first of March, and the fourteenth Indiction he published his Amendments with a Proeme, wherein he takes notice how Rothair, Grimoald and Liutprand his Predecessours had taken the same care before him; but he having seriously considered of what they had published, found some things good, and other things fit to be purged and corrected. Some five years he spent in the Studies of Peace and Laws, and then a fit of War took him, being no longer able to subsist without some Martial Diversions. He invaded Pentapolis, where having at

Seç. 4. Gode-fobalch, Dei Jervat, Nam Deum non aliter nominare mos erat Germanis. Schule Jervat in Novo Testamento Jape, hinc Marf-chalch & alia. Paulus Diaconus, Lib. 6. c. 57. 58.

Liut-gis, A-mare Jervat. Liutp. Amor, Anglia Love. Hinc Liupman & alia in vocab. Allem. Idem quod Li-up-gis. Lib. 4. c. 39. Warne-frid, cufus pacis.

Vide Sigonius.

Liutprand and perivaded to be kind to the See of Rome.

Sect. 4. the first offer taken most of the Towns, he passed thence into the Dukedom of Rome, and the Territories belonging to the Bishop, and laid close Siege to Perusia. The Emperor was far off, and seemed not much to regard how matters went in Italy. The Exarch had Will enough, but wanted Might to protect the Borders of his own Jurisdiction; much more to give assistance to his Neighbours at a distance. Zachary therefore saw it was incumbent upon him, seeing he could not do it by force, to try if he could drive the danger farther from himself by his Authority, and undertake another Journey, his former having been to successful.

52. He came to Rachis as he lay incamped before Perusia, and there solely laid the Law unto him, urging how unbecoming, not to say wicked, a thing it was for a Catholic Prince, and one who had been so eminent a Law-maker to invade that to which he had no right, to injure other Christians, who had never by any Misdemeanour provoked him, and especially violate the Goods and Possessions of St. Peter. He is said to have made so copious and convincing an Oration concerning Justice and Oppression, and the Rewards and Punishments of another World, that Rachis not only raised the Siege from before Perusia, but restored the places he had taken in Pentapolis: Nay, the Presence and Authority of the Bishop had such incredible influence upon him, that taking his Wife and Daughter along with him, he must needs the following year go to visit him at Rome, where he took Order from the hands of Zachary, and became a Monk in the Monastery of St. Benedict at Cassinum; his Wife and Daughter bestowing themselves in a Nunnery not far off, of their own founding. Thus Zachary made Monks of Kings much at the same time, one at his own desire, and another fore against his will, at the Suggestion and Importunity of others; one by his own Renunciation, and another at the ambitious sollicitation of other persons: For this very year, as Sigonius A. D. 750. reckons, did he by his Authority declare Chilperick King of the Franks, to be no King, and Pipin the Major of the Palace to enjoy the Title, as well as the Power; after which Chilperick was deposed, and thrust into a Monastery. But Rachis having thus outed himself after he had reigned about six years, the Lombards meeting together chose Aistulf his Brother to succeed him, a man as fit for the place as any, both in respect of his Wisdom and Courage. Yet in the beginning of his Reign he followed the footsteps of his Brother, preferring Peace before Martial Actions, and was persuaded by Stephen the Bishop of Rome, to enter into a League with his Church for forty years: No sooner had he taken upon him a Royal Crown, but Anselme the Duke of Forum Julii, whose Sister Gisela he had married, renounced his Ducal Coronet, and entered into a Monastery; into whose place Peter the Son of Munichis was preferred.

53. But Aistulf having settled well his matters, in the space of two years, had then as restless a fit upon him as Luitprand or Rachis his Predecessors, and as violent a passion for enlarging his Dominion. After the example of Luitprand he resolved to set first upon the Exarchate, because he thought Constantine the Emperor did not much concern himself with the Affairs of Europe, and if he should, he could least do it at this time when he was engaged in another War, and all Greece and Asia were miserably wasted by a raging Pestilence. With greater preparations than ever formerly had been made he marched to Ravenna, and with all the strength the Lombard Kingdom could afford, set upon it. Eutychius who was still Exarch there made all the resistance he possibly could, arming the Townsmen, opposing force to force, and stratagem to stratagem, till seeing the Town exhausted and no hope of any succours from abroad, he resolved to yield, and without any hope of recovering the place as formerly, withdrew himself into Greece. The Head of the Exarchate or Metropolis being thus taken, all the inferior Members easily were reduced to the same condition, together with Pentapolis. So here ends this Government of the Exarchs, or Lieutenants of the Emperors which had preserved, in an eminent height of lustre and dignity, a few and representation of the ancient Roman Empire, for near two hundred years, from the time that Narjes left his Employment. And here doth the constant Domination or Empire of Ravenna receive its period, which began at such time as A. D. 753. Honorius removed his Seat from Rome to this City.

54. Now did the Kingdom of the Lombards comprehend all Italy, Rome onely, and, the Roman or Pontifical Dominions excepted. Aistulf being Master of the Exarchate and Pentapolis, notwithstanding the League made with Stephen, grudging that so good a share of the Country should be kept from him, and easily made himself believe he had a Title to it, seeing the Exarch formerly had Authority as well over the Romans as others, and how they came to be absolved from their their obedience to the Emperor, whose Successor by right of War he was, he could not well see; notwithstanding the Heresie that had been laid to the charge of Leo, and the pretended power challenged by Gregory and his Successors of disposing of other mens Estates. In the fourth month therefore after the making of the League he entered with an Army the Territories of Narnia, which Town he presently took, and thence sent to the Bishop to let him know that he would by Arms reduce their Country and City to his absolute obedience, except they would yield to pay him a yearly tribute of a golden Solidus for every Head. The Bishop being extremely startled at the Message, sent two Abbots of good Report back to him, to put him in mind of the League he had lately made, and by all Arguments and Persuasions to move him not to commit so perfidious, and otherwise wicked an act as he was about; and besides they went not empty handed: but the King rejected both the Messengers and their Presents. Stephen upon the first Irruption made by Aistulf into the Exarchate had dispatched away his Letters to Constantine to let him know what the Lombard designed, and to remonstrate to him how pernicious it would be to his Empire, and how great a blot would lye upon his memory to all posterity if he suffered these Dominions in Italy to be lost. The year after came John a Silentiary with Letters from the Emperor, written both to the King and the Bishop, whom Stephen sent away with his own Brother Paul to Aistulf, who then wintered at Ravenna, joyning with Constantine in this request, that he would restore such Places as he had already taken, and remove the danger from those which had reason to apprehend an impending mischief.

55. To this he onely said, that he would return answer to the Emperor by an Ambassador of his own, which the Bishop understanding, sent to Constantine the second time, to let him know that Intreaties would do nothing, and that therefore he was obliged in honour, by virtue of the Dignity which he bore, with Arms and Force to reduce the proud Lombard into order. No sooner were the Messengers dispatched, but Aistulf was in the Bowels of the Roman Territories, which he wasted with Fire and Sword, took their Towns, led away the Inhabitants into Captivity, and now at length removed to the City it self, where he denounced Ruine and Servitude, both to the Romans and their Prelates, except they would yield up both their Cities and their own Persons into his Power. The Bishop in so great a strait, after his Prayers made, bethought himself of Foreign Aid, forasmuch as there was none could be hoped for out of Italy. He remembered the obligations which Zachary his Predecessor had put upon Pipin the new King of the Franks, by procuring him no less than the Kingdom, at least it was believed that it came by his means. He chose out a trusty servant, who in the habit of a stranger escaped by the Lombards and got to Pipin, with this Errand, "That the Bishop would gladly meet him in some safe and convenient place, but seeing he was besieged and could not come at him, he desired he would send his Ambassadors to procure him liberty to come to his presence. Pipin was very willing to pleasure him, not so much out of gratitude to his See, for what Zachary had done (by whose authority and reputation the deposition of Chilperick, a thing not to be believed had been made just and lawful, though he had nothing committed which deserved so great a censure, and the fault was not his that was objected against him) as in foresight to serve himself of this present Pope in the behalf of his two Sons, Charles and Carloman, to settle the Succession upon them. Glad of such an occasion, he sent a Duke and an Abbot on the Embassy, who met with John the Silentiary, returned back with the Bishops Messengers from Constantinople, and joyning with him obtained leave for Stephen to come forth of the City. On the twenty second of October, the seventh Indiction he came forth, and with the Ambassadors took the way for Parvia, to which when he approached, Aistulf sent a Message to him, requiring that he should not ask of him Ravenna, or the Exarchate, or any thing which had been taken by the Lombards, "yet not affrighted he ceased not to importune him to restore what he had unjustly got from other men, and particularly Ravenna the Seat of the Empire in Italy; which the very Barbarous Alboin and Authair had spared, lest he should be branded by Posterity, with more odious Epithetes than those of Heathen and Heretic. The Ambassadors of Constantine made the same demand, but Aistulf was deaf to all their charmes, and very unwillingly, as he had reason, permitted the Bishop to go for France.

The Bishop of Rome goes into France.

56. On the fourteenth of November he set forward toward the Alps, and coming to Pipin, easily prevailed with him to undertake a War with the Lombard Makes War on the Bishop of Reims Towns.

Persuaded by the Bishop he restores all, And turns Monk.

His Brother Aistulf made King.

Falls upon Ravenna.

Which being taken,

The Exarchate falls.

Aistulf invades the Roman Territories.

Sect. 4.

SECT. 4. hard for the Church, and the Redemption of the Exarchate; and because one good turn requires another he was prevailed with to stay till Winter was over, and the Army could be ready to march, and in the mean time to anoint Kings of France, Charles and Carloman, the more effectually to recommend them to the People. Aistulf all this while as a Man unconcerned about War, applied himself vigorously to the Affairs of Peace, making another Amendment of the Edict or Body of Laws formerly published, and so oft amended by his Predecessors. "In the Preface he signifieth, that having seriously weighed what had been done by them; he found some things wanting, which defect was the Original of great Errors. Therefore in the fifth Year of his most happy Reign, in the Name of God, on the first day of March, the seventh Indiction; having called together his Judges from the several Parts of his Kingdom, he caused to be affixed to the Leaves of the Edict, what seemed just to his Excellency, and agreeable to the mind of the Lord. The Bishop of Rome, being all this while in France, fell sick, and therefore the Expedition was put off till the Month of August, wherein he anointed Pipin, his Wife and both their Sons. Then in Order to his Return, finding these Kings, and their Subjects sufficiently propense to gratifie him, whereas at his first coming he had so worded it, that Pipin understood the Exarchate was to be restored to the Commonwealth or Empire, now making use of his time he turned his Tale, and though he had so much preached the Doctrine of Restitution to the right Owners, unto Aistulf; he contended that neither the Exarchate nor Pentapolis was to be restored to the Emperour, for this reason, because Constantine was unworthy to have any thing to doe in Italy, who had forsaken it, and exercised open Enmity with the Church. If so be Pipin would discharge the Duty of a gratefull Man, or consult his Soules Health, or give any reward to the Bishop for the danger he had undergone, and the pains he had taken for the good of Italy and the Church, he should grant both the Countries to St. Peter. He so prevailed upon Pipin, that he openly promised, that in case it pleased God to make him victorious over the Lombards, to obtain the Remission of his Sins, he would take away the Exarchate, and Pentapolis from the Commonwealth of Rome, and deliver them to St. Peter, and his Successors, to be possessed by them for ever. This he caused the Clerk to record, and confirmed it farther by his own Oath, and the Oaths of his two Sons, Charles and Carloman then present.

57. During the Preparations for War, we are told that Aistulf was once and again importuned, and with great gifts allured to surrender the Cities; but when neither gifts nor intreaties would prevail, in the eighth Indiction, Pipin caused his Armies to begin their march through the Territories of Vienna. Now again it pleased the Bishop out of his Abhorrence of the Effusion of Blood, and hope that he might by the report of so great an Army be frightened into a Compliance, to send once more to Aistulf, to invite him to doe by fair means, what else he should be compelled. By the Ambassadors of Pipin he sent his Letters, wherein by the Holy Mysteries, and the dreadfull day of Judgment it self, he besought him that peaceably and without blood, he would restore what he had taken to the Holy Church, and the Commonwealth of the Romans. This he obstinately again refused to doe, adding Threats both against Stephen, Pipin, and his Followers. Pipin then proceeding towards Italy, sent a Party to the Alpes, to seize on the Straits, and secure his Passage, which Aistulf understanding, and despising the Franks for their Number, with a Multitude of his Lombards he hastened thither, and very confidently fell upon them; but the Franks having the Advantage of the Ground, and being a Party of choice Men picked out, so warmly received him, that they made great slaughter of his Men, which he not enduring is said to have ran away to Pavia, there to abide the Storm that was coming upon him. Pipin finding the Passage clear, marched on without any Molestation, and with the Accidents usually accompanying such Invasions, came and fate down before Pavia, whence perceiving that the King would not stir, he harassed the Countrey round about, and made his siege as strait as could be. Aistulf seeing what advantage the other had against him, within a short space thought it best to come to a Treaty, wherein it was agreed, that by a corporal Oath he should engage to restore the Exarchate with Pentapolis, and whatsoever other Places he had taken, and for farther Confirmation hereof, give up forty Hostages which were to be sent into France. This done, Pipin, though in the middle of Winter, returned back into his own Countrey, and Stephen the Bishop with great Joy and Expectation to his See.

58. They

SECT. 4. 58. They being returned and the Tempest quite blown over, Aistulf repented of what he had done, and was so far from delivering up the Places, that gathering an Army together at Ravenna, he brake into the Roman Territories, and doing therein all violence possible came before the City, having seized on Narnia, which not long before he had restored. He thought that Pipin, having already discharged the Duty of a Friend, would no more pass over the Alpes in behalf of the Bishop; who, having quite other thoughts, sent away his Messengers by Sea, that they might have a more safe and speedy passage, by all things sacred conjuring the King, that he would make good what he had promised to St. Peter. Pipin in great wrath denounces War afresh, and for that purpose makes new Levies, which Aistulf hearing and surprized with the News, after three Months siege leaves Rome, and hurries away to defend his own Quarters. It was now Autumn, when Pipin being in a readiness began his march, and passing the Alpes with little Difficulty, came and besieged Aistulf in Pavia, as formerly. It was not yet known at Rome, that he had passed the Mountains, where were arrived from the Emperour two Ambassadors, George a Protonotary and John the Silentary, who were to deal with Pipin about restoring the Exarchate and Pentapolis to the Empire; for they had heard at Constantinople, how the Roman Bishop had been tampering about them. From Rome they freight departed for Marfeilles, where being arrived, they had News of Pipin's being in the Territories of the Lombards. Stephen had also sent his Messengers with them, whom, because they might probably hinder his business, George caused his Fellow John there by some Arts to detain, and he went before to Pavia, where having Audience of Pipin, he delivered his Message as advantageously as he could. But Pipin with the greatest Piety (so the Bishops Favourers write) answered, that by no humane Rewards he was induced to doe what he did, but inflamed with a desire of procuring the Favour of Almighty God, he had received the Church of Rome into his Protection, perfwading himself it was for the Health of his Soul, and would avail for the Remission of his Sins. In case he should recover the Exarchate and Pentapolis, he had sworn to deliver them to St. Peter, and his Successors; and by no reasons or Arguments whatsoever would be drawn from being as good as his word, and discharging his Duty.

59. In the mean time Aistulf was closely besieged, and so much straitened, that fearing the Effects of a Storm, he sent out to Pipin his Plenipotentiaries to make an Agreement, who offered not onely to restore the Exarchate and Pentapolis, but Comacini also to redeem his Peace. Pipin accepted of their Proposals, and the Agreement was ratified by Oaths, and giving up of new Hostages; which done, Pipin again surrendered the Exarchate and Pentapolis to St. Peter, and his Successors to be held by them for ever, and commanded Instruments of the Donation to be drawn accordingly. Leaving Fulrade the Abbat to receive all agreed on from Aistulf, and to put them into the Bishop's Hands; he shortly after departed into France. Fulrade going with the Commissioners of Aistulf, received all the Cities of the Exarchate and Pentapolis from their Hands, except Ferraria, Faventia and Caballum, and having from every one of them Hostages, he took along with him to Rome the Principal Inhabitants, and he laid up the Keys of the several Cities together with the Instruments of the Donation in the Consecration of St. Peter. Now to understand these matters more clearly, the Reader may know, that in the Exarchate were comprised these Cities: Ravenna, Bononia, Imola, Faventia, Forum Popilii, Forum Livii, Casena, Bobium, Ferraria, Comacini, Adria, Ficolae and Gabellum. Pentapolis contained these: Ariminum, Pisaurum, Concha, Fanum, Senogallia, Ancona, Auximum, Humanana, Aethum, Forum Sempronii, Mons Feretri, Urbium, the Balneusian Territory, Calles, Lucelli and Eugubium, with the Forts and Territories to these Cities belonging, all which had afterward the Name of the Marquitate of Ancona. But thus the Bishop of Rome became possessed of other Mens Goods, the Reader sees how, and for what Reasons the Emperour the Right owner was deprived, by what Arts and Devices is also manifest. Stephen committed the Government of Ravenna to the Arch-bishop, and the Tribunes of the City, whereupon the Arch-bishop afterward wrote himself Exarch. As for Aistulf who was but justly compelled to surrender, having had as little right to these Estates as he who now possessed them; we are told that the following year he spent in Consultations how to break the Agreement, and toward the end of it, being in hunting either thrown by his Horse, or as others were wounded by a wild Boar died within a few days after, whose Actions we might possibly have had related with more favourable Circumstances, had either Aistulf again for fear of Pipin quits Rome.

Proxima est exercitum trans Alpes restitutum, et dissolutum, si ultra natis, per vim Exarchatus & cetera. loca prius Reip. restituerentur. Signo de Reg. Italiae. lib. 3. p. 126.

Né ea redderetur Imp. commendat. Supra Constantium propter desertam Italiam & cetera. cum Ecclesia esset, qui rem in Italia possideret. Quid si Pipinus aut grati hominis officium prestat, aut, &c. p. 127.

And gives up the Exarchate and Pentapolis to the Bishop.

The Cities of the Exarchate. Of Pentapolis.

Aistulf dies.

SECT. 4.

SECT. 4. Paul the Deacon continued his History so far, or any other of his Nation written his Life, or any indifferent Pen had transmitted these Revolutions to Posterity. But Paul living in the time of Charles the Great, the Son of Pipin, when it was a Crime to write any thing well though truth of the Lombards, (for looters in these cases of Conquest have not leave to talk) durst not burn his fingers by meddling with matters of so late concernment; and therefore wisely left off where these things began, which brought destruction to the Lombard Kingdom. His Countrymen for the same Reason were all silent. They only were Publishers of these transactions, who were joyned both in their Affections and Interests with the Prevalent Party.

Desiderius makes himself king.

60. Now was Aistulf dead, and none left to whom the Kingdom by right of Succession or Inheritance appertained. Therefore Desiderius, who had been his Comes Stabell, or Master of the Horse, as also promoted to the Dukedom of Tuscia, set up for himself by the favour and assistance of the People of that Country. Rachis was still living, and so enraged at his Exaltation, that he exchanged his holy Zeal for Indignation, and purposed to leave acting the part of a Monk, and resume his former dress of Royalty; and he wanted not either Advisers or Assenters to such an Undertaking, the Inhabitants of Liguria, Emilia and Venetia, flocking to him. Desiderius hereat startled, as being in danger, not only to miss of the Kingdom, but to loose his Dukedom too, took the right course to prevent both the one and the other: He betook himself to Stephen the Roman Bishop, and bargained with him to restore Faventia, Calallum and Ferraria, which Aistulf had still kept in his hands, if either by his Arms or Authority he could maintain him in his possession of the Kingdom. The Bishop having communicated the matter to Fulrade, the Abbat, resolved to attempt the thing, and sending him with his Brother Paul into Etruria, made a firm League and Alliance with Desiderius, and admonished Rachis now the Monk, to hold him to his present course of life, and not disturb him whom he had named King and taken for his Ally and Confederate. And if all should fail, Fulrade had got an Army of Franks and Romans together, to dispute the Controversie by dint of Sword. So Rachis gave over his Enterprize, and therewith the Lombards of his Party being discouraged, Desiderius enjoyed what he had got; and going to Pavia, where he solemnly entred upon the Government, he restored Faventia, Calallum and Ferraria, to the Church, according to Articles. Not long after died Stephen on the twenty fifth of April, a man ever to be had in remembrance by his Successors, for his enriching his See with the goodly Possessions of the Exarchate and Pentapolis, to be compared (as Sigonius writes) with Gregory, surnamed Dialogus, who procured for it the Duchy of Rome.

61. Paul his Brother succeeded him, and renewed the League made with Desiderius, who, in the third year of his Reign, took his Son Adalgise to be his Partner in the Kingdom. Gisulf the Duke of Beneventum dying, he bestowed the Duchy on Agarisme, who had married his Daughter Adelperga. For several years he bore himself with great respect to the Roman Church, and with a mind so devoted for Religious matters, that his own Daughter Ausilberga, he made Abess of an Abby of his own founding, and otherwise he shewed himself a great Patron of that Profession. Thus he continued for some ten years, and then they tell us he began to shew himself another man; as if Ambition had been hereditary to these Lombard Kings. Paul the Bishop dying, he caused a Schism to be made by the illegal promotion of one Constantine, and when this Device was frustrated by the means of Christopher the Primericus (or Assessor to the Bishop, as was the Secundicerius also, they sitting next to the Duke of the City) who to remove the Schism caused Stephen the Third to be Canonically chosen, he himself went to Rome under a shew of Devotion, and there dealt with Astaria the Duke of the City, to accuse Christopher and his Son the Secundicerius of some feigned Crime, and then having seized and made them away, to imprison or drive thence the most Eminent Citizens, and so to tame the rest, as that they should not have courage to attempt any considerable matter: At the Instance of Bertrade Wife to the late Pipin of France, he gave his Daughter to Carloman one of her Sons, or rather two of his Daughters to her two Sons, for both are affirmed to have married this way. About two years after Carloman died, whose Widow Berta finding her self and young Sons not treated after the best fashion by Charles his Brother, they came into Italy to her Father, who was vehemently incensed against Charles, for putting away his other Daughter; and, desirous to imbrace any occasion of revenge, purposed to get the Boys Consecrated Kings by the

the new Roman Bishop. One of these things he hoped would follow: Either he should thereby procure an ill understanding betwixt Charles and the Bishop, or some Tumults and Stirs in France, which would present him with a fit opportunity of conquering Rome and all Italy.

62. But not knowing how Adrian, at present Pope, stood affected, he would first try him, whether he would renew the League. He answered, he was willing to have all Christians his Friends, and the Lombards amongst the rest, upon those terms, whereon their Predecessours had founded their Alliance; but as for Desiderius, he had learnt so much of his falshens from Stephen, who had lately occupied that See, that he could not trust him; and when the Ambassadors promised with Oath, that he should give him full satisfaction; he said, that he would return Answer by Messengers of his own. Desiderius judging by this Reply, that he was not to be trusted, would get by force what he could not obtain by Intreaties; and when Adrian had not sate two full Months, he brake in-bray to the Exarchate, where he speedily took Ferraria, Comacini and Faventia; making open shew that he would attack Ravenna itself. Adrian having notice sent order to his Messengers that were on their way, as far as Perusium, to make demand of the places lately taken. The King answered, that if the Bishop would come to him he should command him; which he refusing to do, he in great wrath invaded Pentapolis; where he wasted the Country belonging to Senogallia, Assium, Monferreri, Orbinum, Eugubium, and other Cities, killing the principal Inhabitants of Bleda, who were gone out to reap their Corn, and carrying away much booty and Captives. Otricoli also, within the Borders of Rome, underwent the same and worse fortune. Hereupon the Bishop sent to him the Abbat of St. Vincent, with twenty Monks of great Reputation for their Sanctity, who coming to Pavia cast themselves at his feet, and besought him with many tears, to give over those violent courses, and restore such Places as he had taken from the Church. To them he answered as before, that he would do both if Adrian would come to him.

63. To this purpose he sent Ambassadors of his own, who desired a meeting. Adrian made a solemn and religious Protestation, that if he would but restore the Towns of St. Peter, he would either give him a meeting at Rome, or where else he pleased, and consult with him for the quiet and Repose of Italy; and if he did not, it should be lawful for him to re-invade the Places at his pleasure. But in case he would not restore them, he would never see his face, and he sent two to receive the Cities; but having protested the same, they received the same Answer as before. After their return others were sent, whom he refused to see, and with great threats dismissed, that he would bring his Army before Rome. Adrian then looking for extremity, caused the City to be fortified as well as it might be, and as Stephen his Predecessor had done, resolved to advertise Charles the King of the Franks, in what estate he was, and to desire his assistance. "He sent one Peter" by Sea to intreat him that, after the Example of his Father and Grandfather, he "would succour the Church now in distress, and the City of Rome, which was "threatened with destruction. The cause of so wicked an undertaking he told him "was palpable, to compel him to anoint the Sons of Carloman, which how it "stood with his Concernments he left it to him in his wisdom to judge. To this Crimination Desiderius answered in an Edict which he sent to Grimoald the Count of Viterbium, wherein he shewed he had well deserved of Italy, "contrary to what Adrian had laid to his charge. He reckons up many places built and repaired by him, and concludes, that this is not to destroy Etruria, as Adrian accuseth him, who refuseth Peace offered by him. He commands therefore Grimoald, that so long as Peace continueth doubtfull, he order all the Souldiers of Tuscia to be in Arms, and to furnish them with Provisions and Pay plentifully, that they may not only be ready to receive an Enemy, but prepared also to make an Invasion. And he requires him not to burthen the People with new Exactions.

64. Adrian his Messenger got safe to Charles, and easily obtained a promise to stand by his Master in all his difficulties whatsoever; for Charles remembered what advantages his Ancestors had got by adhering to the Church of Rome, and had no reason to hope less than any of them, considering how the World went at this time. He sent to Desiderius requiring him to restore to the Bishop what was belonging to him, who promised to give him full satisfaction; but he was resolved to try another course. Taking his Son Adalgise along with him, with his Daughter Berta and her Sons, in a peaceable manner he went towards Rome, under pretence of paying a Vow at the Sepulchres of the Apostles, which when he

SECT. 4.

* Not enim non sumus Tuscia destruere ne nos apud Gallos ac-cusar Hadrianus Papa, nam in Tuscia edi-ficavimus à fundamentis, Ec. Vide Sigonium, p. 138.
Hic itaque non est Etru-riam destruer-e, ne nos arguas Hadrianum, qui pacem ul-trà à nobis obtulit respondē; quare itibi Grimoaldē Praefecte Vi-terbiensis precipimus, &c.

Seçt. 4. came as far as Spoleum, he caused to be signified to the Bishop. Adrian caused the Walls and Gates to be strictly guarded, forbidding he should have any entrance, and the Churches of St. Peter and St. Paul without the Walls, to be fast locked and barred up; which notwithstanding, when he proceeded on his way, he sent to him as he lay at Interamna, denouncing unto him by all things sacred, that without his leave he should not set his foot within the Roman Territories. He had before composed a Song of heavy Curles against him, his Family, and those that accompanied him in his Journey. But this Denunciation caused him to go back, though with an angry and revengefull mind. For now came Ambassadors from Charles to see whether he had satisfied the Bishop, who at their return sent some of his own back with them, and ordered them to call upon Desiderius at Pavia, where they had as cool welcome, and as resolute an Answer, as those that had been before them. Proceeding then in their Journey, they solicited Charles for help to recover the Cities, which to obtain by fair means, he is said, once more to have sent to Desiderius, offering him fourteen thousand Soldi to satisfy the Bishops pretensions, but to no purpose; resolving therefore to force him to it for nothing, he call'd an Assembly of his Franks, and related to them the whole matter. There was none present who did not load Desiderius with Invectives, and give his Vote for sending speedy relief to the Church. Then was the War resolved on, and Levies of Souldiers were made greater for number, and with more care and accurateness than ever formerly had been known, which clearly signified to any intelligent Persons, that how specious soever their pretences were, the Franks buckled themselves to this Expedition, not so much for the relief of the Church, as to put a Period to the Kingdom of the Lombards.

65. The whole Army coming to the Rendezvous at Geneva, Charles divided it into two Parties, whereof the one he committed to the Conduct of his Uncle Bernard, and the other he led himself another way. Desiderius having certain Intelligence of his Motions, sent some Troops with speed, to make good the Straits, then did he gather out of the Dukedoms of Forum Julij, Beneventum, Spoleum, Etruria, and his whole Kingdom, a vast Army, which he ordered to march to Augusta and Taurinum, to give Charles Battel, in case he should descend from the Mountains. Charles drawing nigh the Alpes, once more (they say) sent to him, offering him the same Sum of Money as formerly, and requiring but the Sons of his Judges, as Hostages, for delivery of the Towns, but he gave the same resolute Answer; which received, the Franks continued their March till they came to the Straits, which they found seized by the Lombards. Charles perceiving they stop'd the Passage, sent a Party over the Mountains another way, to come upon the back of Desiderius, which Device took very well; for it put the King into such a fright, that by Night he left his Camp and ran away, which Charles understanding, followed him as fast as he might, and in the pursuit killed many of his followers. But here we arrive at a piece of difficulty, our Authours not agreeing amongst themselves concerning what followed, though as we said, being of the contrary Party, they are no ways favourable to the poor Lombards who had no Writers to discover their partiality. One saith that a great Battel was now fought in a Field lying betwixt Novaria and Papia, where Desiderius received a great Overthrow, and thence the place had the name of Mortaria. Others will have Desiderius, without giving Battel, to have fled (scarcely looking behind him all the way) to Pavia, where he shut himself up, having strongly fortified the City. His Son Adulgis, with Berta and her Children, he sent to Verona, the second place for strength and convenience in the Kingdom.

66. Before such time as Desiderius went towards the Alpes, we are told that some of his Subjects of Spoleum, and of the Reatinens, despairing of his Success, went to Rome, and put themselves into the hands of the Bishop, whence followed some out of every City (like good Subjects doubtless) and in St. Peter's Church, protesting themselves at his feet, swore perpetual Fidelity and Obedience to the Roman Church, cutting their Beards and their Hair after the fashion of the place. But after it was once noised that Desiderius was beaten back from the Straits, all the rest, in a manner, fled to Rome; where binding themselves with the same Oath, they were kindly entertained. The Bishop using moderation, with the approbation of the Inhabitants, made Hildebrand Duke of Spoleum; and to such Lombards as would dwell at Rome, he gave a place to Inhabit, which from them received the Name of Lombard-street. The Example of those of Spoleum, was followed by those of the Firmani, those of Ancimum and Ancona, with the Citizens of the Castle of Felicitia, who cut their Hair, and surrendered themselves into the Dominion of the Church. But Charles perceiving Desiderius would not fight, besieged him close in Pavia, whither he sent for his Wife and Sons; and there in the Camp spent the former part of a sharp Winter, till Christmas was over. The Solemnity being past, he committed the Siege to the care of his Uncle Bernard, and went himself and beleagured Verona, where Adulgis despairing of holding out, fled, and went into Greece; after whose departure the Inhabitants quickly surrendered the place, and therein Berta and her Sons, into the hands of Charles, who were told, sent them into France, and treated them very honourably; and well he might, considering what an Interest they had in that Country. Verona being gone, upon Summons the rest of the Cities beyond the Poe, yielded themselves to the Conquerour, who then returned and reinforced the Siege of Pavia. Easter now began to approach, the Feast whereof Charles had a great desire to celebrate at Rome with the Bishop. Leaving the Siege to be carried on by Bernard, with a splendid Train he took his way thither, and being honourably received in every place he passed, on Easters Eve he arrived at the City.

67. Adrian conceived himself obliged in the most honourable way he could, to receive a King so great, who had done so mighty matters for the Church, and was in a fair way to effect more. First, all the Judges went out and received him with Banners thirty Miles from the City. A Mile off all the Schools met him, the Children bearing in their hands the Branches of Palms and Olives, and singing out his Commendations. The Rere was brought up by many Cross-bearers, as it was the Custom of old for Exarchs and Patriarchs to be received. The Bishop himself early in the morning, with all the Clergy and People, went to the Vatican Church, where sitting with his Clergy upon the Steps, he received him. Charles, as soon as he saw the Crosses, alighted from his Horse, and with his Judges went the rest of the way on foot, till he came to the Steps, to every of which (you must know) giving a kiss, he mounted up to the Bishop, by whom being lovingly received, after mutual Imbraces and Congratulatory Speeches, he was brought into the Church, all the Clergy singing, and calling him the Author of the Publick safety and Liberty, and merrily acclaiming, Blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord. Afterward with a Train of Bishops, Abbats, and the Followers of Charles, they came to the Confession, where prostrate on the ground, they rendred thanks to God and St. Peter for so great a Victory; which done, the King desired he might go into the City to perform a Vow, and visit the Churches, which the Bishop permitted; each having first sworn over the Holy Body of the Apostle, that he intended no harm to the other. First, he went to our Saviour's Church in the Laterane; where seeing the Bishop administer Baptism, after a little stay, he returned to the Vatican. The day following being Easter day, he made a solemn Entry into the City, the second time being received by the Judges and the Roman Souldiers, and came to the Church of St. Mary ad Praesepe, where after Service he dined with Adrian in the Laterane. On the third day in the Vatican after Prayers, the Bishop caused solemn thanks to be given him in an Oration. Herein the kindnesses of Pipin and Martell to the Roman Church were commemorated; the great Piety, Faith and Fortitude of the Family were gloriously set forth, and therewith was joyed great Commendations of the whole Nation. It was told the Auditors that Charles (not in the least degenerating from the worth of his Ancestours) was come with a mighty Army against the Enemies of the Church; and by the help of God, had been as prosperous as he had been ready to undertake the work. And it was to be hoped, that within few days all Italy would have cause to congratulate his complete Victory, as now both Italy and the Church gave him hearty thanks for what he had already performed.

68. On the fourth day Charles was present at Service in the Church of St. Paul. On the fifth the Bishop procured him to meet him in the Palace of the Patican, where in the presence of their Judges he desired him to make good what Pipin his Father, he himself, and his Brother Carloman had engaged to Stephen at Carificum. Hereupon Charles caused the Instruments of the Engagement to be read, afterward with his Judges approved them, they containing a Grant of the Exarchate and Pentapolis. Iterius his Secretary he commanded to add a new Grant, and therein to add Corfica, Sardinia, Sicily, the Territory of Sabinum, the Dukedoms of Spoleum and Tuscia, with the Revenues paid formerly for these Dukedoms

Charles makes a new Donation to the See of Rome.

Seçt. 4

Sect. 4. to the Lombard Kings; always excepted the Royal Prerogative and Authority, over these Dukedoms. The Instruments of this Donation being signed with his own hand, and attested by the Bishops, Abbats, and his Secretaries, he deposed upon the Altar of St. Peter, and in the Consecration, as Monuments in time to come, binding by Oath himself and his to the observance of them; and took a Copy of them along with him. For this Donation the Testimony of Anastasius the Popes Library-keeper is produced, an Epistle of Adrian himself to Constantine the Emperour and his Empress Irene, and the Instruments of Ludowick the Son of Charles, wherein it is more fully expressed, and whence it appears that the Lombard Dukedom of Tuscia, comprehended the Castle of Felicitas, Orbitum, Bal-neoregium, Ferenti Castrum, Viterbium, Marchia Tuscana, Populonium, Soanen and Roselle. These things thus appointed, when Charles had made a stay of eight days in Rome, and in this space satisfied the desires of the Church-men as well as his own Curiosity, he returned to the Camp at Pavia.

Desiderius delivers up himself and all he hath to Charles.

The Kingdom of the Lombards ends.

69. Here Desiderius, in a most fortified City, resolved to hold out, knowing that all the Kingdom would be lost with it, and if it were safe the rest might easily be recovered. Though there was small hope of saving the place, or carrying it by any stratagem, yet the reasons that made Desiderius resolved on one side, made Charles as peremptory on the other, resolving not to raise the Siege till he should have some good account of it. But that which breaks stone Walls, broke at last the resolution of Desiderius, and broke open the Gates to the Franks, not only the Townsmen but Souldiers too, being conquered by Hunger, which being accompanied by a raging Pestilence, drew necessity upon the King, a thing too powerfull for him to withstand; so that at last he yielded up himself, his Wife and Children, and all he had into the Power of Charles. By so doing, if we believe the flourish of Sigonius, he was more famous, viz. by losing his Kingdom, than either was Alboin for beginning it, or Agilulf for reducing it into form and order, so much fame and favour did the greatness of the Conqueror procure unto him. But here was the period of the Kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, in the two hundred and sixth year after their seizing on that Country, the seven hundred and seventy fourth year of our Lord. However some Bishops of Rome have bespattered the Nation, and the success of Charles both eclipsed their glory and engaged all Pen-men on his side and the Pope's (so that this late Revolution is described to us with unworthy and improbable circumstances on the Part of Desiderius) yet were they a People very Warlike and considerable. Their Domination being barbarous and cruel at first, after they came to taste of Christian Religion grew more mild and benign: witness their good and wholesome Laws, whereby Theft, Robberies, Murders and Adultery were severely punished, and the Liberty and Property of private men most carefully provided for; witness the magnificent Churches, rich and spacious Monasteries, where-with as Monuments of their Religion they adorned that part of Italy where they had most power; the sumptuous Palaces and endowments of Bishopricks, the notable Towns they either built from the ground or repaired, the many men eminent for sanctity, which they highly cherished; and even the Bishop of Rome himself whom they greatly enriched. And though with Sigonius we conclude that Ambition, and a lust of Reigning cast them down from the Royal height of Dignity and their ancient Dominion in Italy, yet we shall conclude also that the enjoyment of other mens Rights, Success and Conquest, though they varnish over Names and Titles, to wile and sober Persons argue neither true worth, nor solid Felicity.

(Feudal law hence so called.)

70. But having lately mentioned the Laws of the Lombards, we must not dismiss them without some farther reflexions upon that Subject. They had not only written Laws purely digested and supplied by their several Princes upon occasion, but customary, whereby Lands and Possessions were held by Services. These are called Feuda or Feoda, concerning which, both as to the Etymology of the word and the original of the thing, opinions are various. Some derive the word from Faida (whence our Fovde) signifying enmity, strife, war or division, in the Tongue of the Lombards; some from the word Fedus, a League or Alliance; some from Fieri, and others from Fides or Fidelitas. Accordingly the word is variously written sometimes, (Feodum and Fendum) otherwile Feodum, and Fedum also. It properly signifies a Salary, or Stipend, and Secondly, or by way of Translation, the Lands or Territories, which by the good will and bounty of the Lord, the Vassal enjoys in the place or room of a Stipend or Salary. It seems therefore to be derived from the Saxon or Teutonic word, word, f-o, feh, or peoh, which the ancient Franks called Fe, and we at this day Fee, for fo was and is called a Salary, Stipend, or Reward. The Saxon letter D might well be changed into o, or rather bade or bod might be added, which in Saxon signifies a State, Order, or Condition. So might it be called Fesdum from peohas or peohos, as that which was possessed in the quality or condition of Reward or Stipend. So our Saxon Ancestours called the Military Order, enýghre-has, as we at this day Knight-hood, and many other things in like manner, as we now say Father-hood, Child-hood, Man-hood, and the like.

71. Whencesoever the word had its Original, the Original of the thing hath been as much controverted; some derive it from the Laws and Customs of the Romans, from their Patrons and Clients; it being the custom from the time of Romulus for Plebeians to make choice of certain Patritians for their Patrons to protect them, as we have formerly shewn out of Dionysius, they being to serve them with their lives and fortunes upon occasion. In imitation of them the Provincials, and the Associates of the People of Rome had their Patrons in the Senate. Others will have the Stipends of the Roman Souldiers in the Civil Law called Militiæ to have resembled these Feuda, and some compare the Coloni Gleba ascripti, to these Vassals and Feudataries. But their opinion most resembles the truth, who in this point of the Romans, think the Feuda to have begun under Alexander Severus, at least under Constantine the Great. For Severus, as Lampridius the Historian informeth us, to the Captains and Souldiers of the Limits, gave those grounds that had been taken from the Enemy to be possessed by their Heirs, in case they served in the Wars, wisely concluding that they would be more carefull and industrious to defend their own; which Constantine perceiving not to have been practised without reason, ordered that these grounds should pass also to the Heir called Hæres Paganus, the more to oblige his Souldiers to him. But all these Remarks conclude nothing as to the Nature of the Feuda, as they are now received amongst the several Nations, being constituted in a moveable thing, or such as come near thereto, the use and Title Dominium whereof, is only granted to the Client, but the Propriety or direct Dominion, necessarily remains in the Granter and his Heirs, and besides that Fidelity which the Client by oath promiseth to his Patron (from which the one is called Dominus, and the other Fidelis) or Lord, is reserved a certain Jurisdiction over the Client or Vassal in case he acted or omitted any thing contrary to their Agreement, and the Nature of the Action of a Feudum, of which there is nothing to be found either in the Laws or Customs of the Romans. A Person very eminent in his Profession writes, that he had looked over all Roman Treaties, and those Books also which have been written of these Feuda, and from them all (a very few only excepted) he pronounces that the Feuda were utterly unknown to the Roman Laws, and not the least Footsteps of them are to be found in that of Justinian, but that they rose up from the Manners and Customs of other Nations after the Roman Empire was ruined in the West.

They had their Original from the Lombards.

72. But of what Nations it is farther controverted. The same learned Person is concerned for the Honour of his own, and besides him some few others contend that the Feuda were introduced by the Kings of the Franks, before the Domination of the Lombards in Italy. It appears indeed from Gregory Turonensis and others, that there were Dukes and Counts which held certain Territories, and that there were Leudes which are interpreted Vassals. But yet from the Nature of the Offices of these Dukes and Counts, can nothing certain be concluded to make them Feuda; so uncertain was their Tenure and Succession therein, and some Image or Resemblance there might be of these Feudataries, but no perfect Idea of these Leudes. The general opinion of Authors is that the Feuda had their Original from the Lombard Kings in Italy, who, as the Reader may discover by what we have written, were wont to grant Cities, Towns and Territories to Dukes and Captains to use and enjoy, the direct Dominion ever reserved to themselves. For farther Confirmation hereof, and in answer to what is objected on the French Part, there is one who proves, that the greatest part of the Customs, and most of the words which the French themselves use about these Feuda, were taken from the Lombards. The words are Teutonic, and favour not only of the German Tongue, but its most ancient Dialect or the old Saxon; whence, and because the Lombards were a Teutonic Nation, some will have the first Original of Feuda to have been in Germany it self, and they fanstie they find somewhat of the Condition of Vassals in the Story of Tacitus, which he tells concerning the Comites amongst the Germans; who brought Council and Authority to the Princes

Sect. 4.

Vid. Dr. Deke, de duob. juris civilis, lib. 1. cap. 6.

Molinaus des Feud. n. 3.

Gregor. Turon. l. 8. c. 9.

Eguinarus Baro, de jure benefic. lib. 1. in pref. ad Joan. Berrand. Franc. Cancell.

Spremanni Glossar. in voc. Feudum.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 4. of the Villages, and they think this adds some force to their Conceit, that Vafal is derived by some Etymologists from the German word Gessel, by which is expressed the Latin word Comes.

73. The truth seems to be this. There was something of this sort of Service and Dependence practised by the ancient Germans, which being by all the Barbarous Teutonic Nations partly brought out of that Country, were mightily strengthened and confirmed by certain practices, which at that time the Necessity of Affairs put the Roman Emperours and other Princes upon. Severus and Constantine the Great, and after them others found it highly convenient for the Safety of their Territories, to bestow part of them upon Captains, and Souldiers as Wages, or Fees, or Rewards, and placed them upon the Borders where most danger lay, that by protecting what they now looked upon as their own, by one and the same Act they might also defend the whole Empire. Barbarous Princes taking up this custome, as highly necessary, formed it according to their own, and shaped it into a Service and Dependence suitable to their own German practices. Hence came it to pass that not only the Lombards, but in truth the Franks had some Services of this Nature, and this is to be observed, that these German Nations the nearer they were to the Romans, and the more subjected to Invasions, the more perfect and formal were these Vassalages and Services. Therefore do we hear little or nothing of Feuda amongst our Saxon Ancestours here in Britain, nor amongst the Goths in Spain. The Lombards, being nearest the Romans, learnt the fore-mentioned Custome from them, and being as in a Pit invironed with Adversaries, were put upon joining it with their own, and framing them into a German or Teutonic Model. As the Emperours of old assigned Lands to their Captains by way of Fee or Stipend, and to protect the Borders, so did they. But they added a peculiar Oath of Fidelity and Homage, and not only Grounds upon the Limits in the Mouth of Danger, but even all their Countrey they distributed to be held by Fidelity and Services, as we see by the many Dukedoms into which it was divided. And mutual at last, by practice and continuance, began the Obligations of Lord and Vassal. At first it was in the Power of the Lord to take away what he had granted in Feudo when he pleased. Afterward it was to be certain to the Vassal for a Year, and a Year only, and at length the Possession was extended to the Term of Life. But his Posterity being still unprovided for, it was brought down to one of his Sons, on whom the Lord would please to confer it, and at last came to be distributed equally amongst them all.

74. Afterwards Conradus Salicus the Emperour, in the Year 1025, going to Rome to take the Crown from the Hands of John, the twentieth, his Vassals petitioned him to exact by a Law, that the Feoda might descend to Grandsons, and that a Brother or his Son might succeed to one that died without lawful Issue, in that which had been possessed by their Father. But in case one of the Brothers received a Fee (so now will we call it) from the Hands of a Lord; he dying without a lawful Heir, his Brother could not succeed in the Fee, and although it were received in general, yet could not one succeed the other, except it was expressly by Name so provided; viz, that one dying without lawful Heirs the other should succeed, to be sure an Heir being left the other Brother should be excluded. Its farther to be understood, that a Fee or Beneficium collaterally went anciently no farther than Cousin-Germans, but in succeeding times came to be stretcht as far as the seventh Degree, and to Males in a defending Line in infinitum. And this is to be noted, that though Daughters as well as Sons succeed their Fathers, by the Laws yet they are prohibited to succeed in a Fee, as also their Sons except especial Provision be made for them. This little History of Fees is given us by the Compiler Gerard Niger, wherein is to be observed, that as to what he writes concerning their descending upon Males by a new Law in infinitum, that in France these inferior Fees, as well as Dukedoms, Counties, Baronies, and the like came to be hereditary under Hugh Capet, who began his Reign eight and thirty years before the Law made by Conradus. From this time forward Noblemen (the lesser Nobles or Gentlemen are included) from their Fees began to take Surnames to themselves, and to their Names to add de such a place, a thing so ridiculously practised in France to this day, that if a mean man that can write himself but Sieur, have five or six Sons, if he have so many little Hamlets or even Cottages erected in several Grounds, each must be denominated from one of them. In case he be not so wealthy, if he have a Mill in his Ground, a Rock in his Field, or a Meadow belonging to his Cottage, one must be called de Moulin, another de la Roche, and another des Prez, whereby you would take them for Persons of Extraordinary Extract and Revenue, Persons indeed that deserve, as Lords to impose Manners, Fashions and Language upon a World so inconsiderate.

75. But by such Degrees came Vassals to be possessed of Fees, which they lost again by many Acts of Ingratitude and Unfaithfulness, several Crimes which are not here to be related at large, but only to be touched on. As first in case after the Death of the Lord or Vassal, the Heir came not within a year and a day to swear fealty and desire Investiture. If three times being cited to the Lord's Court, to receive Investiture and swear Fealty he refused it. If he refused to perform the Services due, or renounced his Fee. In case he sold it without consent of his Lord; For so the Services due to the Lord should come to nothing, the Vassal being reduced to Want or Beggary. If he attested any other Person with other Conditions, than he himself held the Fee, or such a Vassal as was not in a Condition to serve it. If he took Holy Orders, or a Religious Vow upon him. If he acted contrary to what was expressed in his Oath of Fealty. In case he committed another Felony by betraying his fellow Vassal, so as he could not appear in Court. These Crimes or Felonies respected the Fee itself, such as follow the Lord of the Fee himself. As in case he made an Assault upon his Lord's Person, or by Sword or Poison contrived his Ruine: or by Force and Arms, upon any Castle or Town, in which his Lord or Lady resided. If in any Fight or Battle he forsook his Lord, or when it was in his Power, he freed him not from the danger of death or a Siege. If knowing any one to contrive the Assaulting, Taking, the Death or great Damage (in his Patrimony) of his Lord, he did not make him acquainted therewith, as speedily as might be. In case he turned Enemy to his Lord, or adhered to his Enemies. If he turned Accuser of his Lord, or brought him into any great danger. If he accused him, or bore witness against him. If he betrayed his Councils or Secrets. If he made him a Cuckold (Si Dominum Cuckulitaverit) and wantonly sported with his Wife. If he lay with his Daughter, his Son's Daughter, his Son's Wife; or the Sister of his Lord remaining in his House. In case he would not doe him Justice. If he committed Felony against or Cuckolded one of the Lords, of whom he was the Common Vassal, he was onely to forfeit that Part. If so be the Vassal killed his own Brother, or his Brother's Son to get the Inheritance: or betrayed his Fellow Vassal, so as he could not stand any more in Court, he should be deprived of his Benefice or Fee; but so much as this Felony was not committed against the Lord, the Fee should not fall to the Lord, but to the next Kinsman by the Father's side. If he killed the Brother of his Lord, it seemed no Felony, for he lost not his Fee. Neither indeed seems that to be Felony, properly so called, which the Lord committed against his Vassal, although it was equally punished. Nor was Felony always punished with a perpetual loss of the Fee.

76. Besides the loofing of the Fees, to which Vaffals were by thefe means obnoxious, they were alfo fubjected to many, and often very heavy Services. Firft, they fware a moft ftrict Fealty and Allegiance to their Lords, whence in fome Hiftories they are to be known by the Name of Fideles, and performed their Homage in a very humble, if not fervile manner, the forms and fafhions whereof we cannot here difcover. Upon Summons from the Lord they were obliged to arm themfelves, to follow his Standard, and ftand by him in all Dangers of the Field. Besides they were obnoxious to the payment of many Tributes, Aids or Subfidies. And when they died, their Lords were to have Cuftody of their Fees with the Gardianship, and Manage of their Heirs under Age. And from thofe that were Adult, Relief for their Conſent to enter upon the Inheritance; at leaſt in ſome places. The manner of Infeſtiture into Fees, was fo lemn and various. The Greater by delivery of a Banner; in France by ancient Cuſtome both Biſhopsricks, and all other Fees by a Ring, and a Staff, by them Rain and Baſton. Sometimes it was done by delivery of a Sword, an Inſtrument in Writing, a Clod of Earth, an Arrow, a Rod or other things. Fees were variously diſtinguiſhed, as ſome were Imperial and Regal conferred by Emperours and Kings, as, Dukedoms, Marquiſates, Counties which were held in Capite, or from the Prince, whence the Poſſeſſours were called Capitanei. Others were of a middle Nature, being conferred by theſe Capitanei to inferior Vaffals, as Barons, Valuaſſours and Caſtellani. Another fort was Military, conferred by theſe Barons, Valuaſſours and Caſtellani. Yet was not this Diſtinction ſo ſolemnly obſerved, but that the Capitanei conferred Fees, ſimply Military, and Princes as well one fort as another. There were ſeveral other forts

Lib. Feud.
passim & vide Spelman. Glossar. in voc.
Eclonia.

SECT. 4. distinguished according to the Nature of the Fees themselves, and of those that received them, of which its not our part here to discourse.

77. It's more proper for us farther to acquaint the Reader, that these Customs being various and growing to Multitudes, Judges in the Determination of Controversies concerning Fealty and Obedience of Vassals, became confounded in their Sentiments and Judgments, as in Customs not written it ever happens. Therefore about the Year of Our Lord 1152, one Obertus Ortenfius of Milan, assisted by Gerard Niger Capogilus, under the Reign of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa digested these Customs concerning the use of Fees, into two * Books. * Præter hæc huius annis obierat unus, Cujusvis ætæ alio. Unto these Uses of Fees compiled by him, were afterwards added the Constitutions of Lotharius the First, Lotharius the Second, Henry the Fourth, Lotharius the Third; and Frederick the First and Second; after which the Books of Fees became of such request in all Countries, that they equalled in Reputation the very Roman Laws of Justinian himself. From them by universal Consent, all Controversies not only concerning meaner Fees, but Dukedoms, Marquises, and the like were decided. And although some there have been that contended, that the Lombard's Laws of Fees have no place in France, where they will have these Fees to have been Patrimonial, and in the free Disposition and Dominion of Clients, being called Allodia, yet other very eminent Lawyers of that Nation contradict them, who affirm that these Laws of Fees take place in all the French Provinces, especially those which are Juris Scripti, where the Customs of the particular places do not oppose them; for in several Provinces of Italy, as that of Monserrat, and Mantoua, the Lombardick Fees are changed into Patrimonies and Allodia, Aliensations passing without the Knowledge of the Lord, Daughters succeeding, and several other things wherein the Provinces rejecting the strict Doctrine of Fees in these Points, have returned to the Directions and Practice of the Civil Law.

78. Out of France, the use of Fees was by William the Conquerour brought into England, where he distributed the conquered Country amongst his Souldiers; the Scots pretend to have received them about sixty Years before, in the Reign of Malerline the Second, but by Learned Men it is esteemed no more than a Pretension. That our Saxon Ancestours had some sort of Knowledge and Practice of them, being Cousin-Germans to the Lombards, may be granted, but this knowledge and practice was very small, for the Reasons we have already alledged. Concerning the Fees brought in by the Conquerour; what peculiar Rules and Practices they have acquired different from all the World besides, let our Municipal Lawyers tell if they please. It sufficeth me (who have already said too much) to put the Reader in mind, that the Fends or Fees reduced into some Order came from our Lombards. The Consent of Authours, so will have it. This is strengthened by this Observation, that the Lombards were addicted to this Course, more than any other People. That Obert and Gerard were of Milan in that Countrey, and that in Italy, these Laws most flourished from the time of Otho the Great, to that of Lotharius the Third, while the Civil Law was wholly silent. But these Fees were founded as we said upon Custome, and therefore amongst the ancient written Laws of the Lombards, we never meet with the word Feudum, and the other word Beneficium signifying the same, is very rarely to be found.

S E C T. IV.

S E C T. V.

The Kingdom of the Franks in Italy, from the Captivity of Desiderius, to the Promotion of Charles King of the Franks, to the Title of Emperour.

The Space 27 Years.

1. Desiderius being conquered and taken, and all the rest of the Lombards having after his Example yielded up themselves and their Towns, Charles the Conquerour by right of Victory, challenged to himself the Kingdom of Italy, which that he might establish to himself by a new Title, he made use of the old Decree of Gregory the Roman Bishop, as it was accounted. At Modostia he caused himself to be Crowned with an Iron Crown, by the hands of the Archbishop of Milan, and ordained, that the same course should be used by his Successors. And it was performed with great Ceremony, as appeared from an ancient Ritual called Ordo Romanus, which Sigonius, as it concerned this matter, transcribed this purpose, the King was out of his Chamber led into the Church by Bishops, and being conducted to the high Altar, after some solemn Prayers the Archbishop demanded of the People, whether they would subject themselves to such a King, and with constant Fidelity obey his Commands. The People answering, Yes; with holy Oil he annointed his Head, Breast, Shoulders, and the Joyns of his Arms; praying that both in War and in Issue he might be prosperous. Having then girt him with a Sword, put upon him Bracelets, a Robe, a Ring, and a Sceptre into his hand, he set the Crown upon his Head; and having given the Quire led him to his Throne, thereon he placed him, and having given him the kiss of Peace, then celebrated Divine Service. This Ceremony was now performed to Charles by Thomas the Archbishop of Milan, and hence he and his Successors accounted themselves so considerable, and to contend for Dignity with him of Ravenna.

2. The Ceremony of Coronation being thus over, Charles, now as Lord of Italy, thought it is duty to settle the Frame and Polity thereof, and for this purpose resolved to go to Rome to consult with Adrian. He having notice of his Intentions, called an hundred and fifty Bishops together, with many Abbats, and solemnly receiving him into the City, consulted with them what Honours to bestow upon him. They were unanimous in this, that a King so potent, and who together with his Father and Grandfather, had so much deserved of the Roman Church, was to be rewarded with some extraordinary mark of Honour. It was universally then agreed and consented to by all the Nobility, that he should be a Roman Patriarch; that throughout the Provinces he should institute Archbishops and Bishops; so that except commanded and instituted by him, they should not be Consecrated by any: That he should chuse the Bishop of Rome, and regulate the Apostolick See. Now Sigonius tells us, that the Order and Dignity of a Patriarch was, since the time of Constantine the Great, most splendid and honourable in the Roman Empire. That what we called but now Institution of Bishops, they called Investiture, and pleased it should be performed by the giving of a Ring and a Rod. As for the choice of the Bishop of Rome, it seems to be granted to him for preventing of Seditions and Tumults amongst the Romans. For these differences, the ancient Discipline by little and little decaying, by reason of ambitious seeking of so great a Place and Dignity, had quite spoiled the Meetings for Elections, to the great scandal of all good Christians; no Person at Rome having any Power or Authority to restrain them. But this right of chusing the Bishop, Charles used with great moderation, and remitted to the old way of the Assemblies of Clergy and People; provided the thing was done without tumult and indirect Practices.

SECT. 5.

Sect. 5.

He Models the Kingdom of Italy.

Obliges the Dukes by an Oath of Fidelity.

He settles the Government.

Three sorts of Laws in use, viz. That of the Romans, the Lombards, and the Salick.

Returns into France.

Duke Rodgand Rebels.

3. After the receiving of these Honours, he addressed himself to the Modell of the Kingdom. First, Apulia and Calabria he left to the Emperour as they had been after the Victory of Justinian; which afterward being seized on by the Normans, were reduced into another form of a Kingdom, which at length got the Name of Neapolitan. The Dukedom of Beneventum, he permitted to be held by Aragise the Son-in-Law of King Desiderius; that of Spoleum, by Hildebrand, and the other of Forum Julij by Rodgand, as Fiefs from him, as formerly from the Kings of the Lombards. The Exarchate of Ravenna and Pentapolis, with the Dukedom of Perusum, Rome, Tuscia and Campania, the chief Right, Principality and Sovereignty retained to himself, he yielded to the Roman Bishop: The rest he kept to himself in the ordinary way of a Kingdom. This was whatsoever the Kings of the Lombards had possessed in Liguria, Emilia and Venetia, the hithermost Tuscia (as they accounted it) and the Cottian Alpes being reckoned in. That part they called Lombardia, or as afterward Lombardia, or Lombardy. The Exarchate they called by the Name of Romania, or Romaniola. Italy being thus divided, the Government thereof he ordered should be after this manner. The Dukes he would have free, bound only by the Bond of a Royal Fee; with which whosoever tied themselves, were annually to take this Oath: I promise that I will be faithfull to my Lord Charles, and his Sons, as long as I shall live, without any fraud or manner of deceit: And, I swear by these Holy Gospels, that I will be faithfull to him, as a Vassal to his Lord, neither to my knowledge will I divulge any thing which he shall commit to me, in the Name, or by the Virtue of my Allegiance.

4. If ever it so happened that they brake this Oath, or died without Sons, the Dukedom was conferred upon others, and this Translation, or Collation, as in Bishops and Abbats, was called Investiture; the same being observed in other Vassals or Feudataries, as Counts, Captains, and Vassals, the Modell of the Services and Tenures of whom was afterward perfected by the Germans. The People and Cities were after this manner to be governed. The Limits of the Kingdom and the Towns, he committed to the government of Counts, assigning to them all publick and private Jurisdiction. The Limits or Borders they called Marches, or Marches, whence the Governours of them, obtained the Titles of Counts of the Marches, and Marquesses. Some extraordinary Commissioners he sometimes sent into the Kingdom, whom having greater Authority than Counts, they called Missi. The Grounds of the several Cities being confuted or litigious in the Reign of the Lombards, he would have separated and limited, bounding them for the most part with Mountains, Fens, or Rivers. The Cities he would have take an Oath of Fidelity to him, these words being added to it, I will preserve his Life, Member, Mind, and true Honour. On the Feudatary Cities, Churches and Monasteries, he laid certain Services, called Foderum, Parata and Manfonaticum, to be paid to him, especially when he came into Italy, which by him and his Successours were afterward either much diminished, or wholly remitted. To Bishops and Abbats he confirmed the Possession of Churches and Monasteries, formerly granted by the Lombards, and added new to such as deserved them. And that he might seem to have given liberty to Italy, when he came thither he was wont to assemble the Bishops, Abbats, and Noble men together, and with them to deliberate of the great Affairs of the Kingdom, after the manner of the Franks. Into Italy he brought also the Salick Law; so that from this time forward, three sorts of Laws became of use to it; that of the Romans, the other of the Lombards, and this Salick. But this was the custome, that by what Law every man would live, he which Custome prevailed in Italy, till the time of the Emperour Lotharius the Second.

5. Things being thus settled, Charles returned to Pavia, where leaving a strong Garrison, he took Desiderius and his Wife along with him, and returned into France. Yet did he not so well settle his Matters, but that within a year or two he was in danger to be disturbed, the Reputation he got by Arms, not being sufficient to bridle the Minds of the Lombard Dukes, who impatient, that the Kingdom should be taken from them, began to make disturbance in the Cities. The chief of the Conspiracy was Rodgand Duke of Forum Julij, which Charles understood, as he returned out of Saxony, resolved betimes to obviate the mischief, and by the terrour of severity cause those who had not yet discovered themselves, to keep themselves in their Duty. Having kept his Christmas at

Asfatia,

Sect. 5.

Is defeated and put to death.

He makes Pipin King of Italy with him.

Enacts several Laws.

Aragise of Beneventum rebels.

But begs Peace, which is granted.

Asfatia, with a powerfull Army he passes the Alpes, and marches streight into the Dutchy of Forum Julij, where he gave Battel to Rodgand, who was defeated, taken Prisoner, and put to death, as having affected the Sovereignty. Such Cities as were faulty begging pardon, easily obtained it. Going then to Tarvisium to hold his Easter, he annexed the Dutchy of Forum Julij to the Kingdom; committing the Government of the several Cities to Counts; and then returned into France, much about the same time that Leo the Emperour at Constantinople made Constantine his Son his Colleague and Associate. For several years after, Italy remained quiet. The fourth, the return of Charles produced two memorable things; another Progress he made into Italy, and the Death of the Emperour Leo, whose Son Constantine Porphyrogenitus governed with his Mother Irene, a Woman of a Masculine Spirit, and Disposition. Charles perceiving, that being diverted by other continual Wars, he could not probably keep Italy in quiet, except he set a King over it, who by his Presence should administer Justice, and cast an awe as well upon Domestick as Foreign Enemies, resolved to make Pipin his Eldest Son King with him. Returning out of Saxony, taking with him the said Pipin, his Wife Hildegarda, and Lodowick his other Son; a little before Christmas he came to Pavia.

6. The Holydays being over, he summoned an Assembly of the Spiritual and Temporal Nobility, and made by their assent several Laws yet extant; and published on the first of March, concerning Bishops and Abbats, their Rights, and their Discipline; as also concerning the punishment of Murthers, Robberies, Perjuries, and for the right Administration of Justice by the Counts, and the Pasli Dominici. This done, he went to Rome, to procure the Bishop to anoint his Sons, who being very ready to bestow what would cost him nothing, anointed Pipin King of Italy, and Lodowick King of Aquitain on Easter day; and to another Pipin, he himself was Godfather. At their return to Pavia, the Ceremony was there renewed by Thomas the Archbishop, who Crowned Pipin with an Iron Crown, and was Godfather to a Daughter named Gisla. Italy was generally very well pleased with the Advancement of their new King, as one who would continue with them, and consequently administer Justice as there should be occasion, and protect them from the Inroads of the Hunnes and Saracens. And Pipin did not frustrate their Expectations in any thing they could reasonably require, bestirring himself, and doing all good Offices of a King, as he had opportunity. He encouraged all publick Works, and made such new Laws as were requisite; several of his, as of his Father Charles, being still extant, made in a full Assembly of the Nobility, concerning the ordering of Churches, repairing of Monasteries, Hospitals, Bridges and High-ways, the security of such as travelled to Rome, the Administration of Justice by Counts and their Judges. When he was in Italy he commonly resided at Ravenna, either taken with the ancient famousness of the City, or for convenience of managing Naval matters. This great Repose and satisfaction, was after some five years interrupted by the ambitious Practices of Aragise the Duke of Beneventum, who being Son-in-Law to Desiderius, and puffed up with conceit of his own greatness, revolted. He was so proud, that he would be called Prince in the room of Duke, and be anointed and Crowned as King by his Bishops, subscribing his Diploma's, From our most Sacred Palace. Contemning Pipin, to enlarge his Dominion, he invaded the Roman Territories, not fearing the power of Charles, or the Calastrophe of Desiderius. Charles being inform'd of his Motions by Adrian, having dispatched his other Wars, resolved to pass into Italy and chastise his Folly. At the beginning of Winter he passed the Alpes with such expedition, that he kept his Christmas in Etruria at Florence, a City formerly destroyed by Totilas King of the Goths, and now said, by command of Charles, to have been re-edified.

7. From Florence he went to Rome to consult with Adrian about the chastisement of the Rebel, who now unbethinking himself, sent his Son Romuald to beg peace with great presents, and promise to give all satisfaction to the Bishop. The King by the Bishop's advice denied his request, and led his Army into the Territories of Capua, which he compelled to surrender after he had wasted the Countrey round about. The report hereof terrified Aragise, who expecting the Storm to come upon Beneventum, quitted that place and returned to Salernum, a Sea-Town, whence if need were he might have a convenience of Escape. Now he sent another Message, offering to give up his other Son Grimald also for an Hostage, and farther to doe whatsoever he should be commanded. This was accepted by the King, who taking an Oath of Allegiance from him, and the inhabitants

Sect. 5.

Adulge the Lombard King, invades Italy.

Is overcome and tortured to Death.

Another Revolt by Grimoald Duke of Beneventum.

To Adrian succeeds Leo in the See of Rome.

Pipin makes War upon the Huns.

habitants of Beneventum, dismissed Romuald, and kept Grimoald with him as an Hostage. After this he visited Rome again, and granting to several Church-men confirmation of their former Estates and Privileges, he returned into France. There he found that Tassil Duke of Bainavia had solicited the Hunnes to invade his Dominions, which they did with two Armies, the one whereof pierced into Forum Julii, but was repulsed with disgrace and loss. It happened about this time, that Charles having promised to give his Daughter in Marriage to Constantine the young Emperor, afterward, its said, denied to send her, which so enraged him, that having Adulge the young Lombard King in his Court, who had been honoured with the Dignity of a Patritian, he sent him with considerable Forces into Italy, which he expected would revolt at the sight of their former King, by blood, and his former Interest, allied to them.

8. Grimoald was at this time, his Father being dead, Duke of Beneventum, by the favour of King Pipin, whom in way of gratitude or consulting his present Interest, he advertised of this purposed Invasion, though he was Nephew by the Sister to the Pretender Adulge; Pipin commanded Hildebrand the Duke of Spoleum to be in Arms, and ordered Winigise his General to march to him both with Horse and Foot, desiring Grimoald to be of good Courage, and to resist the Enemy stoutly, if he should break into his Quarters. Adulge in the mean time landed in Calabria, with intention first to set upon the Dutchy of Beneventum, and thence to invade the Dominions of the Church, which being understood, Winigise, Hildebrand and Grimoald hastened, and uniting their Forces, resolved to give him a stop in Calabria, before he should proceed any farther. And in Calabria was fought a most bloody Battel, the Greeks endeavouring to approve themselves for valour, and the Lombards themselves for fidelity to those that employed them. For a great while the success remained doubtful, but at length the Greeks were worsted, many slain, and more taken, amongst whom was Adulge himself, who died in his tortures. Four years after this, Italy continued free from War, but was then disturbed by stirrs raised in the Dutchy of Beneventum, by means of Grimoald the Duke, as is suspected; it seemed to be of such consequence that Charles wrote to his Son Pipin to gather an Army in Italy, and promised to send to him another out of France by his Brother Lodowick, who came to him by great Journeys to Ravenna, and there kept his Christmas. Then joined they their Forces and invaded the Borders of Beneventum, where having taken one Fort, they wintred and then returned. It's probable that Grimoald was frightened into obedience, and complied with their Proposals, else would not two Kings have so soon drawn back their Armies; but of this as of many other things, the Annals of those times are silent.

9. Some three years after died Adrian, the Bishop of Rome, and was succeeded by a Priest who had the Name of Leo the Third. Immediately after his Consecration he sent to give notice to Charles, sending him the Keys of the Consecration, the Banner of the City, and other great Presents, to which Armonias adds, that he desired him to send to Rome some one of his Nobles, who by Oath might confirm the Roman People in their fidelity and subjection. Not long before this time Charles had from a Province reduced Forum Julii into a Dukedom, and removing the Counts, had placed there as Duke, Henry a Frank, it's supposed out of design to restrain and keep the Hunnes in order. By command of King Pipin some years after, he invaded Pannonia; and falling on them unexpectedly, killed Iring with other of their Dukes, and Plundering Ribing their Palace, sent away the Treasure to Charles, which they had been a long time hoarding up, most whereof he sent to Rome, and then passed with an Army into Saxony: The Hunnes having lost their Dukes made themselves a King, under whom they prepared themselves with all earnestness to renew the War, which Pipin understanding, sent notice thereof to his Father, and with a choice Party of Men brake into their Territories, took and plundered again their Royal Seat, and with a great booty went to his Father then lying at Aix, from whence he returned not into Italy till the year following, wherein Irene caused the eyes of her Son Constantine to be pulled out, that she might Reign without Controul. By this time the Romans, the Fear and Awe of the Lombards being removed, began to flow with Wealth, and grew wanton with Idleness and Luxury, and not content with the present posture of Affairs, hatched designs to shake off the Bishop, and recover their ancient Liberty.

10. The main Authors and Promoters of this Design were the Kinsmen of the late Adrian, Pascalis the Primicerius, and Campulus the Sacellaris, the Princes of

A. D. 756.

A. D. 756.

Sect. 5.

A Conspiracy against Leo the Bishop.

of the City. The first were enraged at Leo for endeavouring to rescind some Acts of Adrian; and the two last because he taxed their naughty manner of Life. They first objected some crimes to him in way of accusation, and when they could make nothing of them, then entered into a Conspiracy against his Life, and on a time, as he was going in a solemn Procession, fell upon him with some of their Creatures they had laid in Ambush, and having endeavoured to cut out his Tongue, and pull out his Eyes, carried him into a Church, and before the Altar sorely beat and wounded him. Albinus his Chamberlain found him in a Monastery, and brought him back to the Vatican, where he recovered; which so enraged the Conspirators that they pulled down Albinus his House. Upon the report of these Disorders in the Countrey, Winigise Duke of Spoleum, who had been substituted in the room of Hildebrand, came to Rome and carried him safe to Spoleum; whence he conveyed him into France to Charles, according to his own desire. Charles honourably received him, and granted his request to afford him his assistance against the Enemies of the Pontifical See, for he told him he had none else to whom he could betake himself; the Emperor, whose Duty it was to protect the Church, having lately rather been against it, and no good being to be hoped for from a Woman that now held the place at Constantinople. At length by the advice of such Churchmen as came to Leo into France, it was resolved that he should be sent back to Rome, and there the Merits of the Cause should be searched into. At the time appointed Charles his Ambassadors held an Assembly with the Bishops and Counts of France, in the Palace, and heard what the Conspirators could say, who pleading nothing but what was judged vain and frivolous, they caused them to be committed, and sent them in Chains into France. The same year, Henry Duke of Forum Julii, after many Victories over the Hunnes, was murdered by the Inhabitants of Tarfatica, a Town of Liburnia.

11. Charles holding an Assembly of his Estates at Wormes, propounded these Cases to them, the first concerned Grimoald, who had lately again revolted, the second the death of Henry, and the third the violence offered to the Person of Leo, all which deserving the presence of a King, to punish them, he resolved (and for one thing more doubtless) to goe again into Italy. Autumn now declining, with Pipin his Son he passed the Alpes and went straight into Liburnia, where he punished the Inhabitants of Tarfatica for the death of Henry. One Cadolack he made Duke of Forum Julii; which having done, he departed thence to Ravenna, where having spent seven days in preparation for the War of Beneventum, he came to Ancona. From Ancona, Pipin with an Army marched against Grimoald; and Charles, through the Dutchy of Spoleum, went for Rome; Leo and the Senate met him at Nomenum, twelve miles from the City, where having discoursed and feasted with him, he returned to Rome to take Order for his Reception, after this manner. Thence day the Crosses and Holy Reliques, with the Banners of the City, were sent out to meet him; In certain places were placed certain Chori of Citizens and Strangers who sang his Praises. The Bishop himself fate upon the steps of the Vatican Church incircled by his Clergy, where he received him, and with singing conducted him into the place appointed for Prayers, and thence into the Consecration. After seven days Charles called the People together, and signifying the cause of his coming, appointed a day to hear their Bishop's Cause. On the day appointed, by the advice of the Bishops, both Franks and Italians, the Accusers and Accused were cited to appear, and he himself fate as Judge with the rest. The Accusers told their Tale, but the Bishops would not suffer Leo, in respect of his Dignity, to answer formally as other Criminals were wont to doe, whereupon he said he would fate that course which the Laws allowed to purge ones self of a Crime objected. On another day, he mounted the Pulpit, and in the presence of them all, his Hands laid upon the Holy Gospels, by a solemn Oath he protested that he was clear from the crimes they had slanderously laid unto his charge. This by the Auditors was counted enough, he was esteemed Innocent, and solemn thanks were given to Almighty God and the Saints on his behalf.

Which is tried before Charles.

And the Bishop acquitted.

12. Now comes the principal Scene and the Parts which the Bishop and Charles were to Act in this Comical expedition. Leo had been freed and absolved before Charles his coming. The Inhabitants of Tarfatica were not so considerable, but that he might have easily punished them by his Officers, and as for Grimoald, Pipin might have dealt with him as well, if his Father had been in France, as where now he remained at such a distance. There was another greater thing for which Charles undertook this Journey: He had made broad signs in the

A. D. 800.

* Quin etiam Carolus vi-

Sect. 5. time of Adrian, but that Bishop either could not or would not understand him. But Leo knowing his mind, and being as ready as able to serve him in this affair, set about the work in this manner. He could not for shame but to bethink himself what way he might shew himself grateful to him, who to free the Church from so great danger and Infamy, had not grudged to take a Journey out of France. He found that since Gregory the Second his Predecessour, had begun to be Persecuted by the Heretical Emperour, there never were wanting some who earnestly contended that some other Defender of the Church was to be found out, that is some other Prince to be dignified with the Imperial Title. That without doubt, if any one so great an honour was to be conferred, either it was due to King Pipin, or at least to Charles his Son, who in asserting the Catholick Faith, and in persecuting Infidels, Hereticks, and Rebels against the Church had excelled Kings, yea all Emperours whatsoever. What Adrian had omitted, and the King himself in his time, he knew, had affected from the tumults at Rome, he resolved now to take occasion to perfect, that he might oblige so powerful a King, and obtain a Protector and Patron to the Roman Church. The Ceremony he resolved should be on Christmas day as a greater grace to the Fact, and that it might be more solemn and stately. Pipin himself, having committed the War against Grimold unto Duke Winnigise, came to the City, drawing with him an infinite number of Mortals to behold the sight.

Charles is made Emperour, and Pipin Crowned King of Italy by Leo.

13. The day being come, Charles, early in the morning went to the Vatican Church, and thence to the Confession, where having finished his Devotions, the Bishop, who by former agreement was present, put on him an Imperial Robe, and set on his Head a most precious Crown of Gold, which had been prepared for this purpose: At this the People three times acclaimed, To Charles Augustus, Crowned of God, the Mighty and most Pious Emperour of the Romans, Life and Victory. God and the Saints being then invoked, this Imperial Title was confirmed by the People, and their Acclamation being over, the Bishop anointed both the Father and the Son standing by, the one for Emperour, the other for King, and then set upon Celebrating of Divine Service. This ended, both Charles and Pipin offered in the Vatican Church, a Cupboard of Silver, and several Vessels for the Service thereof, of pure Gold: in that of Lateran, a Cross of excellent Workmanship made of Jacinths, which Leo in compliance with Charles, ordered to be carried in solemn Processions. Such was the order of the solemnity, by which it appears, as Sigonius observes, how untrue the story of those is, who wrote that all this was done by Leo, Charles neither knowing any thing before, nor consenting, as who should say often, that had he perceived any such thing, he would not that day have gone to the Vatican. But this Imperial Title having failed in the West almost three hundred years before, at the Deposition of Momylus Augustulus, the Bishop of Rome now renewed it in Charles, that his Church might have a Patron and Defender, obliged by such a courtship as we said before. This is sufficiently evidenced by the form of the Oath, which the Emperours of this Edition at their Coronations, had by these Bishops imposed on them: J. N. Emperour, in the Name of Christ, promise and engage before God and St. Peter the Apostle, to be the Protector and Defender of this holy Roman Church, in all its concerns, as I shall be assisted by Divine helps, to my knowledge and Power.

The Confirrations are condemned to Banishment.

14. And as Leo for his own respects, and those of his Successors was ready to give, to Charles, to serve his own Ambition and the Dignity of his Family, was willing to receive, though from him, this Glorious Title. For, now rejecting that of Patrician, he wrote himself Roman Emperour, and Augustus. Being placed in this high pitch of Majesty, he thought it agreeable to his Office, not only to look after the settlement of Italy, but all Christendom, and in that study spent the Winter following. The Accusers of Leo he condemned to death, but at the request of the Bishop, exchanged this punishment for that of Banishment. To the Edicts of the Lombards, he added such Laws as he perceived from complaints whereas he came were wanting, and by others reformed Ecclesiastical matters. Sigonius tells us that the aforesaid Laws were in his time to be seen at Mutina, with this Title in the Preface. Charles by Divine consent (or Order) Crowned, Governing the Roman Empire, most Serene Augustus, to all Counts, Gasbalds, or to all that by our meekness have been appointed Officers of the Commonwealth throughout the Province of Italy, in the year eight hundred and one, from the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, the ninth Indiction, in the thirty third year of our Reign over France, and over Italy the twenty eighth, the first of our Consulship. Being now Emperour, he calls Italy not a Kingdom, but a Province, and and to make the world believe he was Emperour. Indeed, a Roman Emperour, revives old Titles and Names, Styles himself Augustus, and talks of the Consulship; but he entered it seems at the same time that he commenced Emperour, and so shews himself not to be of the true and genuine Stock, few, these excepted, who invaded the Empire, and the Titles of whom were precarious, but were Consuls before they came to be Emperours. And whether in strictness his Title was not precarious, whether he was a Legitimate Roman Emperour, or can be so called is a Moot-point, may admit of a little Disquisition.

15. If he were an Emperour (take the word as one possessing or reigning over divers Kingdoms) yet could he be called by any other addition, better than that of Roman. The Roman Empire was now almost quite extinct in the West, little or nothing left except a few Islands in the Mediterranean, and perchance a few Maritime Towns lying towards Sicily. The Emperour had been beaten out of this Country by the Lombards, who having made a Prey at last of the Exarchate, became themselves a Prey to Victorious Charles, and the Exarchate, by what right soever was challenged as the Churches Patrimony. Grant then that the Romans had Power to name him Emperour, to confer that Title upon him or any other, a worthless empty Title must it be, signifying a Sovereignty over the City of Rome, and the small Territory of the Exarchate (the rest was quite alienated) such a Dominion they had at the Banishment of their Kings, the Names of one of which would more have suited him, as Servius, Tarquinius, or the like, than that of Cesar. That they could give any thing of the Eastern Empire to him or any other, we cannot believe, after that Constantinople had been by Imperial Authority made a second Rome, and all Co-equal Majesty and Privileges conferred upon it. Rome of late had lost the Imperial Title, been a Captive to Barbarians, a Member of a Kingdom, being though restored to her Liberty afterward, yet it was by the Help and Assistance of her Daughter, had all along hitherto truckled under her, and acknowledged the Sovereignty of her Princes, and submitted to the Government of a Duke; till under shew of Religion, she became disloyal, and advanced her Bishops from the Episcopal Chair to the Princely Throne.

Sect. 5.

Sigonius exantiquissimum commentario qui Ordo Romanus dicitur.

M

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

The Affairs of Britain, lately a Roman Province, Contemporary with the Constantinopolitan Roman Empire.

SECT. I.

From the Departure of the Romans out of the Island to the Destruction of Britain, or the forcing up of the Inhabitants, into the Mountainous places by the Picts, Scots and Saxons.

The Space of One Hundred Ninety Seven years.

SECT. I.

The Picts and Scots, invade Britain.

The Characters of the Britons in those days.

THE Britains being again forsaken by their Friends the Romans, who as we said were called into Gall, the Necessities of the Empire there and then requiring it, became speedily again a Prey to the ravenous Picts and Scots, who no sooner was their fear and awe removed, but like Wolves they returned, and without any Pity or Compassion renewed their Slaughtering and the Havock they had made of a worse than tame and sheepish Nation. For, such Qualities as are the certain Presages of the Ruine of a People, had long e'er this manifested themselves; Luxury, Effeminateness, and all sorts of vicious Habits and Practices which weaken mens Hands, and enervate their Minds, which in all Ages have destroyed Families, and overturned Governments, abounded amongst them: Never scarcely did a Kingdom, Empire or Estate miscarry, but its Period was usher'd in with Loosefness and Luxury. Let the Example of Sardanapalus, of the Army and Court of Darius, of Cleopatra, and her Egyptian Train, and that of the Romans after the times of Lucullus, speak for the Assyrian, Perfian, Macedonian and Roman Empires. As for Kingdoms and States, Examples fo abound, as it would be too tedious to relate them. Besides the Just Judgment of Almighty God, who in the Destruction of those that pervert Nature, and apply their Strength and Faculties to other things and ends than for which they were made, vindicates the Sovereignty and Right, which he necessarily hath over his Creatures. Luxury and vicious Habits in their own Natures, and by way of Efficiency procure what are the certain Causes of Ruine and Destruction.

2. For if things be preserved by the same means they are got or obtained, this cannot be done but by Labour and Industry. Now Luxury brings Idleness and Laziness, renders Men effeminate and impatient of Toil or Industry. This is to be noted of vicious Persons in all Ages. First, such Persons conscious to themselves, that by all Rules of Sobriety they were condemned, found themselves concerned for their Reputation (though this two at last they come oftentimes to slight) to excuse, may plead for what they were inclined to practise. Hence Sobriety was ever by them branded for Folly and foppish formality, and because they could not out-reason, they were put upon it to jeer, or as they say to droll at all things and Persons serious, and the most solid, substantial, and every way most worthy, they endeavoured to represent and render ridiculous. Learning, Discipline, honest Studies and Endeavours they scoffed at, cried up natural Parts, and flashy trifling Wits, because they could not endure to take pains themselves, being a kind of Euthusiasts in this respect, as expecting Inspiration or Mahomet's Pidgeon, for the Infusion of such Abilities as cannot be obtained but by time and labour. Hence all Seriousness being discouraged, none were preferred but vicious and superficial Parasites. When any able Persons spake their Judgments they were derided, and all their good Councils by one twitting and drolling Speech rendered ridiculous. This caused them either to hold their Peace, or comply with the prevalent Humour, and then all good Council being discarded and rash hare-brained Opinions admitted, Reason was banished, Industry and Pains driven away and drew along with them, what are the usual Effects and Products. The wife Man knew what he said when he affirmed, that the Scorners, as it is translated, or the Derider or Droller destroys the City, not the open Enemy, not the Traitor, for Government usually recover themselves out of such Hazards; but when all Sobriety is scoffed at, when dissolute Persons manage Affairs, and by their drolling render sober and wholesome Councils ridiculous, then is a Kingdom or State in the ready perdition and certain way to Destruction. These are the certain Symptoms of its mortal Infirmary.

Infusion

3. Such was the State of the British Affairs; their Sobriety and Prosperity, if ever they enjoyed either, arose and decayed together. But if Gildas their Coun- treyman hath not injured them, they never much could pretend either to the one, or to the other. For the first, he tells us in General, that they neither behaved themselves well towards Almighty God, towards one another, nor such foreign Princes as had subdued them, and their Subjects. For the other, they submitted to the triumphant Romans, and received their Commands without any resistance, a weak and an unfaithfull People, subdued not so much by Sword, Fire and Engines of War (as were other Nations) as by Threats, Punishments and Edicts, and only in outward shew pretending Obedience. Accordingly, when the Roman Souldiers were most of them departed, having left some Governours behind to establish their Power, and not the least thinking of a Rebellion, a wily * Lioness slew these Rulers. When the Senate had notice hereof at Rome, and sent an Army to be revenged, nor Fleet was there prepared to fight for their Country, nor squared Battalion or Right wing (to use his words) was there to be seen, nor any other warlike Preparation on the shore; their backs were for shields toward such as pursued them, their Necks trembling, and like Women they stretched out to their Swords, and offered their Hands to be manacled, so that it became a by-word, and in Derision was wont to be spoken, That the Britains were neither valiant in War, nor faithfull in Peace.

They Rebel against the Romans.

Are beaten.

4. The Romans having killed many of these perfidious Men, and condemned others to slavery, that the Land might not turn into a Wilderness, quitted again the Country that wanted both Wine and Oil, and returned into Italy, leaving a sufficient Power behind them, to be as whips for the Backs, and Yokes for the Necks of the Natives, to afflict and tire them not so much with a military Hand as with stripes, but if need were to thrust the Sword into the sides of the Nation; and however to make the Name of Roman Slavery stick to the Soil, so that it should be accounted not Britannia, but Romania, and what Brass, Silver or Gold it could get, should be stamped with Cesar's Image. Having received the Gospel in the time of Tiberius, it cannot be denied but that this Nation afforded several glorious Martyrs, but when Arianism once came to spread abroad, readily received the Venome of every Herefie, being ever greedy of Novelty, and never stable in any thing. After this a vast wood of Tyrants (the phrase is not sprung up, and the Island retaining the Roman Name indeed, but little of the Manners or Laws, sent into Gall Maximus, accompanied with many Souldiers, but such as were tumultuous and over and above adorned with Imperial Ensigns which he never decently wore; not obtained legally, but as Tyrants were wont to compass them. This Man by craft rather than any Valour, having brought the Neighbouring Provinces into his Net, and by Perjury and Lies adjoined them to his wicked Dominion; stretched one of his Wings as far as Spain, and the other into Italy, and establishing the Throne of his most wicked Empire at Triers, raved with so great Madnes against his Masters, that of two lawful Emperours, the one at Rome, and the other elsewhere, he bereaved of his Religious Life. But presently as he proceeded in such cursed and audacious practices, was he at Aquila smitten on the Head (he means slain) who had cast down the honoured Heads of the whole World, from their Sovereignty.

5. But by this means became Britain bereaved of her Souldiers and Military Men, as also of her Governours (how cruel soever) and in a manner all her Youth, which following the Tyrant into Gall, never more returned home, and

M 2

SECT. I.

*Lege Comment.
Venitiam in hoc Proverbi-um. Derisor tatem.*

Hac prolacer-vice & mens ex quo inhabitata est, nunc Deo, interduo Civibus, nonnunquam crium transma-rini Regibus & subiectis ingrata consurgit.

*Gildas, p. 7.
Gildas, p. 7.
dini, 1568.
Opera Joan.
Josselini.*

Leana truci-davit dolo-Si per Leo-nam non ipsam Insulam intelligit (sa-pe enim hoc ge-nere dictionis civilis femina Buan-ica fuit Voadica est intelligenda, qua apud Dionem Socro, apud Tacitum 70000 Romanorum, regnante Nerone, dixit interve-nisse.

Sect. 1.

Another Invasion by the Scots and Picts.

Upon which a Message is sent to Rome for aid.

A third Invasion.

A severe Famine followed.

thereby growing utterly unskillful in matters of War, first was invaded by two transmarine and cruel Nations, the Scots from the West, and the Picts from the North, under which the ground for many years. Being harassed with their Inroads, and the direfull Effects thereof, the sent to Rome with Tears, requiring that Succours might be hastned away to her Relief, vowing in case the Enemy were removed to remain constant in Fidelity to the Empire. A Legion unmindfull of the former Mischiefs was ordered her, which having passed the Seas presently engaged the Rovers, and having made of them a great slaughter, quite drove them out of the Country, and thereby freed the Inhabitants from cruel Death, or Imminent Captivity. This done, it set them upon making a Wall overthwart the Island to defend them from these Inroads; but it being made by the Rabble without any Instruour, and not of Stone but of Earth, for the most part did them little or no Service. This Legion being returned with great Joy and Triumph, the same Rovers like so many greedy and ravenous Wolves came again upon their former Prey, no Shepherd appearing to protect the sheep, bore down and trampled on all in their way like standing Corn. Now again are Messengers dispatched to Rome to besake themselves to the Wings of their Damms, beseeching them not to suffer their afflicted Country absolutely to perish, nor the Roman Name (now indeed merely a Name) to be lost, and extinguished in the Island. The Romans receiving as great an Impression from the Story of this Tragedy, as humane Nature was capable of, made as much haste to their Rescue, as an Eagle can do in the Air, an Horseman on the Earth, or the most expert Mariner can do upon the Sea; and like as a mighty Torrent falling from the Mountains, removes heaps of Sand which lye in its way, so did they sweep and cleanse the Country of these greedy Rovers.

6. They now plainly tell those, for whose deliverance they came, that they must not for the future, expect any such tedious and laborious Journeys from them; and that the Roman Legions, or such an Army, was not to be endangered by Sea and Land, for the driving away a sort of inconsiderable stragling Thieves. They bid them apply themselves to the study and practice of Arms, that by their own Valour and Conduct they may be able to protect their Country, their Wives, their Children, (and what should be more dear to them) their Lives and Liberty; to stretch out their hands, not naked and disarmed to be pinioned by the Enemy, but furnished with Swords, Spears, and such like Instruments of War ready to assault and slaughter these Nations, which could not be more valiant and powerful than themselves, except sloth and idleness made them so. They prescribed them the way how they should make another Wall, not according to the former Model, propounding courageous Exploits to a fearful People, and a pattern to such as were not willing to write after it. Upon the Southern Shore where their own Ships lay at Anchor, and the Invasions of these Barbarous People were feared, they build watch Towers at a certain distance one from another, and bid farewell to Britain, as never more to return into the Island. They were no sooner gone, but Swarms of Scots and Picts again appeared upon the Shore, and like a Swarm of Caterpillars overspread the Face of the Earth; differing indeed in manners and Customs from each other, but both alike greedy to shed blood, having their Faces more covered with Hair than their secret Parts with Cloaths; and they confidently seized on the Northern part of the Island, as their own, from the utmost bounds thereof, as far as the Wall. Upon the Wall the Britains set a Guard, but sifter to Eat than to Fight, trembling at the sight of an Enemy, and pining away for the very thought of War. The Barbarians had certain Hooks, wherewith they would pull down to the ground, the unwary and helpless Defendant; who in so great a misfortune was in this respect happy, that he lived not to see those dreadful Calamities, which shortly after befell his Relations.

7. In short, the Guard e'er long quitted both the Wall and the Towns adjoining, and then followed the usual Flights and Dispersions of a poor sheepish and miserable People; for, to no other than such a preying of Wolves and wild Beasts, can this thing be compared; the miserable Britains running away, and when easily overtaken, being slaughtered like Sheep with Complaints, but no opposition. Those that remained alive, in another manner felt the dreadful effects of this Invasion, so severe a Famine following that havock which had been made of all things, that no food could be obtained, but what small pittance could be got by hunting. The miserable Remnant of the British Nation in this desolate condition, having cause to apprehend another Invasion, writes to Agitius a Roman Officer,

Sect. 1.

Agitius rer Consulis gentis Britanno rum: &amp; ppg pauca quales Repel. lunc Barbari ad Mare, repel. lis Mare, ad Barbaros. Inter hac duo genera furerum aut jugulamur, aut mergimur. Hunc Agitium Bala vocat Elinum.

ficer after this manner. "To Agitius thrice Consul, the Groans of the Britains: "then after a few Complaints: "The Barbarians drive us to the Sea, and the Sea "drives us back upon the Barbarians. Betwixt these two sorts of death, we "have either our Throats cut, or are drown'd. But no succour or relief could be obtained. In the mean time the Famine was so violent, that many gave up themselves to the cruel Enemy, purchasing a little bread with everlasting slavery; others more valiantly betook themselves to the Mountains, Caves and Woods, whence they made Sallies upon the Rovers: and now first of all betaking themselves to Almighty God, and trusting in him, had for many years success against, and killed many of them as they ranged abroad for Booty. Now (saith our Author) the boldness of the Enemy for a little time ceased, but not the wickedness of our People, it being ever, as it now is, the custom of the Nation to be weak to repel an Enemy (to blunt his Weapons as he expresseth it) but strong enough to support Civil Wars, and the heavy burthen of their sins; infirm to execute the effects of Peace and Truth, but able to practise wickedness and Lies.

All things tending to ruine.

8. The Ravenous Scots then return into Ireland for a short time. The Picts fixed themselves now in the Northern part of the Island, and there continued making some Incurfions now and then. During the Truce, the Scarr of the Famine was healed up, another and more virulent Soar secretly growing. For these Hostilities ceasing, so great a Plenty and abundance of all things followed in the Island as no past Age could parallel; and this was accompanied with every way proportionable as great Luxury. So greatly did this evil root sprout up and increase, that at this time it might be truly said, Absolutely such Fornication is heard of, as is not reported amongst the Gentiles. But not only this Vice, but all others that are incident to Humane Nature, and especially (which also at this time faith he undoes all) hatred of the truth, and them that speak it, lovers of Lies with those that forge them; the taking of good for evil, veneration of evil for good, the desire of darkness instead of the Sun, and the entertainment of Satan for an Angel of Light. Kings were anointed without any respect to God, but if there were any more cruel than their Fellows: And not long after they were murdered by those that anointed them, without any examination of the matter, and more cruel ones were chosen in their rooms. If any of them had but a shew of mildness or seemed the least inclinable to truth, the hatred and violence of all was upon him, as the Subverter of Britain. What was pleasing or displeasing to Almighty God, was all one and alike to them; but rather, what displeased him most pleased them: So that that Saying of the Prophet, may be well fitted to our Country, which was denounced against that ancient People. Children ye have forsaken God without a Law, and provoked to anger the Holy one of Israel. Why should ye be smitten any more ye workers of Iniquity? All the Head is sick, and the Heart faint, from the sole of the foot to the crown of the head there is no health in it. So they acted all things contrary to health, as if the Universal Physician afforded no Medicine to the World. And these things were not only practised by Secular men, but by the Lord's Flock and the Shepherds thereof, who ought to be an Example unto the People. They were debauched and grown sottish by Drunkenness, fell one upon another, with Contentious Brawlings, and Emulations, having no discretion to discern betwixt good and evil.

Isaiah, 1. 5.

9. In the meanwhile it pleasing Almighty God to purge his Family, and by a Report only of Tribulation, to cure it of so mischievous an Infection, a swift noise pierced all mens ears of the sudden approach of the ancient Enemy, who was now resolved to destroy all the Natives, and himself to plant and inhabit the whole Country. Yet for all this did they not amend their manners, but like to foolish Asses biting upon the Bit of Reason, left the right Path, and hurried on the broad steep way which leads to destruction. Therefore, as Solomon says, When the Servant is not amended by words, the fool is whipped and doth not feel it; Prov. 29. 19. for a dreadful Plague fell upon this foolish People, which in a short time, without any assistance of the Sword, did such execution upon them, that the living sufficed not to bury the dead. Neither yet were they ever the better, that the Saying of Isaiah the Prophet might in them also be fulfilled. And God called them to sorrow and mourning, to beldness and the girdle of Sackcloth: but behold they fell to killing of Calves and slaying of Rams, to eat and drink, and they said, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we shall die. And why? the time approached wherein their Iniquities, as in old time those of the Ammorites should be fulfilled. For they fell into a Consultation, what might be the best and most effectual course to prevent the so dismal and frequent Invasions of the forenamed Nations. Then were all the

Sect. I.

The Saxons are invited.Who Land here.But find fault with their Quarters.Making ha-cock of their Entertainers.

the Counsellours, together with the proud Tyrant himself, blinded, devising not a Protection, but the destruction of their Country; namely, that those most fierce and cursed Saxons, hateful both to God and Man, should as Wolves into the Sheepfold be sent for to repulse these Northern Nations. Than which nothing was ever more pernicious, nothing more bitter. Oh the grossest darkness of understanding! Oh the most desperate dulness and blockheadness of mind! Those whom absent they dreaded more than death, these foolish Priests invited under the same Roof, giving as 'tis said foolish Council unto Pharaoh.

10. Then did a Kennel of Whelps in three Vessels, called by them Cynla, in our Language, faith he, Long Ships, rush out of the barbarous Lionelles Den, with a prosperous gale, and lucky Omen and Auguries, whereby it was foretold by a certain Prelate, That for three hundred years they should possess that Country, unto which they directed their course; and for an hundred and twenty, or half that space of time, often waste and depopulate the same. These having Landed, by Commandment of the unlucky Tyrant, first fixed their Claws upon the Eastern part of the Island, as with a design to protect it, but truly meaning to offer violence to it. And their forementioned Dam finding that her first Kennel prospered, sent after them a greater rabble of Dogs, which having passed over in Pinnaces, joyned with the former mil-begotten Crew. Thence it is that the Sprout of Iniquity, the Root of Bitterness, the Virulent Plantation, but suitable to our Deserts, springs up in our Soil, with their extravagant Buds and Branches. But these Barbarians being admitted into the Island as Souldiers, and such (so they ly'd) as were to undergo great hazards for their Entertainers, obtained what was necessary for their subsistence; which being allowed for a long time (as it's said) stopped the Dogs mouth. Howbeit afterward, they complain that they were but slenderly provided for, seeking for colourable Pretences to quarrel; and except their Allowances were increased, they threaten to break the Peace, and to harass the whole Island. Without delay they back their Threats by suitable Actions. For the cause, viz. their wickedness still continuing the same, and being nourished, the fire by the hands of these Eastern Sacrilegious men, was kindled from Sea to Sea, and consuming the Neighbouring Cities and the Countries adjoining, ceased not, till having in a manner destroyed all the Land with a red and terrible flame, it touched upon the Western Ocean. In this violent Invasion, comparable to that which the Assyrians made into Judah, is also fulfilled in us according to the History, what the Prophet by way of Lamentation uttered: They have burnt thy Sanctuary with fire, they have polluted in the Land the Tabernacle of thy Name. And again: O God the Gentiles are come into thine Hermitage: they have defiled thine Holy Temple, &c. Inasmuch that all the Colonies by the frequent battering of Engines, and all the Inhabitants together with the Prelates of the Church, the Priests and People, by Swords glittering on every side, and cracking Flames, were at once laid flat upon the ground; and which was a dreadful Spectacle to behold, in the midst of the Streets the stone-works of Turrets and high Walls, sacred Altars, and pieces of Carriages, crumbled over with a purple bloody Dye, as in one horrible Wine-press to be seen mixed together. Neither was there any Sepulchre other than the Ruines of Houses, and the Bellies of wild Beasts and Fowls; with Reverence be it spoken to Holy Souls, if many such were then found, which were carried by Angels up into Heaven. For that Vine which was formerly good, had so degenerated into bitterness, that according to what the Prophet says, Seldom could a Cluster, or Ear, be found after the Gatherers or Reapers.

11. Some miserable Remains being found upon the Mountains, were butchered by heaps: Others, almost spent with Fame, gave up themselves to the Enemy into perpetual Slavery, if they were not presently killed, which was esteemed the greatest favour imaginable. Others went into Parts beyond the Sea, instead of the Mariners Celestima (or Song at their first setting out) howling and roaring under their spread Sails, this Duty: Thou hast given us, O Lord, as Sheep to be devoured, and hast scattered us among the Nations. Others stayed in their own Country, but betook themselves to Mountains, to craggy places, and difficult Access, to thick Woods, and the very Rocks of the Sea, ever trembling for fear, and having their safety in suspicion. A little time being past, when the cruel Rovers had retired, those that were left behind being strengthened by God, to whom now they fled from all places, as Bees to an Hive upon the approach of a Tempest, most heartily beseeching him, and sending up innumerable Prayers, that they might not utterly be destroyed from the face of the Earth; under item guerram non annuam, sed menses festinus in Saxa, lib. de vocabulis interpretari, i. e. Nidos festinationis. Psal. 75. 7. Psal. 79. 1.

Conduct

Psal. 43. 12.

Sect. I.

Conduct of Ambrosius Aurelianus a modest Man, who of the Roman Nation alone had survived this Calamity, having lost his Parents therein, who were clad with Purple, and whose Posterity has now degenerated from their Grandfathers goodness; under him they take Arms and Courage, provoke the Conquerors to Battle, and by the Assistance of Almighty God obtain the Victory. From this time forward, faith Gildas, now the Natives, and then their Enemies have the better, that this Nation might be tried, as formerly Israel was; whether it would love the Lord or not: even to the Year wherein Mount Badon was besieged, and the last defeat given to these Rogues, the forty fourth year (viz. of the Saxons their coming into Britain) as I well know, one Month thereof being past, the fame as of mine own Nativity. But even now the Cities of our Country are not inhabited as formerly, but lye waste and desolate, for though External Wars are ceased, yet Civil ones are not. However the remembrance of the Desperate Condition of the Island, and of the unhoped for Relief, stuck fast in the minds of those who were witnesses of both the Miracles: as in this respect Kings, publick and private Persons, Priests and Ecclesiastical Men, every one in his Order.

12. But they being dead, and a Generation succeeding which was ignorant of the condition of the time past, and had only felt the Serenity of the present, all Rules of Truth and Justice were so shaken and subverted, that I may not say no footsteps, but no marks at all of them remain in the late mentioned Orders, few, and they very few, excepted, who in respect of the loss of so great a Multitude which daily runs Headlong to Hell, their Number is so short, that in a manner our Venerable Mother the Church, cannot of those that lye in her Bosome, perceive which are her true and only Sons. After a few more words, he demands why that should be concealed, which not only is known, but upbraided by the Nations round about. Britain, faith he, hath Kings but Tyrants, Judges it hath but wicked ones, often fleeing and punishing, but Innocent Persons, vindicating and patronising, but guilty Persons and Thieves, having very many Wives, but these Whores and Adulteresses, often swearing but forswearing, vowing and then presently breaking, waging Wars, but those Civil and upon unjust Accounts, prosecuting Thieves mightily throughout the Country, and having some of them sitting at their own Tables, whom they not only love but reward, bestowing Alms liberally, but on the other side, heaping up vast Mountains of Wickedness, sitting in the Seat of Arbitrators, but seldom enquiring after any Rule of right Judgment, despising the Innocent and Humble, but as much as in them lies, and as opportunity serves, extolling to the Skies all bloody Persons, proud, guilty of paricide, unlawful Company-keepers and Adulterers, the Enemies of God, and who with the very Name it self were to be destroyed and blotted out; keeping many bound in Prison, whom by their own Craft, they oppress and load with Chains, rather than for any thing, wherein they have really offended: continuing with Oaths amongst Altars, which within a little time they despise as dirty Stones.

As to particular Persons.

13. After this, our Author comes to the Reprehension of particular Persons. First he accuses Constantine (whom he terms the Whelp of the Pannonian Lioness) of killing, notwithstanding a corporal and most solemn Oath, some Boys of Royal extract betwixt the Altars. Of living many years before in Adultery, having put away his own Wife contrary to Christ's Command. He affirms that he had planted in his Heart, which was like an Earth unable to bear any good Fruit, a slip of Unbelief and Folly taken from Sodom, which being watered by many known, though Domestick Impieties, as so many poisonous flowers brought forth to the offence of God, this impudent Crime of Paricide and Sacrilege, that still intangled in the Nets of his former Mischiefs, by his ancient faults he increases his present Enormities. * After this, saying that he reprehends him as present whom he knows yet to be alive, by laying before him the Eternal Punishments which were to issue, and the promises made for his Salvation, he earnestly exhorts him to the amendment of his sinful life. Now after him he takes Aurelius Caninus to task, whom he terms a Lion's Whelp, and demands of him whether he be not worse than the former, swallowed up in the Filth of Paricides, Fornications and Adulteries. Whether hating the Peace of his Country, as a Serpent or some deadly thing, by thirsting after Civil Wars and unjust Depredations, he do not rush against himself the Gates of Heavenly Peace and Refreshment. Seeing he was left alone as a withering Tree in the middle of a Field, he bids him remember the idle fancy of his Fathers and Brothers with their juvenile pride and immature Death. And bidding him not to think to live to the Age of Methuselah, quadrat.

* Agam quare si praesentem arguo quem ad hoc superesse non scio.
E 23. 6.
Quid tu quod ut Propheta ait, Canine Aurelii Canine Agui?
Alii Aurelium Caninum vo-cant, Author noster Cani-num ut hic quem debet uti-ri sequatur.
Ego sum de industria ita nomen murelli non exstigmati-rim, quod ingenio huius et immatura iustitia quadrat.

Seet. 1. thufalab, by the same Arguments, as formerly excites him to a speedy Repentance. The next he undertakes is Vortiporius, whom he compares to a spotted Leopard; for the Multiplicity of his Crimes and his gray Hairs, being from the top to the bottom, defiled with Paricide and Adulteries, the Son not of a good King, as of Hezekiah was Manasse: He accuses him for putting away his own Wife, and burthening his Conscience with defilement of an impudent Daughter, concluding with the like Exhortation to amendment. Then falls he upon Cunegisus, whose Name in the Roman Language he faith importeth a Tellow Butcher, terming him a Bear, the Contemner or Opposer of God, who had wallowed in the Dregs of Wickedness from his very youth. He demands why he creates so much trouble to his Countreymen by his Civil diffentions, and to God Almighty by his infinite Crimes: why he had driven away his own Wife, and taken her wicked Cousin-German to his Bed, which had promised perpetual Chastity unto God. Then by proposing the like Terrors and Allurements, he endeavours to bring him to a better life.

14. But most pains he takes with Maglocunus the last in the Catalogue, but neither the last nor the least in Crimes, whom he calls by the Title of the Dragon of the Island, terms the Suppressour of many Tyrants, but the first in Mischief, greater than many both in Power and Malice, free in giving but more profuse in Sin, in Arms powerful, but more valiant in such attempts as destroy the Soul, as one who fortitiously wallows in the Lake of his old Wickedness, as drunk with Wine pressed out of the Sodomitical Grape. He demands of him, why he heaps such loads of Sins as so many high Mountains upon his Royal shoulders: and why he doth not carry himself better than others, nay why he behaves himself worse than others towards that King of all Kings, who had made him higher than all other Captains of Britain, as well in respect of his Kingdom as in Stature, and the Lineaments of his Body? He upbraids him for having by Fire and Sword destroyed the King his Uncle with most valiant Souldiers, the Countenances of whom seemed not unlike to those of the Whelps of Lions: but especially for devoting himself to a religious Course of Life, after his Violence had succeeded, and breaking those Oaths which he had taken to that purpose; and then returning as the Dog to his Vomit, to as greedy a Prosecution of vicious Courses as ever. He instances in his despising his own Wife, and loving the Wife of his Brother's Son, and the double Paricide which thereupon followed, and at last the Murder also of her by whose Suggestions and Solicitations, his Wife and her own Husband had been made away. He farther upbraids him with being instructed by an excellent Master, and having produced many Threatnings to him out of Scripture, he then leaves off the Prosecution of the History of his Times, and to deter his Countreymen, as well those of the Laity as his own Profession, he proceeds in the Quotation of Scriptures full of Threats, and applies them to his Purpose. His Latin is Barbarous, and his Style vehement, and troublefomely Luxuriant, but such as discovers great Wit, and a mind full of Zeal both for his God, and for his Country.

15. His Zeal was no whit extravagant, but adequate to the mischief impending, viz. the destruction of his Country, and founded not onely on pious, but political reasons; for Vice, as we could be infinite in shewing, has been the forerunner of the Ruine, both of States, Kingdoms and Families. But to come to our business, and to enlarge upon this Text of Gildas. The Romans having taken their farewell of Britain, the Natives were, we see, utterly at a loss, not knowing how to behave themselves, wanting both heads and hearts for the withstanding so great a Storm as fell upon them: The Countrey having been drained of all its Inhabitants, which had either Skill or Courage. Their heavy case required able and faithfull Leaders; glad they were to accept of any that would undertake their Patronage, and to purchase their Conduct and Protection at what rate soever. Hereat it seems many took occasion to set up for themselves, and instead of Legitimate Princes and Fathers of their Country, their Country abounded with Tyrants, with Thieves and Robbers which owned the Title, but disowned the Duty of Rulers, were ravenous after the reward, but utterly careless of the work of Governours, Shepherds who spent all their time in Fleecing, never busied themselves about feeding or protecting the Flock farther than their own mere Interests carried them, to have some remaining over which they might domineer and tyrannize. That they had not one Monarch, but several Kings, appears sufficiently: both from the story of those times whereof we now write, and of those which followed, and that this custome began near as soon as the Romans had quitted them, is very probable, when like a sick man they were glad to shift from one side, and from one thing to another, restless, by reason of that misery which still pressed upon them. At length, harassed and tired out with the Infolencies and Cruelties of many Tyrants; some of them they opposed, others they slew; but still finding that seldom came the better, they thought it best to have one Supreme to curb and check, if need were, the other in their Extravagancies. The Issue of this Resolution was, that one Vortigern was chosen King, whom we can grant to Polydore Virgil to have been most eminent amongst them, for Authority and Nobility, but scarcely for Vertue; not to alledge any thing against his Valour.

to

16. Otherwise the Complaints of Gildas of the corruption of these times, must be interpreted rather too scant and narrow; for by the greater number of creditable Authours, he is deciphered to have been a proud and unfortunate Tyrant; and yet was he well enough beloved by the People, because his vitious Inclination suited so well with theirs. In War he was neither skillfull, nor in Council prudent, but as Gildas decipheres others, Covetous and Luxurious, as insatiable in Lust, as but as Gildas decipheres others, Gluttony and Riot he wasted the publick Revenue to all other Villanies; in Gluttony and Riot he wasted the publick Revenue, and no otherwise endeavoured to propulse common impendent dangers, than by an ungrounded confidence and supine security. Yet the frequent Inroads of the Scots and Picts, and the dreadful effects thereof, awakened the People, and the Clamours of the Multitude him, and caused him at length to summon a great Council, to consult how some better course might be taken, for prevention of these Northern Mischiefs. They had had all along great thoughts of their own Valour and Abilities (as all People have which are destined to a Conquest) but the still continued smart was so great, which they received from so many reiterated blows, that it made them, though against their wills, feel their weakness and inability, to repel their Enemies. By general consent therefore it was resolved to call in some foreign Power to their relief, and hire an Army, which should repell these Rovers with such signal marks of their Valour, that they should not dare any more to look upon those grounds which contained the Carcasses of their so many slain Relations. The name of the Saxons was at this time very great, by reason of their several Exploits both at Sea and Land, their numerous Depredations and Invasions, they had made into most Countries lying toward the Sea. It was resolved to invite some of them over. They thought them poor, and wanting Habitation. They imagined they would be glad of an Employment, to take off their superfluous numbers, and get them a Livelihood abroad. They concluded they would be satisfied with reasonable pay, their necessities were so great. At the most they believed they would take it as a mighty favour to have some share of the most barren and inconsiderable part of that Countrey to inhabit, which by their toil and the expence of their blood, they should protect.

17. Ambassadors were accordingly sent, and those of the most eminent of the Nation, with great Rewards. But this was but to desire their aid and assistance, over and above, a strict League and Alliance with them. Though our Britains were poor-spirited enough, yet not so slavish and base minded as to offer them subjection, and the Dominion of themselves and their Country, can we believe, as the Saxon Authours for honour of their own Nation have recorded. One of them is so confident as to tell us the very Harangue the Ambassadors used, which was this: Worthy Saxons, the distressed Britains tired out, and overpowered by a perpetual invading Enemy, and bearing the same of your valour, have sent us hither to desire your aid. Their Countrey is both fertile and spacious, which they have offered us to submit to your Commands. Heretofore we lived with freedom under the obedience and protection of the Roman Empire. Next to the Romans we knew none more worthy than your selves, and therefore now implore your prowess for our relief. Let us not still be subject to our present Enemies. To any thing you shall think fit to impose we shall submit. Whatever the Ambassadors said or offered, the Saxons were very well pleased with the message, as being courted to that which they themselves had infinitely desired, and resolving not to be guilty of any miscarriage by their own delay, first return an obliging answer to the Ambassadors, as that the Britains might rest upon their friendship and fidelity, as such who would stand by them no less in their adverse than prosperous Estate. The Ambassadors return very joyfull, as expecting thanks for the success of their errand, and they are not deceived in their expectation, those that sent them now esteeming themselves made for ever.

Seet. 1.

Plures judicabant id decus desiderandum Vortigernio, quod esset vir inter virtus auctoritate, nobilitate, virtute summus.
Angl. Hist. lib. 3.
Nec manu promptus nec consilio bonus, ind ad illecebras carnis, poma convivia, sine fere vitiorum mancipium: quem subjugare avaritiam, sanguinem superbia, &c. Malmesbur. de Angl. l. 1.

Witichind.
Gest. Saxon. or. Lib. 1.
Germani audi. caute rem mit. te voiti peti. am a se ultra expellat, &c. Malm. Ubi supra.

Vortigern chosen King of the Britains.

His Character.

He calls a Council.

Who agree to require aid of the Saxons.

Accordingly Ambassadors are sent.

Sed monita tibi prestita non desunt, cum habueris preceptum per totius Britanniam magistrum e-legantem. Cevero igitur ne tibi quod a So-lommone notatur accidat.
Quasi qui excitat dormien-tem de gravi somno, sic qui curat sua filio sapientem, &c. p. 33.

18. It appears from what we have cited out of Gildas, that the Pagan Saxons in their way, were so Religious as to consult their Gods about the success of this expedition, who answered, that the Land to which they directed their course, they should hold for three hundred years, and half so much time spend in contest and bickerings with that Nation. From the three several sorts of People called Saxons, Angli and Jutes, in three long Ships, by them called Kynles, were sent a select Company, not so much considerable for number, and the courage and dexterity of the Men, under conduct of two Brothers, Hengist and Horja, of choicest Nobility amongst them, as defended in the fourth degree from Woden, from whose Loyns most of these barbarous Nations derived the several Pedegrees of their Kings, and whom, for the renown of his Acts, they made their God, sacrilegiously, as our Authour observes, dedicating to his memory the fourth day of the week, as the sixth to the worship of his Wife Frea. But they came not so willingly, but they were as joyfully received, the People running out to meet them, and offering them all acts of kindness and hospitality, and the King giving them his hearty thanks for the great pains and peril they had been pleased to undergoe for the sake of him and his Subjects. After some small conference and faith given and received on both sides, the Isle of Thanet is assigned them for their support, their engaging indefatigably to use their endeavours for protection of that Land, the Inhabitants whereof, as strictly engaged on the other side to give them ample rewards for their labours; within a little time they have full occasion to try their Metal. The Scots make their usual Inrodes without any apprehension of more resistance than the pitifull Britains were wont to make. But they find a fresh Gamester engaged, with whom, after some tryal made, they think it not fit to meddle, but retreat back to their receptacles, and are very unwilling afterwards to grapple with him.

Hengist and Horsa with the Saxons arrive.

And are seated in the Isle of Thance.

Another Company follow.

Raven married to Vortigern.

A third arrive.

The Saxons
and Britains quarrell.

19. The Saxons (or Angles) were as much elevated with their success, as the Scots were discouraged at their unusual disappointments, and Hengist, a Man of excellent Wit, as well as Valour, perceiving with whom he had to deal, under other pretences, sends back some of his Companions to acquaint his Countrey-men with the beauty and fertility of the Island, and the cowardise and forthness of the Inhabitants, as well King as People, inviting them to make themselves Masters of so good a fortune as now offered it self unto them. The Messengers easily perswaded such a Company to follow them as filled seventeen Vessels, and together with their Countreymen already landed, would make up a formidable Army. And along with them they brought the Daughter of Hengist (by the Britains called Roxen) for teauty a miracle of Nature, and by it as it seemed, as well as by her Father designed, as a spectacle for Men to gaze on, and therewith to be enamoured. They are invited to a Feast, and Hengist appoints her to wait at the Cupboard to Captivate with her looks the affections of the British Kings.
His device as speedily takes as executed. For Vortigern being exceedingly given to Women by his own Inclination, was immediately wounded by the Darts which proceeded from her Eyes, and could think of nothing else, could no way be cured, but by enjoying her, infomuch, that out of hand she must be his Wife. Hengist pretends an unwillingness, as loath the King should dishonour himself by so un-qual a Match, and at length seems unwillingly willing, being bought off by a gift of all the Countrey of Kent, (formerly Governed laudably by one Goron- gus) which munificence of Vortigern he was not able to withstand. The Barbarian perceiving now he had got such hold of him that he might be bold, so abused his Imprudence, as to perswade him to send over for Oda and Ebilis, his own and his Brothers Son (so may say his Brother himself) that as he took upon him the Protection of the Eastern, so they might defend the Northern Parts from the violence of the Scots. By the King's leave then with forty Vessels they Coasted about Britain, and coming to the Orcaades, suppressed both the Picts and Scots, and that part of the Island, which afterwards was called Northumberland, seated themselves, though without any Title or Name of Regality till the time of Ida, from whom the Kings of Northumberland descended. But this was not till long after,

20. Now the Saxons, being numerous, and strong enough to accomplish what they had designed, take occasion to pick a quarrel. They complain they are much Arrer in Pay, and when this occasion is removed, after a little pause, they find fault that it is too little, not at all answ'ring the pains and perils they undergoe, threatening War, and a seizure of the Land it self, except their allowance were augmented. Guorimer the Son of Vortigern, a young Man of far greater Sense and Spirit than his Father, could not any longer dissemble his Indignation, to see himself himself and his Countrymen so imposed on, and fully resolving to attempt the expulsion of these Strangers, broke his design to his Father, and obtained his consent for the putting of it in execution, and high time it was to doe it. For the Saxons, as we are informed by Gildas, making a League with the Picts and Scots, and issuing out of Kent, without any considerable resistance, waisted the whole Land in a manner as far as the Western Sea, making such havock of all things, that Towns and Castles were overturned, all sorts of People slain by heaps, and all places Sacred polluted and demolished. Such as escaped the Sword, either betook themselves to the Mountains, whither the same fate shortly after pursued them, or submitted to slavery worse than death it self, or fled to thick Woods and Rocks of the Sea; or else fled over the Sea into other Countries. Gworthius as strenuously as he could opposed himself; and the Monk of Malmesbury tells us, that after the Saxons had been in Britain seven years, the League was broken, and for twenty years Hostility continued amongst them, in which space many Skirmishes, or slight Engagements happened, but four set Battels, wherein both sides engaged with their utmost force. The British Writers here tell us; that Vortimer thrice straitened and besieged the Saxons in the Isle of Thanet; and when by reason of fresh supplies sent from Saxony, they broke through and escaped this danger; fought with them four other Battels, whereof three are specified by place and Circumstance. The first on the River Darwent, the second at Episford, where in Horfa, the Brother of Hengist, fell together with Kaiteger, the other Son of Vortigern. The third was in a Field by Stonar, called then in Latin, Lapis Turli; where he beat them into their Ships with such Execution and Conflagration, that they ventured no more to Land for the full space of five years.

Guortimer beats the Saxons.

Dice:

ventured no more to Land for the full space of five years.

21. This might seem altogether incredible, but that Gildas tells us how, after so great havoc and destruction made by them, they retired, which others interpret of returning home, notwithstanding the seeming easiness of the Conquest. In this five years space they will have Guortimer to have died, who desired he might be buried in the Port of Stonor, perfwaded that the secret virtue of his Bones would keep off the Saxons, from ever landing in that place, but they neglecting his Commands, buried him at Lincoln. The Saxon Annals relate these matters otherwise. As that in the first Engagement it was a drawn Battel in a place called Eglefshrip, where on one side tell Horfa the Brother of Hengist (from whence Horfe the place of his Sepulture took name) and on the other side Kaigis the second Son of the King. In the rest, Saxons or Angles had the better, and the Britains were forced to come to Terms: Guortimer their Captain now dead, who being of a different humour from his Father's easiness, would have excellently governed, if Almighty God had so pleased; but he being gone, the Affairs of his Countrey men went quite down the wind. After the death of Horfa, Hengist his Brother took the Royal Title upon him in Kent, in which year Matthew of Wells writes; that thrice he fought against the Britains, but not able to resist minifer writes; that thrice he fought against the Britains, but not able to resist and the valour of Vortimer, fled into Thanet, where he was daily vexed at Sea; and at length the Saxons left their Wives and Children behind them, and returned into Germany. And there they staid, according to what intelligence that Authour had, till such time as they heard of the death of Guortimer, who was poysoned by procurement of Raven his Father's Wife. With four thousand men Hengist returned into Britain, and with so great an Army so alarmed Vortigern and his Nobles, that they consulted how to oppose them, which being made known to Hengist by his Daughter, he sent to tell the King that he had no design against any person whatsoever, Vortimer excepted; who being now removed out of the way, he was ready to submit himself and all his men to his pleasure, to keep as many as he thought fit, and send back the rest into their Countrey. There are others that tell us how two years after the first Fight, wherein Horfa was slain in a Battel at Cresganford, Hengist, and Ese his Son slew of the Britains four chief Commanders and as many thousand men; the rest being totally routed and flying to London. That eight years after this, he renewed the War, and in a Battel at a place called Wippedes-fleet, slew twelve other Princes, and lost Wipped the Saxon Count from whom the place received its name. And in another Encounter (the place is uncertain) he gave them such a Defeat, that they left Camp and Baggage, and all behind them.

22. So different are Writers in their Relations of what passed in these obscure times; but from all laid together it should appear, that for a time the Invaders were repulsed and forced to retreat, if not home into Germany, to some remotest place of shelter and security; for the Battels were fought in Kent it self, and not

Sect. 1

- Darentum non Eboracense illud hic intelligendum, sed Darentum Cantium & Darentford sive Dartsford oppido illi apposito sat cognitum.

[illegible]

Sect. I. onely there, but upon the Sea, as the word Wippeds-fleet intimates to us. But Hengist being landed, invites Vortigern his Son-in-Law to a Feast, together with three hundred of his Nobles; some say the meeting was appointed for a Treaty, to order their Affairs. To be sure, he so ordered his matters, that having a number of his own men, sufficient to overpower these Britains, whom he knew to be the chief of those that could perform any thing either in Council or War against the Saxon Interest; he first caused them to raise a Quarrel, and then when they were warm with Wine, and more able to brawl than to defend themselves, the Watch-word was given, Nemet Coar Scanes, upon which they drew their Scimiters, and murdered all their three hundred Guests in the place. They had another kind of design upon Vortigern, knowing he would easily be drawn to what they would have him. He was onely bound and kept in custody, till for his Ransome he assigned them three Provinces, which were afterward called Essex, Suffex, and Middlesex. After this, some Authors tell us, that Vortigern returned to his solitary kind of Life in that Countrey, which from him was called Gworthigernaurt, and thence to a Castle of his own building in those parts, now called North-Wales, near to the River Tiebi; where living obscurely among his Wives, he was, as it is storied, burnt by fire from Heaven, at whose Prayer, whether German or Aurelius Ambrosius, it's not material to enquire. For the Reader must know that, according to the same Writers, he having committed Incest formerly with his own Daughter, was censured in a Synod, consisting both of Lay and Ecclesiastical Persons, and partly for that Reason, partly for fear of the Saxons, by advice of his Nobility, retired into that Countrey, now called Wales; where he built him a strong Castle (in Radnorshire), by advice of a young Prophet, by some called Ambrosius, and by others Merlin. His Son undertook the Government, and in his Absence reigned with great success. After his Death Vortigern, either by the power of his own Faction, or by universal consent resumed the Government, which Hengist understanding, was encouraged to return and practise upon his Sottihness and Credulity, with that success as we have now related.

23. The Britains having lost the flower of their Nation in the Massacre, were much startled at it to such a measure, as they began to think of their wicked Courses, and whither they were now bringing them, and began to be more sober, and to betake themselves to Divine Assistance. They were encouraged by some other Retreat of the Saxons, upon what occasion it's uncertain, and by the great hopes conceived of Aurelius Ambrosius, who being descended of Roman Ancestours, but such as had born Regal Dignity in the Island, and lost their lives against the Picts and Scots, had with their applause succeeded Vortigern; who, if credit may be given to some Authors, as much out of fear of him and the Romans, as of the Picts and Scots themselves, first called in the Saxons. Under Conduct of this Aurelius Ambrosius, or Ambrosius Aurelianus (as Beda calls him) they took courage, and provoking their Enemies to Battle had the better of them. He is said (by the Monk of Malmsbury) to have made much use in his Wars of one Arthur, and what Arthur should this be, but him whom others make the Son of Pendragon his Brother. But so various and uncertain are the Reports of our British and Saxon Authors, that although much may be written, yet very little of certainty have we either of the one or the other. As for Ambrosius Aurelianus, Ninius, as we lately hinted about Vortigern, will have him to have been famous, before the coming of the Saxons; according to which Assertion Sigebert begins his Reign with their coming into the Island, at the year of our Lord 446; and talks of his Reigning and Fighting against them, for full five and forty years, contrary to the Evidence of all History. Yet do some others tell us such Stories as yet farther cast back his Reign into the 430 year of our Lord, which Henry of Huntingdon brings forward again to the year assigned by Sigebert, wherein he writes, that at a place called Arilestren, he led one Wing of the Battle against the Saxons, and Gortimer and Catigern, the Sons of Vortigern, the two others. And this he accounts the seventh year after their coming into the Island. Geoffrey of Monmouth writes, that he burnt Vortigern, who after the death of his Son Vortimer had resumed the Government; which Matthew Florilegus notes to have happened in the year 496, ending the Reign of Aurelianus, and his Life together, in the year 497. Heitor Boetius the Scotch Writer, begins his Reign at 498, which he writes to have continued almost seven years. But his Countryman Buchanan agrees with the Welsh David Povel in assigning 19 years to his Government, which he will have begun in the year 481, and ended just in 500.

Vortigern's Companions murdered by Hengist and his Saxons.

Essex, Suffex, and Middle- sex, assigned to the Saxons.

Nim.

Malmsb. quod prin.

Aurelius Am- brosius suc- ceeds Vorti- gern in the Government.

Hist. lib. i.
c. 16.

Joannes Tim- otheus ubi duciat a- ud Officium in Primord.
Eccles. Britan. p. 447.

Hist. Scot.
lib. f. 8, 9.
Rever. Scotic
lib. 45.
in Britan. Re- gum Catalogo.

24. But concerning Ambrosius, none is more out of the way than Baronius the Cardinal, who imagined, and that for many Reasons, he tells us, that he lived in Exile under Odoacer the King of the Heruli in Italy; whereas, not one tolerable shew of reason can be assigned, more than his very Name, of which there were several besides this our Britain, who (he says) took the Purple, but not the Name of Emperor upon him, which he himself first attempted, but not his Parents, as Beda hath it, who writes, that these things happened in the Reign of Zeno the Emperor. The Cardinal as to his matter was also imposed on by the false Copy of Gildas, published by Polydore Virgil, wherein the Singular number is pend instead of the Plural, which fault crept also into that Copy of Beda's Chronicle, which Paulus Diaconus used; and the error became so infective, that Onuphrius Fanninus and Ottavio de Strada in their Catalogues of the Roman Emperours, talk of the Emperour Cesar Ambrosius Aurelianus, Pius Felix, Augustus, as who was saluted Emperour in Britain in the year 475, the 1227 of the City, and slain not long after. So much are we in the dark as to Ambrosius, whose Commendations yet we are told that Gildas an excellent Historian of the Britains wrote, above other Kings; nay, in an elegant style faithfully transmitted his Acts to Posterity. Geoffrey of Monmouth indeed writes, that he had a Book which Gildas the Authour intitled, concerning the Victory of Aurelius Ambrosius. It's to be feared the Title belied Gildas, but whatever it was, from it and a British Copy brought out of Armenia, and given him by Walter the Archdeacon of Oxford, Geoffrey tells a long Story of this matter, whereof learned Vlber thus gives us the Summ.

475

Overthrow Hengist in Battle.

Who is slain.

489

And succeeded by his Son Offric in the Kingdom of Kent.

25. Vortigern being dead, the Saxons betook themselves to the Parts beyond Humber, where they were no sooner arrived, but Ambrosius was at their heels. In his passage he was much affected to behold the Countries so desolate, but especially at the sight of so many Churches laid level with the Earth, which he promised should be rebuilt if he got the better. Hengist brought into the field against him, about two hundred thousand Armed men, at a place called Moribeli, but engaging in Battle was worsted, and he himself, near to the City of Conan, by the Britains called Cair-Conan and Cuningburg by the English, was taken Prisoner by Eldole the Duke of Claudiocestre. The City being also afterward taken, and they coming to consider what should be done with Hengist, Eldole the Bishop of Claudiocestre, the Brother of Eldole, a man of great Prudence and Religion, harangued to this effect. *Though all should agree to set him at liberty, I myself would cut him in pieces. For I would imitate the Example of the Prophet Samuel, who having in his power Agag the King of Amaleck, bowed him in pieces, saying: As thou hast made Mothers Childless, so will I make thy Mother thus day Childless among Women. Doe ye in like manner to Hengist, who is another Agag: Which said, Eldole led Hengist out of the City and slew him. This Marlin, the Flowergatherer, writes to have happened in the 489 year our Lord, adding, that to Hengist succeeded his Son Offric in the Kingdom of Kent, being surnamed Æsc, from whom all the Kings of Kent to this day are called Æsc-kynges. He differs but one year in his Account from Ethelwerd and the Saxon Annalists, who making no mention at all of the death of Hengist, neither of the many Victories which the Britains obtained over the Saxons, write that Æsc succeeded in the Kingdom of Kent the year preceding.*

26. Geoffrey proceeds, and tells us that Ambrose besieged Otha the Son of Hengist, who had shut up himself in Tork, and Eufia his Kinsman, who had done the like in the City Alclud or Dumbritton; and constraining them to yield themselves, granted them the Countrey lying near to Scotland. For all his Intent was, how to restore his Kingdom to its ancient condition, his study how to reform the Churches, renew the vigour and force of the Laws, establish Peace and the course of Justice. Thence therefore he went to Gwintun, to repair it as other places; which when he had performed, by the advice of Eldade the Bishop, he proceeded to the Monastery near Cair Caradoc, now called Saleberie, where lay the Confessors and Princes, whom wicked Hengist had betrayed. There in the Mount of Ambrius (the Founder in old time as is reported) was a Monastery of three hundred Friars. By others this is called the Mount of Ambrose, and said to be that place, now known by the Name of Stakenegs, where the prodigious Piles of Stones were not, as Polydore affirms, raised by Ambrose in memory of these Princes, as is vulgarly believed, but by the Britains in memory of Ambrose himself, who at this place ended his life in Battle. He tells us this Monument is to be seen in the Diocese of Salisbury near to a Village called Ambfery, or rather Ambresbury, the Name.

Sect. I.
ad Ann. 476.
477.

Pro induci- indamus legi- mur.

In Scoticro- nica apud Off- ricum, p. 449.
lib. 4. c. ult.

Hodie Confis- burgh in agro Eboracenſi ad
Danum vel
Danum fluvium.

Polyd. Virgil.
Anglic. Hist. lib. 3. i.

SECT. I. Name denoting the Village of Ambrose, whose name or that of Ambrius (if any such there was) the famousness of the Relicks of St. Melorus (or Mellor) quite buried afterwards in the said Village. But as to the British Princes slain by Hengist, that their memory might be perpetuated at the suggestion of Tremoun or Tremorin the Archbishop of Carleon, Ambrosius Aurelius, as Geoffrey tells the Story, sent for Ambrosius Merlin a Prophet, and with an Army of fifteen thousand Armed men under Conduct of his Brother Other Pendragon, sent him into Ireland, whence he brought from the Mountain Killara, notwithstanding the opposition of Gillomant King of the Island, that noble Structure of Stones, which he placed in Salisbury Plain, where at this day it is to be seen. Though this be no better than an old Wives Tale, Giraldus Cambrensis makes mention of it, as that this Structure of Stones, being called Chorea Gigantum (because Giants had brought them from the utmost Borders of Africa, and placed them in the Plain of Kildare) was by the Divine Diligence of Merlin, at the desire of Aurelius Ambrosius King of the Britains brought out of Ireland into this Island, and placed in the very same posture they had formerly stood in that place, where the flower of Britain, had under pretence of Peace, been wickedly butchered by the perfidious Saxons.

Topograph.
dist. cap. 19.
Non procul a Castra Nefensi.

27. In reference to what Giraldus writes of Ireland, the late Learned Primate thereof observes, that in the Countrey of Kildare, about two Miles from the Castle he mentions, two such like Piles are to be seen, which in that Countrey, they call the Long Stones, although the Writer of the British History seems to have Killair, which is situate in the Western Meath, where Giraldus affirms in his time to have been extant, a certain Stone called the Navel of Ireland, as seated in the middle thereof, for which yet at the King's County at Birra, another hallowed Stone is at this day shewed. But to that Pile of Stones in Salisbury Plain, none in all Ireland seems more like than what is to be seen in the County of Corke, near a Town called Cloughbrekilty, from Stones lying in a woody place; where are also to be seen the Foundations of a very large House, which the Inhabitants report to have belonged to Sir John Mandeville, so famous for his Travels of four and thirty years. But for the completing of the Fable (which thence seems to have had its rise, that in Ireland such kinds of Massy piles have been seen) we must take notice of what Geoffrey of Monmouth writes concerning the return and Success of the British Army. Being arrived with a prosperous Gale, they began with their Stones to set out the Sepulchres of the murdered Nobility. This being made known to Aurelius, he sends out Messengers through the several Parts of Britain, to assemble both the Clergy and People to the Mount of Ambrius, with Joy and Honour to adorn the foresaid burying Place. They being met accordingly on the day prefixed, Aurelius sets the Diadem upon his Head, and Royally celebrates the Feast of Whitsuntide, together with the three following days. Having bestowed Honours upon such of his Subjects as had deserved, and particularly bestowed the Metropolitane See of Tork upon Samson, a Man of great fame for Religion, and that of Caer Leon upon Dabritius, he commanded Merlin to set up the Stones he had brought from Ireland. He in obedience to his Commands erected them about the burying place just in the same manner they had formerly stood in Killair in Ireland, and plainly shewed, that wit prevailed above strength.

28. Such is the Fable concerning Stoneheng (which though a Fable the Reader is to know) and concerning Ambrose and his Prophet Merlin. But as there is no Law against the Improvement of Fables, Ninnius the other British Historian joins King and Prophet in the same Person, making that Child which prophesied to Portigen the Son of a Roman Consul, and calling him by the Name not of Merlin but Ambrose; as that he was concealed by his Mother for fear of the King, who yet also as he had confessed his Parentage, either to reward his Predictions or as his Right bestowed upon him all the rest of Britain, retiring himself to a solitary Life. Amongst these Incertainties of this, we may be certain from a more sure Testimony of Gildas, that whatever otherwise this Ambrose was, the Britains owed much unto his Courage and Conduct, by which a stop was for the present given to the violent proceedings of the Saxons, although their Writers conceal all things, that made against the Reputation of their Nation; recording nothing but Success and Victories on their own side. And indeed shortly after they had sufficient occasion to do it, notwithstanding the real Performances of Ambrose, and all the Romantic fine Tales told of his Nephew Arthur. For whatever became of Hengist; if he was slain in the North, in the South another of his Nation appeared, Elia by Name, who made himself King of another part of the Island. In the Year 477, (eleven before the death of Hengist, as some place it) with his three

Elia and his Saxons arrive in Suffex.

three Sons Cymen, Pleting and Cissa, in three ships he arrived at a place called Cymen-shore in Suffex, whereupon the Inhabitants being call into a grievous fright flocked in vast multitudes, to the place of their landing from all Quarters. The Saxons being tall of Stature, and very stout and vigorous, received them courageously who came hand over head upon them, and notwithstanding their great Numbers put them to flight with such slaughter as might be expected from so unequal an engagement, and drove them into the wood, which the Saxon Chronology calls Andredes Leage. The Saxons seized upon the Maritime parts of Suffex, and still enlarged their Territories till the ninth year after their Arrival, wherein the Britains found themselves so concerned, that they joined their Forces together, and engaged them near a place called Mercedeshurnansted. The Victory was doubtful, both Armies drawing off after much loss to their own Quarters which caused Elia to send for fresh supplies, as Henry of Huntingdon writes, though others are unwilling to let him pass out of the Field without Conquest, according to their Custom. However five years after this, Elia and Cissa his Son laid siege to a little City called Andredes Ceaster, and taking it used their Conquest with such severity, that they left not one British therein alive.

29. Now is Britain become the Field of Fortune, News is perpetually brought to the Saxons, of the Success of their Countreymen, and there is no one Eminent for Birth or Arms, but promises himself a good share of so fertile a Countrey, together with a Royal Title. In the fortyseventh year after their first coming into Britain, as Henry of Huntingdon, Count Cerdic (or Certic) the tenth in Lineage from Woden, an old and well practised Souldier, with Cenric his Son, and so many men as he could transport in five Vessels, arrived at a place which from him was called Cerdicesfere. No sooner did the ships appear, but the Inhabitants of these Parts sufficiently warned heretofore, stand upon their Guard, and as the Invaders endeavour to land, manfully oppose them. But the Saxons still advance, and what ground they once gain never more forsake it, till at last, the Britains in vain resisting, they get sufficient footing in this Part also of the Island, inso much that the Britains vehemently suspecting what the Industry and Valour of Cerdic and his Son might farther produce, combined against them with all the Power they could possibly make. But within seven years after their coming they had cause to be a little diverted from them by a fresh Onset of new Gamesters, who arrived also out of Germany. One Port with his two Sons Bleda and Mugla with two Vessels arrived at Portsmouth (so named from him) and without much Difficulty compelling such as unadvisedly made head against them, and having slain a young but British Nobleman of great Eminency, carved for himself and Followers another share out of the Countrey. Yet it seems the Adventures of Cerdic, made the Britains most apprehensive, and therefore seven years after the Arrival of Port, and the sixtieth after the first coming of the Saxons, the Archdeacon of Huntingdon reckons Nazaleod the greatest King of the Britains, a Man both of a great Name and haughty Spirit, (from whom that Region was named Nazaleod, which reached to the Place afterward called Cerdicesford.) gathered the whole force of Britain to engage him. Cerdic aware of the danger desired and obtained aid of Esfai King of Kent, Elia King of Suffex, and of Port, and his Sons, on which done he divided his Army into two wings, whereof the Right he led himself, and committed the left to the Conduct of his Son Cinrick. Nazaleod, perceiving the Right wing to be the stronger of the two, bent his whole strength and fury against it with such Execution, that after great slaughter made of his men he forced Cerdic to run away, but pursuing with more heat than caution, the left wing commanded by Cinrick took the Advantage, and falling on his Rere renewed the Battle with such Vigour, that he himself was slain in the place, and with him for Company five thousand of his Followers.

30. Such were the Circumstances of the Battle, if the Archdeacon doth not take the liberty to frame these, and many more of his own head. But who this Nazaleod should be is much controverted; for the Britains own no such King by this Name. Some imagine it might be the British surname of Ambrose, who it's certain about this time fought with the Saxons, with various fortune. Others think it the Name of Other Pendragon his Brother, whom Heitor Boethius writes to have governed the Britains at this time; but he adds that this Nazaleod, was a Man of obscure Original, and that Other made him his General, more out of respect to his Person, with which he had long been familiar, than to his Valour or Military skill; but being the best Captain next the King himself, he was slain in Battle together with fifteen thousand Men. Matthew of Westminster tells us how Other Pendragon

Cerdic and his Followers invade the Land.

Another invasion by one Port.

To Ambrose succeeded Other Pendragon.

The Saxons obtain a great Victory over the Britains.

SECT. I. Chorol. Saxo-ad Ann. D.
Dep. prom Alle to Bpzen
III. Sunn Plencius Cyprianus Dym ryman on da trope da nemet Cymener opa 7 dep oflogion monite yearly runc on please beny poa on bone pabu be Gennet
if Antepper leage.
Himindom-fist hene zugnam pout ad novum annum
adventus eo.
rum. Chronol.
verd Saxonicis
ad An. 475.
Illa loca vocatur Mercudesburne hac verd pescap-rebe.
Chronol. Saxo-ad An.
Himindom-fist. l. 2.
Chronol.
Saxo. ad
An. 477.
Hep. cum-on, apegna calpomon on Bpzen cepoc 7 Cynpichir
yana mio pid pcpian in bone rebe be 17 gepben Cepicet hopa 7 dy lancorze pis yum puphcan.
Cerdic ora vel Cerdic-ford, mifer Cerdic. l. 2. contra Chronol.
Chronol. Saxo-
ad An. D.
Himindom-fist. sup.

Scct. I. Pendragon now lay sick, and therefore sent this Man whom he calls Nathaniorh against the Saxons, who slew him and fifteen thousand of his Britains. But forasmuch as all the Saxon Annals unanimously call him a King, and so doth Ethelwald and Florentius Wigoniensis, and the Archdeacon faith he was the greatest King of the Britains; Learned Usher conjectures, that his Name might indeed be Natanleod, and that in respect of the great things achieved by him, he might have the Surname of Uther, viz. Admirable or Horrible, for so Uther signifies, Mab Uter being an horrible Son in the British Language, and Arthur an horrible Bear, or an Iron Mall wherewith the Jaws of Lions are broken. Could we fix upon this the Chronology of these obscure times might be made much clearer, and the beginning of Arthur his Son, that King of whom Writers so much talk, and so much differ.

30. Though Cerdic, (or Certick) obtained the Victory, yet with so much loss and danger, that finding still some difficulties, he was glad to admit of fresh Supplies. Six years after the Battel, came two of his Nephews Stuf and Wingar with three Ships, and landed at Cerdicsford, where they found the Britains in a posture of warmly receiving them. For if Henry of Huntingdon be to be credited, the Captains had marshalled their men according to the exact Laws of War. When they marched with Advice and Caution, some on the Mountains, and others on the Vallies; as soon as the Sun arose and shone upon their guided Shields, the very Mountains therewith glittered, and the Air it self became inflamed and resplendent, wherewith the Saxons were exceedingly affrighted. Yet drawing near to Battel when the two resolute Armies came to joyn, the valour of the Britains, became inferiour, because (as our Writer takes upon him to judge) God had despised them, and the Victory was evident on the part of the Saxons, who hereby obtained places not a few, and the Prowess of Certic became terrible throughout the Countrey. These that came over still prospering in this manner, not a man there was in Germany who was either touch'd with a sense of honour, or not well satisfied with his present fortune, but must over into Britain, and accept of better, which so easily offered it self. Therefore not long after the War, whereof we write, many more flocked into the Island, and as Huntingdon tells us, seized both upon Eaflange and Merce, though they continued some time in confusion, not reduced under obedience of their respective Kings. For many Noble men there were who scrambled amongst themselves, and in great haste and Emulation snatched and seized on such Regions as they could. Hence innumerable Contentions and Battels followed against one another for such and such Territories, of which we are ignorant, as well as of the Names of these Cavaliers, so numerous they were.

31. But for all their success, it's certain they found great opposition, and were not seldomer (probably oftner) defeated than the Britains, who were onely tired out and overpowered by their constant swarming into the Island, there being no end of their Numbers; however the Saxon Writers conceal all that makes not for the enhancing of the Valour and Victories of their Ancestours. Great pity it is that, as is usual in great Desolations, the Ruines of Britain buried these Monuments in the Rubbish, which should have transmitted the noble Acts of its Captains to Posterity, if any such Monuments there were, if the prospect of Death and Banishment, of the loss of all that was near and dear unto them, did not divert their thoughts, and their deplorable condition afford them no other Ink than Tears, wherewith to describe these valiant Deeds, which how daring and gallant soever, were rendered at length useles and ineffectual, by the Crowds of a perpetual swarming Multitude. Gildas was no way partial for his Countrey-men, to say any great matters of their Valour, yet from that little he mentions of Ambrose, and of the Victory they obtained at Mount Badon, as also of the vicissitude of success betwixt the Nations, sufficiently evidence they had Commanders sometimes who gave sufficient proof of their Courage and good Abilities. Though as to the mentioning of any of these Captains, we are destitute of Authentick Writers (Gildas excepted) yet Fame, and the Report of some Authours (but such as wrote several hundreds of years after his supposed Reign) make a loud noise with the Name of Arthur the Son of Uther Pendragon, as Geoffrey of Monmouth is pleased to surname him.

32. Concerning the time of this Arthur, (suppose his Person to have been) there is more variety of Opinions than concerning that of Ambrose, so formerly related.

(a) One placeth the beginning of his Reign, so high as to have it flourish in the year 458. (b) Another bringeth it down nine years, and placeth it at the

467 year of our Lord, the eleventh of the Emperor Leo, and the last of Hilary the Roman Bishop. (b) Some say he flourished in the Reign of Zeno the Successour of Leo, and another will have him but to have been born in the twelfth year of this Emperor, which fell into the year 485. (b) All these were Foreigners. Of our own Writers, William (c) the Monk of Malmesbury, Geoffrey (d) of Monmouth, Matthew (e) of Westminster, and the Authour of (f) Eulogium would have him made King at fifteen years of Age; whereas (g) Ralph of Chester, John (h) of Tinmouth, and George (i) Buchanan the Scotchman, defers this till his eighteenth, Ralph of Baldes was of Opinion, that he began his Reign in the year DXV, as also was Thomas Radburn; Matthew of Westminster, and David Powell, place it at DXVI; Buchanan at DXXVIII; and Hector Boethius casts it back to DXXII. William of Malmesbury in another place writes, that Cerdic coming into Britain in the CCCXCIV year of our Lord, so beat and terrified the Britains, that he forced them to submit and yield themselves to his victorious Arms, and in the twenty fourth year after his coming into the Island, in the Western part thereof established his Monarchy. But in the place before cited, he writes, that in the tenth year of this Cerdic, Arthur began to reign over the Britains; with whom several others, lately mentioned, concur; placing his beginning at the year DXXVIII. To this one adds, that Cerdic often ingaging with Arthur, always came off with Victory, so that Arthur being tired out, after that Cerdic had been in Britain six and twenty years, took an Oath from him, and gave him the possession of the two Shires, Hants and Somerset. Leland that renowned Antiquary, from other Authority affirms this done after Cerdic had been in Britain but twelve years, viz. in the year DVI. Thomas Radburn to his Account, add ten years more with this Note farther, that Cerdic for an Annual Tribute permitted to the Inhabitants of Cornwall, the free exercise of the Christian Religion.

33. But however, Arthur was beaten and tired out by Cerdic the Saxon King: There is great noise made of his overthrowing the Saxons in no fewer than twelve several Battels. The first of these, they say, was fought near the Mouth of a certain River, called Glenus or Glenn; the second, third, fourth, and fifth, near another River in the British Tongue called Dulgas or Duglas; the sixth at a Rivers side called Bassas; and the seventh in the Wood of Chelidon, which in British had the Name of Catit Celidon. Matthew of Westminster bestows this Flower upon this Battel. In the year of our Lord DXVIII, Arthur King of the Britains (faith he) having got together a great Army, marched therewith to the City, called then, Caerlindcoit, and now Lincoln; where finding out the Saxons, he made an unheard of slaughter of them; for in one day there fell of them six thousand men, of whom some were drowned, others killed in the fight, or in the flight; for he left not off pursuing them, you must know, till they came to the Calidonia Wood, when they rallied and made Head against him. Arthur perceiving their Resolution, caused Trees to be cut down and the Trunks thereof so placed about them, that they should have no way to escape, resolving there to starve them to death. Of this they being sensible, begged leave they might return into Germany, though with naked Bodies, to which he consented, after he had spoiled them of all they had, and taken Hostages for the payment of a Tribute. But enough verily of this Battel. The eighth was fought near (not the River but) the Castle of Suinnon, where all the day he carried the Image of the Virgin Mary upon his Shoulders. The ninth in the City Leogis, in British called Caerleon. The Tenth in the shoar of the River, which we (faith Huntingdon) called Traitebeuroit. The eleventh upon the Hill Brenoin, by us (faith he) called Cathbregon, or Catheregion. And the last was fought at the Hill of Badon, where he himself, without assistance of any other Britain, slew four hundred and forty men. These Battels and the places thereof, faith the same Authour, doth Gildas the Historiographer set forth; all which places yet are to our Age unknown, which we think came to pass by God's Providence for the despising of popular air, flattering praise, and transitory fame. However many Battels were fought, wherein sometimes the Saxons, and otherwhiles the Britains had the Victory: But the more Saxons that were lost in fight, the more came to their succour, being invited by the Countries round about.

34. However true may be his Story of the Battels, the name of this Authour is false, for Gildas it was not, but Ninius that was his Relator. For the eleven they must pass, and still continue as unknown, as the Names of the places where they were fought; but for the Battel at Mount Badon, that such an one there

To Uther-Pendragon succeeded Arthur.

Sect. 1. there was at this Hill, is out of doubt from the certain Testimony of a true Gildy, whoever was then the British General. Here Matthew the Flowergatherer strews his flowers or his Romantic Stories about him, and joining the matter of this Ingagement, with that of the other in the Caledonian Wood, tells us, that it repented Colgrin, Baldulph and Cheldrick the Saxons, that they had made an Agreement with Arthur. Returning therefore into Britain, they landed at Totnes, and last besieged the City of Badon. Arthur receiving the news, commanded their Hostages to be hanged, then hastening toward the Siege, commanded all to be in Arms. He having already on his Corset, sets on his Head an Helmet, whereon is engraven the Image of a Dragon. On his Shoulders he hangs a Target, called Prideux, whereon was painted the Image of the Blessed Virgin, which he often called to mind. Being also girt with the best Caliburnian Sword, into his right hand a Lance he takes, named Iron; and having given all convenient Orders, boldly sets upon the Pagans. They stood manfully to it all the day, and killed many of the Britains. The Sun growing low they seized upon the Mount adjoining, and for that Night used it as a Camp, whither the next Morning Arthur with his men ascended. But in ascending he lost many of them, the Sax- ons having the advantage of the upper ground. But the Britains having with great valour reach'd the Hill top, most dreadfully laid about them, and made as dreadful laughter of their Enemies, enraged at their difficulty and loss. The Saxons courageously resisted, not fearing to stretch out their Breasts towards the points of Spears and Swords, and much of the day, was spent, when Arthur having drawn his Caliburn or Sword, called upon the Name of the blessed Virgin Mary, and rushing amongst the thickest Troops of his Enemies, whomsoever he struck he killed without any more to do; neither ceased he to slay till he had slain no fewer than four hundred and forty men. Here fell Colgrin and Baldulph with his Brother and many thousands of Barbarians. But Cheldrick perceiving the danger of his Companions, was so wise as to run away with the remainder of the Army, whom the King commanded Cador the Duke of Cornwall to pursue. Finding no place of security in stragling Companies, they came at last to the Isle of Thanet, whither yet the Duke followed them, and never rested till Cheldrick being slain, the rest gave up themselves into his Hands.

35. So doth Matthew tell the tale in conformity with Geoffrey of Monmouth, who setting it out at length, hath this Circumstance, that the Saxons having Badon the Countrey as far as the Severn Sea, thence took their way to the City of Wadon, which they befiged: After that Arthur being entred then into the Province of Somerfet and perceiving what was done, animated his Souldiers to Battel, who being cheared up by the Benediction of Dubricius Archbithop of Caerleon, first drove the Enemy up to the Hill, and the day following utterly routed them. This City of Badon is, as John of Tinnmouth and others rightly observe, the same with that we now call Bath, to the Britains known by the Name of Caer Badon, as well as Tr Exintant Twymin, in Ptolemy called TAATA OEPMA, in Antoninus Aque Solis, and by the Saxons Banapenerce & Bæ B par, and from Diseafed People which flocked to the Hot waters Acmn cerper: In Stephanus we read it Badica, and in Latin by the name of Bathonia. The Hill seemeth to be no other than the very fame, which now is called Bannefdown, over a little Village near this City, which they call Bathstone, on which there are Banks and a Rampyre yet to be seen. And the vale which runneth along the River Avon is named in British Nant Badon, or the Vale of Badon. As for the time wherein the Battel was fought, Gilda, according to the best reading of his Text, tells us, that from that to the writing of his Epiftle, had intervened forty years and one month, the Battel and his Nativity having fallen into the fame year. This (as Matthew of Westminster tells us) was of our Lord the DXX, with whom consents the Chronographer of the Britains, who reckons from this Battel of Badon to the death of Arthur, two and twenty years. By which account Gilda must have been born in the said year DXX, and have written the Epiftle, now extant, in the year DLXIII.

36. This is the laif Batrel faid to have been fought by Arthur against the Saxons. But many other Exploits are told to have been done by him, as well within Britain as without. Howel the Albanian, or King of Scotland, the Brother of Gild—us Albanus (not Gildas whose Epistle we have so much spoken of, but one elder than he) a young Prince of great valour and hopes he slew, which that we may not take for a Fable were told, by one concerned for the Britiſh Hiſtory, that in Venedotia the place is yet to be ſeen, which retains the memory of the Batrel, where is erected a great Stone bearing the Name of the faid Howel according to the the custom of the Ancients of perpetuating the memory of such like things. But Matthew of Westminster presents us with a flower which grew quite in another Garden. He talks of one Howel of Hoel, King of the lesser Brittain, the Ad Am Gra-Sisters Son of Arthur by Dubritius the King of the American Britains. That Ar- tie. 517.

thur having besieged Tork, and frighted thence to London by the coming of Ghethur with seven hundred Ships out of Germany, sent to his Nephew to let him know the distressed condition of Brittain, who, understanding the danger wherein his Uncle stood, with an Army of fifteen thousand men, and the next fair wind, arrived at the Port of Hamon. He tells us that Arthur received him with joy and honour, becoming his Quality and Relation; and for four years after hath not one word concerning him, till the year after the fight at Badon, he writes how Arthur received news, that the Scots and Pills had besieged him in the City Alchid, where he lay sick. Hereupon the Uncle with all speed hastened to relieve Arthur; which when the Enemy heard, he fled to a place called Mureis, whither Arthur followed and besieged them. But they fled out by night, and got to the Lake of Lumony; whereupon he got four Ships together; and for seven days together besieged them in the Island; where being starved with hunger thousands of them died, which moved the Bishops of the Country bare foot and bare leg and with tears in their eyes to beseech him to have mercy on a miserable People, and permit them to inhabit some portion of the Country, though under the Yoke of perpetual servitude. Arthur, good man, overcome by the tears of the Bishops, whom all the water of the Lake could not before this mollify, granted them pardon at their request.

don at their request.

37. Two years after this, when he had restored Britain, you must know, into its ancient Estate, he married a Wife called * Guenhumara (having now leisure enough to doat) one that was defended of the Noble Stock of the Romans; and educated in the House of the Duke of Cornwall; a Lady surpassing in Beauty all the Ladies of the whole Island. Now doth he invite all notable Persons from all quarters, and becomes to pleasant in his House, that both by putting on forsooth, and wearing his Armour; by speaking and his demeanour, he provokes at distant People to Emulation; insomuch that the Fame of his Bounty and Honesty being divulged through divers Countries, all Foreign Kings, either loved or feared him. And there was good reason; now behold his exploits abroad. With his mighty Navy he first Invaded † Ireland, the King whereof, Gillamur, for all his Bravado's, being taken Prisoner, all his Grandeens were forc'd to come and submit themselves. Then made he nothing of waisting with Fire and Sword, ‡ Holland, Guateland, and the Isles Orcaides, all which he subdued under Tribute; which done he returned into Britain. || Here, it seems, he staid to breath himself a matter of 7 years. Then casting in his mind, and could you blame him, how to become Master of all Europe: he resolves to begin Northward, and drive all before him: He Sails to the King of the Countrey dead

These he * Norway, whither, when come, he finds Sichetien the King of Denmark, Sails to Nor- who had left Loth the Sifters Husband of Arthur his Successour, being his own way. who had left Loth the Sifters Husband of Arthur his Successour, being his own Nephew, and a young Man of admirable goodness and beauty. As young as he was, he had a Son by name Walwane, of twelve years of Age, sent to Vigilius the Pope to breed, from whence he received the Girdle of War. Arthur finding things at this pass, having fittud the Norwegians, advanced Loth to the Crown, and for Joy, would not follow on his Conquest, but returned again into Britain, but not without a desire to conquer Gall also, which he mightily, yea, exceeding mightily thirsted after. His thirst continued three years very vehement, and at length forced him to take the Sea to quench it; which having prosperously per-fused, with no more trouble than what the first Penner of the History was put to, he conquered Neustria; afterward called Normandy, and proceeding farther, wasted all the Provinces of Gall, killed Frislo a Tribune in a Duel, had surrendred to him the City of Paris, and toward the West, conquered all Anjou, Poitou, Gascogne, and every Foot of Aquitain. After which after he had Conquered And so for Ged.

38. The year following, being certainly out of breath, Artur, and there met with all Gall almost at a bit, he came to Augstodinnam or Artur, and there he with Lucius the Conful of Rome, being thence come to oppofe him; but he met with thing of killing both him and all his Roman Gallants near Lengria, in a Valley called (as truly) Seisfe. In the fecond year after this, the Sun was darkened from its rifing till nine a Clock, envious it feems and not willing to behold the Succels of brave Artur, who having now fubdued all the Provinces about the Alpes prepared to go to conquer Rome. His Name by this time of day was become mighty throughout the World, whereupon Princes came far and near to live and learn

Camden in Somersetshire.

520

Arthur slays Howel King of Scotland.

Vide Uffer.
Primord.
p. 677.

In insula Mynaw sive An-glesea.
Joan. Priscus.

* Mathæus : 7 Westmonast.
ad Ann. 523.

† Idem ad An 525.
|| Idem ad An
533.

r- * Legibus Ed nd wards Confes
nt foris. adjicitur quod confcede

Britannia in unum, quod expulit Sara canos & im

micos à Reg-no, quod fuit jugavit Nogram & om-nes insulas

ars. ultra eam, sc of Islandiam, (I to Greenlandia

Snechordam, Hiberniam, Gurlandiam Deciam, Se

the Winlandian ling Curlandian
W.N. Roe, Femelandian. Winlandian.

ain, landiam,
ling Flandriam, d at Lappam, &

pas- omnes alia to, terras, & wa- fulas Orien tis Oceani

dred Ruffian 1 Lappa, sci iction, posuit Or tales met Bani Bri

Regni Brit
n.e. Alii cunt eum rosolytia fuisse pro alley rum. O

 kened mium!
 d the Idem ad 536.

at the † Idem at become 537.
e, and Idem ad 539.

learn

SeCT. 1. learn under him, and to be refreshed with his facetious manner of converse. But lest you should think this a wonder, you must know all this was foretold by Merlin the Prophet of the Britains, who affirmed, That oppressed Britain should prevail, and resist the Cruelty of Strangers. For a * Boar of Cornwall should succour it, and tread his Feet on the Necks of the Enemies. The Islands of the Ocean should be sub-jected to his Power, and he should possess the Gallian Forests. The House of Julius should tremble at his Fierceness, and his Exit should be doubtfull. But he should be celebrated in the Mouth of the People, and his Acts should be meat to them that should declare them.

Mordred Usurps.

Several Presages of Mischief, ensuing.

Is set upon by King Arthur.

And after feveral bloody Battles is slain.

Arthur dies of his wounds.

39. But, for all this, heavy tidings! this Boar is forced back again to recover his own Stye, whilst he is in his way to take up his Quarter in the best Palace Rome can afford. You must know, that Arthur at his setting out of Britain, had committed the Care thereof to Mordred his Nephew, together with his Wife Guenhumar. Mordred, his back being turned, usurps; sets the Diadem on his Head, and takes Guenhumar to be his Bedfellow; joining in Confederacy with those Saxons, who came in eight hundred ships which they fitted out of Germany, and all now became Servants to Mordred. As soon as the News of so horrid Villany reached the high Ears of Arthur, who had now began to climb the Ladder of Italy, viz. the Alpes, that he might get up into Rome, the highest Chamber of the Empire; out of Anger he would mount no more, but down he comes in a dump, and returns with the Kings of the Islands only in his company toward Britain, burning with such a Rage toward Mordred, as all the water in the Sea could not quench, so that as great a thirst he had upon him at his return, as at his setting out. And it was not for nothing, that about this time so dreadfull a Comet appeared in Gall, the Countrey through which this King Errant passed, that the Heavens seemed to be on a flame. The same year also to usher in and betoken the gore blood, which should be shed when doughty Arthur laid about him, true blood dropped from the Clouds, a certain House was found besprinkled with it, and a grievous Mortality followed. Noble Arthur hasting towards Britain resolved to land in the Port of Rutupus, afterward called Sandwich, whom Mordred there with a great Multitude opposed, and made great slaughter of such as attempted to come on shore. Here fell gallant Argus, the King of Albany, and Waluane the King's Nephew, and well-away others innumerable. But at length after vast pains taken, and much very much blood shed, Arthur and his Men got to land, and so hotly, too hotly, pursued his Enemies, that he drove Mordred and his Army after no small loss received, I assure ran away to Winchester. This being also brought to the tender Ears of Guenhumar, without looking behind her she ran away to Caerleon, and hid her head under a Nuns veil, professing her self a (chaste) Nun in the Monastery of Julius the Martyr. Arthur almost mad with Anger comes to Winchester, and there besieges Mordred; who the next Morning is so fawcy as to fallly out upon the King, and the Villain did much mischief; but for all that still thought one pair of Legs worth two pair of Hands, and ran away again towards Cornwall.

40. Arthur would not balk him an Ace but followed as fast as he ran, and caught him napping at the River Camblan. Would you believe the Rogue, for all this, would let his fellows in order, and give brave Arthur battel? He did it, resolving to dye rather than run any more away, for he knew not whither to run, his shoes not being corked to take the Ocean. A sad fray followed. Abundance of Blood was shed, and the Cries of the wounded, and dying would have pierced ones very Bowels. They had fought almost a whole long day (a whole long day till Noon, as did Robin Hood and the Pinder of Wakefield) when Arthur rushed, not like a Boar, but a Lion into the place where he knew Mordred stood, and easily making way with his Sword, and removing the Enemies as he could do his own Servants with his word, he made most bloody work on't, cutting down the ranks like Corn with his Sickle, may even there where they were the thickest, and then thrashing them. What shall we say? The battel grows hotter and hotter, and the Air rings again, and sounds with the very blows that were struck. The Villain, the Trai-tour himself fell, and with him the Saxon Whelps Cheldrick, Elaph, Egbrith and Bruning, and many thousands with them, and the Victory was Arthur's. But woe and alas! he was mortally wounded in the fray, and was carried to be cured, if it might be, into the Island of Avalon, since yeilded Glacon. Despairing of Life, when he had caused his Enemies to be slain, he yeilded the Diadem of Britain to Constantine his Kinsman, the Son of Cador, Duke of Cornwall. The good Soul being ready to depart hid himself, lest Enemies should insult over such a Mischance, and his Friends be troubled. Hence it happens, that Histories making no mention of the death of Arthur or his Burial, the Britains for the Excessive love they bear him, contend that he still liveth. Here's an end of an old song, to the tune of Arthur of Bradley. A Fable which deserves not confuting. Pity it was not writ in verse, as well as the brave Adventures of Roland. Alas, poor Arthur, that being greater than he both as to Royalty and Achievements, greater by far than Achilles, thou shouldst be so * unfortunate as not to have as brave a Bard to make thee Immortal by Verses dipt in Castalian Fountain! as brave a Trump to found forth thy Virtues. Blind and bald Chanters they were indeed, who took upon them to publish thy Glories.

* For not to have been dipt in Lethe Lake Could have the Son of Tiberis from to die.

But that blind Bard did him Immortal make By Verses dipt in dew of Castaly.

Which made the Eastern Conquerour to cry.

O fortunate young Man, whose Vertues found

So brave a Trump thy noble Acts to spend.

Spenser.

41. No height of indignation can be too great against those ignorant Scribes, who by the deformed brats of their brains, have so imposed upon an ignorant and unwary World. May a blot lye upon their Memories, who fending their Follies abroad, did not cloath them in such Garments, as might discover them to be what they really were. Course enough indeed their Dreffes are, and the fancy where-with they are invested is of a very thick-spun thread. Yet Wifemen indeed are also often meanly clad, (true Histories courly writ) but Fools should be drest in fools Coats, a Romance writ like a Romance, a Poetick figment appear like a Poetick figment. Let it dance on six or seven Feet, and jingle with Rithm at every turn, or be set out with the party-coloured Coat of Extravagant fancy, and Effeminate Language, not clad in the grave, serious and substantial, (though course) Habit of an History. Certainly, Reader, if the Sin and Injury of a * confists in this, that it takes away a Man's Right and Liberty of judging or know-ing, whereupon he that took away the means or ways of Knowledge was said by the Hebrews to steal the Heart, and the greater or more considerable the thing is which should be known, the greater is the injury, they that belye our Progenitours, and take away the means of our understanding the Originals of our Nations, must needs be guilty of a Theft greater than all others, in the Opinion of a generous Man, who by Nature it self is stirred up with a desire of knowing the State of his own Countrey, the condition of that stock, whence he or his Relations are derived. But though Britains and English are most concerned, yet hath this Injury extended to † Foreigners, who have, in referenceto Arthur, in the same manner been imposed on. That Arthur should thus lay about him, doe such wonders as never had been doe before; that he should conquer both Eastward and Southward, subdue Gall and pierce into Italy, and no notice of him taken by any Historian of that time, or any time else till Geoffrey of Monmouth began to collect the old Wives tales of his Countrey, and publish them in the Latin Tongue; that he should goe and seek work abroad, when he had so much to doe at home, where so many thousand Saxons had taken up their Habitations, and already sedled several Kingdoms; is a thing that no serious Man with Patience may endure to reade or hear.

42. These Romantick Tales have produced this Effect upon some more wary minds, that the shadows have brought the substance it self into suspition; al-though as we say there could not be so much smoke, but there must have been some fire, and one | of those that questions the very being of Arthur, builds his Conjecture upon a weak Foundation, and is himself in other matters extravagantly credulous, and obtruding. Against this opinion possibly too extreme on the o-ther side it may be objected, that the Sepulchre of Arthur was found in Glaffenbury, in the Reign of King Henry the Second; being buried there, as one of the Monks of that Monastery wrote, in the Year DXLII. having come into that Island of Avallonia, to have his wounds cured, as writes the so often cited Geoffrey of Mon-mouth. Nay after Geoffrey himself was dead and buried, the Sepulchre of Arthur was found out, as several testify, and might have been seen in a great Table of the Monastery, whereon was written to this purpose: In this Island, which is called Prinmold, the Island of Avallonia, yea in this burying place of Saints, at Glaffenbury lies the renowned King Arthur, the flower of the British Kings, and Guenhumara his Queen. Who after their Departure, were honourably buried, by the old Church, betwixt two stone Pyramids in time past nobly engraven; and for many years there they rested (viz. six Hundred and twenty Eight Years) till the time of Henry de Soili, who was Abbot of the place after the burning of the said Church. Now this Abbat being often importuned by very many Persons, gave order to some to digg betwixt the Pyramids, and see if they could find the Bodies of the forementioned King and Queen: and before they began to digg they hung up Curtains, and surrounded the whole Plat of ground. Having digged very deep, at length they light upon a great wooden Coffin close shut, which having opened, they found his Body therein with a certain leaden Cross,

SeCT. 1

* Vide Groti-um de Jure Bellis & Pacis,
lib. 2. c. 1.

† Vide Alanum de Insulis in Merlimi Prophetiam, lib. 3.

‡ Genebrard in Chronico,
ad An. 498.
Dicte ex Beda posse intelligi Arthurum Magnumquam existisse quare;
quia illius co-minio non me-minis.
Vide Offer, in relic. Primord. p.
116. &c.

Idem ibid. Vin-centius Bello-vacensis Specul.
Hist. lib. 2.
cap. 74.
Idem in Merlin. lib. 1.
Radulph.
Niger.

in one part of which was written, Here lies buried renowned King Arthur, in the Island of Avalonia. Then opened they the Queens Grave and found her Hair dishevelled, and lying about her shoulders, as if she had been but newly buried, which did set yet upon touch fell all to Ashes. The Abbat and Convent with great joy, and the same with greatest honour imaginable, took thence their Reliques, and bestowed them in the quod ponum greater Church, in a Tomb which within was divided into two parts, and without Jons, quod loci nobly cut in a Rock, viz. the King's Body by it self at the Head of the Tomb, and pennis et pte the Queen in the Eastern part thereof, over which they caused to be written, their merita alunde, vel ab Avalone quodam exterritori. illius quondam dominatore. Item solet antiquitus locus ille Britannici dici Tyns gwynhir, hoc est Insula virtutis, scilicet, scilicet, quasi virtutis coloris in marisfo circumfluentem: Et hoc boc dicta est postmodum a Saxonicis terram occupantibus lingua eorum Glafstonia, Glas enim Anglice vel Saxonicè vitrum sonat. Girald. Cambrenf. in Specul. Eccles. distincti. 2. c. 9.

43. The Abbat, by whom these Bodies were found, was Henry Soliactensis de Soily or Sully, and by some called Suinefius (not Henricus Blefensis, the Nephew of Henry the First, as Leland mistook, confounding them together) who was made Abbat after the burning of the Church of Glaffenbury, which happened in the Year MCLXXXIV. afterward Bishop of Worcester, and died in the Year, MCXCV. He it was that placed their Reliques in a Marble Monument, and on it two * Difficks for Epitaphs. But more than this Giraldus Cambrenf. describes the Bones of Arthur to us in this manner, having been shewn them by the Abbat of the place, together with the leaden Cross lately mentioned. The Bone of his Leg reared up by the Leg of one of the tallest men (as the Abbat experimented before the Author's face) and placed by his foot upon the ground, was bigger than the man's knee full three fingers. His Skull was prodigiously large and thick, so that between the Eyes and the Eye-brows one might lay their hand. In it appeared all wounds or more, all which, one great one excepted, which gaped very wide, and was onely mortal, were grown up and cicatrized. As for the leaden Cross he adds, that upon a broad stone, seven foot within the Earth, and three foot higher than Principis & the Sepulchre of Arthur was found such a Cross, not inserted into the upper, but rather the nethermost part of the Stone, having these Letters engraved, Hic jacet sepulchus inclutus Rex Arthurus in Insula Avalonia cum Venerabilia uxore sua† secundum This very Cross being taken from the Stone he saw, being shewn it by the said Abbat Henry, and read these Letters. But in this Inscription, the five last letters ab Arthuri in 199 Regni sui tunc dicto, seen in the Cross it self, which was preserved in the Treasury of the Church of Glaffenbury, till the dissolution of the Monastery which * Leland himself with most curious Eyes, and careful Fingers viewed and handled, moved both by the antiquity and dignity of the object. It consisted of a piece of Lead about a foot long, DIX. Ex Can. quity and in Large Roman Letters, but ill cut, contained these words, Hic jacet sepulchus inclutus Rex Arthurus in Insula Avalonia. To conclude this Business, these Reliques were found in the days of Henry the Second, about the Year of our Lord MCLXXXIX. which may check the opinion of those who believed there never lived a Man (the Man we admit of, but the Romantick stories of him we admit of) and had it been known earlier, might have prevented that ridiculous humour of the Britains, who thought him still alive many hundreds of years after his death, and that so confidently, that should any Man have said in the streets in Arthuri morica or Little Britain, that he was dead, he should have had the stones immediately flying about his Ears.

44. Arthur being ready to dye, is said to have left the Diadem of Britain to his Kinsman Constantine, the Son of Cadur, the Duke of Cornwall, who the year following had the better of the two Sons of Mordred, who rose up against him, and pursued them so close, that one of them he slew at Winchester, in the Church of St. Amphibalus before the Altar, and the other at London, where he was hid in a certain Monastery. In the third year they will have Constantine slain, and buried at Stoneheng, or the Chorea Gigantum, to whom succeeded Aurelius Conanus, and held the Monarchy of the whole Island, being a young man very well inclined, and every way worthy of a Diadem, onely too great a lover of Civil Wars; for he imprisoned his Uncle who should have reigned after Constantine, and having slain his two Sons, obtained the Kingdom. Geoffrey writes that he died in the second year of his Reign, and that Vortipor obtained the Monarchy, who diligently and peaceably Governed the People four years, which done, he left his place to Malgo. But here Geoffrey and his Companions cannot agree about their Verdict; for whereas he gives to the Reign of Aurelius Conanus, scarcely two years, Matthew of Westminster allows him no fewer than two or three and thirty, and gives but three to Vortiporius. But both their Accounts are true alike, while they make them to succeed one another in the Monarchy of Britain, just like that Theophilus of Antioch, who makes those Kings to have succeeded one another in one and the same Kingdom; which Moses writes to have Governed several sorts of People. For Gildas speaks to them all personally, as living and reigning at the same time, in several Parts of the Island, and whereas they call Constantine Monarch of Britain, he terms him Tyrant of Damnonia or Cornwall, Malgo whom he calls Maglocunus, the last in the Catalogue, being another Regulus in Venedotia or the Northern Wales; to the Cambro Britains being known by the name of Maeglyn Guineth, as he whom they call Aurelius Conanus, but Gildas Caninus rather, is by these Writers called Kynan Wledic, so is Vortipor Gwyrtthesyr. As Constantine reigned in Damnonia, and Malgo in Venedotia, so Vortipor in Demmetia, South-wales; as Carmarthen, Pembroke and Cardigan shires; and Aurelius Conanus, as is conjectured, in Powis or some other Province.

45. Geoffrey did like our late Writers of Romances; who take some real Subject, some certain Persons for the Basis of their work, but cloath these Persons with such circumstances, add so much of their own Invention, that in their story there's hardly one sentence of truth. Finding all these Names in Gildas, and wanting Successors for his Arthur, whom he resolved to extend to the seventh Generation, out of this store he resolved to furnish himself, not setting them all at one time as Gildas doth; but making them succeed one another in the Monarchy; which thing Gildas overthrows in that he calls Constantine no Monarch but Tyrant, or Regulus of Damnonia. In like manner, by either a willful mistake, or otherwise came the story of the Church of St. Amphibalus. Gildas wrote that Constantine flew two Boys of Royal Blood, sub sancti Abbatis amphibalo, that is under the Gown-coat or Vestment of the Holy Abbat; for that Amphibalus was a sort of outward Vest or Garment, worn by Clerks and Monks, is very certain, hairy on both sides, so that it was doubtful which was the outward or inward side of it, whence it had its Name. Now Geoffrey from this place frames a Tale of the Martyr Amphibalus and his Church at Winchester. Hence came the very text of Gildas to be corrupted so, that in some Copies was written sub sancto Abbat Amphibalo, particularly in those which Polydore Virgil followed in his Edition of this Author. Hence also came the Fiction of the New Amphibalus Gimeunus, Abbat of the Abby of Amphibalus the Martyr at Winchester, said to have written an Epistle concerning this horrid fact to Gildas, as John Ball, and from him Piræus would have us believe. In like manner from some things charged upon these particular Princes by Gildas, he has raised particular stories. From his charging Aurelius with Parricides, and his being a lover of Civil War, he raised that of his Imprisoning his Uncle, and killing his two Sons. Gildas calls Maglocunus Insularis Draco, and a depolar of many Tyrants, another Saul, being taller than any other of the British Captains; and farther adds, that he was as it were drunk with the Wine that was pressed from the Sodomitical Grape.

46. Hence Geoffrey tells us, that his Malgo was the most beautiful Person of all Britain, that he was the depolar or driver away of many Tyrants, larger than others, and most famous for goodness. Because Gildas calls him an Island Dragon, he tells you that he obtained the whole Isle, and moreover, adds since other common provincial Isles to his Dominion, viz. Ireland, Island, Godland, the Orades, Norway and Dacia, having conquered them, by most cruelly fought Battels. And because the same Author used this expiation, that he was Wet or Drunk with Wine, pressed out of a Sodomitical Vine, he represents him to you as guilty of Sodomy; whereas Gildas meant a general or universal heap of Sins and Iniquity, the phrase being taken from the Prophet and elsewhere, which he had formerly also used to set forth the wickedness of Constantine. As for Cuneglasus, it's a wonder he pat him over, for he might have filled up some room in the Monarchical Catalogue; it's to be fear'd, the Copy of Gildas he saw had not his Name, there being no Memory of him in the British History. But in reference to Maglocunus or Malgo, we find elsewhere, that under his Government a dreadful epidemical Disease raged throughout (a) Cambria or Wales, called the Yellow Plague, by the Britains T Gall Velen, from the yellow colour of those that were infected, or the (b) Centuriators, from the Morbus Regius, or the Kings Evil, as the Ilterus or Jaundice, is sometimes named by Physicians. As for his Uncle, whom Gildas writes, that he flew in his youth, he is by others called (c) Cathwallain, after whose death he Invaded the Kingdom

The direction of his Body.

Which was found in the ruins of Hous. A. D. 1159.

Constantine succeeds Arthur.

* Hic jacet Arthurus Rex Regum gl'ia Regni, Quem mores probitas comites, dant laude perenni. Arthurus jacet hic Confusus famulata secunda, Quis moris color virtutis prole fecit. Giraldus Cambrenf. de Infrascriptis. Secundo die. Hic jacet sepulchus inclutus Rex Arthurus in Insula Avalonia cum Venerabilia uxore sua† secundum Amphibalus quid.

Secl. I.

De successori- bus Arthurus: pars impudens: et tribuens usq. ad septimum: pro generatione Britanice Monarchie. Gual. Mordredigenf. Vide Compendium in Brit. de Wall. & Cornuall. Offic. p. 539.

Lit. II. c. 7.

Malidus.

Jerem. 23. 9. Deut. 32. 3. 32.

(a) Girald. Camb. tri- vers. Camb. 12. c. 1. Plures apud Offic. in Primord. p. 76.

(b) Centuriators. (c) Officium in Indice Chronol. 1128.

Sect. I. of Venedotia. In conformity with this his ravenous and cruel Disposition he is said being King of the Northern Britains, to have come (d) with an Army to subdue and prey upon the Southern, to have always been an Afflicter of the Saints, especially of St. Paternus, and to have been in particular (e) cursed by Thalefin, the Bard or Prophet. Yet is he memorable for something not ill ; for erecting (f) a new City called Bangor, upon the River Meanath, or Menai : an Arm of the Sea rather ) which is by no means to be confounded with the other Bangor of the Monks killed by Erchfrid, which stood in Wotton upon the River Dee, not far from Chester. This he did, and all these things happened while he was yet but Regulus of Venedotia. But afterwards Matthew of Westminster tells us, he was made King of the Britains at the year of Our Lord DLXXXI; about eleven years after the death of Gildas, the Complainer, who died at or about the year DLXX.

(d) Solomon
Tinnuth, ibid.
 (e) Bales & allis Tellefinus et Thalefin, vide & Thalefin, vide tinnuth & in in lingua La- tin, ceffus & Thalefin, Primo.
 (f) Samuel Rez et Thalefin, Primo.
Croicaster
Super Finium Meanath in

47. At this time he is therefore thought to have been made King over the Cam- brian Britains in General, the form of his Election being told us by Humphry Lluyd, an excellent Antiquary of Denbigh, as appears by his Fragment (a) of the Description of Britain, directed at the point of death to the Learned Antwerpian Abraham Ortelius. After that the Saxons, faith his (b) Authour, having overcome the Britains, had obtained the Sceptre of the Kingdom, and the Crown of London, all the People of Cambria, assembled together at the Mount of the River Dee, to chuse them a King, and thither came the Men of Gwynedd, the Men of Powys, those of Debenbarth, of Reynur, Esfylluc or Sylluc, and Morganawc or Morgan, and made choice of Malgun, whom others call Malcolan Guened. From this passage he collects, that Cambria or Wales, was then divided after the Destruction of Brig- tain, into six Regions or Parts, viz. about the year of Our Lord DLX. But alter-ways we meet with the King of **Dyvetia*, falsely called Demetia, the Kings of Gwent Powys, and Northwales, and mention is also made of the Kings of Strat Cley- de; whence may easily be collected, that this Countrey was subject to divers petty Kings or Reguli, till the time of Roderick the Great; who obtained the Monarchy of Cambria, about the year DCCCXLIII, and dividing it into three Parts, left it so to be possessed by his three Sons, for to Meruain his eldest; he assigned Gyn- nedd, to Anarand (whom some make his Eldest) Powys, and to Cadell his youngest with the blessing of the whole People, Debenbarth, that is the Right part or Southwales. For the Britains, as Welsh at this day, herein imitate the Hebrews, that as to the Coasts they look Eastward, and name the South as on the Right Hand. This Debenbarth, though it was in quantity larger, yet in respect of those Noblemen, by the Welsh called Tychelwyr, wherewith it abounded; who were prone to rebell against their Lords, and dispute with them by dint of Sword, it was accounted much the worst. This Division of Wales (as generally all Divisions of Kingdoms) at length destroyed the Government, while the Posterity of these three Brothers consumed it self by intestine Wars, though each Prince was externally laid at by the Engliſh.

the poor Britains driven from their Country.

48. And so at length, and by Degrees were the poor Inhabitants of Britain<sup>Regem.</sup> by the Pills and Scots, and especially the Saxons, oured of their Ancient Seats, and driven such of them as fled not over the Sea, to the craggy and mountainous Places toward the West of the Island, naturally fenced with Hills, and the Inlets of the Sea, whither their Ravenous Enemies could not easily follow them. Here they continued a very warlike Nation, as we shall have occasion in the Prosecution of our English Saxon Story to demonstrate, and for many years defended their Liberty, and though they were separated from the English Saxons, by a ditch or trench, cast by Offa King of the Mercians, yet flood they not only to the defensive part of War, but made many inroads into the English Pale, and by Fire and Sword waisted the Country. Their Success had been much better, but that they fell out amongst themselves, and as formerly when they lived in the Heart of the Land, so now also they groaned under the Yokes of their several Reguli or Tyrants, the Names of whom it will not boot much here to mention, and the Acts of whom as remarkable, respect chiefly the opposition they made against the English. Of the Parts into which they were driven, that called Cambria is most considerable, by them in their Language called Cymbrî, and Wales, by the English, after the German Customs. For, as one * observes, the Ancient Teutones or Germans, calling the Strangers that lived near them on one side by the Name of Galls, or Walls, afterward to all Strangers, and Inhabitants of other Provinces they gave the same Appellation, as at this very day not only the Galls, but Italians and Burgundians they call by that Name, as all things strange or Exo-

* Lloyd. in Frag. f. 46. 6.

come into Cambia or Wales.

the Galfri-di fenorem nominat cui Llyndus acce-dit.

II. with the Countinichopolians Sect. 1. tick Walthe : The Wallons in the Low Countries, the Wallachians upon the Danube have hence received their Denominations. At first they seized, and solely inhabit all this Region. Afterward it began to be inhabited by the English, as far as the Ditch of Offa, with whom they had innumerable Skirmishes, and contels till the days of William the Conquerour, under whose Son Henry some Flemmings, who had been driven out of their own Country by Inundation of the Sea, received Rosse, a Province of Demetia, to inhabit, and notwithstanding all the Princes of Wales could do, most valiantly defended themselves, and full preserve their Language and Customs, different from the Britains. Afterward the English growing by Degrees upon them, seized several other Parts of the Country, and at length brought them into full subjection, upon which we must not now dilate. But those that inhabited this Country, the English Saxons called Friseles, or Brissil Welsh. Another sort they termed Cappeler from Cornwall, in Latin Cornavia, Ur illos in Gallia.

[illegible]

Worcesterjhire and Northamptonjhire by the English.

50. This River, together with Dee of old, divided Cambria from the other part of Britain, called Lboegria, and some do farther observe, that all the greater Towns which are built upon their Eastern Banks, were first raised for this very end, to restrain the Irruptions of the Cambrians, or Welsh into Lboegria, like as the Romans very politically erected very flatly Cities upon the Western Banks of the Rhine, to hinder the Inrodes of the Germans into Gall, and the last Wall which the Britains made, was by the Advice of the Romans, drawn by considerable Towns the more to strengthen it. But to pursue our business, these Countries lately mentioned, together with some Corners of Flint and Denbigh, were in times past subject to the Kings of the Mercians, and to this day the Inhabitants of them are known to the Welsh by these words, Gwy y Mers, or the Men of Mercia.
For known to the Welsh by these words, Gwy y Mers, or the Men of Mercia.
770 Offa the most potent King of the Mercians, as we hinted before in the year DCCCLXX, Offa the most potent King of the Mercians, as we hinted before in the year DCCCLXX, dugged a very deep Ditch with an high Wall upon it from the Mouth of Dee, a little above Flint Castle, through most high Mountains, as deep Vallies, Fens, Rocks and Rivers for an Hundred Miles, as far as the Mouth of the River Vaga.
This Ditch retaining its old Name, (for by the Britains it's still called Claudh Offa, or the Ditch of Offa) is clearly yet to be seen in all these Quarters; and almost all the Cities and Towns seated on the Eastern side of it, have their Names ending in Ton or Ham which makes it evident, that in old time Saxons there did inhabit. Yet again the Cambrians or Welsh, repeated themselves beyond the Ditch (on this side as we write) in all places toward Lboegria or England, and the Inhabitants of these parts in their own Language are called Cymbri, in the pronouncing of which word the force of the letter b is scarcely to be perceived.

P

51. So

In several words it doth appear.

And in the beginning of them.

52. We shall only make two or three more Remarks upon this Language, and so dismiss it, as is agreeable to our general Design. One Letter it hath peculiar, which commonly they write with LL two of these, but the more learned Lb, or Ll with a point under it, which is better. The Spaniards indeed use a double LL, and the Germans Ll, as in the Names of Lhadowick and Lhothair, but neither of them hath the force of that whereof we write. Possibly the Inhabitants of Mexico have had it, the Spaniards expressing it by Ll, but this is but a Conjecture, and uncertain; however this of the Welsh is pronounced with a sharp kind of hissing, the Letter L being pronounced with a strong aspiration, the Tongue being with some violence thrust upon the Teeth half shut, and the Lips remaining unmoved, a matter not to be learnt but by long practice. For V Consonant they use F, as in the Teutonic Language they are used promiscuously. Besides the five Vowels which the Latines had, they have two others, therein imitating the Greeks; hereof one is written with a double V by the Vulgar, or with a single prick underneath by the Learned, and hath a sound not much different from the Roman U; or rather is pronounced in the same manner as the more simple form were wont to pronounce the Latine O. The last both of Vowels and Letter is I, and hard to be pronounced. Q, X, and Z, are not necessary to write their words; and instead of A, they use C. They have many Diphthongs, in which, both the Vowels, or three together, as sometimes it happens, either retain their full sound, or at least some part of it.

53. As to the peculiar Idioms of the Tongue, this is very remarkable, that as the Greek and Latin have their Variations of Speech, and Cafes at the ends of their words; on the contrary, this of the Britains suffers this change of Letters at the beginning; whereby it hath happened that in the Names of Provinces, Regions, Regions, and other things, very learned men have erred by reason of their ig- Sect. I.

norance in the Language. Every word whereof the first Radical Letter is, P, T, or C, hath three Variations in the Contexture of Speech, to avoid a disagreeable or C, hath three Variations in the Contexture of Speech, to avoid a disagreeable found. As P, is turned into B, into Ph, and Mb; so T, into D, into Tb, and Nb, and C, into G, Ch and NGH. For Example, with them Pen is an Head from the Head, O ben, or, his Head (Masculine) Ben : With the Head, à phen: or, her Head, i phen: My Head, Fymben. So that of this Word Pen, there are all these Variations, ben, phen, and mben. So Fire, in Britiſh, Tan, begs, from Fire, O dan: with Fire, a than: my Fire, Fy mban. And for C, Cariad, Love:
From Love, makes O gariad, with love, a chariad: my love Fy gariadi. Farther,
B, with D, and G, being Radicals, have their Variations also: as Bara, Bread;
D, with D, and G, being Radicals, have their Variations also: as Bara, Bread;
From Bread, O fara, (where F hath the force of V Consonant) my Bread, fy mara. Omnei ille li-
And as Bis changed into F and M, so is D, into D, DH, and N, as Duw the Name of tere in prin-Almighty God, and pronounced as the French pronounce their Dieu, makes from cipiis Dictioni God, O Duw: my God, Fy duw. But for G, in the first place it fails, and in the second, is e-turned into NG: as Gur signifying a Man, makes from a Man, O ur: my Man, quia aliis e-Fygur. Besides these, L, M, and Ph, suffer but one Mutation: as Lyfur, a Book, ex Ludis fi-hath from a Book, O lyfur. Mon, the Island Mona, or Angleſey, hath from Mona, land.
O Fon: and Rufayn, Rome, makes from Rome, O Rufayn. The rest either are ne- axiſc et loci ver Radicals, as D, F, Th, L, R; or else are never changed, as Ph, Ch, N and S. terminatio u-Thus much may suffice to speak of the genius of the Language, and thus much Proydain Brythe rather to put some upon enquiry, whether any such footsteps of Variation dain, Rhuffaimay be found of the ancient Gallick, which if it may, would abundantly confirm Meachan Ceus in this belief, that they were the same. That this Language received some demain Lan-Impression and Alteration from that of the Romans, we must not doubt, considering daim.
how many hundreds of years they lived in the Island, although not so much as thole of such Countries as were nearest unto Italy. This is clearly to be perceived still in several words, as Cariad, Duw, Gur or Ur, and Lyfur, lately mentioned, Axisc et loci Tair Tri, that word whereby they expreſs the Eaſt and many others. And that terminatio uas it received some Impression from the Latin, so likewise did the Latin from it, Proydain Bry-and a barbarous Latin was here of both made in Britain, as the Modern French dain, Rhuffai-or Gallick Bastard Latin in the Countrey of Gall, and the Spaniſh and Italian: in Meachan Ce-the other Countries. But the distance of the Romans from the Island, and con- demain Lan-sequently the weakness of Commerce, were causes that it could not be so confi- daim.
derable, (as neither the Impression made upon the Britiſh) and their departure ſo clearly out of the Island, procured the extinguiſhment thereof.

54. Thus in our Comment upon the Text of Gildas, we have seen the Britains banished to the Mountains, and a little considered their condition there. We must remember he writes how some committed themselves to the mercy of the Sea, and sought for shelter and habitation beyond that Element. It's the general Opinion that they feated themselves in Armorica in Gall. That that Countrey was named by Britains, a Colony as it were of the Inhabitants of this Island, both the Feize of Britain the Leis, and the Language of that People sufficiently demonstrate (for that this Britain was denominated from that, is an idle Dream and deserves not confuting) but at what time, and upon what occasion, it's not so eafie to determine. The first mention we find of the Britains in Armorica, is about the year CCCCLXI, about thirty years after that the Anglo-Saxons were called out of Germany into Britain; for at that time Manfuetus, a Bilhop of the Britains, fubfcrib'd to the first Council of Tours amongst other Prelates of France and Armorica. In the ninth year after this, these new Inhabitants of Gall perceiving the drift of the Western Goths to take the most fertile Provinces of Anjou and Poitou, were so resolute as to make head against them, and to them the Franks were much beholden for they chiefly hindred the Goths from poffeffing themselves of the whole Countrey. For against them they sided with Anthemius the Emperour, and Arnandus was condemned of Treason for giving Council by Letter to the King of the Goths, to be upon the Britains dwelling upon the River Loir, and diffuading to make Peace with the Greek Emperour, whereby they might divide Gall between the Goths and the Burgundians. Sidonius Apollinaris to Riothenus his Friend (whom Jornandes nameth King of the Britains) complains that these Britains were a kind of People witty and subtle, Warlike, Tumultuous, and in regard of their Valour, Number and Intelligence with one another, Rubbrou. Riothenus being afterward sent for by Anthemius, went to him with a power of twelve thousand Men, but before he could joyn with the Emperour's Forces, was defeated by the Goths, and fled the Burgundians, at that time confederate with the Romans.

P 3

Sect. 1.

55. We find them therefore at this time in Armorica, but still the Controversie remains undecided, how first they came there. One who was born in that very Country, lived near to that very Age, and wrote the Life of St. Winalof the Confessor, committed this also to writing, that *A Progeny of the Britains embarked in Flotes, arrived in that Land on that side the British Sea, at such time as the Barbarous Nation of the Saxons fierce in Arms, and uncivil in Manners, possessed their Native and Mother Soil. Then (saith he) this dear Off-spring seated themselves close within this Nooke and secret Corner. In which place, wearied with travail and toil, Offerium in they fate quiet for a while without any Wars. But our English Writers report it as a truth, that long before this time our Britains seated themselves in this Tract of Gall, and particularly at such time as Maximus usurped the Roman Empire. The Monk of Malmesbury relates, that Constantinus Maximus being saluted Emperor by the Army, carried away with him a great Power of British Souldiers, through whose Courage and Industry having attained the Empire, such of them as were past Service, and had done bravely, he planted in a certain part of Gall cum filio suo Wellward upon the very Shoar of the Ocean; where at this day, saith he, their Posterity remaining, are wonderfully increased even to a mighty People, in Manners and Language somewhat degenerate from our Britains. True it is that Constantine flantine concerning Military men made this * Edict, Let the old Souldiers, according to our Precept, enter upon the Vacant Lands, and hold them for ever freely; and possibly here these might be placed to help to restrain the then frequent Inroads of the Saxons. Yet doth he also affirm a Colony of Britains to have been planted in Armorica by Constantine the Great; and another will have the same thing done by Constantinus Chlorus his Father. Generally those that write the British History, are confident that Maximus there placed his British Souldiers; but others as earnestly contend, that there was no Plantation there till after the coming of the Saxons.*

Vita S. Winalofi, M. S. in Bibliotheca Cantuariensi, quod Camdenus et Frisardus.

Fr. 421. Hic vero Frisardus armatus; qui Tricunum confessorum Constantini Regis Britannicus.

com filio suo Wellwardo in Winalofa & Galantio & Galantio.

majoris Britannia in Armorica transgressi ostendit, et tempore Britannie Coloniae deditur.

* Cod. Theod. l. 1. c. 20.

De Gestis Reg. l. i. c. 1. Radulphus in Chron.

Hic neque prius neque post Leidenfeld.

et ante & post illam traditionem tradit, deinde alio quo supra.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Rinaldus et apud Sidonem Apollinarem, et apud Jordanum et alios.

Sect. 1.

They preserve their Language unmixed and uncorrupted.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

Another Company of the Britains plant themselves in Holland.

57. This Description of them as to their Manners and Disposition suits well enough with what Gildas and others write of their Countrymen. However so Industrious and Valiant they were, as to bring under all the Inhabitants of that Tract, and had they had as constant Supplies out of Britain, as the Saxons had out of Germany, might have done as much for the rest of the People of Gall, and been before-hand with the Franks. In this they equalled them, that as they gave Name to the places they conquered, so did they. But herein they exceeded them, that whereas the Language of the Franks being German, was swallowed up, and devoured by that, then spoken by the Provincials, or by the Bastard Latin, we now call improperly French. Theirs either quite conquered and overcame that of the Armoricans, or finding it much the same with it self, as we said the British and ancient Gallick were the same, preserved it self and it unmixed and uncorrupted. Our Welsh men hence prove that the Cornish, and the Armorican Britains were the same Nation, because the Names of their Kings were alike to both, as Conanus, Meriadoc, (by which Name a part of Denbighshire in North-Wales, is still so called) Howel, Alan, Theodore, Rhywallon, and the rest; and almost all their words are the same, although they differ a little in Syntax of Speech, as often it happens in the same Country. The Country it self is by our Britains called Lhydaw, which Cambden interprets, coasting upon the Sea, and so signifying the same in British, as doth Armorica. But it seems it's no proper British word; for Leuid thinks it came from the Latin word Littus, as being a Region of the Gallian Shoar. For as the Latin Writers in our words (saith he) turn D into T, so our Countrymen in like manner change T into D, and L in the beginning of words they always write with an aspiration. For Example, Lhadron with us signifies Robbers, the word being borrowed from the Laenes.

58. But as some of our distressed Britains fled over Sea into Armorica, which they called Little Britain; so we are told that others of them went into Holland, where at the Mouth of the Rhine, as it falls into the Sea, near to Catwyck, they divided their Sails: and there they built a most strong Castle, which they called Britain, and subdued unto themselves the Neighbouring People. This Castle in the Testonick Idiom, as we are told by the same Authour, is called Dia burch te Britten, as if you should say, Britains Burge, or the Castle of the Britains; being in the same sense at this day, by the Neighbouring Hollanders called Het Huys te Britten, or The House of Britain. This Castle was placed in the Batavian Shoar, at the middle Mouth of the Rhine, and the Ruines thereof are to be seen at a very low Water. It was built four-square, and took up the compass of two Roman Acres. And that it was indeed a Roman Fort, besides other things, the ancient Coins, Stones and Bricks, which here were found with Inscriptions, do demonstrate; with the view which Hadrianus Junius in his Batavia, and Petrus Scriverius in his Tabulary of Holland Antiquities hath presented us. As therefore it cannot be granted this Chronographer that the Brittins built this Castle, (which might be called Britten Huys, because it stood over against Britain) so might it, being now left desolate by the Romans, be seized by the Britains, who might also, as he writes, subdue the Neighbouring People. That this may not be thought incredible, a place of Procopius is cited, who in the time of Justinian wrote, that Brittia, distinct from Britain, was inhabited by three most numerous Nations, the Angles, Trifsons, and the Britains, who had the same Name with the Island. And if what he saith be true, that it was placed in the Ocean just over against the Mouth of the Rhine, this could be no other than the Island of Batavia.

59. Neither ought it to be wondered at that here the Trifsons inhabited; forasmuch as it's certain, that not only in the time of Pliny, and Tacitus, the Frifi here had their Seats, but in later times part of Frifi, the Province of Otreicht was also accounted, and the Western Holland, which still retains the Name of West Freiseland, and in time past gave to the Earls of Holland the Title also of Lords of Frifi or Freiseland. But whence the Angli or Angli should thither come, is to be considered. * One Historian of that Country reports out of their Annals, as a certain truth, that a great Number of Angli came out of Britain into Frifi under Conduct of Hengist. † Another from the like Authority relates, that the City of Leiden was first founded on the Bank of the Rhine by Hengist, the Son of the King of Frifi, being beaten out of Britain, and having built a Castle upon the Eastern Bank of the said River, made Governour thereof or Borchgrave one Dibald, to procure safe Passage to Travellers, with free Access and Recess to Merchants; whereupon the City in the Vulgar Tongue had the Name of Leiden. But John Gerbrand, Joan. Gerbrand Chron. Belg. lib. 1. c. 13.

Vide Cambd. in Brit. Offer. in Primord. p. 418.

Offer. ibid. p. 419.

* Suffridus Petrus de Orig. Frisurum, 12. c. 11.

† Corn. Kempius Reg. Fris. lib. 1. c. 1.

Who destroy most of the Natives.

Whence the Country is called after their Name.

Their Character.

Sect. 1. brand, who himself was born at Leiden, relates the Original thereof with more Circumstances. Having said, that Hengist gathered Military men together out of the Lower Saxony or Frisia, his own Countrey, and with the Slavenses or Hollandenses, having passed into Britain, after this relates what was done by that part of the Army which returned home. The Saxons Frisons with the Slavenses, that is, the Hollandenses being returned home, the rest being dismissed, when they had now no employment, neither knew what to do, nor whither to turn themselves; they went along to the Feirce Wood with a strong hand, and there at the Courfe of the River Rhine, built a great Castle, which now is called Leids. In the same Castle of Leide, by consent of the Elders, they ordained and appointed for the Custody of the Forest, a certain Burchgrave or Castellane, a Valiant man, with many others like himself, to defend and secure the Merchants going and coming from the said Castle to that of Wiltensborch and Slavenborch: And therefore that Castle was called Leyden, that is, Dulcio or Leading. The common Chronicles of Holland relate the same also concerning the Burg De Burch, built by Hengist. For we must not be so injurious to that Noble City, as to conceal that Legdonum Batavorum was much antienter both from Ptolemy, and the Itinerary Table.

60. That a considerable part of Hengist's Army, after the defeating and dispersing of the Inhabitants, returned out of Britain, we have already shewn from more ancient Authours, as Gildas and Beda. But whereas some will have Hengist, a Dane by Original, (which we shall hereafter discuss) it would if it could be known whether he being beaten out of Britain with his Angli (as the British Histories affirm) or being Victour, and pursuing the flying Britains, planted here a new Colony, and built a new Castle to keep in awe and bridle that which they had formerly seized. For Procopius doth not say that these three sorts of People, viz. The Frisians being Indigina, and the Angli and Britains being new Comers made up one People, but signifies that each of them was subject to their own Kings: and indeed from Brittenburg or Flays to Britten, that Burch is distant but about two hours Sail, (so they of these Countries reckon, and not as we, by Miles) from which the Bargraves of Leiden of old had their Title. Yet another * Authour will have it not built by Hengist, but by one Mandeth the Son of Lemann, the first of that Name King of the Batavi. Philip † Chilverius also thinks it was built by the Romans, the Stones of it seeming as ancient as those of Brittenburgh. And || others think it to have been the work of the Normans. But these seem more singular in their Opinions. However, finding that our distressed Britains were, by Authours of this Countrey, said hither to have fled for Refuge, and settled themselves; we thought our selves to let the Reader know so much, whom we leave Judge of what on all sides hath been said.

61. We thought we had now done our part as to the Text of Gildas, (the best course we could take to write the History of these obscure Times, small credit being to be afforded to other British Writers) but due favour and respect both to the dead and the living violently calls upon us to take some consideration of that part also of his Epistle which so vehemently inveighs against the Manners and Dispositions of the ancient Britains. What he says of the Lavery we have already seen of late, and how he paints out the Manners and Behaviour of those of his own Rank, the Reader may see in the Account we give of Ecclesiastical Matters. Most profligate he makes both sorts, as well the one as the other, and as to those we have at present to deal with, he charges upon them breach of trust and perfidiousness, perpetual Emulations, Factions, and Tyranny over one another, makes them to be of a sleepy Nature, as easie to be beaten as ready to rebel, given up to all manner of Riot and Debauchery, and what he says seems not to be meant onely of that time when he wrote, but of their general temper and demeanour in all precedent Ages, whereof he pretends to have the knowledge, viz. as far as, the Invasion of Julius Caesar. Hereupon several modern Authours have been emboldened to vilifie the British Nation, Polydore Virgil in particular, who taxeth it as mean and cowardly in the general course of its Actions and Concernments: And some learned Men of that Original are very much concerned to wipe off that dirt he throws upon it. In this endeavour they urge that Caesar found them at his landing so courageous and Martial, that they put him fore to it, forced him to contain himself in his place, and indeed put him to flight, which he in his own behalf cunningly expresth, by drawing back the Legions to their Camp; for that a flight it was, they thence prove, that a little after Midnight being past, he stole to his Ships and departed. But here was not the strength nor

In Chronia.
Belgie. l. 1.
C. 9. 10.

* Corn. Ham. redius in Ba.
tavia.

† Antiqu.
German. l. 2.
C. 36.
|| John. Lati. us in Descript.
Holland. c. 5.

Caesar ad locum inductum po-stem & Commitemdum prelium alio-tempore esse tempus arbitratu, sive hoc con-sistit, & bre-vi tempore intermissio legio-nes in Castra reduxit.

nor courage of all Britain employed, onely a small Company of those of Kent hastily gathered together. From Caesar himself it's evident, that they fought with great earnestness from their Chariots, fell with violence upon his Camp, and so discouraged the Roman Cohorts, that having lost Labienus the Tribune, it's said, they made a safe Retreat. Now what doth this Retreat signifie, but that they escaped away by flight? He confesses that Cassivelaun when he sent Ambassadors to him about Peace, was thereto moved by the Revolt of Mandubratius and others his Countrey men.

62. They farther use the Testimony of Diodorus Siculus, who writes, that the Britains being Aborigenes, and living after the manner of the Ancients, used Chariots in Fights, as the ancient Greek Heroes are reported to have done in the Siege of Troy. That as to Manners they were simple and upright, being far remote from the craft and cunning of those to whom he was related. That they contented themselves with simple and mean food, being absolute Strangers to the delicious living of Rich men. Tacitus, they plead, doth wonderfully extoll the Acts of Caratacus, and confesses, that after his Captivity the Romans were often beaten by onely one Nation of the Silures. He writes that Venusius (whom he calls fierce, and an utter Enemy of the Romans) beat not onely the Romans, but the British Auxiliaries also. He denies not that the Queen Boadicia (by Dion Cassius called Bunduica) being exasperated, put to the Sword seventy thousand of the Romans: And both he and Dion with long and evident Speeches celebrate and extoll the more than Manly courage of this Woman and her Facts, which may be compared with those of the most famous Emperours. In the Life of Agricola, his Father-in-Law, having told us, that the Galls and the Britains were very like in their Ceremonies and Superstitious Perswasions; and that their Language differed not much; he adds, that betwixt them there was the like boldness in courting and setting upon dangerous Enterprizes; when Dangers were come, like fear in refusing: But that the Britains made shew of more Courage, as being not then mollified by long Peace; for the Galls (saith he) were once also as we read, famous in War, till such time as giving themselves over to Idleness, Sloth crept in, Shipwrack was made both of Valour and Liberty together, which also befell to those of the Britains that were subdued of old, the rest remain such as the Galls were before. Their Military strength consisteth in their Foot, some Countries fight in Waggon's also; the more considerable Person guideth the Carriage, and his Dependents fight. In former times they were governed by Kings; now by their great men they are drawn to Factions and Parties: Neither is there any thing that more benefits us when we have to doe with the most powerful Countries, but that they do not unite and consult together. Seldom it happeneth that two or three States agree together to propulse the common danger; so whilst each fight for themselves apart, all are overcome. A little after he adds: That Britains endure Levies of Men and Money, and all other Burthens imposed by the Empire, patiently and willingly, if Injuries be forborn; these they cannot endure, being subdued to remain as Subjects, not as Slaves. Again; The Noble Mens Sons, he (meaning Agricola) took and instructed in the Liberal Sciences, preferring the Wits of the Britains before the Students of the Galls, as being now desirous to attain to the Roman Eloquence, whereas they had lately rejected the Language. After that our Habits began to grow into Esteem, and the Gown was much used among them; and by little and little they proceeded to the Provocations of Vices, to Galleries, Baths, and exquisite Banqueting; which things the Ignorant counted Civility, being in reality a part of Bondage.

63. They urge farther, that Dion Cassius in the Account he gives of Caesar's Expedition into the Island, delivers such things as make for the honour of the Inhabitants; and namely this, That they did not accept of Peace before they had oftentimes experienced adverse Fortune; that he so set forth his Actions at his return to Rome, with Glosses and Flourishes, that a Supplication was decreed upon this account, for twenty days together; elsewhere this same Authour reports Passages tending to the repute of the Nation. So doth Herodian, giving this Character of it, that it was most Warlike and greedy of Slaughter, contenting it self as to Arms with a narrow Target and a Lance. Eutropius in like manner speaking of Caesar's Adventure, saith he was tired out with bitter fighting, and being seized by a Tempest, returned into Gall, whence returning again into the Island, at the beginning of the Spring following, his Horse at the first Incounter was routed by the Britains, and there Labienus the Tribune was slain; and in a prosperous Fight at length, but with great loss of his own men, he beat and put them

As to their Courage.

As to their Manners.

A Comparison betwixt the Galls and Britains.

An account of their Valour.

An Asperion upon the Britains.

Which is largely con-futed from the beft of Authours.

Sect. 1.

Dion Cassius apud Xiphil.

The several Emperours of the British Nation.

Territaquasū ostendit tēga Britannis.
 Strabo Geogr.
 l. 4. Ὁ Εὐσταθίου ad Dio-nysium.
 Δὲς δὲ φασὶ διαβάς ἐκεῖ ἐπαύληθ' ἐπὶ ταχεῖν δὲ ἐν μίᾳ διασπα-ξάμεν· ὅτι δὲ παραβλῶν ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ τ' νόσος.

Ambrosius

67. That at last (faith he) I may stop the Mouth of Polydore with his Gildas, this I say, that this man, if indeed the Work be his, was not an Historiographer, but a Priest and a Preacher, who are ever wont too sharply to inveigh against the Vices of their People. If therefore with Polydore we fetch Authorities from Sermons, what Parill, what City, what Nation, what Kingdom shall escape Infamy? What hath Bernard written of the Romans? He calls them Impious, Infidels, Seditious, Immodest, Traytors, Braggers of much, but small Doers. These things say Divines, that these Vices might be shunned, and life be reformed, not that indeed the Romans or Britains were the same, although according to the Custome, such they be called out of the Pulpit: Neither doth any man, except he be an impudent Sycophant, make infamous any Society, City, or People, by reason of the Speeches of Priests, their words being wrested to the worst. Avant therefore all cursed Detractions, and let the true glory of Britain appear to the World: Neither (Good Reader) account my Tongue too sharp. For (so let God love me) neither Envy to another Man's Name, neither the desire of a little pittance of glory, neither hatred to any Nation, but the love of my Country, which undefervedly is ill spoken of, and the desire of illustrating the truth, have caused me to write what I have written. In such like words, and very modest, doth Humphry Lbuid of Denbigh end his Epistle to Orielius, or his Fragment of the Description, a Piece the Authour of which deserueth what the Publisher hath put into th Title Page, that The Reader will admire his Diligence and Judgment, and pity it is that with it he ended his Life, and had no longer time to study and publish more, which he seems to promise. His Zeal is to be commended, and if it caused him to believe such Stories, as perhaps upon another Subject he never would (for he useth the silence of Roman Writers to confute the Fables which Beotbius uttereth, and never considers this in his own Arthur, and other Passages of his British History) his love to his Country, and his Virtues lately mentioned, may easily procure his Pardon.

Sect. 1.

68. As to that work of Gildas, and this Person's indeavours to beget a contrary Opinion of his Nation; Prudent and Moderate Persons, as in all such Cases, will scarcely chuse either of the Extremes but the middle way. That Age whereof Gildas wrote, was undoubtedly very corrupt, effeminate, and debauch'd, and made way for the Ruine, which is ever ushered in by such Practices. But that Gildas was a Priest, and a Preacher, and used such a Pious Art as others of his Profession for the amendment of their lives, to whom he wrote, we can easily yield and add, not of what another Countreyman of Lbuid hath written, though not of the general design of his Book. He (viz. Gildas) seems to have propoed this onely thing to himself in this little Book, that he thought at least his Britains would blush and repent, if he rather collected all that was blame-worthy in them, and set it before their eyes, than if he should mind something worthy of Commendation, which either they themselves or their Ancestours had performed. Therefore he partly overwhelms them with all sorts of Accusations, partly finites them with the Divine Oracles, that none might suspect he did it out of hatred to them. And if the Ghost of Lbuid will permit the Name and Testimony of Polydore Virgil here to be used we shall add what he himself saith in this Case as to the decay of Religion amongst the Britains: That a few retained the true sence of Christian Religion, whom Gildas calleth Good Men, the rest of them, and especially the Priests erring so through the iniquity of the Times, he chastiseth and labours to reduce into the way. This was to be said in this place, that every one might know that Britain did not beget evil Priests, but that the Cruelty and Impiety of men was the cause; forasmuch as this first of all Provinces received the Christian Religion, and at all times (saith he) and even at this time, hath had and hath a most Religious People. Thus far Polydore ascribing this decay of Religion amongst the Britains, to the ancient Persecutions of the Romans. Here now we must leave our poor Britains in the Mountainous places of Wales and Cornuwall, or else shifting for themselves in strange Countries, and now come to those Intruders who possessed themselves of their Country, and drove them out, whom retaining the old word they still call Saxons, and their Language Saiffonaeg, not knowing what Engliffman or Engliff means. First therefore let us see what these Saxons and others that invaded Britain in Conjunction with them, were. Then let us come to a view of the several Kingdoms they erected in the Island. And of these in their

The Country called Saiffon, England means, and that Language Saiffonaeg.

Unde venit quod Nostros primum vocantur nomen, Anglos omnes Saiffon & linguam eorum Saiffonaeg appellant, nec quid sit Anglus aut Angli habere. Lloyd's

SECT. II.

SECT. II.

The Original of the Saxons, Angles and Jutes, which planted themselves in Britain.

1. THE Getes or Goths, as we have formerly shewed out of Scandia, in most ancient times, not onely made Inroads into the Chersonesus, and the Islands of the Baltick Sea, and the more Northern Parts of Germany, but into several Parts both of the Asian and European Sarmatia, and Scythia, whence driving out the Inhabitants, they there seated themselves, as well as in Thrace and several other Provinces. In the Asiatick Scythia or Sarmatia, was there a City called Asgard, as the Northern Writers tell us, the Inhabitants whereof Asgardiani are by some thought the same with those whom the Greeks knew by the Name of Aspurgiani, both sorts of Authours placing them near to the Lake Maotis, where the River Tamas, with great fury empties it self into it, and if some have not wrongly apprehended him, Ptolemy the Geographer himself, called the City by the very Name of Asgard or Asgard. The Country in which this City stood was in a peculiar way called Asia by Strabo, and the People thereof Asiæ, and Asiæ Lib. 2. by the other Writers. As for the Names of Asgard and Aspurg they denote but the very same thing, Gard to the Goths signifies the same which Purgos did to the Greeks, viz. a Tower or Castle. Such of the Goths, as inhabited this Country were also called Turci or Turks, as Mela witnesseth, who makes them the same with the Tyrfaetes, those that at this present bear that Name having long time after entered into these Quarters deserted by the Goths, after they returned back into Europe. These Aspurgiani had their Kings, the Dominions of whom extended to the farther Mountains of Scythia, within Imaus, where the Saxones, Syebi nemo, and Jotæ inhabited, whom Strabo comprehends under the very Name of Aspurgiani.

Their first Seat.

Whence their King.

2. Of this Aspurgia or Asgardia was King, amongst the rest, one Othin, as an ancient Chronicle of Norway calls him, though he has many other Names different in sound yet easily to be apprehended of the same Original, for Gothick they all are though variously written, and pronounced according to the several Gothick Dialects. The Reader will find him called Othin, and Othen, Oden and Voden; Goddan and Guodan, Eowthen and Eowden; sometimes concisely written Wode, Ode and Othe, Gode and Guode, Woen and Goen, but most commonly we find him Woden, and from him is the third day of the week named Wodensdach, (our Wednesday) as also Woenfach and Gowensdach, neither are there wanting other Names and Epithetes, whereby he is known. He is reported to have been a stout and expert Captain, atwell wise and cautious, as hardy and daring, and famous for the Art or Faculty of foretelling. Some will tell you, that he was expert in the Art Magick to such perfection, that he would change his shape into that of a four footed Beast, Bird or Fish as often as he listed; in the twinkling of an Eye could remove himself into what place he pleased, with his word alone could restrain the heat of Fire, the fury of the Sea, and doe many other things which far exceed the Power and Capacity of Man, whereby he procured to himself no small Esteem, and Reverence; even asmuch as was attributed to the highest Deity. This well fitted him for the place of Chief Priest, which he bore in his Country, where very frequent Sacrifices were offered to Idols. Twelve of the chiefeft Senatours he chose from amongst the rest which excelled in Goodness and Wildom, and made them Overseers not onely over Religious matters, but Ministers of Justice to the People. They were called Diar, that is Gods or Divine, and Drotuar or Lords, and the People by turns were bound to assist and serve them in their Ministration. While they governed the People at home, he conquered many Kingdoms and Countries abroad; being so prosperous in all his Enterprizes, that in none he failed. When to his Captains he committed any Expedition or other fort of Service, he laid his hands on them, and as it were consecrated them to that Affair, who thereby concluded, that as by a certain Spell they were rendered incapable of

Who chuses 12 Senatours to be Overseers in sacred and civil Affairs.

Sect. 2.

Turci quili Turcici a monte Taurus, ad cuius Radices habitabant, cui discus erat pueri non nemo.

Apud Steph. num.

SECT. 2. any Misfortune, especially if at time of danger they made but mention of his Name.

He makes war upon the Scythians.

Who after several Battels deliver Hostages on both sides.

3. He had two Brothers, the one called Ve, and the other Velir or Vuli. He being abroad and busied in his Wars, they presided over the Kingdom of Asgardia, and took care of all publick business, as of his Wife Frigga. He returning, they reposed to him his Wife and Government, which he presently again leaving in the same hands, undertook an Expedition against the Scythians of Tanais, called Vaner, who made Valiant Resistance, notably defended their Country, and making his Victory often very ambiguous, retreated still with safety to their places of Succour, and constrained him not seldom to procure safety by a seasonable return. Many damages did they receive on both sides, whereof at last being weary, they gave Hostages mutually, and came to an agreement, which ended in a firm and lasting Peace. The Scythians gave up to Woden two notable men, Niord, Surnamed the Rich, and his Son Troi: And the Asians were not below them in their choice, delivering to them in exchange one Heimer, a Person fit for the management of all matters relating both to Peace and War, and Mimer the most wise of all Mortals, whereat the Scythians were so touched, that out of a sense that they were overcome in this particular, they delivered up to balance him another Heroe called Quasir, who to them seemed the wisest of all living Men. Heimer presently obtained the Sovereignty over the Scythians, and having at his Elbow so able and faithfull a Counsellour as Mimer, did nothing without his advice, who taught him Rules and Methods which he should use in all publick business, but afterwards wanting him when Causes were brought before him, which he was not able to decide, he would often say, do you agree amongst your selves, and advise together such of you as are skillfull, for from me you can have no assistance. The Scythians now perceiving themselves deceived by the Asians, in an unequal exchange of Hostages, cut off the Head of Mimer and sent it to them, which Woden receiving, caused it to be preserved with Balsam, with Magick Rhimes made it Vocal, so that it would reveal to him any sacred or concealed thing. Niord and Troi he reckoned amongst the Astirick Deities, together with Treia the Daughter of Troi, who having learnt Magick and Incantments of the Astiricks, therewith wonderfully pleased the Scythians her Countrymen. As for Niord, he returning home, married his own Sister, which their Laws allowed, where amongst the Astiricks it was esteemed the greatest wickedness for any to joyn in Wedlock, which were so near in blood.

4. But, very high and craggy Mountains, running in length from North to South, separate the greater Scythia, as it were by a natural Fence and Limit, from the adjoining Countries, whereof such as lay toward the South were all subject to the command of Othin. At this time the Romans being Masters of all, had subdued Innumerable Nations, far and wide, with their Victorious Arms, having reduced under the Yoke of their Empire, most vast Kingdoms, most Valiant People, most flourishing Cities, and famous Commonwealths; whereupon many Princes and Governours, forsaking their own Countries, delivered up their Subjects into their Hands. But Othin being a famous Magician, and endued with an especial faculty of Divining, and thereby knowing that he and his Posterity should for a long time Reign in the Northern Parts of the world, committed to his two Brothers, Ve and Velir, the Government of Asgardia. He himself went into Russia, and thence proceeded into Saxony, which having subdued, he delivered it over to his Sons, of whom, Skjold he set over Dania or Denmark, wherein he made Leirba his Regal Seat. Othin after this having discovered that Gothia Suetica, or Suehland, over which presided one Gylus, with Royal Authority, was a Country fertile, and able to entertain numerous Inhabitants, he betook himself to Gylus, and having made a strict League and Alliance with him, obtained leave to plant himself, and as many as he pleased in these Quarters, for the other was afraid left by refusal, he should irritate and provoke the Astiricks, to whom he sufficiently knew himself to be inferior in power. Now do Gylus and Othin strive who shall excell in Magical Incantments, in all which contest, yet Othin bore away the Victory, and this done, went and inhabited on the River Lager, where he adorned the City Sigtun (of which name saith our Author, there was a Town in Sweden in the days of our Ancestours) and built a most magnificent Palace, where he ordained a course of Sacrifices, according to the Rites and Customs of the Asians. Having seized on all this Region, he planted in it were a certain Colony of their Deasir, to which he assigned certain Places and Chapels, so to Njordfell Moalam, to Frey Upsal, to Theron Trudhangar, to Heimer Fandberg and

He goes into Saxony, and subdues it and Denmark.

He makes a League with Gylus Governor of Suehland.

and to Balder Broedeblick. At length Othin with a Troop of his Idols, going back to the Northern Parts of Suedia, exercised himself in working wonders by his Magical Art; and thereof, as it were, set up a publick School, there being formerly no use of it in this place.

His character and cunning in Magick.

5. As for this Person, his countenance, words and carriage, shewed him to be cheerful, pleasant and facetious to an high degree, most agreeable to his friends, but terrible in all respects to his Enemies; for, Proteus like, he could change himself into all forms and shapes. He had such a perswasive Tongue, so eloquent as could not be resisted, and the more for that with his Oratory, he mixed Rhimes and Sonnets, whereupon he and his Companions were called Schialdri and Poets. By his Magick, he was wont to deprive his Enemies of all sense, and strike them with a pannick fear; nay, joyning Battel with them by his Charming Verses, he could dull the edge of their Swords, inso much that his Soldiers, without either Shield or Breastplate, like so many fierce Dogs or Wolves, would wound, tear, and threaten their Enemies, which were but like so many Sheep before them, they themselves in the mean time being utterly out of danger. Thence was this kind of fierceness, afterward called the Onset of the Berserkers. Farther, then this Othin was so cunning in deceiving the Eye, that he would cast himself down as dead, and his Body would seem to be changed into the several shapes of Fishes, Birds and Serpents. Returning to himself, he would affirm he had been viewing Countreys far distant, and knew exactly what was therein done. With one word he could extinguish Fires, lay Tempests, stop Inundations, and command the boisterous Winds. The Spirits of dead Men he could fetch out of their places, and confine them unto certain Hills, whereupon he was named Drunga Drotten vel Hunga Drotten, the Lord of Hobgoblins. He had two Crows which he had taught to speak, which would fly into other Regions, and relate to their Master what Accidents had happened. By his Magick he would open Mountains, and thence from the Veins of the Earth, fetch as much Gold and Silver as to him seemed convenient, and without any ones telling find out Treasures that had been hid. In sum, Othin by his Rhimes, Songs and Incantments (called Caldran, Seid, Liod and Frolkinga) did such incredible things, that his Name became Famous, and the Renown of his Wisdom and Power, as also of his Asians, reached all the Countries and Nations. By this means he so affrighted his Enemies, that they dared not to attempt anything against him; on the contrary, he so retained his Allies and Friends in their Fidelity, that seldom or never, did they revolt from him.

He dies.

6. Thence came it to pass, that the Sueci and other Northern Nations solemnly sacrificed to him and his twelve Associates, and paid to him that Duty and Devotion, which was due to the Lord of Heaven and Earth alone. Their Names they gave to their Children newly born, calling some of them Audun and Oudun from Othin, Thorid, Thore, Toraren, Stemtor and Hafstor from Tor, some of which faith the Chronicler are still in use amongst the Norwegians. Othin, farther, made many Laws, amongst which these are reported the most memorable. The Bodies of the dead or such as were slain in War, he ordained should be consumed with Fire, together with their Choice Goods and Ornaments, the Ashes either buried in the Earth, or cast into Rivers. That Hillocks should be raised in memory of Great and Noble Persons with Monuments upon them, to transmit the fame of their Actions to Posterity. That, thrice every year they should offer solemn Sacrifice; in Winter for the Happiness of the year, in Mid-winter for the fruitfulness of it, and at the end of Winter for Victory. The Scythians every year paid him a Denarius a Head in way of Tribute, he being to protect them from their Enemies, and propagate Superstition amongst them. Niord had to wife one Skade, which leaving him married a little after to Othin, and by her he had many Sons, the Name of one of which was Semning. Then did new Scythia, viz. Suecia get the Name of Manheim, and the Great Scythia of Gudheim. At length, Othin, when he had lived long enough, died in Suecia. Being near his end, he commanded all his Members and Limbs to be marked with nine Scars, which the Ancients called Geirs Odde. He farther commanded, that such as were beaten down in Battel should be sacrificed to him as the most acceptable oblation that could be. After his death he appeared to many, especially if some considerable Battel was at hand. For many he obtained Victory; others he invited into the Palace of Pluto, called Valbalden. His Body was solemnly burned, and a Funeral Banquet together with Sacrifices were instituted to the Honour of the deceased. Such is the Account we have concerning the Life and Death of this Woden, and his Expedition out of Asgardia into into Saxony, from an Ancient Chronicle said to have been written by Snorro, the Son of Sturlay, an eminent Man in Iceland about the year of Our Lord 1220. And with this Relation, for the main, agrees the Edda of Iceland a most Ancient Monument. Johannes Martini an Ancient Writer also, as Job. Messenius hath it, and another old Sæo Gotrick Chronicle published by the said Messenius, from several Manuscripts which agree in all things almost with the Relation made by Snorro the Son of Sturlay.

7. The Edda makes mention of Odin his making a long stay in Saxony, that he possessed the Country far and wide, and distributed it amongst his Sons, whereof Veddegg obtained the Eastern Saxony, Bezdeg Westphalia, and Sig Francia. It adds that having done this, he himself went into another Country called then Reidgotoland, afterward Jutland, of which he had to himself as much as he pleased, and over it set his Son Skjold, who was Father to Fridleif, whose Posterity was called Skjoldungar or Skjoldrades, from whom the Kings of Danemark are descended. Afterwards relating how he went into Suithiod or Suecia, it adds that he built the City from him called Sigtun, and now enjoying Royal dignity, called himself Njord. Therefore in the Annals it is found, that the first King of Suecia, was Njord, because Odin the most magnificent King there reigned, though before him other Kings there ruled. Lastly it relates how Odin constituted twelve Persons, for administering of Law to the People according to the Turkish Customs, in imitation of what was done at Troy. Johannes Martini tells the Story how Woden, with twelve Judges of the Kingdom called Drotuarii, his Wife Frigga, and Children, and a great Army went into Ryfland, over which having happily conquered it, he appointed Governour his Son Bo. His Affairs having so prosperously succeeded in Ryfland, he failed over the Sea into an Island of Denmark, called Oden Soe, which to this very day faith he from Woden his inhabiting there keeps its Ancient Name. Having also made some stay in the Dukedom of Sleswick, and from a certain Cunning woman called Gefun, learnt how fruitful and beautiful a Country was Suecia, having left Hilfatia under the Rule of seven of his Sons, he departed thither and a long time lived at Sigtun, where he obtained great Fame and Veneration amongst the Sueones, who were amazed at the things formerly related which he did by Magick, and particularly at this, that he could pass vast Seas in a little Skin or Pelt which he was wont to fold up together like a Bag. Dying at last at Sigtun, he was with much Honour, and no small Quantity of Gold and Silver burnt, and by how much higher the smoke ascended from the kindled pile by so much they esteemed him placed in an higher degree, in the other World. The Saxogothick Chronicle relates, that Woden being Prince and also Priest of Asgardia, killed and offered Men as well as other Animals unto Idols. That coming with all his Diarii, and a great multitude of other Men into Ryfland, thence he proceeded into Saxony, which he committed to the Government of his Sons, and by Sea passed to a certain Island called Odensoe in Fronia, at the writing of that Book. Having understood, that there was a good Land near Lagere, thither he went with his Diarii, and took a piece of ground to himself which he called Sigtun. Njord placed himself at Nuburg, Freyar at Upsal, Hymdel at Hymburg, Thor at Trundwagn, and Balder at Bredelike, where they introduced the Customs of sacrificing. Here is to be understood, that after Woden and his Diarii came into the Northern Parts, Art Magick came in use, but prevailed especially in Finmark. Concerning his wonders performed by this Art, his death and honours, he relates the same with Snorro the Son of Sturlay.

8. Such is the Account we have of the return of the Geres or Goths into Germany, under Conduct of Woden, from these most ancient Northern Writers: a story the Reader cannot but a little startle at, as favouring of such Poetic fancy, and Romantic humour, as usually covers the Originals of Nations, under the Veil of Obscurity. That such fancy and humour is prevalent in this Story cannot be denied, especially as to the Persons and Practices of our wonderful Woden. We must confess, that these Northern Parts have abounded with Tales inserted into their Magical Songs and Incantations, and that Edda the ancient Monument, we have cited, was no other but a Store-house of Allegories and Fancies, a shop out of which Poets were to gather materials, and furnish themselves with fit Conceits, for their Superstitious Dirties. And to speak the utmost, it's to be feared that these ancient Chroniclers from it and Tradition had their greatest Collections. Indeed as Kranzius observes in his History of these Northern Countries, it's difficult for any Man to write the Original of any Nation, and not to touch upon some Fables; not only the Greeks, but each other People have their Heroick Story. Yet as in these of the Greeks as most think, is involved much also of truth, and real things covered with fictions, which may be discovered to have been real, by consent of other Circumstances of times and places; so perhaps upon disquisition we may find the same in this Subject, whereon we now insist. In the first place, to grant such Stories as are told of Magick to have been general Fables and Rumours of the People; yet this we must say, that to any one who has either travelled into these Parts or hath been conversant in the Histories of these Northern Nations, it will appear, that they have been in former time (whatever they are at present, and let this be considered) most propense to Inchantments, direful Imprecations and other Magical Charms and Tricks. Many Monuments of their ancient places of burial with their Runic Inscriptions, sufficiently testify enough of this matter at this very day.

9. But to put our velutary or weaker Arguments in the Front of our Engagement, that Woden and his Companions came from Asia, bears some resemblance of truth; because his surname is Aas, and they have that of Asi. Asfer in the plural is the same as Asfatics, whereof the singular is As or Aas, given to Woden, in an extraordinary manner with too great an Adjunct, as Den Almogste Aas. This is more evident from that ancient form of an Oath, which in old time was used in Norway, So help me Frier, and Njordar, and that omnipotent As, meaning Woden, whom they sacrilegiously elevated into the place of the highest Divinity. Hereupon the Ancient Goths to witness their descent from these their Deities, Woden, Thor, Skjold, and the rest, were wont to add the word As unto the Names of their Children, it signifying with them as much as Divine or Saint. As Asbiorn (or as the Danes write it Esberne (we Osborn) St. Beare or As Beare, Asgeir, As-Speare, Asgrimur, Aswalf, Asketil, Asdog, Aslakur, (the Danes call it Asell) that is Dius Famulus, or As servant, and as these and others belong to Men, so some there were that appertained to Women. Farther, that in Sarmatia Asatica, there was really such a place called Asgardia or Aspurgia, and People known by the Name of Asfata, and Asania a Country by Strabo expressly and peculiarly called Asia, we have already seen. Hence when Woden and his Followers came into Germany, was the Name of Asfibur, or as now it is called Asburg, given to an ancient City there mentioned by Tacitus, this being far more probable than that it should be founded by Vijfiter, it being the Customs of these Gothick Nations, to give the Names of the places from whence they came, to their newly acquired Conquests. In the Preface to the Edda, the Country whence Woden came, is called Turcia, and Mela witnesseth that the Inhabitants of Aspurgia, were some of them called Turcae; being the same with those Goths called Tyrfaetæ, who from the Mountain Taurus might receive some denomination. And as such like Denominations, when they come to be fixed upon Nations or Families commonly stick; so probable it is, that after the Saxons came into Britain, the Name of Turk still continued, though the reason of the Name might be in the dark. For in the County of Lincoln upon the Trent, some four or five Miles from Gainsborough, there is a Town now called Torksey, which the Saxons in their Language called Turcæ or the Island of Turks. But as we said before the present Turks came into these parts of Asia long after, when the Goths returning into Europe had forsaken them.

10. Farther, that Woden came into Ryfland, is made probable from the proper Names of several Places there. In the Borders of Livonia, formerly accounted part of Ryfland, was a Province from him called Odenpoe, as much as to say, Upon Woden, denoting as some think, that all their Hope and Expectation was upon him. In the Bay of the Sarmatian Sea, is also a certain Island from him called Wodsholm, by the Danes Odesholm, and Vodsholme. Woden leaving Ryfland, left King over that Country, his Son Bo, as both Saxo Grammaticus, and Johannes Magnus relate, calling the said Bo King of the Rutheri, the Land of whom by the Goths was called Ryfland, Roxilania in the Latin Tongue, and in times past Ruffia extending from the Mouth of the River Vistula, as far as the Bank of Maotus, and Tanais with the Riphean Mountains, in the Circle of which are at this day contained Prussia, Livonia, and a great Part of Muscovy, with other Countries. Now that from Ryfland, Woden by Sea came into the Northern Parts of Germany, besides what is said by Johannes Martini, other Circumstances render very probable. First it has been the constant opinion and tradition of the Saxons themselves, that thither they came not by Land but Sea. Then as in other Places, so in these Quarters of Germany, Woden left several marks of his Name. From him otherwise called Wodan and Godan, Sialand formerly called Wetallabeeth, received the Name of Magical Inchantments much used.

His Surname was As.

His Country Aspurgia.

Part whereof was called Turcia.

Settles his Son Bo in the Kingdom of Ryfland.

His Body is burnt.

Señt. 2.

Vide Sterling's Dissert. de Orig. Gentis Angli. c. 13.

SECT. 2.

They lose the possession of Jutland.

22. The next King of the Saxons mentioned by Krantzius, is Sifrid, who lived in the time of Fladding King of the Danes, with whom he had some Skirmishes, but still he kept possession of Jutia, which was lost by Hardinck his Son, who was worsted in a single Combat, to which he was provoked by Roe the Danish King, who founded Roschild a Town once famous in Danemark. From this time the Saxons never had the entire possession of Juteland, though sometimes the Dukedom of Sleswicke, the principal part of it was in their Dominion. The next Adventure made by our Saxons was about another Love business, liking it seems in such to intermeddle. Flother, you must know, the King of Sweden had a Mistress he much affected, and a Rival one Balder, his Subject by Birth, and so in this respect his Inferiour; but Superiour to him in the Opinion of the People, which for his Magical tricks, as it seems, had fanst him to be a God. To War they went, a supposed God, for a Mortal Woman; and he did not so confide in his Divinity, but that judging himself too weak for his King, he fought to Gelder the King of the Saxons for aid, a Person that very readily complied with his Demands. Though the Saxons had now lost Jutia, yet their Ships they had not, which had transported them into Sweden, but that that King's Fleet met them by the way and freight engaged them. Now, as our Author observes, a supposed Divinity could not prevail against the Arms of poor Mortals. Balder is beaten and runs away. The Saxons stick to it, and are slain every Mothers Son: Which the Enemy perceiving, made a fair Funeral Pile of their Vessels, and therewith most nobly and gently consumed them. A Fact, doubtless to be compared with that Generosity which Hannib. the Carthaginian shewed towards slain Marcellus. The next Act of the Saxons shewed but little of Generosity. They would have Hector'd Wermund the King of Danemark out of Jutia, being now very old and blind, and having a Son, in whom for his reputed Stolidity, he had no pleasure. The Ambassadors in a jeering way offer a Combat betwixt this Son and their Masters, which contrary to all expectation, the Fool accepts; nay, offers to meet in the Field both him and his Squire, and that with such success, that he first doughtily slew the Squire, and then his Master.

And are beaten at Sea by the Danes.

23. By this means the proud Saxons were forced to submit their own Necks to the Yoke which they had been fitting for others, though not long they continued in that condition. For shaking off the Yoke of Servitude again, in the days of Dan, the third of that Name, King of the Danes, they sent another proud Challenge to them, either to pay Tribute, or to expect them to come and fetch it; but in this Adventure our daring Saxons were once again beaten. Here Krantzius satisfies the wonder of his Reader, why he should so much hear of Sea Expeditions, and nothing of the Mediterranean Parts; why the Danes should still come off with Victory, and the Saxons ever with loss and discredit, a thing which did not so fall out in after times. He tells him there's no Body has written of these Matters but Saxo Grammaticus an Islander, one who made it his design to extoll the Danes, as all other Writers Greek and Roman have done by their Countrymen; had Saxo been a Saxon by his Country as well as by Name, he would have done the quite contrary, and not obtruded these Fables upon the World, but perhaps others as bad on the contrary side. Doubtless he is very fabulous and partial, and for that cause we refer the History of these Northern Kingdoms to another Period, when he may have something certain whereon to fix; but when we have certain footing as we have in the case of the Britains, Saxons, and others, then judge we it necessary to give the Reader an hint of Fables, though Fables, which by that habit we dress them in, and that distinction we put upon them he may easily discover from rational and probable Stories. Then comes Krantzius to write the History of the Cimbri, which made War in Italy, and other places, which we have heretofore dispatched in the Accounts we have already given of those Nations, against which they made War. We have already told the Reader, that unto the Greeks and Romans the Saxons were first known, as well as others, by the Name of Cimbri; but so were all down to Gall, and even the Galls themselves, of which Nation these Cimbri that invaded Italy and Greece, seem to have been. And whereas Krantzius saith they were Saxons, we shall grant them so to have been, in a large acceptation, as their Name was also communicated to all that inhabited, even as far as the Scheld.

Another defeat.

24. After this he resumes his Story of the War betwixt the Saxons and Danes. They paid Tribute to Fronte the Great, who reigned when our Saviour was born, and to his Son Fridleve as valiant and victorious as himself, but grudging to do so to his Son Frotke a Child of but twelve years old. They rebel, and

They have the work again.

the Armies meeting, the Controversie is referred to another Duel between one Starcater on the side of the Danes, and one Hama on the Saxon part, who came by the work, having his head cloven asunder, from whom the Writer guesseth the Town of Hamburg might receive its Name. Yet still would not the Saxons rest, but shortly after passing the Elbe (for they had lost to the Danes all lying beyond that River) they were again overcome and lost their Captain Hamef, from whom he thinks Hamef might also receive its Name; and truly one as likely as the other. But for all this Swerting the other Captain of the Saxons would not be discouraged, and presuming he should do nothing by force, betook himself to Wiles and Craft. He invites the King of the Danes to his House, and then sets it on fire, willingly therein perishing like another Decius or Samson, that thereby he might destroy his Enemy. The Sons of this Swerting took off his Son and Succellour from revenging his death, by giving to him their Sister in Marriage, which procured so good an understanding betwixt them, that they lived lovingly with him in his Court for a long time, till stout Starcater returned thither. He (you must know) so rated the poor young King for harbouring these Snakes in his bosom, that to prevent flinging he knock'd them on the Head, notwithstanding what their Sister and her Children could do to preserve them. Yet could not he get any Tributes from the Saxons, who now stood upon their guard and stoutly defended their Liberty.

They pay for their Leache-ry once more.

25. What was done in the mean time in the Island Countries by the Saxons, Krantzius complains that we are ignorant, blaming Tacitus for being too much taciturn in this Particular. He then mentions in short what was done in Germany by Drusus and Germanicus in the time of Augustus, concluding, that those they had to do with were Saxons, although such they be not called. After this he tells us another Tale of one Siuar a Nobleman amongst them, who had got the consent of the young Queen of the Danes; but one Haldan of Norway who had had a Months mind to her, but was diverted, by some Wars he waged with the Russes hearing of the Wedding, came as Gram had done upon them on the very day, and cruelly slaying the Bridegroom, took the Bride away with him: And these are the Saxon Antiquities (and goodly ones they are) which Saxo the Danish Writer (in Name alone being Saxon) hath communicated to us; the rest are buried in Oblivion. From these goodly Antiquities he passeth to what was done against the Batavi in the time of Vespasian, but insists on this Subject but little, as unproper by his Confession. Next he falls into a grievous Complaint that none hath transmitted to Posterity the Actions of the Saxons in the Inland Countries, not doubting but that such as had been so stout at Sea, would not be Cowards at Land, but have acted something against or with the Turingi and Vandals. He doubts not but they had an hand in that War of the Marcomans, in the days of Marcus Antoninus, which affrighted the Romans no less than the Carthaginian Wars had done. But neither any of the Marcomans nor Saxons committed any thing relating hereunto to writing; we only enjoy what the Romans wrote, which they did, as all other Stories, for the advantage and grandeur of their Empire, only being flint as to the valiant deeds of their Enemies. We see a Man hath plainly the advantage of a Lion, because a Man was the Painter. Could a Lion have painted, we should have seen another kind of Picture. Of these things we may complain, but cannot amend them. Thus Krantzius Wittily.

26. He farther observes, that till about three hundred years after the Birth of Christ, there is no mention made of the Saxons in any Roman Writer. The first that mentioned them, is Eutropius, and after him Orosius, in the Reigns of Diocletian and Maximian. Eutropius relates how Carausius being appointed to clear the Coasts of the Armorican and Belgick Seas, which the Franks and Saxons infested, though he often took many Barbarians, yet neither gave up the Booty to the Provincials, nor sent it to the Emperours, was suspected for favouring of the Pirates, that he might rob them as they passed by, and for this reason being commanded to be slain by Maximian, took upon him the Purple at Bononia or Bulleign in Picardy. This is related by Orosius in well nigh the same words, and by Beda in his Britannia, as he calls it. Here our Author insults upon two sorts of Writers, as well he may; First, such as fetch the Franks from the Lake of Manotiz, in the time of Valentinian the Emperour, who was not yet born; then over those who deduce the Original of the Saxons, from the times of Theodorich King of the Franks, who was neither in being two hundred years after: This is to be taken special notice of, that in those days the Saxons exercised Piracy upon all these

SECT. I.

De Orig. Hamburgi vide Cifnerum in Pref.
Krantzius & principi Lombessi Origines Hamburgenses.

Sect. 2.

these Coasts, and that as well the British, as the Gallick; so false is that which some have affirmed, that before the coming over of Hengist, they were unknown to the Britains. For Claudian the Poet, inveighing against (a) Eutropius, about the year of our Lord 400, makes mention of their Infesting the Sea in general, (b) in another place of the Orchades, and in (c) another introduces Britain, speaking how Stilico had Fortified her both against the Invasions of Pils, Scots and Saxons. Moreover, (d) Sidonius Apollinaris, about the time of their coming into the Island, describes most elegantly their Piracy, both in his Epistle to Lampridius, and in his Panegyric to his Father-in-Law.

Infesting Sea and Land.

27. Moreover, in the Notitia of the Dignities of the Western Empire, we have mention made of the Comes litoris Saxonici per Britannias, of the Count of the Saxon Shore throughout Britain. Now the Saxon Shore was all that Tract from the Cambrica Cherfoneus on that side the Sea, as far even as the Western Part of Gall, where the Saxons were wont both to rove and rob upon the Sea, and also land and make depredations on the Continent; and from this Shore it is, that a very Learned Man of our own will have the Count of the Saxon Shore throughout Britain, to have received his Title, denying that this Shore of Britain could be called the Saxon Shore, because here they never landed, but only robbed off at Sea. In a matter of truth we must be impartial, and affirm him strangely overseen when he saith that, *We read not any where that the Saxons had at that time, either settled themselves upon the Shores of Britain, or were wont to sail thither, or that they infested any thing of Britain, except the Sea. From the verses of Claudian lately cited, it sufficiently appears that Britain, as he brings her in, did not fear the Saxon roving, but the Saxon coming, and how could he properly be said to come to her except he landed? But Ammianus himself, whom that Learned Man so often cites, sufficiently clears the controversy, where he relates that a message came, how Britain was extremely vexed by Conspiracy of Barbarians, that Nellarius the Count of the Maritime Tract was slain, and Buchobandes the Duke was circumvented by their Hostile lying in wait; now what Barbarians there were, is evident from his words which follow, that the Saxons were at this time wont to Conpire with the Attacotts and Scotts; and in another place he writes, that as the Alemans did depopulate Gall, and Rhetia, and the Sarmatæ and Quadi Pannonia, so the Pils, Scotts, and Attacotts, vexed the Britains with continual miseries. Can we imagine that these Rovers would not land any where, where they could get booty; and that Britain should be so poor and beggarly, that it should not afford them Incouragement, as well as the waterish places of Holland, and the barren Coasts of Brabant? their aim, if they rightly understood their Trade, should be to prey at Sea upon the Batavians, whose ground could scarcely maintain them, as at this day, and plunder the Land of Britain more fruitful, affording more incouragement than the other. We find by Claudian they landed in the Orchades, and were the Orchades Islands more tempting than the Island of Britain? As for the opinion of Pamircollus, that the British should be called the Saxon Shore, because the Saxons were before called in by Vortigern to assist the Britains, and there inhabited, in those times, it is a mighty oversight also, the Saxons being called in long after there was a Count of the Saxon shore throughout Britain in the times of the Romans. But it was but an oversight not worthy to be so charged with ignorance by that Learned Man, Pamircollus being sufficiently known to have been excellently skilled both in History, the series of Times, and other Learning.

28. That our Saxons then were great Pirates and Rovers at Sea, it's granted on all hands; but as one of our Learned Men denies they landed or made any abode in Britain, so another as eminent in things of this nature also, will not yield that before the coming of Hengist, they had so much as passed the Elbe, and feared themselves upon that Shore betwixt it and the Rhine, so commodious for Riding of Ships and Navigation. He grants that in the time of Domitian, through the Tract of Belgica and Aremorica, they infested the Sea, as Eutropius witnesseth, and that the Saxons were a Nation active, in Piracy on all the Coast from the River Rhine to the City Donia, now called Danemarc; at such time as they were called into Britain, as Fabius Etheberdus affirms in that Maritime Tract: but cannot yet, he saith, find that they fixed any where in the Continent of that Tract: For whereas it is read in Zozimus, that the Quadi Part of the Saxons seized upon Batavia, having thence beaten the Franci Salii, and that Julian taking upon him the defence of the Salii, reduced the Quadi into obedience, he cannot assent

(a) Quantum ex Principe possim
(b) Non lingua decem, domo tuos Saxones Teuissis
(c) De 40 Con- sulae Huius
(d) Madu- rati Saxone
(e) Orchades
(f) Non quod ciuis pere- cinis gen- tibus inquit Minus
(g) Stilico
(h) Illius effectum curi in bella cinerem
(i) Scotia, ne Pic- tum trans- ire, ne li- tore toto
(j) Proficiscerem dubiis ven- turum Saxo- na venit
(k) Utic Saxo- na ceru- lum vide- mus
(l) Affertur aut
(m) Alfenum solum timere
(n) Cuius verticis, Scis
(o) Quin & A- remorici pi- ratum Saxo- na tractus
(p) Speratus, &c.
(q) Sold. in Mar. Clauf.
(r) Lib. 2. c. 7.
(s) Lib. 26.

Ufferius in Primord. Ec- clis. p. 399.

Hist. lib. 9.

assent to it first, because the Quadi were no part of the Saxons, and then because (a) Eunapius Sardinianus (whose History (b) Zozimus rather transcribed than wrote one himself) neither said they were Quadi, neither Cambii (whom Cluverius would substitute in their Rooms) nor Saxons, but Chamanti; (c) Julian himself in his Epistle to the Senate and People of Athens, setting forth what he had done to the same purpose. But to this may be opposed, first, that they made many Inrodes, and these Inrodes made by them were not small and contemptible, but to some extent; for (d) Ammianus Marcellinus writes, that in the days of Valentinian and Valens, the Coasts of Gall were walled by the Franks and Saxons, bordering upon them, each making excursions as far as they could by Land or Sea, with grievous plunderings, firings, and slaughters of such as they took Prisoners. And farther, the Saxones Baiocassini, or the Saxons of Baieux, are mentioned by Gregory of Tours, as ancient Inhabitants upon the Shore of Aremorica. It's not the opinion only of Krantzius, that the Saxons long before their coming into Britain, had enlarged their Borders from Holsatia, on this side the Elbe, almost as far as the Rhine, but Aventinus placeth the Saxons between these two Rivers, even in the days of Augustus Caesar. Some Eastward extend their Dominions through all the Sarmatia of Gall, even almost as far as the River Tanais, which separates Europe from Asia. And an ancient Chronicle in Rhime alleges from other Books, much more ancient, that all the Country beneath Neomagus, was in old time called the lower Saxony, and that the River Scheld taking in its Waters from the Meuse and the Rhine, was its Western Border. To be sure that after the removal of the Franks into Gall, by degrees they settled themselves in their Seats, and not only possessed the Maritime Coast betwixt the Elbe and the Rhine, but pierced into the inward Parts of Germany, on all hands is agreed. These things speak the extent of the Saxon Power; which indeed was so terrible both at Land and Sea (wherever they planted) that amongst all other Nations, in the decay of the Empire, they by the Romans were most feared.

Are chiefly feared by the Romans.

29. We have now presented our Saxons ready to take Ship, or their Keels for Britain, to which Voyage they were sufficiently inclined, doubtless from the knowledge they could not but have of the Island. And so great inclination they had, that some there are who speak nothing of an Invitation, but say like unwelcome Guests, as they proved, they came absolutely without sending for; yet partly because they could not stay at home. For Ninius will have them driven by their Relations out of Germany, which another limits unto Frifia, as the Galls of old when their Country was not able to maintain their growing Multitudes, sent out as to travel, three hundred thousand of their Brood, to seek out new Habitations; so Geoffrey of Monmouth would have us believe it to have been the Custom in Saxony, to send out their Numbers by Lot, to free themselves from a superfluous Multitude. But we have good security from Gildas, Beda, Paulus Diaconus, and many others, that they were sent for over by Vortigern, whom Gildas calls a proud and unlucky Tyrant, and Witichind makes a formal Embassy to be sent, as we have before related. Therefore William the Monk of Malmesbury will have both Causes to have concurr'd, which is not improbable. It pleaseth them all (saith he) to send for the Saxons and Angli out of Germany, being valiant at their Arms, and a wandering People. Hereby would accrue double profit, for being invincible, they would easily beat back their Enemies; and hitherto being uncertain where to fix, they would take it for a mighty favour, if they might have but some rough and barren Soil, some dry and hungry Heath to inhabit. They never imagined they would at any thing against their Country, the fresh memory of this favour would so oblige them and soften the fierceness of their Disposition. This Advice being approved, Ambassadors are sent into Germany, men really of quality, who would worthily discharge themselves of that publick Character. The Germans hearing they were counted to a thing which they themselves a thousand times had desired, quickly condescended; the pleasure they took in the Enterprise, spurring them on to all expedition imaginable. Bidding therefore farewell to the Places that bred them, and renouncing the Affections of their Parents, they commit themselves to the favourable Gale of Fortune and the Winds, which in three long Ships, which they call Ciules or Keels, waft them into Britain. Now at this time and afterward they came from three sorts of People in Germany, viz. The Angles, Saxons and Jutes.

30. For, almost all the Land which lies under the Northern Pole, because it doth germinate so many Men (so the Monk plays with the word) is not undeservedly called Germany, though distinguished by many Limits of Provinces. Wherefore in like manner, as they whose work it is, are wont to cut off the Luxuriant boughs of a Tree,

Sect. 2.
(a) In Edig.
(b) In Edig.
(c) Oper. Ju- lian. par. 1. pag. 514.
(d) Lib. 27.

Boier. Annal. lib. 2.

Vide apud Sherrington. cap. 2.

Job. Gerbrund Chron. Belg. l. i. c. 9.
Hist. Britan. l. 6. c. 1.

Dr. Gessii Reg. Angl. l. i. c. 10.

Sect. 2. Tree, that it may have Juice enough wherewith to keep in Life the remaining; so do the Inhabitants by the Expulsion of some of their Number ease their Mother, left by seedling so numerous an Offspring she should be exhausted; but to prevent grudgings and discontent, they use Lots for deciding the Controversie, who shall be sent away. Thence is it, that the Men of that Land have made a Vertue of a Necessity, that such as were driven from their Native Soil, might by their Arms make themselves room in foreign Countries, as the Wandals who formerly overrun Africk, the Goths who possessed Spain, as the Lombards which still inhabit Italy, and the Normans possessing that part of Gall, which they had won with their Arms, have called it Normandy. Out of this Germany then came first into Britain a small Band of Men, but such as made good its smallness by its Valour, two brothers of hopeful Inclinations, and not ignoble in their Country, viz. Hengist and Horsa, being their Captains. For they were the Abnepotes, or Great, great Grandchildren of that most ancient Woden, from whom almost all barbarous Nations derive their Pedigree, and whom the Nations of the English, madly fancying to be a God, have by a perpetual Sacrilege consecrated to him the fourth day of the week to this very time, and the sixth day to his Wife Frea.

Hengist and Horsa arrive with a small, but valiant Company.

Casting Lots who shall goe.

31. This is to be observed from what we have formerly said, that such as came over into Britain were of the Ancient Saxons, viz. those peculiarly so called whose seats we have shewn, and of the Futes and Angles. Ninius will have Hengist to have come out of an Island called Ogub, wherby it he means the whole Cimbrick Peninsula, or as Learned Vulser found in one Copy Angul, that is that part of the Cheerfoness, which at this day is called Anglen, and gives a certain representation of the whole Peninsula. But (a) others from the Chronicle of Leiden, will have Hengist a Frifian. John (b) of Leiden, in his Belgick Chronicle, affirms him to have been King of Frifraor Freiseland, which he says was called Lower Saxony. Suffridus (c) Petrus contends, that he was the Son of Udolph Huro, the seventh Duke of the Frifians by Suana, the Daughter of Vetzig Prince of the Saxons; and adds that he led forth two several Colonies: the former in the two and twentieth year of his Age into old England near Julia, where for sixty two years he continued sustaining his Company, partly by Tillage, and partly by a piratical kind of War: the second in the eighty fourth year of his Age from that England into Britain, where he lasted not above four years dying in the eighty eighth year of his Age, which was of our Lord the four Hundred fifty third. But whatever he fondly talks of Books written in those days upon these subjects by the Father of Hengist, and two I wot not what Dukes, our Learned Primate very rationally concludes, that if Hengist and Horsa were Frifians, they were born rather in the Danish Frifia, than in that which borders upon Holland. For in Danemark there is a Freiseland, which in respect of the other Saxo Grammaticus calls the lfs in the beginning of his History, being the most Southern Part of Southern Juland, having on the East Old England or old Angia, and on the South the Ancient Saxony, and separated from both by the River Eidore, from which its Inhabitants are called Eiderfeldts, as from the shore they inhabit Strand Freiselanders. That these People were a Colony of the Frifians, the Agreement both of their Name and Language do testify, as the same Saxo writes, and Ubbø Emmius affirms, that Engl. lib. 14. Hifp. Frifia. lib. 2. still they retain thorough to many Ages their Speech uncorrupted, having so much affinity with the Englifh Tongue, that it comes not nearer any Language of their Neighbours.

A supply from Frilia.

(a) Vorper Thaborit. Hist. Fris. l. i. c. 8.
(b) Johan. Gerbrand.
(c) In Apol. pro Antiquit. Fris.

In Primord.
p. 397.

*Hist. lib. 14.
Hist. Frisic.
lib. 2.*

Lib. 1. Hist.
cap. 10.

32. Now if the Frifians were of one and the fame Original, and agreed in their Speech both betwixt themselves and the Englifh, it's thelefs to be wondred faith the Primate, that the Frifones are alfo with other Nations, which gave Original to the Englifh Saxons reckoned by Beda; the other are, beſides the Ancient Saxons, the Rugini, Dani, Hunni and Borucharii, ſome of which might poſſibly come over amongst the conſtant ſupplies which were ſent to Hengliſh, and the reſt out of Saxony; for that the main Body of the Colony: conſiſted of the three Nations, Saxons, Angles and Jutes is univerſally accorded. Neither is there any other Teſtimony beſides this of Beda, that the Angloſaxons were of Frifian deſcent, for as for that which Emmius produceth out of Marcellinus, in the life of Suidbert, this Marcellinus is a forged Authour, diſcovered to be ſuch by Stephen White (one moſt knowing not only in the Antiquities of his own Iſland, but of other Nations alſo) as Maulow the Great Patron of that Book himſelf confeſſed. But he produces another Proof out of Procopius, who writes that the Iſland of Britain was inhabited by three moſt numerous Nations, over each of which commanded its own King, theſe are called Angli Frifones and Britones, having a Name near a-kinn to the Iſland

Island is self. And what can you now farther require faith Ubbø? But Procopius meant nothing less than Britain; he wrote of Brittia, which in the selfsame place in plain words he distinguisheth from Britain, placing it betwixt Britain and Scandonaivia, which he calls Thule. This shews us how to correct that Pallog of Iaac Tzetzes, the Scholiast upon Lycophron, which saith, that in the Ocean is the Island of Britain placed betwixt Britain which lies Wellward, and Thule towards the East. And whatsoever the two Tetztes Brothers, John upon Hesiod, and Iaac upon Lycophron, have fabled concerning the Souls of the deceased, they being carried into Byrin, (as we read it.) Procopius writes all this with Relation to Brittia.

When they landed.

385

392

Britain (as we read it, ) Procopius writes all this with Relation to Britain.
 33. We land therefore our Saxons in Britain, being such as were defended from those properly so called from the Angles and Jutes, though some of other Nations might possibly intermix in some of their supplies, and now let us enquire what time it was they were sent for. Those of Holland and Freisland, say their time it was the three hundredth and eighty fifth year of Our Lord. Our Passage happened in the year of his defense of the History of Britain, of the Ancient Welsh Chronicles, Price in his defense of the History of Britain, presents us with this Chronology : From the time of Guorthgirn, till the Batel of Badon, when Arthur fought with and vanquished the Saxons, passed 128 years : then from the Batel at Badon, to the Batel of Camlann, wherein Arthur was slain 22 years more are reckoned. Now the death of Arthur in the British being placed at the Year 543, out of which Number first 123 and then 22 being deducted, 192 will remain to have been the Year of our Lord. But at this time the Britains were under the Command of the Romans, the yoke of whom though Zozimus writes that they cast off and made themselves a free People; yet if so it was, this was but a rebellious fit of theirs suitable to what Gildas writes of them, for the Saxons came not to their assistance till they had petitioned again the Romans for Relief, and wholly submitted themselves to them again, and yet they were forsaken by them written that the English Saxons on a sudden passed over into England ( Britain he says) in the Days of Valentinian, and killed the Romans every Mothers Son of them; their opinion is absolutely to be allowed, who write that under Theodo- the the younger, or else of Marrian his Successor, this great Alteration happened in Britain.

428

446

448

449

in Britain.

34. Therefore an Interliner of Ninio, who ever he was, hath placed the coming of the Saxons in the year CCCCXXXVIII, at the Confulship of Felix and Taurus, in which Confulship the Franks their Neighbours loft to Aetius, the Count, part of Gall lying upon the Rhine, on which they had feized. To pafs by other foreign Accounts, which deserve no credit, becaufe they contradict what Gildas clearly hints, that before the third Confulship of Aetius, the Saxons were not called his, Siegbert placeth their coming in the very year of his third Confulship, of our Lord CCCCXLVI. But the Latin Saxon Annals left by Camden to Cotton's Library, refer it to the year CCCCXLVIII. Fabius Ethelward, and with him the Annals written in the English Saxon Tongue, published by Wheelock lately, and by him called a Saxon Chronology, William of Malmesbury, Henry of Huntingdon, Alanus de Insulis, Matthew Florilegus, and others assign it to the year CCCCXLIX, induced as Vlyber believes by those words of Beda, that in the year CCCCXLIX, from the Incarnation of our Lord (fo the Manuscripts have it, not as the Printed Books CCCCIX) Martian being the forty fourth from Angustus, together with Valentinian obtained the Empire, and held it seven years. Then the Nation of the English or Saxons, obtained the Empire, and held it (Vorigern) passed over into Britain in three long ships. But it being evident, that Martian came not to the Government till the year following, their coming is either to be referred (as Florentius of Worcester doth say it) to the Confulship of Valentinian and Avienus, that is to the year CCCL, or as it is in the Common Chronicle of Marianus Scotus to the Confulship of Herculanus and Asperatus, which, as appears from the Fasti, fell into the year CCCCLII. For Beda doth not mean, that juft in the year that Martian was advanced, but for Beda doth not mean, that juft in the five years he reigned, the Saxons arrived in the Island, within the compafs of the five years he reigned, wherein he jointly governed with Valentinian. For in the Epitomy of his History, Beda fignifieth, that in their times the Englifh were sent for by the Britains.

Where they landed.

35. What number they were which Hengist first brought over with him, is no easy tale where told us, but coming over but in three Vessels by them called Cúles, by us Keels, by the Freijlanders Schielen, they could not be very many. They first landed, or as Gildas says, set their terrible Claws, on a place called Hip-winesfeor, as both the Saxon Annals or Chronology, and Ethelward do call it, thought

§ :

Sect. 2. to have been Ebbsfleet in the Isle of Taney, which Isle being the Eastern part of Kent, as Kent is of Britain, several Authours affirm to have first been given up into their Hands. They shew'd themselves so valiant against the Picts and Scots, against whom the Nation intended them, and so cunning withall for their own ends, that by the means and methods we have formerly shewed, they got such footing in Britain, that of Friends they turned Enemies, and from Guests would be Masters and Owners of all; and driving the poor Britains up into the Mountains, and barren places of the Island, or forcing them upon Rocks, or beyond the Seas into foreign Parts; the best part of the Country they seized, where their Posterity at this day continueth, notwithstanding what alteration was afterward made by the Danes and Normans, in its possession of their however got Inheritance, their very Language, notwithstanding too much altered by ridiculous affectation of worse words, still surviving. Having for a time considered them all as Saxons, now we shall distinguish them again, and acquaint the Reader what parts of Britain were seized and planted by each several People. First then the Jutes, or such as came out of Julia, possessed themselves of Kent, the Isle of Wight, and part of Hampshire lying over against that Isle, where the River Umbles enters the Ocean; for though afterward it fell to the Province of the Westsaxons, yet in the first times of these English Saxons, the Inhabitants were called Jutnacynn or of the Nation of the Jutes. The Saxons, or such as came out of Saxony, properly and anciently so called, came to be distinguished into Southern, Eastern and Western. The Southsaxons possessed themselves of Sussex, which still bears their Name; not that they were so called in their own Country, but from the Situation of their newly acquired possessions. The Eastern Saxons obtained for their share Essex, which still bears their Name, with Middlesex, and that Southern Part of Hertfordshire. The Westsaxons anciently called Genniss, got to themselves that which we now call Surrey, all Hampshire, that part excepted which we said was seized by the Jutes, Berkshire, Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire, Devonshire, and some part of Cornwall; for, most part of it is still retained by the Remainders of the ancient Britains.

36. The Angli, or those that came out of Anglia (which Beda calls Angulus and saith it was so exhausted by this Plantation, that to his time it remained desolate, but it was afterward replenished by the Jutes, as we may perceive by Adamus Bremenfis) had the greater share, and therefore it was reasonable they should give denomination to the whole, though there might be another occasion. They gave Original to four sorts of People, viz. the Eastern English, the Midland English, the Mercians, and Northumbrians. The Eastern English possessed these Provinces called afterward Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridge with the Isle of Ely, and as some think, part of Bedfordshire. The Midland English inhabited Leicestershire, which was subject to the Dominion of the Mercians. The Mercians by the River Trent, were divided into Southern, and Northern. Within the extent of the Southern Mercians were comprized the Counties of Lincoln, Northampton, and (what was once a Part of it) Rutland, Huntingdon, Bedford, the Northern Part of Hertford, Buckingham, Oxford, Gloucester, Warwick, Worcester, Hereford, Stafford and Salop. Within that of the Northern Mercians, the Counties of Chester, Derby and Nottingham. Lastly the Northumbrians, were they that lived beyond the River Humber, who were distinguished into the Deiri and Bernicii. The Deiri dwelt in Lancashire, Torkshire, Westmorland, and the Southern Part of Cumberland, on this side the River Derwent. The Bernicii were Masters of Northumberland (which at this day onely bears the Name of that large Kingdom,) the Northern Part of Cumberland with some Portion of Westmorland, contiguous to it, with the Bishoprick of Durham, and the Southern Part of that we now call Scotland, lying betwixt the River Twede, and the Firth of Edenborough. For though the Name of Scotland came afterwards imposed upon that Country, yet that the People inhabiting there, and possibly farther Northward were the Offspring of the English is evident from their Language, which being English Saxon could not have conquered and over-powered the true Scotch, but by the great Multitudes of them that spake it.

37. Now last of all before we take our leave of this Subject, what Britains were expelled, by what other sorts of New-comers, whether Jutes, Saxons or Angles, we shall inform the Reader, that of his own Country he may receive as full information as we can give him. Know then that Kent retains the old Name, being by Cæsar as well as others called Cantium, and as Cambden guesses from a Gallick word, signifying a Corner, which the French still call a Canton; for, a certain Nook or Corner in Scotland is called Cantir, the Inhabitants of another part

The Possession of the Jutes.

The Possession of the Saxons.

The Possession of the Angli.

An account of the Britains, that were expelled by those New-comers.

part of the Island are by Ptolemy termed Cantæ, the Cangani in Wales were possessed of another Corner, and the Cantabri in Spain amongst the Celiberians, dwelt in another Angle. Certainly Kent is a Canton or Angle of Britain, looking toward Gall. And to take the rest rather as they lay in the Island, than as we have named them in respect of their New possessours, Cornwall and Denbire were before inhabited by the Damnonii or Damnonii so called in British, either from the Mines of Tinn, called by them Moina, or from their dwelling under Hills. Dorsetshire belonged to the Durotriges, so named possibly from Dour or Dour water, and Trig an Inhabitant, the Coast lying for about fifty Miles full of turnings or windings upon the British Sea. Somersetshire, Wiltshire, Hampshire were the Possession of the Belge, who as most hold passed over from the Belge, a People of Gall into Britain, being originally Germans, having passed over the Rhine. The Isle of Wight adjoining, was probably peopled by them. The Atrebatii, who came also from the *Atrebat*es in Gall, were Masters of Berkshire. The People called Regni of Serry (or Soubrey from its Situation Southward from the River) Sussex (or Southsax) and the Sea Coast of Hampshire. The Dobuni of Gloucestershire and Oxfordshire, so named from Daffen, signifying low places lying under Hills; their Successours the Engli were termed Wiccii from Wic in Saxon, signifying a Creek, for they inhabited round about the Mouth of Severn, which is very full of small Creeks and Reaches. The Cattiacblani, being as is rationally conjectured first called Cassii, inhabited the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford and Hertford. The Trinobantes, those of Middlesex and Essex, rationally thought to have taken their Name from Tre Nant, or Towns in a Vale by the side of the River Thames.

38. Next to the Trinobantes lived the Iceni (possibly so called from Iken a wedge in British) and possessed what was afterward called East-England, viz. the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge and Huntingdon. The Coritani spreading themselves very far through the Mediterranean Part of the Island, inhabited as far as to the German Ocean, the Counties of Northampton, Leicester, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham and Derby. The Cornavii dwelt in Warwickshire, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Shropshire and Cheshire. The Brigantes whose Territories were afterward contained within the Kingdom of the Deiri, held Torkshire, the Bishoprick of Durham, Lancashire, Westmorland, Cumberland. The Offadini (who rather should have been called Offatini, for that they lived beyond the River Tine) had their Habitation in Northumberland. The Gadeni were next to them, and were seated in that Country, which lies betwixt the Mouth of the River Twede, and Edenborough Firth. All these were by degrees dispossessed by these resolute and hardy Incomers, and either killed or driven out of the Island, or forced up into Cornwall or Wales, which once signified all lying beyond the Severn, but afterward was much contracted, and when the Romans ruled in Britain, was inhabited by three sorts of People, the Silures, Dimetæ and Ordovices, who held not onely the twelve shires as they now call them of Wales, but those two also beyond Severn, viz. Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, which have been now long reckoned amongst the Counties of England. What sorts of People were dispossessed by Jutes, Saxons or English properly so called, the Reader may distinguish by comparing what has been said, and may farther understand by that to which we have now brought him, viz. a particular Description of the several petty Kingdoms, these New Planters founded in the Island. Of which severally according to the measure of our Intelligence.

Sect. 2.

The Trinobantes, Cassii, Trinobantes Tacitus & Ptolemaeus.

S E C T. III.

The Kingdom of the Jutes in Kent, from the first founding of it by Hengist, to the Conquest of it by Egbert King of the West-Saxons.

The Space of three hundred seventy four Years.

Sect. 3. <sup>Hengist made King.</sup> <sup>456</sup> <sup>455</sup> <sup>1</sup> Hengist the Son of Vidigiske, whose Father was Vitta (Veta, Wehta, or Withar) the Son of Woden, after the death of his Brother Horfa, was made King of Kent by his Followers, in the year of our Lord CCCCLVI, as Matthew Florilegus writes, or as all the English Saxon Annals consent in the year CCCCLV; the fame wherein the Battel was fought betwixt them and Portiger the Son of Portigern, about the very same time that Childerick the First, King of the Franks, of the Race of the Merovingi, or the Son of Mero-veus began his Reign; the Affairs of the Romans now every day more and more going down the Wind in these Parts, and the Goths and Suevi being together by the Ears about the shares of that Country.

2. This same year he is said thrice to have fought against the Britains; but as the said Flowergatherer tells us, was not able to resist the skill and prowess of Portimer, but was glad to flee to the Isle of Thanet, where being daily vexed with Sea Fights, at length the Saxons being scarcely able to recover their Boats, leaving their Wives and Children, returned into Germany. Henry of Huntingdon writes, that once he fled to the Isle of Thanet, and once to his Ships, and sent into his Country for such as were gone away. If these Writers say he was beaten, we may be assured Ninius the Britain will swear it, who plies you with his Verbs Conclussit, Obfedit, Percussit, Communit, Tenuit, meaning Portimer, (or Guorthemir as he calls him) his Welsh Blood being up, as it had reason to flee out against these Infidels, these that were wretched Unbelievers themselves, and like Miscreants had broken all Faith and Covenants, and of Hirelings and Servants turned Tyrants and Masters; who being called to protect, were now turned Destroyers, and with Fire and Sword prosecuted the Britains, the true and right Proprietours of the Country. But being thus beaten, he saith, they sent Messengers into Germany to bring more Keels full of a great number of stout and lusty Warriours, and afterward fought against the Kings of our Nation. Sometimes they overcame and enlarged their Borders, other whiles they were worsted and driven back. And Guorthemir greedily fought four Battels against them, whereof the last was by Lapis Tituli upon the Shore of the Gallick Sea (still called Stonar, as we said, in the Isle of Thanet) where the Barbarians were overthrown, and he remained Conquerour. They ran away to their Keels, and got fearfully into them like so many Women, and he died not long after. He of Huntingdon agrees with him as to the death of Gortimer (so he calls him) with whom, he adds, that the hope and success of the Britains died. After this, Hengist, and Aesc his Son having received fresh Supplies out of their Country, and being much encouraged by the death of Gortimer, prepare themselves for another Battel at Creganford. The Britains bring forth against them four Bodies of men, each conducted by a most valiant Captain; but coming to the Engagement, find themselves over-matched by the Numbers of their Enemies. For those that were newly arrived being fresh, and all of them choice men, with their Axes and Swords lo laid about them, that they made great slaughter of the Britains, who yet left not off till they saw their four Captains dead upon the place. Then being frightened and discouraged beyond belief, fled from Kent as far as London, and never after durst come thither for to fight. That this Battel fought at Creganford (a Village in Kent, so called, because situate upon the River Creke or Crey, about a Mile and an half from Dartford, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Darrford, Hundred of Little and Lefnes, lately of Sutton at Home, West Division of the County, and at this day called Creiford) was fought in the year CCCCVII, wherein Leo the Elder began his Reign. Fabius Ethelward also testifies, besides Florence of Worcester, the Saxon Annals both of Christ-Church in Canterbury, and the

the other of Peterborough continued, although in others it be referred to the preceding year.

3. But Ninius tells us another kind of Tale of what happened after the death of Guorthemir, and after the Return of Hengist with his Troops. The Saxons then began to consult how they might craftily circumvent King Guorthemir and his Army. They sent their Ambassadors to make a Peace and a perpetual League and Amity with them. Hereupon Guorthemir called his Council, and consulted what was to be done; the Result whereof was, that they would accept of a Peace, and with this Answer the Messengers returned. After this a friendly Meeting was agreed on, and Caution was given, that neither Britains nor Saxons should come to the meeting with their Arms; the more to suffer their Minds and Affections to unite and strengthen. But that most wicked Hengist commanded his Followers, that each of them should carry his short * Sword with * Ninius arathim, saying, when I call to you and say Nemet our Saxes, then draw your Knives (or Swords) and fall upon them courageously. But kill not their King, but for my Daughters sake, whom I gave him to Wife, keep him safe, that he may redeem himself. The place was appointed, and they met together. The Saxons cunning Foxes seemed very kind, giving marvellous good words, and they fare down man by man very sociably. But Hengist, as he said, gave the word, and all the three Hundred Noblemen (Seniores † he calls them) of Guorthemir and were slain, he alone being taken Prisoner and put into Chains. And for his life he was was constrained to give them large Countries, viz. Basssex, Southsex and Middlesex. Geoffrey of Monmouth tells us, that this Meeting was near the Convent of Ambrius, not far from Salisbury, where † four hundred and sixty Persons of were slain, the Bodies of whom were buried by Eldade the Bishop of Gloucester, with Christian Burial, not far off in the ordinary place. The Chronicle of Leiden mentioned but three hundred Princes of Britain to have been slain, which account † another of that Country follows in his Chronicle of the Low Countries, though he mentions in another place twelve, whom he calls Duces Britanniarum, as being the chief in Place and Dignity. But these Outlandish Writers confound the Affairs of Britains and Saxons. What they say concerning Hengist his being beaten out of Britain, and his founding the City or Castle of Leiden upon the Bank of the River Rhine, let the Reader remember what has been said before, that we may not here again repeat it.

4. In the year CCCCLXV, Hengist and Aesc his Son again engaged with the Britains at a place called Wippedfleet, and therein indeed slew twelve Captains of their Nation, as both Fabius Ethelward, Florence of Worcester, and the English Saxon Annals do testify, these they might mistake, for having been slain in the Massacre. But still about that Massacre there is more variety of Stories. Geoffrey of Monmouth talks of Hengist his having associated himself for this Enterprize, or Evil Merry-day, no fewer than three hundred thousand men. As to the number of the slain, our Caxton and Johannes Major in his Scotch History will have Hengist to have entered Britain with fifteen thousand men, and John Harding will have the Saxons to have kill'd there near Salisbury treacherously, one thousand and threecore of the British Noblemen. A certain Scotch Chronicle agrees with Geoffrey in the number of four hundred and sixty; and William of Malmesbury sides with Ninius in the smallest number of three hundred. As for Hengist he having been the death of so many Britains, at length was slain himself at Coningsburgh near the River Dun in Torkshire, as we have told already, if that be true which the British Writers relate of him. There is a great suspicion he came to some such kind of end, because the English Saxon Writers say nothing of his death, as neither of any of the Victories obtained by the Britains; what made against the honour of their Countrymen they conceal; but are zealous to publish their Conquests and Trophies. Matthew the Flowergatherer placeth his death in the year CCCCLXXXIX, and from him Ethelward and the English Saxon Annals differ but in one years computation. According to both their Accounts he reigned then thirty and three, or as Florentius Wigorniensis hath it thirty and four years; so false is that which Suffridus Petrus writes of his being but four years in the Island. He was by consent of all, a most stout Warriour; cruel enough, and as cunning as courageous, knowing very well, in case the Lion's skin was too scant, how to piece it up with the Fox's. As his Brother had his Name from that Noble Creature we still call an Horse, so he from the Male of that Species intire as Nature leaves him, without any mutilation of Members. And he being a man deserving Honour in his Country, from that great Hengist.
Planta-

Pro veteri voce Hirs innotuit bodicrui Batoni Petrus, at equum integrum quem Franci vocant un chevrol nter, not Sten d. Hengst, dicant

A Massacre.

Hengist is slain at Coningsburgh in Torkshire.

Sect. 3.

Seçt. 3.
Who being bought off, Withred Reigned.

intruded. In the seventh year Withred the Son of Egbert having by his great pains and industry taken off the Envy and Prejudice which lay upon himself and Family, and by Money bought off the publick Enemy, obtained to be King, and much ingratiated himself with his Subjects, who conceived extraordinary hopes of him. At home in his own House he shewed all manner of respect and civility to his People, Religion he every way countenanced and promoted. Abroad he was famous for having enlarged the extent of his Dominions, and after three and thirty years continuance in his Government, dying full of Age and Honour, left three Sons behind him as his Heirs in due time and place, if need should require; the greatest felicity which usually is accounted can happen to Mortals.

To whom succeeded Egbert.
Then Edil- bert and Al- rick.

9. Of these his three Sons Edbert the eldest succeeded him, of whom nothing ill is recorded, though nothing good. After he had reigned twenty and three years he gave way to his Second Brother Edilbert, who reigned other eleven, his Reign being only unfortunate in the accidental burning of the City. He dying after these eleven years, Alrick the youngest Brother took his place, and held it for four and thirty, the lustre of his Reign, as his Brother's by the fire, being much obscured by an unfortunate Batrel, which he fought against the Mercians. So faith Malmsbury, if any ill Accident happen, it shall be sure to be mentioned, but if any good luck or accident, it will be forgotten in Chronicles, whether so it be done on purpose and by design, or it so falls out through the badness of our Nature, through which it comes to pass that the memory of good things quickly is obliterated, but any thing that causeth smart and sorrow is never forgotten. But though this may be true as to matters that happened among themselves, yet the Monk's Observation is much amiss in reference to the Wars betwixt them and the Britains, their Annal talking aloud of their Victories, but wholly silent as to their Defeats. But in these three Brothers the Royal Kentish stock quite withered, the generous blood was extinct, faith our Author, and every impudent Fellow, whose bold Tongue had procured him Wealth, or Faction and Turbulency had rendered formidable, would aspire after Tyranny, and dare to assume the Royal Diadem. Of these Edilbert or Pren having governed the Kentish men two years, to shew himself a King indeed would attempt greater things against the Mercians than he was able to perform, and being taken Prisoner by them was kept in custody, whence not long after he was yet dismissed by them, but could obtain no entertainment from his late Subjects, and to what end he came is utterly uncertain. After him one of the same Faction succeeded to his pitifull condition, and was King only in Name for eight years more. The last of all was Baldrede, whom Malmsbury calls an Abortive Brat of the Royal Dignity, who after he had rather besieged than governed Kent, for other eighteen years was by Egbert the King of the West Saxons driven into Banishment. So this Kingdom of Kent, which from the year CCCCXLIX had stood for the space of CCCLXXIV years became subject to another Jurisdiction. So writes William of Malmsbury. The end of the Kingdom of Kent is noted in the Fasts to have fallen out in the twenty fourth year of the Reign of Egbert, the third year of the Reign of Michael Traulus Emperour in the East. The tenth of Ludovicus Pius who bore that Title in the West. A. D. DCCCXXIII.

After whose Death several Usurp the Government.

But are driven into Banishment by Eg- bert King of the West Saxons.

SECT. IV.

SECT. IV.

The Kingdom of the South Saxons in Suffex. From the founding of it by Aella to the Ruine thereof.

1. THE next Kingdom that was founded by these New Planters in Britain, Seçt. 4. was that of the South Saxons in Suffex by Aella, who as we have already said with his three Sons landed in that Countrey, and for several years fought with various success against the Britains. The place where he first landed is by the Saxon Annals called Cyrenes ora, and Camden tells us, that near to the Haven of Chichester is a place called Witering, where, as the Monuments of the Church testify, Aella the first founder of the Kingdom of Suffex arrived. How he and his Sons cunningly drove off the Britains, who flocked to him at his landing, we have already said, and still enlarged their Bounds, till nine years after their Arrival, when another Batrel was fought at a place called Merix desburnastede; where, though the Victory is said to have been doubtful, and the Saxon Annals are very unwilling to let him go out of the Field but with flying Colours; yet that his Victory was none, or such as did much weaken him, appears in this that he sent for new Supplies out of Saxony. Whereas he is said in his first Engagement with the Britains, to have beaten them into a Wood called Andredeleage; by the Annals the Reader must know that this Countrey in old times was hardly passable by reason of Woods. For the Wood Andradwald, or Camiani & Andredseage, in the British Language Coid Andred, having its Name from Ande- rida, the City next adjoining, took up in this Quarter an hundred and twenty Miles in length and thirty in breadth. Of this vast Wood are (or lately were) Remnants toward the West, the Forest of Arundell, St. Leonard's Forest, Ward Forest, East Grested, Alfdown Forest, and Waterdown Forest.

The Countrey very full of Wood.

alii Walden, sed falsè vocant: Nam Anglo-Saxonum Sylvam Walden ut nunc Germani, Walden verò planitiem five arboribus appellabant; ut in nominibus Cotswalden & Pothewalde apparet. Hæc Lhudæ f. 13. b.

Alla King of the South-Saxons.

2. Aella found it seems so much opposition; and was so long in subduing such an Extent of Ground as would brace the Title of a Kingdom, that some Fourteen years he staid without the Title of King, which at last he took by the Name of King of the South Saxons, in the fourth year of Efc King of Kent, first of Anastafius the Emperour, A. D. CCCCXCI. In the third year after the death Hengist, Huntingdon tells us, that new and great Supplies came to him out of his own Countrey, with which he went and besieged a most strong City called Andredejawster, supposed to be that now called Newenden in Kent, in Latin Anderida, as in the Notitia of the Provinces, and in British Caer Andred, being that we now find to have given Name to the Wood of Andredeleage. For the constant Tradition of the Inhabitants testifies it to have been an old Town and Haven, whereof they still shew the Plot. Then is it situate by the Wood Andredewald, that took the Name from it, being separated from Suffex but by the River Rother. And lastly because the English Saxons seem to have termed it Camden in Canrio. Brittenden, (as they also called Segontium an ancient Town of the Britains) or the Vale of the Britains, whence the whole Hundred adjoining is named Selbrittenden. The Romans to defend this Coast against the Saxon Rovers, placed here the Band and Captain of the Abulci. Hengist after his Arrival being resolved to drive the Britains quite out of Kent, and thinking it would much quicken his work to increase his Numbers by new Supplies out of his own Countrey, sent for this Aella out of Germany with a strong power of English Saxons, and while he gave a violent Assault to this Town Anderida, the Britains out of the adjoining Wood where they lay in Ambush, so fiercely fell upon him, that at length, after much loss on both sides, when he had divided his Army and routed the Britains in the Wood, and at the same time forced the Town by Assault, his

Sec. 4. his barbarous heart was so inflamed with desire of revenge, that he put all the Inhabitants to the Sword, and levelled the Town with the very ground. The place lying thus desolate was shewn (as saith Henry of Huntingdon) to those that passed by many Ages after. Till the Friars Carmelites newly come from Mount Carmel in the Holy Land, who fought for such solitary places, built them here a little Priory in the time of King Edward the First, at the Charges of Sir Thomas Alsager Knight, and presently after there rose up a Village, which in regard of the old Town demolished, began to be called Newenden, or the New Town in the Vale. Thus Cambden in his Chorography of Kent.

Refieges An-dred:cester.

3. Who when he speaks all in one course of Speech of Hengist his sending for Ælla out of his Germany, and his laying Siege to this Town, is to be understood with that distinction of time we have lately mentioned, not that after his coming he set presently upon it, as the uninterrupted course of words would seem to intimate; for that it was after the Auxiliaries came to him, which arrived in the third year after Hengist's death, Huntingdon plainly affirms, and the Saxon Annals do confirm. The said Writer tells the Story with some Ad An. Circumstances, but such as well suit with a People unwilling to be turned out of CCCCXC. their ancient Possessions, to be utterly ruined. He tells us the Britains upon Hap. xliij. notice of his coming flocked to the place like Bees; by Day they overmarched Circa the Beseigers by Wiles and lying in wait, by Night with Onsets; there was byrton another Day nor Night wherein some forrowfull Message did not afflict the Am- sree- Saxons. But by such loss they were but the more provoked; and the City green, they plied with continual Allarms and fresh Attacks; though the Britains Torlison were still upon their Backs, and gored them with their constant Showres of alle Darts and Arrows. The Pagans therefore were constrained to intermit their raße work at the Siege, and retire back upon them, who then being more nim- dar ble of Body than their Enemy, betook themselves into the Woods, and as inne soon as the Saxons retired again toward the City, failed not to fall upon their eanße Rere. By ne these means were the Beseigers tired with their work, and great Slaughters can þe were made of them, till such time as they divided themselves into two Bo- die dies, that while one plied the Siege the other might divert and keep the lape. other Britains in action. Hereby they did their work vigorously in both places, no interruption being given, but each Party solely intending what it was about, till the poor Beseiged being weak with hunger, and more violently than ever charged, could not endure another shock, were with their Wives and Children all pitifully butchered, insomuch that not one escaped. And the Strangers because they had received so much loss, would not suffer the Town a Monument of their disgrace to stand, but so destroyed it, that it was never after rebuild: Only the place of a most noble City is shewed to such as pass by; so the Archdeacon of Huntingdon, who calls this Town a most fortified City, a most Noble City, though the Translator of the Chronology or Saxon Annals hath interpolated the word Urbecculam, for which he had no ground in the Text.

Which is taken and raced.

4. By the violence and feverity in this place used by Ælla, we may conclude there was vigorous opposition made by the Britains, who it seems, notwithstanding all the endeavours of Hengist, kept some footing still in these Quarters till after his death. This evidences that they were not easily beaten out of their Inheritances, nor sheepishly quitted their Country, though perpetual Supplies to the very exhausting of the places from whence they came, at length overpowered them: And pity it is we have so small intelligence of so great and famous a Revolution. But, to return to Ælla, as he began his Reign with so terrible a blow to the Britains, so he followed on the course of valour and victory with such success, that as Beda testifies he had under his Power and Command all the Dominions of the Englisch Saxons, being the first of these seven Kings he mentions who extended their Authority over all the Southern part of their Provinces, which was limited by the River Humber and the places adjacent. He Reigned twenty four years as the Fasts have it, or twenty seven as writes Henry of Huntingdon, and was then succeeded by his Son Cissa, or Sciffa as some call him, who being mentioned the last of his three Sons which came over with him, it seems was the only one that succeeded him, or else for his Courage and Prowess was appointed his Successor, being indeed still named with him by the Annals in any great or dangerous undertaking. After his Fathers death there is little memorable of him, but that from him a little Village or Hill, called Cisbury in Suffex, took its its Name, where there is a Fort compassed about with a Bank rudely cast up, wherewith the Inhabitants are persuaded that Cæsar entrenched and fortified his Camp; but the Name of the place sufficiently testifies it was the work of this Cissa; and that he built the City Chichester, which though in Latin it be called Chicetria, and in British Cærcet, in Saxon is read Cirrecastren or the City of Cissa. It lies in a Nook of Suffex in a Champion Country. Yet before the Conquest it was of small or no Name, known only by a Monastery of St. Peter, and a small Nunnery. But in the Reign of William the First, as witnesseth Dooms-day Book in the Exchequer, there were in it one hundred Hages; it was in the hand of Earl Roger of Montgomery, there being in it threecore Hages or Mansion Houses more than there were before. Fifteen Pounds it paid to the King, and Ten to the Earl. But afterwards a Decree being passed in the days of the said King, that the Sees of Bishops should be removed out of small Towns to Places of greater Note and Resort, it was honoured with the Residence of the Bishop of the Diocese, which formerly was at Selsey, and by this and other helps began to rise to some degree of eminency, which had been greater but that the Haven is bad, and somewhat at too great a distance.

5. After Cilla Reigned some of his Posterity, but through the Vicissitude of Humane Affairs, or some defect in him or them, lost quite that Power and Reputation, to which Alla their Predecessour and Founder of the Kingdom had arrived. By degrees their Dominions lessened, and after the Reigns of several inglorious Persons, few of whose Names are now extant, they became a Prey to their Neighbour Kingdoms, and were for the most part either subject to those of Kent, or of the West Saxons. Indeed the second King that after Alla had Dominion over all the other English Saxons, as far as Humber, was Ceanlin King of the West Saxons, by whose greatness and Neighbourhood it's more than probable that the Fortune of these South Saxons was curbed and much abated. Then when the fortune of Ceanlin abated, grew Ethelbert the Kentish King, and their Neighbour on the other side, to that great Power whereof we have spoken, that Beda makes him the third, whose Arms and Authority extended as far as to Humber. By this means lying betwixt such potent Neighbours, the Kingdom of Sussex to dwindle, that after Cissa scarcely is any of their Kings mentioned, except Adelwald, whose memory continues upon this Account, because he was the first King that embraced the Christian Religion. After him Brenius is mentioned. And Aldwin was the last, whom Ina King of the West Saxons despoysed both of his Life and Kingdom. For after the decay of Ethelbert's greatness, and that his Son had made Shipwreck of that great Power he had, and could hardly defend what Hengist left them; this Kingdom of the West Saxons got ground, and though it received some Checks and Rebukes, at length prevailed over all the rest, as in due time and place will be discovered.

Aldwin the last King, deprived of Life and Kingdom by Ina King of the West Saxons.

Ceteros penuria scriptorum vel fama obscura reconditis præter Regem Adelwoid quibus nomen habet quia primus nomen Christi agnovit. Henric.
Hunting.
lib. 2. in fine,
Qui autem Huntingdonensis Adelwoid aliis Adil-march

S E C T. V.

The Kingdom of the East Saxons in Essex, Middlesex, and part of Hertfordshire. From the founding of it by Erkenwin, to the conquering of it by Egbert King of the West Saxons.

The Space of Three Hundred and One Years.

Sect. 5.

Erkenwin.

Slade.

Sebert.

Sextus.
Seward.Sigbert.
Sigevert.

Swidelm.

Sigber.
Sebba.Sighard.
Snefrede.

Offa.

Selred.
Swinebe.

1. THE next Kingdom in order after that of the South Saxons, was the other of the West Saxons; but, so far as this swallowed up all the rest at length, though we assign it here its place, it's most convenient in the last place to speak of it. The next after it was the petty Kingdom of the East Saxons, in Essex, Middlesex, and part of Hertfordshire. It was begun by Erkenwin, in the sixteenth Year of Otto King of Kent, the first year of Justinian the Emperour, the Consulship of Marcellinus, and the year of Our Lord DXXVII. This Erkenwin was the Son of Offa, he of Biedcan, he of Sigewolfe, Sigewolfe of Spowze, he of Gefac, Gefac of Andesc, and Andesc of Saxnat. After Erkenwin succeeded his Son Slade according to Huntingdon, who by the Monk of Malmesbury, is made the first of these East Saxon Kings, and the tenth from Woden. He married Ricula the Daughter of Ermerick King of Kent, and Sister to Ethelbert, by which Lady he had a Son named Sebert. This Sebert first received the Christian Faith at the preaching of Mellitus, and his Monument they shew to Passengers in St. Peter's Church at Westminister. He dying, his two Sons Sextus and Seward (Beda faith he left three) being always Pagans in their Hearts, banished Mellitus from his Cure, but not long after engaging with the Geniss, or the West Saxons in Battel, they and all their Men were cut off. Sigbert firnamed the Little, the Son of Seward, succeeded them; and dying, left the Kingdom to Sigevert the Son of Sigebald, who was Brother to Sebert. This Sigevert being in amity with, and often using to visit Ofrei King of Northumberland, was persuaded to relinquish his Idols and be baptized, which done, he caused the Christian Religion to be restored in his Kingdom.

2. Having imbraced Christian Religion, he was murdered by two of his Kinsmen (two Brothers) for obeying the Christian Doctrine, which bids us pass by Injuries, and forgive our Enemies, they which conspired had angered and provoked them to commit the Fact. After him reigned Swidelm, the Son of Seebald, said by Malmesbury to have been his Brother, who also was baptized by Bishop Ledda. He being dead, Sigber the Son of Sigevert, firnamed the Little, and Sebba the Son of Seward, held the Kingdom jointly together. Sigber died first, and left Sebba sole King, who reigned thirty years, and at his death took the Habit of Religion upon him. He left two Sons, Sighard (who by Beda it should seem was a Monk) and Snefrede, both who succeeded him, though how long they reigned, or what they did we are ignorant. They both being dead, Offa the Son of Sigber, a young man of a pleasant Countenance, sprightly wit, in the flower of his Age, and extraordinarily beloved by the People, for some time governed this Kingdom; but as Beda writes, left his Wife, his Lands, Kindred and Countrey, and going to Rome, there lived and died in Monastical life; Malmesbury faith, that by the Counsel and Advice of Kinefwitha, Daughter of King Penda, whom he had taught in Marriage, being taught to breathe after Celestial loves, he went to Rome with Kenede, King of the Mercians, and blessed Egwin, Bishop of the Wiltii, and there being flaven, at his time passed to the heavenly Kingdom. To him succeeded Selred the Son of Sigevert, firnamed the Good, and reigned thirty eight years. He being slain, one Swinebeade reigned over the East Saxons, and in the same year that Egbert, King of the

*Vide Bedam
in Hist. Ec-clesiastic. c. 22.*

Al. Sebbi.

*Beda l. 4. c. 11.
Nam. Iulius offense Epifcopo & filio Regis ejusdem ac monacho Sigwardi qui post illum cum fratre Snefrede regnavit, &c.
Lib. 5. c. 20.*

the West Saxons conquered the Kingdom of Kent, was by him also driven away and outed of his Royalty. Yet was London, and the parts about it, subject to the Kings of the Mercians so long as they continued. But such end had this petty Kingdom of the East Saxons, which most commonly was under command either of the Mercians or West Saxons, in the same year that the Kentish Kingdom was subdued, as writes the Monk of Malmesbury, but the Faisti continue it four years longer, and make it to be united to that of the West Saxons, in the year of our Lord DCCCXXVIII. so that according to this account it must have continued (in this mean condition) the space of three hundred and one years. Of the extent of the Reigns of the Kings there's little certainty, as also of those of the Kingdom of the East Angles, therefore it is that no certain years can be assigned.

S E C T. VI.

The Kingdom of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain. From the Founding of it by Ida to the Conquering of it by Egbert King of the West Saxons.

The Space of Two Hundred Eighty One years.

1. THE Kingdom of the Northumbrians was founded by Ida, in the one and twentieth year of the Emperour Justinian, in the days of Childebert King of the Franks, the sixteenth of Ermerick King of Kent, and the thirteenth of Kenrick King of the West Saxons, A. D. DXLVII. His Ancestours are thus reckoned, Eope (or Coppe) Efc (or Efe) Ingum, Angenwit, Alock, Beonock, Brand, Beldet, Woden, Fredelaf, Fredeluf, Fin, Godnulf, Heata.

2. It must be remembered that Hengist after he had fixed his footing in Kent, sent to Otha his Brother and Ebuza his Son, Men of tried experience in military matters, under a specious pretence of repelling thence the Picts and Scots, to seize upon the Northern parts of Britain. They being there arrived, at length with much labour and travel performed that for which they were sent; for very often engaging with the Britains in Battel, at length they brought them under, and forced them quietly to submit unto their yoke. But if these two were Otha and Eofa the Son, and Brother (for so it ought to be, and not the Brother and Son as we read it in Malmesbury) of Hengist, of whom Geoffrey of Monmouth writes, that at such time as Ambrose took and flew Hengist at Contingburgh that themselves up in the Cities of York and Dunbritton, others tell other Tales concerning them. Geoffrey writes that after they had surrendered themselves, Ambrose granted to them part of the Countrey lying near to Scotland. Matthew of Westminister, from those British Writers, faith, that Ambrose having laid siege to York, Otha being of opinion that he could not hold the place against such a multitude, took advice with those that were with him, and with the Nobility that accompanied him; came out of the Town and spake to this purpose. My Gods are overcome; and I am content that thy God reign who compells so many Noblemen to come to thee. Take us, and if thou wilt shew no mercy, bind us and use us as thou wilt, for we are willing and ready. With these words Ambrose was moved to pity, and shewed himself merciful to them: And by this pattern Eofa and the rest were moved to come in and submitted to Ambrose, who gave them a Countrey near to Scotland, and made a League of Friendship with them. Though he tells us of this Countrey bestowed upon them here, yet in another place, and nineteen years after, he tells us another story, that their Keepers being corrupted, let them out of Prison, where they had led a miserable life, and fled with them into Germany, whence with a great Fleet they returned, to the destruction of Britain. Hereupon his Uther Pendragon committed the Army of Britain to one Lohb, a Consul and a most valiant Man. But though he often gave Battel to these Strangers, instead of driving them out, they got ground of him; for the Britains would not obey him.

*Geoffrid. Monmouth. l. 8. c. 9.
Ad An. 490.*

*Idem ad An.
509.*

SECT. 6. 3. After this Uther Pendragon falling sick, these Rovers ranged about the Island and made havock of all things without controll. This exceedingly provoked the King, who grieving that Church and State should thus goe to ruine, sent for the Nobles, and accusing them of pride and idleness, vowed he would lead them against the Enemy though in that condition wherein he then lay. He caused a Litter to be provided, and marched with the Army towards Verulam, where the curled Saxons at that time lay. Oda and Eosa having word brought of the approach of the Britains, and how their King was carried in a Litter, they disdained to go out and fight him because he came in such a posture; they betook themselves into the City, and out of scorn left the Gates wide open. Uther presently caused the Town to be besieged and the Walls battered, by which entring, his Men made great slaughter of the Saxons till they unthought themselves. In the Morning they came out in order of a Battel, challenging the Britains to fight, who courageously grappled with them, and many fell on both sides, but after much contention and bloudshed the Victory fell to the King of the Britains, and they that scorned him in his Litter, found his Orders and Commands so effectual and deadly that there they two lost their Lives, and when they were dead, their Men fairly betook them to their Heels. With this Victory the King was so overjoyed (and well he might) that whereas before he was not able to stir Hand or Foot he could now rise with a very little help, and was in a manner recovered. This Story suits not very well with what Malmesbury and others write, that so good an account was given of their pains in subduing the Northern Parts of Britain. But whether this end befell them, or that the Britains were forced to quit to them that Country near Scotland, which seems to be inwrapped in the Story of Ambrosius, their endeavours, or the labours of their followers at length effected what they intended, at least in a good measure.

Ida the first King.

Ida the first King.

4. For, the Captains of the Saxons in these Countries still more prevailed against the Natives, yet notwithstanding would they not do any injury to the Name of Kings by assuming that Title, but still devolved the power in the same form of Mediocrity, saith Malmesbury, upon their Successors; and in this kind of establishment they continued for an hundred years lacking one, satisfying themselves with the common name of Captains or Dukes, and truckling under the patronage and command of the Kentish Kings. But no longer would Ambition be satisfied; either for that humane nature ever inclines to the worst, or for that this Nation naturally was high and lofty. Therefore in the year of our Lord DXLVII and LX after the death of Fhengist, the Dukedom was changed into a Kingdom, to which Ida was first promoted; a Person doubtless of most noble extraction, and in the flower of his age and strength; but whether he invaded the Sovereignty, or by the consent of others came to the Government I determine not, saith the Monk, because the truth it self is obscure. But it's certain that his Descent was high and very ancient, and that by his unspotted Life and excellent Morals he added much to the lustre of his Birth. In War he was unconquerable, yet at home tempered his Royal severity with an uncounterfeited mildness and serenity of mind. I could (so he proceeds) in this place set down the lineal descent both of him and others, but I am unwilling by the harsh sound of barbarous words to disgust the Reader. But thus much I shall note, that whereas Woden had three Sons, Weldeg, Witbleg and Beldeg, from the first the Kings of Kent derived their Pedegree, from the second the Kings of the Mercians, and from the third the Kings of the West Saxons and the Northumbrians, besides two which we shall name hereafter. So this Ida, as I absolutely find, being the ninth from Beldeg, and the tenth from Woden, continued fourteen years King of the Northumbrians.

He builds Bebanburgh.

5. Thus much William of Malmesbury concerning Ida, by which we may observe the uncertainty of the Pedegree derived from this Woden, for whereas he will have him but to have had three Sons, the Continuatur of Florentius Wigorniensis mentions seven, from whom he draws the Genealogies of our English Saxon Kings, which the Reader may there consult if he think it worth his while to attend to these uncertainties. And whereas he writes uncertainly concerning his advancement, the Archdeacon of Huntingdon delivers it for a truth, that he was chosen to this Dignity by consent of the great ones. He reigned with great commendations for the Vertues lately mentioned, and for his courage and diligence, twelve years, and built a Town called Bebanburgh, which first he fenced with a Pallisado, and afterward with a Wall. From Beda, it should seem, that he called it so from his Wife, for he writes that it had its name from one Queen Beba.

pag. 688. E. dir. Franco-furi MDCL. qua prater Martib. Florilegium continetur Florentius Wigorniensis.

Bist. l. 3. c. 6.

It

It is at this day called Bamborough in Northumberland (not Dunstafford, as some have imagined) being in the days of Hwened, as he writes, a most strong City, small, containing the space of two or three Fields, having one hollow entrance raised with stairs, in a wonderful manner; on the ascent of an Hill. It had a very fair Church, and Westward on the top there was a well set out witihi a councelled Castle rather than a City, yet so big and large, that it may seem to match with some Cities. In it did William Rufus Besiege Mowbray, who lurked in it, and at length escaped. It was much defaced in the Civil Wars by Bressy a Norman, who sided with the House of Lancaster, and since that has been almost quite ruined, partly by time which consumeth all things, and by the Winds which have driven an incredible deal of Sand of the Sea into the Fortrefs. To it adjoyneth Humildon, where was born John Duns, by mistake called Scotus, the subtle Doctor, who falling into a fit of an Apoplexy, and in his Man's absence buried for dead, came again to himself, and dashed his Brains out against the stones, lying hence said to have been twice dead, but once buried.

The Kingdom divided into Deiri and Bernicia.

The several Kings.

Next Ethelfrid.

Who fights with Ede King of the Scots.

Besieges Chester.

6. Ida by his Wife had six Sons, Adda, Ethelrick, Theodrick, Etherick, Ogmer and Theofrede, and by his Concubines other six, viz. Oga, Alrick, Eccha, Ofmer, Segor and Segother, all who came into Britain (Matthew Florilegus tells us) Ida must not have been the Son of any of these Captains that Governed Northumberland before it had a King; but a mere stranger chosen for his Merit. The same Matthew writes, that after the death of Ida, the Kingdom of the Northumbrians was divided into two, whereof that next to England, and on this side the River Tine, as we have already said, was called Deira, or the Inhabitants thereof Deiri, and the other lying beyond that River as far as Edenburgh Frith had the name of Bernicia, as the Inhabitants Bernicii. In Deira, or the hithermost in a Province, ella succeeded, the son of Ist of the same stock originally, but in a several Line descended from Woden: In Bernicia succeeded Adda the Son of Stemmas apud Florent. Ida, where he Reigned seven years, being as little memorable as most of those Wigorn. sie fe habet. ella filius isti cuius majores Princes that came after him. ella was a very industrious Man, and by his great Labour much enlarged those Territories, to the Government of which he was promoted for the space of thirty years. After his death, as Malmesbury writes, Ethelrick the Son of Ida, having spent most of his Age in poverty, and now Wigelfus, Walena, Sacerdos, Sepagelus, Scabaldus, Siggeus, Siggardus, Wodagut gray, obtained the Kingdom, but therein continued not long, dying when he had Reigned but five years a miserable Prince, and who would absolutely have been buried in Oblivion, had it not been for the eminency of his Son Ethelfrid a young Man in years, but old in discretion and behaviour. In this mean time Ida in the Kingdom of Bernicia, another informs us that Adda, the eldest Son of Ida, Reigned seven years, after him Clappa five, Theodulf one, Freathulf seven, Theodrick seven, and Ethelrick two, ella yet living. He being dead, and his Son Edwin driven out of the Kingdom, he Reigned five years over both the Provinces.

7. Ethelrick once dead, Ethelfrid his Son succeeded him in both Provinces, as both his Birthright and his Pains required; for by his Valour and Conduct, Eadwin the Son of ella was expelled, who lived in exile with Redwald, King of the East Angles, till such time as by his means he was to be restored. The same Author tells us, that Ethelfrid Married Acca the Daughter of ella, and by her had seven Sons, viz. Eanfrid, Osuald, Oswin, Osbeck, Osfrid, Osfrid, and Osfrid, to which Sons another adds a Daughter named Abba. Ethelfrid, having obtained the Kingdom first with earnestness, defended and secured his own, then fell upon what belonged to others. Many Wars did he prudently undertake, and as successfully end, being neither given to laziness nor yet temerity; for this is wit-Mean betwixt the Extremes, yet ever acted by a desire of Glory. Of this is witness sufficient, saith Malmesbury, Degfestan, of the stone of Degr, a place famous in those Quarters wherein Ede the King of the Scots, who envying the prosperity of Ethelfrid, forced him even against his mind to Fight, was not without great danger of the Conquerour himself, beaten and driven to flight. For Tedbald the Brother of Ethelbert, out of desire to approve his Industry and Valour to his Brother, putting himself into extreme danger, left him a forrowful Victory, being slain with his whole Party. The City Legio, now simply called Chester, is witness, which being to this time possessed by the Britains, harboured a People full of Pride and Contumacy against the King, which when he resolved to Besiege, the Inhabitants resolving to endure any thing rather than a League, and trusting to

to

Sect. 6. to their Numbers, went out thick and threefold to give him Battel, but fell into the Ambushes he had laid for them and were defeated; but the Monks especially felt his Rage and Fury, who had flocked thither to pray for the success of the Army. Of their incredible number still in our Age, are sufficient marks, the ruinous Walls of the Churches of the Neighbouring Monastery, so many turnings of Cloysters, so great heaps of Beams and Rafters, as can scarcely be seen in any other place: It's called Banchor, at that time a famous receptacle of Monks, and now turned into a Bishopricks. Ethelfrid, having all things succeeding thus according to his wilhes, and desirous to remove all occasions of domestick Broils and civil Quarrels, banished Edwin the Son of Alla, a young Man of good worth, who wandering up and down, and in his adversity, as generally it happens, finding but small encouragement, at length came to Redwald King of the Eastern Angles, to whom deploring his present condition, he was kindly received; but presently after him arrived the Ambassadors of Ethelfrid, requiring the Fugitive to be given up, or upon refusal, War was denounced. Redwald, being by his Wife earnestly moved never to break his Faith given to the distressed Prince, got ready an Army, and unexpectedly fell upon Ethelfrid, who absolutely surprized was slain, while he manfully made resistance, and fold his life at a dear rate, killing Reiner the Son of Redwald before he fell. To this end came Ethelfrid, after he had Reigned twenty four years, a Warriour inferior to none of the highest eminency, but utterly ignorant of the true Religion. By Acca his Wife, the Daughter of Alla, and Sister of Edwin, he had two Sons: Ofwald, a Child of twelve years old, and Ofwin but four; who when their Father was slain, were by the care of those that brought them up speedily conveyed out of the way, and carried into Scotland.

Banished Edwin.
Who flying to Redwald King of the East Angles, is protected.

Thence a war wherein Ethelfrid is slain.

8. Thus much Malmesbury tells us of Ethelfrid, in short, which as he confesseth he had from Beda. This Author indeed calls him a most Valiant Prince, and one most desirous of Glory, who more than all the Captains of the English, has raised the Nations of the Britains, so that he might seem comparable to Saul the King of Israell, onely he was ignorant of the true Religion. For no Captain, no King ever subdued more of their Country, and by rooting out or conquering the Inhabitants, made them either be possessed by the English, or Tributary to them. To him might that be applied which the Patriarch when he blessed his Son, spake as to the Person of Saul, Benjamin is a ravenous Wolf, in the morning he shall devour the Prey, and at night he shall divide the Spoil. Hence by his successles, Edan King of the Scots, which inhabit Britain, being moved, came against him with a vast and strong Army, but being overthrown, fled away onely with a few in his Company. For in that most famous place which is called Degeshan or the Stone of Degra, almost his whole Army was cut in pieces. And in this Fight Theobald (Malmesbury hath it Tedbald) the Brother of Ethelfrid was slain, with all the Party of which he had the Conduct. This War was finished by Ethelfrid, in the DCIII. year, from the Incarnation of our Lord, and of his Reign, which continued twenty four, the twelfth; the first of Phocas, who was then Emperour of the Romans. Neither from this time forward to this very day, durst any of the Scottish Kings offer to fight against the Nation of the English. So much Beda, concerning this War betwixt Ethelfrid and Edan, as for what he writes concerning the Siege of Chester, and the slaughter of the Monks of Bangor, we must speak of it in our Ecclesiastical matters, because of a question wont to be moved about it concerning Augustine the Archbishop of Canterbury. As for what he says, that none of the Scottish Kings durst fight against the Nation of the English, to that day, it is to be understood till the year of our Lord DCCXXXI, where at ending his History in another place thereof, he also signifies that the Scots which inhabited Britain, being content with their own limits, practised nothing against the Nation of the English, by craft or fraud. But farther, as to the death of Ethelfrid, Matthew of Westminster, writes that Redwald challenged him to fight, and they met in the Countrey of the Jutes, Eastward of the River, which is called Idle. Thence saith he, came a Proverb at this very day in use, that the River Idle was defiled with the Blood of the English. He adds, that Edwin had lived in exile with Redwald seventeen years. As for the place of the Battel, it was fought upon the said River Idle; which springing in the Forest of Shirwood runneth into the Trent, near to Idleton in Nottinghamshire. And whereas Matthew the Flowergather placeth this River in the Countrey of the Jutes (which we know not how it should be so called, except the Brother and Son of Hengist, when they were featt into the North, here planted forth Colony) the the Archdeacon of Huntingdon writes, it was on the Borders of the Mercians, which suits well with this place in Nottinghamshire now mentioned.

Edwin King.

9. Ethelfrid being slain, Edwin came to the possession of his Hopes and Wilhes, viz. the two Kingdoms of the Deiri and Bernicii, in the seventh year of Heraclius the Emperour, in the days of Clothair the second King of the Franks, in the first year of Eadbald King of Kent, A.D. DCXVII. Being of sufficient years, and taught large Experience by his long Afflictions, he first settled his matters very well at home, and then began to look towards his Neighbours, all whom he compelled to truckle under him, and so far extended his Power or Authority, that of these seven Princes, which during the Heptarchy till the time of Beda, commanded the Southern Parts from the River Humber, he is reckoned the fifth in order, being in this respect superiour to them all, as well as others hereafter to be mentioned, that whereas Limits or bounds to their Power were set by the River Humber, the Border of his Paternal Dominions, which never pierced into his Power, reached through the extent of their Territories. Beda, to explain what he said of the extent of his Power, affirms, that with greater might than any other before him, he ruled over all the People which inhabited Britain, as well Britains as English, these of Kent excepted; he subdued to the Command of the English Nation, the Mevanie Islands of the Britains, which lye in the Sea betwixt Britain and Ireland. Now whereas the present Copies of Beda read it, Nevanie, Camden tells us, that Menavia is the right reading, and that Beda calleth two Islands by that Name, whereof one he terms Menavia Prior, which is Mona or the Isle of Anglesey, and the other Menavia secunda, which is the same with that called Mona by Cæsar, Mameda by Ptolemy (that is as one would say Moneith, or the more remote Mona, to put a difference between it, and the other Mona, viz. Anglesey) by Pliny Manabia, and by Orosius Menavia, the same which we call the Isle of Man, being known to the Britains by the Name of Menou, and by that of Maning to the Inhabitants. As for what Beda writes of their situation, betwixt Britain and Ireland. The first Mona, or of these Menavia now called Anglesey, since it was conquered by the English, but anciently Mona by the Romans, by the Britains, Mon and Tir-Mon, or the Land of Mon, and Tis Dowal, that is a shadowed or dark Island; and by the ancient English Saxons Wone, lyeth over against the County of Gaernarvan (which took Name of the chief Town therein, as the Town from the Island) being separated from the Continent of Britain, but by a small narrow Strait, and on all parts else is beaten upon by the furling and boisterous Irish Ocean. As for the other, or the Isle of Man, it is stretched out just in the Mid-level; as Giraldus Cambrensis describes it between the Northern Coasts of Ireland and Britain, and about it, namely to whether of the Countreies it ought of Right to appertain, there arose no small controversie amongst the Ancients, which was decided at length by this evidence, that it fostered venomous worms carried thither for trial, whereupon by a common sentence it was adjudged to belong to Britain. Yet do the Natives both in Language and Manners come neighest to the Britains, yet so as therewith they also savour of somewhat derived from those of Norway.

The Situation of the Island Anglesey.

Of Man.

The East Angles swear obedience to him.

And with Ethelburga and his Wife Kent, and the neighbouring Provinces obey him.

10. But more of these Islands upon farther occasion, let us farther enlarge upon what Beda saith in short, concerning the Greatness and Power of King Edwin. The Monk of Malmesbury tells us, that the stiff-necked Northumbrians having submitted themselves, the sudden death of Redwald was added to the heap of his felicity. For the People of East England, during the time of his Exile among them, having had good experience of diligence and vigour, unanimously swore obedience to him; who suffered the Son of Redwald (as lefs he could not doe out of gratitude) to enjoy the bare and empty Title of King, but he managed all things at his pleasure. At that time all the Hope and Help of the English were in him, neither was there any Province in Britain, which observed not his Orders; and were ready to obey him, but onely those that inhabited Kent. Them he suffered to enjoy their freedom and repose because he had a great desire to marry with Ethelburga, the Sister of Eadbald their King, which Lady having long been a Suitoress to, at length he obtained, whereby the two Kingdoms became most like, both as to Government, and the manners of the People. For upon this occasion by the preaching of Paulus Edwin, after mature Deliberation, as we shall shew in its proper place, imbraced the Christian Religion, and procured it to be received by his own Subjects. After this so great Blessings were heaped upon him, that not onely the Nations of Britain, as the English Saxons, Picts, and Scots, but the Islands Orkades, and the other called Menavia, both feared his Arms, and adored his Power.

Sect. 6.

Beda lib. 2. c. 5. & 9.

De iis Beda lib. 2. c. 9. Quæram prius que ad Angliam a r-um est et sua amplius, & frugum præventus aquæ uberrate felicitior, nongit- Anglorum, secunda recitaturum & ultimum spatium tenet.

Sec. 6. er. Then was there no publick Robber, no domestick Thief, all such as laid wait for the violation of conjugal Modesty were removed afar off, the Invader of another Man's Inheritance was not to be found, a thing extraordinary, as to his Commendation, and in our Age: His Empire was so far propagated to this effect, that Justice and Peace flourished together, and most happy might the State of the Commonwealth have continued, if immature death, the Step-mother, as the Monk terms it, of temporal happiness, after a kind of ugly Sport, had not deprived his Country of him.

A Rebellion.

In which Edwin is slain.

His commendation.

11. His sudden death as we are informed by Beda himself, was brought about upon this occasion. When he had ruled the Nation both of English and Britains, most gloriously for the space of seventeen years, whereof five of them he had fought under Christ his Banner, Cadwalla the King of Britains rebelled against him, who had drawn into his assistance a most stout Captain, viz. Penda then King of the Mercians. They engaged in a great and bloody Battle at a place called Hethfeld, where Edwin on the fourth day of the Ides of October, in the year of our Lord DCXXXIII. was slain, being seven and forty years old, and his whole Army was either slain or routed. In the Battle before him a most courageous Son of his called Offrid * fell, another called Eadfrid, necessity compelling him, went over to Penda, who afterward in the Reign of Osvald slew him, contrary to his Oath. To this end came this most valiant and prudent Prince, being as Malmesbury writes a miserable Spectacle of humane Variety, or that Vicissitude which is incident to humane Affairs, a Prince whom the Course of his Actions and great Success, speak great both in the one Capacity and in the other. As for the Halcyon times which this People enjoyed under his Government; it will not be amiss to note what Beda himself observeth of them. At that time, faith he, so great a Peace is reported to have been in Britain, whithersoever the Empire of King Edwin reached, that (as yet the Proverb is) If a Woman with a Child in her Arms newly born would travell through the whole Island from Sea to Sea, she might doe it without any Let or Molestation. The said King moreover so much consulted the Good of his People, that wherever he beheld any Fountains or Springs by the High-ways, there for the refreshment of Travellers he caused Posts to be erected, and brazen Dishes to be hung upon them; neither would any body touch them except for their present use, either for the greatness of the fear they had of him, or of the Love they bare unto him. He was of such esteem in his Kingdom, that not onely in Battle were Banners born before him, but in time of Peace as he rode through the Cities, Towns or Provinces together with his Attendants an Ensign-bearer was wont to goe. Nay when he passed along in the Streets in all places, that kind of Banner which the Romans call Tufa, and the English Thunf, were wont to be born before him.

The Conquerour's Cruelty.

12. Edwin being slain in Battle, the Provinces of the Northumbrians were in a most sad Estate. Of the two Captains that overthrew him, the one being a Pagan, and the other as he terms him a Barbarian, both Religion and all things civil went to wreck; while the one raged against the Church, and the other against the Laity, of which he spared neither any Sex nor any Age or Condition, subjecting as well Women as Men, innocent Babes, as those of ripe years to death, and most cruel Tortures, which continued no small time; for Cadwall studied how together with their destruction, he might root the whole English Saxon Nation out of Britain. And though a Christian he was himself, yet did he not shew any respect to their Religion, the Customs of the Britains, faith Beda, being at this very day to have at nought the Faith and Religion of the English Saxons, neither will they have any thing to doe with them more than Pagans. The head of the slain King was brought to Tork, and there deposited in the Church of St. Peter, which he himself had begun, and Osvald his Successour perfected. All things being in confusion in those Parts, and no refuge or safety any where to be expected. Ethelburga the Queen returned by Sea into Kent, together with Paulinus the Archbishop, that brought her where she was very kindly and honourably received by Eadwald her Brother. With Bassus also a most valiant Soldier of Edwin's, went Eanfleda the King's Daughter, as also Wifreda his Son, and Ist the Son of his Son Osfrid, whom their Mother afterward for fear of Eadwald and Osvald, the Kings, sent into France, to the King her friend to be brought up; and there they both died in their Infancy.

13. But after the death of Edwin, Osfrick the Son of Elfrick his Uncle by the Fathers side, obtained to be King of the Deiri, from the Province of whom he was issued, and had received his Royalty as well as Birth. On the Kingdom of the * Cum God. baldo Rege Orchadum in-quis Muth.

Florilegio Ad
Ann. 634.

Lib. 2. c. 16.

In Bernici Eanfleda obtained to be King.Both slain by Cadwalla the Britain.Who was afterward kill'd by Osvald their Succesfour.Penda and his Mercians rebell.In the conflict Osvald is slain.

the Bernicis seized Eanfleda the Son of Edelfrid, who in like manner was issued out of this Province. For during the Reign of Edwin, the Sons of Edelfrid, with many more of the younger sort of Nobility lived in Exile, either with the Scots or Picts. Both these Kings abjured the Christian Religion, which they had learnt, and professed in banishment, and were shortly after cut off by Cadwalla the Britain, who now thinking the time might be come to drive the English Saxons out of their once unjustly obtained possessions, and to restore the Island to its ancient Owners, omitted nothing that might rationally tend to the bringing of this about. In the very Summer following the death of Edwin, he fell suddenly upon Osfrick, when he never expected him, and cut him off with his whole Army. After this he raged like a cruel Tyrant in these provinces for a year, at the end whereof, when Eanfleda came to him, but with twelve in his Company to treat of peace, he treated him in the self same manner. That year, faith Beda, is still at this day accounted unlucky and hateful to all good Men, both in respect of the Apostacy of these English Kings, who renounced their Baptism, as for the self Tyranny of this British King. Whereupon it was agreed by all, that computed the times of these Princes, to abolish the memory of these peridious Kings, and to assign the said year to the Reign of blessed King Osvald, who after the death of his Brother Eanfleda, coming with a small power of Men, but fortified by faith in Christ, that cursed Captain of the Britains, with his vast Army which he boasted nothing could resist, was slain in a place which in the Language of the English is called Denisesburna, or the Brook of Denis. The place, faith our Authour, is shewn at this day, and had in great Veneration, where Osvald being to fight erected the sign of the Cross, and kneeling down, besought Almighty God that he would Succour his Servants in this day of their Necessity. He himself laboured at the Erection of the Cross, which finished, he spake aloud to the whole Army: Let us kneel down and jointly pray unto the Omnipotent living and true God, that he would mercifully defend us from the proud Enemy, for he knows that we undertake a just War for defence of our Nation. The place is in the English Tongue called Hooftensfeld, or Heavenly Field, lying near to the Wall which the Romans built from Sea to Sea, for the restraining the insolent Inroads of Barbarians.

14. It's still at this day for the same reason, as some would have it, called Faldon near to Scilicest, in the Wall in the County of Northumberland; where was a Church built in Honour of St. Cuthbert and Kind Osvald, but the Name of the King hath so obscured the light of the other Saint, that the old Name being quite gone, it's now known onely by that of St. Osvald. For the place where Cadwalla was slain, the present Printed Copy of Beda hath it Denisesburna, and King Alfred's Translation Denisesburna, but Camden read it in Beda, Devilesburna, a little River running into Tine, which gave to a Mansion House upon it, the Name of Drivellston, as in old Records it's found written, now called Dilston, belonging in his time to the Ratcliffs. After this Victory achieved, Osvald governed his Dominions with great Justice and Tranquillity, being so humble, so tender hearted, and bountifull to the poor, that he behaved himself indeed as a true Father of his Country. This his Goodness is said to have been crowned with remarkable Success, so that his Empire, he extended farther than any of his Predecessours; for as some write all the Nations * of Britain submitted to his Command, not onely the English and Britains, but the Picts and Scots themselves, which good Fortune did not puff him up, but he continued as humble and mercifull as ever. But that neither he nor any other good man might place his happiness in this world, at last an alteration was made; and as then happened to him, contrary to his beginning. By his Industry and Prudence the Provinces of the Deiri and Bernicis, which formerly had disagreed were lovingly and fast united together. But in reference to his Neighbours abroad, matters stood in another posture, who; however they might for a while submit unto him, and acquiesce under his most mild Administration, yet it seems either counting this subjection, how mild soever it was, a slavery, or provoked by the Rulers of the Britains, and especially Penda the King of the Mercians, they were persuaded (a great Party at least) to revolt from their professed obedience. The matter flew so high, that Penda led his Pagan Subjects the Mercians forth against him, and they met at a place called Masenfeld, where a great and most bloody Battle being fought, he had the same ill fortune his Uncle Edwin had (whose Nephew he was by his Sister Awa) being with Multitudes of his followers slain upon the place on the fifth day of August; in the thirty eighth (or the thirty seventh, as King Alfred's Translation hath it) of Canutus the first his Age, when he had reigned nine years, as the Ancient Annalists reckoned, Haminga 13.

* Denique om-nes Nationes et Provincias Britannice que in quanto lingua, (id est Britonum, Frisorum, Scotorum, Anglo-rum) accepit sub eo.

Beda lib. 3. c. 6.

Unde dicitur Campus Masefeld, in quo Canutus obitus.

Haminga 13.

but

Sec. 6.

SECT. 6. but in this Number must be included that year which, as we formerly said, the Apostasie of the English Kings, and Tyranny of the British rendered so odious to them, as that they would not assign it to them, but rather abolish its memory. Penda the cruel Pagan after he had slain him, contented not himself with his bare death, but having killed him, tore his Body in pieces and fixed it upon three Stakes as a Spectacle of terror. The Place is at this day called Ofwestre, or Of-walstre, in British, Croix Oswalds, a little Town upon the West Frontier of Shropshire, not far from the River Severn. It was not long since inclosed with a Ditch and a Wall, and it had very good Traffick, especially of flight and thin Welsh Cottons. It seems to have had its first Original from Devotion to this King and Saint. But it was built by Modoc the Brother of Mereduc (as Caradoc of Lancaruan wrote) and the Fitz Allans being Normans and Earls of Arundell, who afterwards came to be Lords of it, walled it about. The Eclipses of the Sun in Aries have been most dangerous unto it, for twice when that Luminary was in that Sign, did it suffer very great Calamity by fire.

15. Oswald dying in this manner, Osui his Brother succeeded him in the Kingdom of Bernicia, a young Man of about thirty years of Age; but Osui the Sort of Ofriek obtained that of Deira in the third year of Ercombert King of Kent, in the Reign of Dagobert King of the Franks, A.D. DCXLIII. These two Kings being thus as it were Partners in the Throne, agreed, as is usual in such Cases. Differences were ever arising betwixt them, and at length grew to such an height, as one could not subsist if the other continued. They raised Forces on each side; but Osui perceiving he was overmatched in Number, thought it not fit to fight, but to reserve himself to better times; he therefore Disbanded his Army, commanding every Man to repair to his own Home from a place called Wilfars Dun, or the Hill of Wilfare, about ten Miles South-West from the Village Cataracto. He himself withdrew, with one onely faithful Souldier in his Company called Tondhere, to the House of a Count named Hunwald whom he esteemed as most sure to him; but it proved far otherwise, for by him he was betrayed, and slain by command of Osui together with his trusty Tondhere, on the thirtieth of the Calends of September in the ninth year of his Reign in a place called Ingerlingum. This Osui was a Man of a beautiful Aspect, tall of Stature, affable, Courteous, and very Bountifull, which Endowments both of Mind and Body procured him such Reputation, that he was by all men beloved, and many most Noble Persons out of all the Provinces thought themselves happy if they could but get into his Service; but above all, his Humility and singular Modesty were remarkable, whereof Beda gives us this Instance. "Osui bestowed an excellent Horse upon Aidan the famous Bishop of Lindisfarne, but the Bishop when a Poor Man asked Almes, gave him the Horse with all the rich Furniture upon him. The King hearing of this, as they were going in to Dinner, said to him: My Lord Bishop, Why would you give that Royal Horse that was for your own Saddle, to a Poor Man? Have we not many worse Horses and other things which would serve the Poor, instead of this Horse I made choice of for your own Person? The Bishop instantly replied, King, what do you say? Is that Son of a Mare more dear to you than that Son of God? With that they went in to Dinner, the Bishop to his Seat; but the King being come from Hunting, fate him down by the Fire with his Attendants. But remembering his Servant, went hastily to him, at whose feet he fell and besought him not to be angry, affirming he would never after speak or concern himself, whatever he gave of his Money to the Children of God. The Bishop was wonderfully amazed, and rising hastily, raised him up; telling him he was very well pleased if he would but sit down to Dinner, and be cheerful. The King then at his Request began to be merry, but the Bishop began to be very sad, so as he shed Tears, of which his Priest taking notice, in their own Language (they were both Scots) which neither Osui nor his Servants understood, demanded the reason. I know (saith he) that the King will not live long: For till this time I never beheld an humble King; whence I apprehend, that he will speedily be taken away by Death; for this Nation is not worthy of such a Governour. Not long after was this sad Prefage of the Bishop fulfilled in the Murder of Osui. And Aidan lived but till the twelfth day after his Death, dying himself on the last of August.

In Bernicia Osui.In Deira Osui succeeds.

Who differ.

And Osui by the others command is slain.

His Character.

Apud Cambd. nimis in Shrop.

Lib. 3. c. 14.

* Domine Auguste, quod Rex Alfredus ait: Min Domine Biscop, Bawoi lo-die fomiter Sacerdotem tu-pulo Domini salutem. Min Hiford adduc non erat in u-fu, que com-pellatio in ho-diermam, My Lord, transfit.

Ofwi and Penda do quarrel.

16. Osui having removed his Equal, whom he much grudged, yet did not find himself freed from trouble by that unworthy A&T. He found continual fears and trouble from the Mercians, Penda their King never ceasing to cast one Rub or other in his way. Yet passed there several Acts of kindness and indearment, as one would have imagined betwixt the Families. Penda had a Son called Peada, who being a young man, for his good Endowments accounted worthy of a Kingdom, was by his father appointed to the government of their Nation. He came into Northumberland to Osui, desiring his Daughter Alfreda in Marriage, which he could not obtain except he and his Subjects received the Christian Religion. He upon hearing what was preached concerning the promise of an Eternal Kingdom, the hope of a Resurrection and Immortal Life, professed himself a Believer, though he never should obtain the young Lady, being much induced to this Belief by the Persuasions of Alfrid the Son of Osui, his Friend and Kinsman, who had Married his Sister Cyniburg the Daughter of Penda. Notwithstanding these Alliances, Beda tells us, that Osui suffered inconstant, most bitter and Intolerable Eruptions from the said King of the Mercians who had slain his Brother. Necessity often enforcing him, he often presented him with Gifts innumerable, therewith to purchase Peace, and prevent the utter ruine of his Dominions. The perfidious Prince did not conform himself to his Desires, but resolved to root out and destroy all his People little and great, which Osui perceiving, betook himself to Divine assistance, vowing, in case he obtained the Victory over him, to Consecrate his Daughter as a Nun to perpetual Virginity, and to pass over twelve Possessions for the building of Monasteries. Armed more by Faith than any Carnal Hope he could have of Victory, he gave Battle to the Enemy, who is said to have brought into the Field thirty times as many men, thirty Legions whereof each was headed by a skillful Leader. These Forces he and Alfrid his Son engaged with a very small Army. He had another Son Egfrid by Name, who was at this time an Hostage in Mercia with Cinolf the Queen.

A Battle en-fines in which Penda is slain.

17. Ethilwald the Son of Oswald who ruled in Deira, though he ought to have been assisting to them, as good Beda observes, was at this time on the contrary side, and commanded a Party which was to engage against his Country and his Uncle, but when they came to fight he withdrew himself, and in a safe place expected the event of the Battle. When they joyed, thirty Pagan Captains were soon slain or routed, and all the Auxiliaries in a manner cut off; amongst whom was Adilhere the Brother and Successor of Auna King of the East Angles, who had blown the Coals betwixt the two Kings, and been the great Cause of the War. The Battle being fought near the River Fifwed, which then through excess of Rain was overflowed, it happened that more perished by the Waters than by the Sword. It was fought by King Osui in the County of Loidis in Regione on the seventeenth of the Calends of December, and the thirteenth year of his Reign, to the great advantage of both the Nations. For he both freed his own People from the Hostile Invasions of the Pagans, and the other of the Mercians and the Neighbouring Provinces, Penda their Head being now cut off, he reduced quickly to the Christian Faith. This Loidis is that eminent Town in the West Riding of Yorkshire, now called Leeds, which became an House of the Kings when Cambodanum was burnt to the ground, a rich Town (so lately it was) by means of clothing. The very place of the Fight Writers call Winmidfeld, which Name we may suppose was given it of the Victory; like as a Place in Wesphalia where Quintilius Varus with his Legions was slain, is in the Dutch Tongue called Winfield or the Field of Victory, as Ortelius hath observed. The little Region or Territory about it, which Beda mentions, was in old time called by the Name of Elmet: and was conquered by Edwin the Son of Ella King of Northumberland, after he had thence expelled Careticus the British King in the year of our Lord DCXX.

To the joy of all men.

18. The death of Penda, who had been the death of so many Kings, caused in all places out of his own Territories very great rejoicing, which as well the Affinity and Consanguinity wherein several were conjoined to them he had slain, may persuade us to believe, as the Song that was made upon this occasion. Osui in Winward anno vindi-cata est cedes Aune, cedes Regum Sigberti & Egnoice, cedes Regum Osvaldi & Edwini.

Regum Sigberti & Egnoice, cedes Osvaldi & Edwini. Sic Mash. Florileg. ad Ann. 655. at vero Huntingdon hoc modo; in Winward anne vindicata est cedes Aune, cedes Regum Sigberti & Egnoice, cedes Regum Osvaldi & Edwini.

to his beek all the Kingdom of Mercia for three years after the death of Penda, together with all the other Southern Provinces (as his Brother before him had done) and the greatest part of these belonging to the Piſts. Yet was he ſo good natur'd as to beſtow on Penda the Son of Penda, becauſe he had Married his Daughter, and was his Kinſman, the Kingdom of the Southern Mercians ſeparated from the Northern Mercians by the River of Trent, whereof the Southern in thoſe days contained five thouſand Families, and the Northern ſeven. But the Eaſter following Penda was murdered, and that as was reported by Conſpiracy of his Wife. Three years being completed after the death of Penda, Immin, Eaba, and Eadberht, advanced to the Throne Wulfher his Son a Youth whom they hid from danger, which done they revolted from Ofwi, whoſe Governors driving away, they valiantly defended the Liberties of their King and Country. Of Ofwi there's not much more remarkable. His good demeanour to his People in great meaſure obliterated that bloody Crime of murdering Ofwi; but this Beda teſtifies of him, that with very great pains he maintained his Dignity, which is not only applicable to the great Induſtry he uſed for attainment of that power, at which he arrived (he being the ſeventh of the moſt powerful Kings amongſt the Engliſh Saxons, as his Brother Ofwald is by Beda reckoned the Sixth) but in relation to the perpetual troubles and dangers he underwent, not only brought upon him by Penda the Mercian King, but by Ethiwald the Son of his Brother, who by ſome is ſaid to have ſucceeded Ofwi, nay his own Son Aethfrid; this being the ordinary Lot and Portion of men of blood. He reigned moſt painfully twenty and eight years, and died on the firſt of March in the fifty eighth year of his Age.

Translato ergo ad cœlestia Regna Oswaldo, suscepit Regni terrestris sedem pro-prio fratre ejus Oswi Juvenis
triginta circi-ter annorum, Et per annos viginti octo laboriosissime rexit, &c.
Beda, lib. 2.

c. 14.
Florentinus Wi-gorn. ad An.
673.

Lib. 4. c. 12.
Cum quibus & Edhads in provincia Lindisfarorum, quam nuper tri-me Rex Egfridus, superato in bello & fu-gato Wulfsbero detinuerat, ordinatur E-piscopus.
Marb. Flori-legus ad Ann.
671.
Lib. 4. c. 21.

19. Of his long dead, Egfrid his Legitimate Son succeeded him in the third year of Constantine the Emperour of Constantinople, the seventh of Egbert King of Kent, during the Reign of Childerick the Second, King of the Franks, A. D. DCLXXI, or the year before, as Beda placeth it. His Father being sickly toward his latter end, could not procure Wulfhere, who had set up for himself in Mercia, and therefore left to him a War as Hereditary, which he so profecuted, as that he drove Wulfhere out of Lindefye, and recovered it again to his Paternal Territories. Thus much is only hinted to us by Beda; how long he kept it is utterly uncertain. For Malmshury falling foul upon him for his Impiety, shewed in the malicious profecuting of Bishop Wilfride, adds, that towards humble Suppliants he was proud and harsh, a Disafe wherewith all Tyrants are infected; that on the contrary against Rebels he was sluggish and lazy, and defacing the Triumphs of his Father lost the Empire of the Mercians, and being beaten in Battel by Ethelrede the Son of Peuda, lost also his Brother. In the second year of the Reign of Egfrid, there was a wonderful great Fight of Birds, many thousands of them being killed, and the Foreigners seemed to be worsted. This might seem to betoken that great Fight which was fought eight years after near the River of Trent, betwixt Egfrid and the said King Ethelrede; where, as the same Authour Beda tells us was slain, Esfwin the Brother of Egfrid, a young man very much beloved by the People of both the Provinces, whose Sister by Name Ofrieth the said Ethelrede had married. This Bartel it seems did not, together with the young Prince's life, put a Period to the Controversie. For Beda writes that more new matter of a more sharp War and longer enmity arose betwixt the angry Kings and their People, till Theodore the Bishop by his Diligence and Intercession took up the Quarrel, and prevented the dreadful mischiefs which thereupon would have followed; making this Agreement, that Bloud should not be required for the Bloud of Esfwin, but his Brother should be contented with a certain Sum of money to be paid by Ethelrede. And the Peace made upon this occasion continued a long time betwixt these Kings and their Kingdoms.

20. But though Egfrid had peace with the Mercians, and on this side the Sea, he was of so restless an humour, that finding no work in Britain, he must needs transfer his Arms over into Ireland, in the year of our Lord DCLXXXIV, under Command of one Berht, he sent an Atmy over thither, and miserably wasted that Nation, which was both innocent, and always most friendly to that of the Englifs, neither Churches nor Monasteries being any whit spared. The Islanders or Scots did what they could, both by repelling force with force, and putting up their Prayers to Heaven for Divine Assistance. And although, faith he, Curles cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven, yet was it believed that they who were now desperately curled for their Impiety, were suddenly punished by the full judgment of Almighty God. For in the year following this King Egfrid, without any mature advice, leading out his Army to waste the Countrey of the Picts, though though his Friends earnestly laboured to dissuade him, and amongst others, St. Cuthbert, who was newly then ordained Bishop, he was by the cunning Enemy, who counterfeited a flight drawn within the frains of unpassable Mountains, and with the greatest part of the Forces he brought along with him, cut off, in the fortieth year of his Age, and the fifteenth of his Reign, on the thirteenth day, before the Calends of June. As I said, saith Beda, his Friends advised him against this War, but as the foregoing year he would not hear the most Reverend Father Egbert, when he exhorted him from offering violence to Scotland, which had nothing hurt him, as a punishment to him for that sin, it came to pass that now he would not hear them who strove to prevent his utter overthrow. And from this time it was that the hopes and valour of the English Empire began to decay and dwindle. For both the Picts recovered the Land of their Possession, which the English and Scots, that inhabited Britain, held, and some Part of the Britains obtained their Liberty which they still retain for the space of forty six years. Amongst many others of the English Nation, which were either slain by the Sword, condemned to bondage, or fled for their lives from the Land of the Picts, Trimwin the most Reverend Man of God, was one who had been a Bishop amongst them, but now came back with those that belonged to him in the Monastery of Ebburcurnie, which stood indeed in the Countrey of the English, but bordered upon the Friith, which separated their Territories from those of the Picts. These be the words of Beda, who diligently distinguishes in several places, the Scots that inhabited Scotland, from the Scots that inhabited Britain, but when he mentions Scotia or Scotland, he means only one Countrey thereby, and that is Ireland.

CHAP. II. Contemp. with the Constantinop. Rom. Emp. Egfrid, &c. 153

Alfride succeeds him.

21. Egfrid being slain, Alfride or Aldfrid his Brother, and the Son of Ojwi, succeeded him, in the first year of the Emperour Julianian the younger, the first of Edrich King of Kent, in the Reign of Theodorick King of the Franks. A. D. DCLXXXVI. Malmshury writes, that Ojwi had but two Sons, whereof the spurious being rejected, the legitimate succeeded him in his Kingdom, which was Egfrid; yet a little after, he tells us that Egfrid in the Battel fought with Ethelred, the Son of Penda lost his Brother, and after this he writes, how the news of his Death flying all over, at last came to the Ears of his Brother Alfrid, who being bafe born, although the elder, was by the Nobility thought not fit to Reign, and either by constraint, or out of indignation, went into Ireland, where being secure from the hatred of his Brother, and having leisure sufficient to follow his Studies, he much bettered his mind by the precepts of Philosophy. If he retired in this manner into Ireland, then from all these passages we may guess that the indignation and jealousy of his Brother follow him thither, and hence it is that we may fetch the account of his sending an Army into that Island. Therefore they who formerly refused him, now when they had need of him, and considered his worth, betook themselves to Intreaties, so well satisfied was he with the present condition of his Life. But when he had once undertaken what was offered, he gave them no cause to repent them of their choice, being a Man mighty in the Scriptures, and so careful of the Duty incumbent upon him, that for nineteen years he Governed his People in great Peace, and with as great Applause, having no other flaw in the whole course of his Administration, but what they find concerning his Persecution of Bishop Wulfride. Yet was his Kingdom contained within much narrower Bounds, than in the days of his Father and Brother. For the Picts making an insolent use of their Victory, set upon the English, whom long quiet and ease had rendered less fit for resistance, and made bold to juggle them out of some of their Territories lying toward the North, or to subdue and bring them under their Yoke, though they still inhabited these Countries. And never after could they recover their liberty, and reunite themselves with the English Brethren, by the Picts coming to be subject to the Scotts, though their Language at this day sufficiently discovers their Original.

guage at this day sufficiently discovers their Original.

22. After Alfred his Son, Ofreda was King in the sixth year of Tiberius Apinarius Emperour; at the twelfth of Withred King of Kent, in the days of Childebert the second of France, Frank, A. D. DCCXIII. He was but a Child of eight years old, he heaved himself soon enough to be of sufficient Age to be virtuous. He Reigned but eleven years, and was famous for nothing, infamous for his uncleanness, which could not be kept within the bounds of ordinary voluptuousness, but extended to the very Cloysters, where he violated the Virginity of those that were, as their Relations imagined, secured against such attempts by a Religious

Sect. 6.

Ex quo tempore, spes cœpit & virtus Regni Anglo-rum fluere acterò sublapsa referri. Beda,
l. 4. c. 26.

The occasion of Egfrid's invading Ireland.

Osrede made King.

Is very de-bauch'd.

Peada's Son murdered.

Ofici Diet.

Egfrid succ
ceeds.

Who chastises Wulfere the Mercian for rebolting.

Fights Æthelrede the Mercian King.

An Agreement made betwixt them.

He Invade Ireland.

Then Ceolwulf. 24. Then was Ceolwulf proclaimed King, who was Brother to Alrede, and he made a shift for eleven years to make good his Hold. But the People were now so used to making and unmaking Kings, that after these years he tasted of their perfidious humour being with Innocency sent to Heaven as his famous Sepulchre at Hagulfade, and the Miracles which they said they saw sufficiently testified to that then repenting Age. To his merit sure it must be ascribed, that his Nephew Ofrede the Son of Alrede succeeded him, but being got in, he could not keep Possession; for scarcely had he enjoyed his Royalty one year, but Ethelbert (or Atelrede, or Ethelwald) the Son of Mollo drove him out, and recovered his Seat after twelve years of exile, which he held four more, which once past, he could not escape the common calamity of his Predecessours, but was miserably slain. Some said he was justly punished for the unjust putting of Ofrede to Death, with whose Resignation he ought in conscience to have been contented: but many Bishops, and Noblemen who had more sense than their Neighbours, were so weary of these perpetual Disorders and Murders, that they left thereupon their Native Country. Nay, Charles the Great was so incensed, that as Alcuin wrote, having delivered Letters and Presents to Messengers, to be delivered to this Ethelrede when he heard how he was murdered, he exclaimed against this perfidious, perverse Nation, the Murderers of their Lords, affirming they were worse than Pagans; and if Alcuin had not interceded, whatever good he could have hindered, or mischief he was in a capacity to do, would have been performed against them. So great a terror did this cursed custom strike in all the Nobility, that he himself, no Candidates appeared for the Kingdom; for considering the fresh example of others, they chose rather to sleep in a whole skin and live in obscurity, than venture upon so dangerous, nay pernicious Royalty; most of the Northumbrian Kings having come to an untimely end. Therefore was the Country without a King, for the space of thirty and three years, and became a derision and a Prey to all the neighbours. The Danes had before this begun to make Inroads and Depredations in those parts, and such as had once been in them, shewing the great booty they carried back to their Countrymen, and telling them of the baseness and sluggishness of the Inhabitants, so stirred them up with the greatness, yea easiness of the enterprise, that the Barbarians flocked thick and three fold, and seized on those Quarters until the time lately mentioned. For they had a King (rather a Regulus) of their own several years, who yet truckled under the King of the West Saxons: and the forementioned thirty three years being over, King Egbert obtained this together with the other Countries.

25. Thus have we presented the Reader with what the Histories of these Times afford concerning this Kingdom of Northumberland; more we could not, except instead of a true Account of things, we should take the trade of Writing Romances. Concerning the limits of this Kingdom in general, and the Deiri and Bernicii betwixt themselves to that short Account we have already given, we shall farther add that as to its Northern Border it was terminated by that Southern Part of Scotland, which on the East and West is limited by the German, and Frisch Seas, on the South by that Bay called Astuarium Solvaticum, or Solway Frith, and the River Tweed. Northerly by the Frieth of Dunbritan, and that of Edenburgh; for that this Kingdom extended it self to both these Frieths, whereof the one limited the Kingdom of the Scots, and the other that of the Picts, is most evident both from the Writings of Beda, and other most certain Testimonies. But to the Distinction of the Provinces of Deira, and Bernicia, amongst themselves Authors do very much differ. Ralph of Chester from the Alfred of Beverly affirms, that the Kingdom of the Deiri reached from the River Humber to that of Tyne; and the Kingdom of the Bernicii from the River of Tyne, as far as the Scottish Sea, with whom agrees the Monk of Malmesbury, onely adding to the Scotch Sea this note, Where now stands the Town of St. John of St. Johnstoun. But Richard the Prior of Hagulfade, in the beginning of his Book concerning the State of his Church, hath these words. Deira beginning at Humber, ended at the River Tees: and of this opinion was Humphrey Lhuyd that excellent Antiquary. Cambden sometimes assigns the River Tees, sometime the River Tyne, as the common limit of these Provinces; and John of Tinmouth in the Life of St. Oswald seems to reconcile the Controvercie in this manner. The Kingdom of the Deiri anciently extended it self from the River

To whom succeeded Ofrede. Who was outed by Ethelbert.

An Interregnum for thirty odd years.

At length Egbert is made King.

The limits of the Kingdom of Deiri, and Bernicii.

Vide Osserium in Addend. & Eborac. Primord. P. p. 1003.

154 The Kingdom of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain, PART IV.

Sect. 6. Veil. These courses brought him into such hatred, even of his own kindred, that to prevent one sin, they committed a greater by taking away his Life, when he hoped he had scarcely spent one quarter of it. Yet had they that removed him out of the way to take his place, supplied as well the want of Eminence and Vertue, as of Royalty, they might have been more excusable, at least it would have partly covered and concealed the blackness of the Parricide; but Kenred, who went after him took the Throne, and therein sat for two years, and after him Ofrie, who reigned eleven, did nothing memorably, or which could call them worthy of that Dignity to which they advanced themselves. Ofrie indeed in this, had the advantage of the other, that he did not first leap into the Chair of the third Prince, and before his death, adopted Ceolwulf or Ceolwulf the Brother of Kenred for his Successour. This is that Ceolwulf to whom Beda dedicates his Ecclesiastical History, at the end whereof he signifies, that this King was embraced with great difficulties, and how he would extricate himself, or what end they would have, was utterly uncertain. What these Difficulties were, he tells us not, either because he would not burn his finger by meddling with matters of his own time, or for that his design was to write an Ecclesiastical History onely, which seems to have been his drift, for else he might doubtless have given up a more large account of what he has left, but a mere scantling, a few remarks, and those but by the bye, as they were necessary to be brought in for making way to, or illustrating some other matters relating for the most part to the Cloyster. As for Ceolwulf, we are told he was so edified with what he read in the History of Beda, that desirous to be of the Number of those Kings who had exchanged their Crowns for Cows, he at length resigned his Kingdom and betook himself to a Monastery. Or rather he was wearied with these difficulties he found in reigning, and however his Crown seemed glorious to the eyes of the Beholders, felt the weight of it so great, that he was not satisfied till he was eased of his burthen, which he cast off from his Head after he had governed eight years, and in the Monastery of Lindesfarn, took upon him the Monkish Habit. He was not defended from the Loins of the late Kings of the Northumbrians, but in another Line descended from Ida. He was the Son of Cutha, whose Fore-fathers were Cuthwin, Leithwald, Egwald, Aldein, Oga and Ida.

23. But he quitted not the Government before he had provided his People of another King. This was Egbert his Uncles Son, as Malmesbury calls him, but Huntingdon tells us he was the Son of Ecca, who was Son to Leithwald or Leithwald; and as he, as the Flowergatherer hath it, was Son to one Ceolwulf, so that he could not be of that Line, but now mentioned, yet he calls him his Kinsman too. Whoever he was, he began his Reign in the two-and twentieth year of Leo Isaurus the Emperour, the thirteenth of Edbert King of Kent, the thirtieth of Selrede King of the East Saxons, in the days of Theodorick King of the Franks, A. D. DCCXXXVIII. We can tell the Reader that he Reigned, but what he did particularly in his Reign, he as well as we must still be ignorant, Beda having told us but little of these Civil Matters; but after his time no one of any tolerable Abilities, having taken any care to transmit any thing of moment to posterity, so that we have little more than the bare Names. But that he laudably governed, Malmesbury tells, treading in the steps of good Princes. He had a Brother basely born it seems, and of his own Name in his time Archbishop of Tork, who as Alcuin the Schoolmaster of Charles the Great left in writing, did very much for the advancement of learning, and others add, that it was in Conjunction with, and by the assistance of, the King his Brother. The King did so well agree with the Archbishop, and so emulated him in Religion, that needs he must be Religious too, and more Religious, having his Crown shaven and turn Monk after he had Reigned twenty years, leaving his Kingdom to his Son Ofswulf. He being not able to steer the Helm, was, though an Innocent, thrown over-board to make way for Mollo, when he had born the Name of King little more than a year. Mollo held it stoutly and laboriously eleven years; but was then served in the same manner, as he or others for him had used his Predecessour, by the Devices of Alrede who got his Place. Alrede so ingratiated himself with the People, and so plied his work that he held it for nine, but in his tenth was compelled by them that now said they were not his Subjects to give way to Ethelbert the Son of Mollo. But he was but a King of the second Head neither; in the fifth year they Loyally failed again, and out they drove him.

And at last Murdered.

Kenred succeeds.

Then Ofrie.

Next Ceolwulf.

Who turns Monk.

Egbert made King.

Who turning Monk leaves his Kingdom to Ofswulf.

He is succeeded by Mollo.

Then Alrede Reigns.

Next Ethelbert.

Sect. 6. River Humber, to the River Tyne: that of the Bernicii from the River Tyne (rather Tees) as far as the Scotch Sea, which in the Scotch Language is called Forth. For all the ground which lay between the Rivers, Tyne and Tees in those Days was only a waste or Desert, and therefore was under the Jurisdiction of neither, being only a Receptacle, and Habitation of Wild Beasts. The same thing is observed in the Scotch Chronicle of John Fordon.

26. Indeed we we read in the Ecclesiastical History of Beda, That Eata Lit. 4. Cc. 12. who governed the Province of the Bernicii had his Episcopal See in the Church of Hagustald or Lindisfarne. Therefore that not only the Church of Durham (to which after the death of Beda the See of Lindisfarne was translated) but that of Hagustald on this side the River Tyne may not be removed out of the Province of the Bernicii, wherein Beda, and not he alone placeth it; we are forced to assign the River Tees rather than Tyne, as the common limit of these two petty Kingdoms. By this means the Bishoprick of Durham, and that we now call the County of Northumberland, must be assigned to the Eastern Part of Bernicia; and to the Western, all that Kingdom of Cumberland, which after the Eversion of this of the Northumbrian Angles, was settled betwixt the River Derwent, and the Frith of Dunbritan, by the CambroBritains or Welshmen. For Cumbria, or Cumberland took the Name of the Inhabitants who were true and Natural Britains, and called themselves in their own Language Kumbri and Kambri: and Histories testify that here they remained a long time in despite of the English Saxons, however they fretted and stormed thereat. Marianus himself testifieth as much, who terms this Countrey Cumbrorum terram, or the Land of the Cumbri, or Britains, and to it bear mention the British Names, which in this Traēt very many places still bear, as Caerluel, Caerdronoc, Penrith, Penrodocke, and the like. Late it was, as we said, &c it was subject to the English Saxons, and when their state became fore shaken by Danish Wars, and was run to ruine; it had peculiar Governours called Kings of Cumberland, till the Year of our Lord DCCCCXVI, at what time King Edmund by help of Leolin Prince of Wales (who herein was unnatural) wasted all Cumberland, and having put out the Eyes of both the Sons of Danmail King thereof, granted it to Malcolin King of Scots, whereupon the Eldest Sons of the Kings of Scotland were under the English Saxons, and Danes, both called Prefects, or Deputy Governours of Cumberland. But this is by way of Anticipation. To put a period to our Discourse of the Kingdom of Northumberland, King Egbert reduced it under his obedience in the DCCCXXVIII. Year of our Lord, and the eight and twentieth of his own Reign, in the seventh of Michael Traulus Emperour of the East; the fourteenth of Ludovicus Pius the Western Emperour, the year preceding the like fate of the Kingdom of the East Saxons.

S E C T. VII.

S E C T. VII.

The Kingdom of the East Angles in Britain. From the first Founding of it by Uffa to the Conquering of it by Edward King of the English Saxons.

The Space of Four Hundred Forty One years.

Sect. 7. Next after the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, followed that of the East Angles, which was begun by Uffa, in the tenth year of the Emperour Justin the younger, the fifteenth of Ethelbert King of Kent, the seventeenth of Alla King of the Northumbrians, about the beginning of the Reign of Chilperick King of the Franks, A. D. DLXXXV.

2. Of Uffa there is little or nothing more extant than that he begun this Kingdom, (how and in what manner is utterly unknown) and that from him the succeeding Kings were called Uffings. After him his Son Tyrlus or Tyrulus, of whom there is only remarkable, that he was Father to Redwald, the most potent King of the East Angles, the same who received Edwin, and upon his account slew Ethelfrid King of the Northumbrians. The Monk of Malmesbury, as contrary to the sense of others, he makes this Kingdom to have begun before that of the West Saxons, though after the other of Kent, mentions this Redwald, as the first King being the tenth from Woden. Of these seven Princes said by Beda, to have had Dominion over all the Southern Parts lying on this side the River of Humber, him he mentions as the fourth. In another place he tells us, that he was Noble as to his Birth, but Ignoble as to his Actions. For being perwaded by Edwin to receive the Christian Faith, he was baptized; but returning home was perwaded by his Wife and others about him to fall off again, so that he living betwixt two, like the old Samaritans, seeming to serve both Christ and Idols, having in the same Chapel an Altar for Christ, and an Altar for Divels, which Chapel Adulf King of that Province, who lived in the time of Beda, testified that he himself had seen when a Boy. But Eorpwald his Son, being perwaded also by Edwin, was not only almost but altogether a Christian, and was slain by a certain Pagan called Richbercht. Three years after the Province lay in confusion and error, till Sigbercht or Siggebert obtained the Kingdom, a Man, faith Beda, most Christian and most Learned throughout, who while his Brother yet reigned living in exile in Gall, was there baptized, and when he came to reign made all his Province partaker with him of his Faith. As a means to propagate and confirm Religion, as well as to cultivate otherwise the minds of his People, he erected Schools by the assistance of the Bishops, and furnished them with Masters and Teachers, according to the Custom of those of Kent. At length he relinquished his Kingdom to Eggrick his Kinsman, who before that held some part of it, and took upon him the Monastical Habit.

3. When he had for a good space continued in that condition, it happened that the East Angles had war with Penda, that common Enemy of Christians, then King of the Mercians. Finding themselves too weak for their Enemies, to encourage the Souldiers, they desired Siggebert to be present at Fight, and when he flatly refused, they drew him by force out of the Monastery, and placed him in the Battel, presuming that the Souldiers under the Eye of him, who had lately been a most valiant and Martial Captain, would not dare to think of Flight. But he being mindfull of his profession, and in the midst of great Arms would only bear a Rod in his Hand, and in that posture was slain, together with Eggrick the King; and their whole Army was either slain or dispersed by the pursuing Pagans. In the Kingdom succeeded Anna the Son of Enus (Brother to Radwald, as some write, but Beda only says he was of the Royal Race) a Person good himself, and Uffa began the Kingdom.

After him reigned Tyrlus his Son.

Then Redwald.

Next Eorpwald.

Afterwards Siggebert.

Who turning Monk left his Kingdom to Eggrick.

Who were both slain in a Battel with Penda King of the Mercians. After him Anna, who had the same fate.

Lit. 2. c. 15.

Vir per annis Christianissimus ac Doctissimus.

Idem. lib. 3. cap. 18.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 7. and a Father of as good an Off-spring. Of him Beda saith he should speak more afterward, but we do not find him so good as his word, it's well he tells us at present, that he also was slain by that furious Peuda. By the Off-spring he means the three Daughters that this Auna left, whereof Etheldritba was married to two Husbands yet died a Virgin, Edelburga was first a Nun, and then Abbess of her Houle at Briga or Bruges a Monastery in Gall, as Malmesbury terms it, and Sexburga was the Wife of Ercombert King of Kent, after whose death she took the veil in the same Monastery with her Sister Ethelreda, being accounted a Saint. It seems he had no Son, for his Brother Ethelberius succeeded him, who (by necessity doubtless was forced to do it; for we cannot think he would do it of choice) joined with Peuda the Mercian, against Osui the King of Northumberland, and was slain with him in the Battle heretofore mentioned. Ethelwald his Brother took his Seat, and by continued Successions devolved the Kingdom upon the Sons of Ethelberius.

Then Adulph and Elwold, after whom one Beorna was King, to whom succeeded one Ethelrede. His Son was Saint Ethelberht, whom Offa King of the Mercians deceitfully slew, and adjoined this Kingdom of the East Angles to that of the Mercians. After this time saith Malmesbury, few great Men reigned in East England, because of the violence of the Mercians to the time of St. Edmund, who in the sixteenth year of his Reign, was slain by Hingwar the Pagan. From that time for the space of fifty years, the English ceased to reign in this Country. For during nine years, the province was without any King still exposed to, and harassed by the Pagans. Afterward in East Saxony, as he calls it, Guthrum the Danish King, reigned twelve years in the time of King Alfred. Guthrum had for his Successor a Dane too called Eoleric, who when he had governed or tyrannized fourteen years was slain by the English, for the incivilities he offered them. Yet could they not for all this recover their Liberty, the Danish Officers either oppressing them themselves, or using them against the West Saxon Kings, till Edward the Son of Alfride, expelled the Danes, and delivering the English from their Tyranny, joined both Provinces to his West Saxon Empire, in the fifth year after the death of St. Edmund the King and Martyr, and of his own Reign the fifteenth. This is the short Account we have of this Petty Kingdom of the East Angles, for which we cannot but complain of the lettered men of those times, whereof we write, that they should not take notice of, and transmit to posterity those several remarkable Passages, transactions of very great weight, of which we have scarcely the Mens Names. This they omitted out of heedlessness, or rather because they were so mightily taken up with Monastical lives, that little else could they think on, nothing else seemed worth their while. But by the History of the Mercians and West Saxons, several things may be more largely explained which have relation to this Kingdom.

Next Ethelwald.

Then Adulph and Elwold. After them Ethelrede.

Next St. Edmund.

Then 'twas governed by Guthrum a Dane. After him Eoleric.

Last of all Edward who expelled the Danes, and joined it to the West Saxon Empire.

SECT. VIII.

SECT. VIII.

The Mercian Kingdom of the Angles in Britain, from the first completing of it by Peuda, to the Conquest of it by Egbert King of the West Saxons.

The Space of Two Hundred Forty Nine Years.

Peuda King. I. THE Kingdom of the Mercians was completed by Peuda, a most valiant and hardy Souldier, but as Malmesbury terms him, a Fanatick and impious Person, after he had till the fiftieth year of his Age, conquered several places, and continually warred against his Neighbours, in the CXXXIX. year after the death of Hengiſt, in the sixteenth year of Heracius the Emperour, the tenth of Eadwald King of Kent, and the tenth of Edwin King of the Northumbrians, when Sigebert the Little was King of the East Saxons, and Eorpwald of the Eastern Angles, A.D. DCXXXVI. The Saxon Annals derive thus his Pedigree. He was the Son of Wibba, who had these Ancestours, Crida, Cunewald, Cnebba, Icele, Eomere, Angelgeat, Offa, Weremund, Wigbriſeas, Woden.

2. This Kingdom as we said was completed by Peuda, but others laid the Foundations of it, though he, for the cause alledged, be generally accounted the first King of this Province. For both Matthew of Westminster; and others write, that the first beginning of it was effected by Creodda a Saxon, whom in the Genealogy he calls Crida. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon names him Crida, who having, as far as can be known by any writings, first, saith he, obtained the Kingdom of Merce, died and left for his Successor his Son Wipha. This Wipha or Wippha, was followed by one Cherle or Keorle, who was not his Son but his Kinsman, but he either dying, or which is yet unlikely, relinquishing the Kingdom to him, Peuda succeeded when he had now consumed the best of his Years, as having completed the Number of Fifty. This Kingdom being by him enlarged and strengthened, obtained the Name of Mypenapic and Meapelon, but for what reasons is not agreed, a pair of the greatest Antiquaries differing about it. Humphrey * Lloyd is of opinion it was named from the River Merſe, which indeed running betwixt Cheshire and LANCASHIRE, was the North-Western Bound of the Mercians. But Cambden † deriveth it from Meap an old English word which signified a Limit, for though it was by far the largest Kingdom of all, yet all the other bordered and confined upon it. Neither of these opinions are improvable, whether the River took Name from it, or it from the River; yet are not they so probable, but that of Wolfgangius Laus is as ridiculous, who in that work of his concerning the Migrations of Nations, affirms these Mercians to have been Marcomanni, and their Kings Peuda, Offa, and all the rest to have reigned in the lower Germany; whereas nothing is more certain by consent of all Histories than that never was there any such Kingdom there, and that these Kings and People inhabited that part of Britain, which we formerly assigned them. But the good Man going about to declare the Genealogies of the Kings of England, of the Norman Race doth it so pitifully, so confusedly, so falsely, that it appears, he neither ever in any good Authors either read the order of them, their Actions or their very Names, but received his home Intelligence from some silly fellow, as a certain eminent Mathematician in the Geographical Chart of this Island also did to their no small disparagement. And besides them Jeronymus Riggellus in his Ptolemy, printed at Venice an hundred years agoe, labouring to reconcile the ancient Names of places to the new, confounds several, that are an Hundred Miles distant from each other. Of these Strangers therefore the Reader is to take notice, and beware. As for this Kingdom of the Mercians he may observe, that it being settled, all the seven Kingdoms of the English Saxons were now begun.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 8.

* Seuton Angles-Saxones in Britannia Regnum quod a flumine Merſe Merciorum dicebatur constituitur, fol. 23 b.
† In Curia

Sect. 8. 3. Peada, as we said, had spent the best of his time before he came to be King, but the great things he performed afterward shewed, that the greatest of his Labours and Travels he had not passed. No sooner had he got the Power into his Hands, but he improved it for the Molestation of his Neighbours, thinking it no fault at all to disturb the World, to ruin Families, overturn Kingdoms, and destroy a Multitude of innocent Souls, and all to gratify the humour of one single Man, to tickle his fancy with the pitifull thought of domineering; the true account of the Actions of Conquerours, (or as that little one told the greatest of them) those publick Pirates who rob with whole Armies and Fleets, whose Power makes their Murthers and Robberies lawfull, and alone distinguisheth them from those puny ones, to which the Halter is appropriate. About the fourth or fifth year of his Reign, he undertook a War against Kinegil and Kiselm the Kings of the West Saxons, and with very great Forces on both sides, they met at a place called Cirancestre, as we read it in Huntingdon, where they fought a most bloody Battel, both the Armies as he says having abjured Flight, and were not to be parted, but by the darkness of the Night; and with the next Mornings light, were about to renew their malicious fury, but that more considerable thoughts interposed, and they came to an Agreement. The next Adventure he made, was with better (too good) Success, against Edwin the King of the Northumbrians. Herein he joyned with Cadwalla the Britain, and shewed that he no more regarded his own Lineage than Strangers themselves, neither yet was moved by any Religious pretences, assisting one Christian against another, and making use of that great Antipathy which their Religion could not remove, to gratify his ambitious and bloody Designs, which were prevalent in him, even, above all other things, which others as Heathenish as he have accounted Sacred. This appeared in his perfidious killing Edfrid the Son of Edwin, who had fled to him for Succour.

And several other neighbouring Kings. 4. Moreover Eorwald the Son of Redwald King of the East Saxons, whom others write to have been killed by Rickbert, is said by the Archdeacon of Huntingdon, to have been slain by him. How he killed Oswald the King of the Northumbrians, in the Battel of Maserfeld, we have shewed already. Raging thus, and breathing nothing but slaughter, even where he wanted Provocation, no wonder if every little fault committed against him was a Crime, it was so at least as to the measure of its Punishment inflicted by him. Cennalch the King of the West Saxons, having his Sister to wife put her away, of which opportunity glad, after two or three Attempts he drove him out of his Kingdom, not being able to resist him as his Father had done, and in exile he forc'd him to continue for three years. But this Prosecution extended not to blood, after which he thirsted as much as after drink in the greatest extremity of Summer, having one would think, as Malmesbury expresses it, a sense of some imminent slaughter, and the quality of a Raven which follows Armies, as having some present sense and smell of the dead Carcasses which shortly are to fall. Therefore set he upon Egbert King of the East Angles, and made a stout meal of Royal blood, at this bout killing both this King and Sigebert formerly King, though now a Monk, who would not by taking a Sword into his Hands defend himself, but like a Monk died in the Crowd without resistance. Another meal yet he made, and that was upon poor Anna King of the East Saxons, his Sword making but one bit, in one moment Huntingdon words it, devouring him and his Army, of which scarcely one Man remained. Yet still he had not done, with the same Ease he destroys also Edelhere his Brother and Successeur, as the Archdeacon relates, though elsewhere believes another Account of this Prince which we have already communicated to the Reader. Having soundly Plundered the Countrey, being now flest with the slaughter of so many Kings, he went into Northumberland to hunt after another, but there at the River Winnid met with his match, being dealt withall by Osui as he had dealt with others, being slain in the place after he had Reigned thirty years. A stout Souldier he was, and well deserved the Surname of Strenuus which was given him; yet is he not reckoned by Beda amongst those seven Princes which Reigned in effect over all the Kingdoms on this side Hum-ber. But his Power must have been Great in the several Kingdoms of Northumberland, and East England, the Kings whereof he slew, as also in Wessex, whereof he drove the King into exile. This they observe of him with much regret, that his Arms be onely turned upon his own Countrymen, suffering the Britains to enjoy what they had left, nay assisting Cadwalla in the Attempts Engages with the Kings of the West Saxons.

Then with the King of the Northumbrians.

Killing his Son that fled to him for Succour.

And several other neighbouring Kings.

At last is slain by Osui King of Northumberland.

Proles Cæ-ritum, Antio-nino Durco-novum, Bri-tannici Cæ-ri & Cæ-ri, Cæ-ri, Anglo-Saxonum Cypen-ceapne hodie Circles-ter & Ciroter in Glocestershire, ait Cembrianus Peudam hic à Cingelth fuisse dum urbem cepit maximis ob-fideret. Ma-rianus refer-unt à Brit-annici cepisse Cæulianum Westsaxonum Regem.

tempts he had made to recover Britain, so strong is Interest, or Humour and Malice, stronger than the strongest Bonds of Consanguinity.

5. Peada being Dead, his Son Peada succeeded to the Title, in the Sixteenth year of Ercmbert King of Kent, and the Fourteenth of Osui, King of the *Northumbria*s, A. D. DCLVI. Betwixt his Family, and that of Osui there was a double Match. He Married his Daughter the Sister of Alfrid, and Alfrid the Son of Osui Married the Sister of Peada, and Daughter of Peada, which yet could not bridle the extravagant humour of this Furious Pagan, who refused all offers made him, having resolved utterly to exterminate the Nation of the Northumbrians. Yet what if we say there was some Generosity in the Pagan, and that what he did was to restore Ethilwald the Son of Oswald to his Father's Kingdom? For this Ethilwald, as Beda calls him, or Dihwald as others, the Son of Oswald, who as they say ought to have assisted his Uncle, was on the other side, and having led an Army of Pagans against his Country when the Battels joined, drew off, and expected the issue in a safe place. But how little soever Peada was moved by the Alliance we now mentioned, Osui shewed how great a sense he had of it, when having now Conquered the Kingdom of the Mercians, and held it for three years, after his Death, as some say, he bestowed on Peada his Son-in-Law the Southern Mercians, which as we have formerly said were separated from the Northern by the River of Trent. However kind he was, his Daughter was as unnatural, for Peada when he had scarcely Reigned two years, was by his Wife's means they say made away, after which for three years more the Mercians were subject to Osui, and by him brought over to the Christian Faith. These years being expired, the Nobility Rebelled against him, and set up for King Wulhere the Son of Peada. He is said to have Inherited his Father's Valour, and being endowed with excellent Qualities both of Body and Mind, to have by all means laboured to discharge himself well of the expectation the People had of him. At the beginning of his Reign he was hard set by Cennalch King of the West Saxons, whom at length yet he overpowered, and after a great overthrow in a pitched Field invaded, waited his Kingdom, and marching through it with a great Army, took from him the Isle of Wight, which he kept not long in his hands, giving it to Ethelwald King of Suffex, whom having persuaded to embrace Christianity, he took up from the Fontas the Phrase of the Ancients was, or, as we say, was God-father to him. One tells us, that together with this Isle of Wight, he gave him in token of this Adoption a great Province of the Pari belonging to the Western Saxons as one now hath it, whereas in * Beda, from whom he took it, is read, The Province of the Meauvari, or as some Copies have it, the Meauvari. But Meauvari seems to be the better Reading, these being a People that Inhabited a Part of Hampshire, not far from Portsmouth, but farther within the Land. Their Habitation as yet having scarcely changed the Name at this day, is divided into three Hundreds, called Meau-borow, East-mean, and West-mean: and amongst them there mounts up an high Hill, invironed on the top with a large Rampire, and they call it Old Winchester; at which by Report there stood in Old Time a City, but now nothing remaineth of it: so as a Man would easily judge it to have been a Summer-landing Camp, and nothing else.

6. Wolfer Married Ermenilda the Daughter of Ercmbert King of Kent, by his Wife Sexburga the then Heir apparent of her Father's Kingdom; and by her pious Care and Insinuations two good things were brought to pass, viz. the Jutes of Kent, and the Angles of Mercia became in Friendship as it were one People after her Father's Death, though we know another succeeded in the Kingdom, and the Paganish Superstition was abolished throughout their Territories. By her he had a Son named Kinrede, and Werbung a Daughter, who became a Nun. He Reigned nineteen years, and had gone with a clear report from off the stage, but that he is noted to have been the first King of the English Saxons that committed Symony, having sold the Bishoprick of London, (which at this time therefore was in his Power) though Seated in the Kingdom of the East Saxons, to one Wina an ambitious Man. To Wolfer succeeded Ethelrede, or Adelrede another of Peada's Sons, in the Second year of Lotharius King of Kent, and the fifth of Egfrid King of Northumberland, A. D. DCLXXV. Malmesbury Writes, that he was more famous for Religion than Fighting, contenting himself with one eminent Expedition into Kent, to make known his valour to the World. The rest of his time he spent without Action, only Egfrid King of the Northumbrians ambitiously passing the Bounds of his own Kingdom, by a Battel, and therein the Death of his Brother Elfwig, he admonished, and taught more moderation and sobriety. So Peada succeeds.

Who is made away by his Wives Treachery. Osui Governs, Then Wulthere.

Who Routes the King of the West Saxons. Taking from him the Isle of Wight.

Marries.

Is accused of Symony, and Dies. Ethelrede succeeds.

Chronicon Job. Bromon in Regna Merciorum.

Mabref. Huntingdon. Chron. Job. Bromon.

De Sacro fonte leuvis, inde Suffexiter dicta. In cuius adoptionis signum infusum dedit. sibi Pictam arian ingen-tum Parvum provinciam occidentalem Saxorum Chronicon Job. Bromon.

* Lib. 4. c. 134

SECT. 8. the Monk with his onely's makes notable exceptions to what at first he laid down, as a general Remark upon this King. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon tells us with more circumstance, that Edelrede the New King of Mercia rose up against Lotair King of Kent: that Lotair dreading his Grandfather's and his Father's Valour, turned aside, and would not make any opposition, so that he destroyed the City of Rochelester, (as we must take it) and ranging all along the Province of Kent, carried back with him an unspeakable quantity of Booty. As to what happened betwixt him and Egfrid he adds, that in the Third year of Centwin King of the West Saxons a Comet appeared for three Months together, shining every Morning like another Sun. That in the year following Egfrid (or Egferd as he calls him) and Edelrede fought a mighty Battel near to Trent, and there was slain Alwin, Egferd's Brother, a Young Man, much beloved in both the Provinces. This enmity rose amongst them though Edelrede had Married their Sister Oftrith; and being once risen it was hard to get it down, this blood adding to its vehemence, as Oil to the flame. For every day offences and misapprehensions were multiplied betwixt these two fierce Kingdoms, threatening destruction to them both, but the endeavours of Theodore the Bishop at last took up the quarrel by this accommodation, that no blood should be required for the blood of the King's Brother, but only a sum of Money paid him. This he might the better doe, because Malmesbury tells the story, he was the Aggrefleur.

7 Ethelrede after the twenty ninth year of his Reign, turned Monk in Bardney Abby, whereof at length he Died Abbat, and there was Buried. In his Kingdom succeeded Kenrede, or Coinrede his Kinsman, the Son of his Brother Wolfer, in the fifth year of the Emperour Tiberius Apfimar, the eleventh of Witbered King of Kent, the nineteenth of Alfred King of the Northumbrians, A. D. DCCIII. As he succeeded him in his Kingdom, so in the Monastical Life, for when he had Reigned but five years he went to Rome and there turned Monk, taking along with him Offa the Son and Successor, if he had thought good of Siebert King of the East Saxons, who also was enamoured of, and assumed the habit. After him Reigned Ceolrede or Clede the Son of his Uncle Ethelrede, who as he was wonderfull for his valour against King Ina, so was miserable in his sudden death, for having reigned no more than eight years, he was buried at Lichfield, leaving Ethelbald his Heir, his Nephew by his Brother Alwin. Ethelbald is character'd a valiant and a vehement Man, yet did he govern, faith Malmesbury, both a long time and in great peace and quietness. But for all this Peace we are told by others, that Adelard King of the West Saxons endeavoured by force to conquer his Kingdom, and to that purpose fought a Battel with his Son Ofwald, who having sustained his fury a good space, when he saw he was utterly unable to bear up against so numerous Forces betook himself to a fair Retreat, and thereby preserved his Father's Territories. After this Ethelbald the most valiant King of Mercia with a terrible Army laid siege to the Town of Somerton, the inhabitants whereof receiving no succour he quickly became Master of it, and from this time forward became so eminent for his Arms amongst his Contemporaries, that he caused to submit to him all the Provinces Southward of Humber, with their Kings. This Somerton standing upon the River Parret had indeed formerly a Castle of the West Saxon Kings, through the Walls of which Ethelbald is said to have forced a Breach. But now Time hath so gotten the Mastery of it, that there is no appearance at all of it, and the very Town it self would have much ado to keep the Name, were it not for a Fair of Oxen and other Cattel, there kept from Palm Sunday till the midst of June, with good Resort of People, the Countrymen thereabout being very great Grafiars. Yet being famous in Ancient times, and of all others most frequented, it gave Name to the Shire which Affers every where calls Somertunensis. Some indeed have thought it called Somerfeshire, because the Air is Mild and Summer-like there; and in that sense the Welsh Britains at this Day call it Gladherhaf. But this Name they borrow from the Englis Tongue: and however in Summer time it may be a Summer-like Countrey, in Winter it may as truly be called Winterfesh, so wet, so miry and moorish it is, as Travellers to their very great trouble and inconvenience do find.

8. But Ethelbald growing proud upon his success, and preferring Violence before Justice, between such time as Ceolwulf King of the Northumbrians had forsaken his Crown for a Cow, and the succession of Egbert, took his opportunity, and in an hostile manner invaded that Kingdom, whence having got vast plunder, he returned, finding none to resist him. This proud Ethelbald again, faith our Writer, when Adelard the King of the West Saxons was dead, often disturbed his Successor Invades the Northumbrians.

Who makes an expedition into Kent. And destroys the City of Rochelester.

Fights Egfrid King of the Northumbrians.

Turns Monk, and is succeeded by Kenrede.

Who assumes the like Habit.

Then Ceolred.

Who was buried at Lichfield. Next Ethelbald.

Who besieges Somerton, and takes it.

four and Kinsman Cudrede, sometimes with open hostility, and otherwhiles by stirring up his Subjects to Seditious Attempts. Various was their success in the Field, sometimes the one and now the other having the advantage, and now would they conclude a Peace, and then again violate it by hostile Acts. At length in the fourth year of Cudrede, they seemed so heartily accorded, that with joint force they set upon the Britains, and defeated them, though their multitudes were innumerable. Yet again they fell at variance, and Cudrede not able to bear the Exactions and Insolence of Ethelbald, in his thirteenth year took courage, and met him at Bedford; trusting much to the skill and courage of Edelhim a stout Captain he brought along with him. Ethelbald the King of Kings, besides his Mercians and other Forces, brought along with him the Eastern Saxons, the Angles, and the Kentish Men. The Battels being formed and ready to join, Edelhim leading on the West Saxons, and bearing the Standard of Cudrede which was a Golden Dragon, called upon the Standard Bearer of Ethelbald, challenging him it seems to a Combat. Hereupon the West Saxons shouted and were much encouraged, and the Armies joined. A most bloody Contest began and a long time continued, the success being doubtful. But God who resisteth the Proud, as our Authour observes, was pleased to abate the haughtiness of Ethelbald, inasmuch that he himself first of all ran away, and from this time to his Death suffered he nothing he undertook to prosper. Yet in the second year after this Battel having recruited himself, he would again try his fortune, and fought another most bloody Battel with the West Saxons at a place called Secandune, where being sorely distressed, and disdaining as formerly to fly, he was slain, and Buried at Repandune. And so faith Bromton, this most valiant King when he had Reigned one and forty years (not in such profound Peace surely as the Monk of Malmesbury writes) was punished for his excessive Pride, and from this time the Kingdom of the West Saxons became stronger. This Secandune though it flourished in the Times of the Saxons is now almost quite gone, and at this time is called Seckinton in Warwickshire. Repandune from a great and fair Town is also become a poor and small Village, at this day called Repton upon the River Trent, where it takes in the Rivulet Dove. This it is, though in former Ages it was famous both for the Burial of Ethelbald, of other the Mercian Kings, and the Calamity of Burthred the last of them, who here was deprived of his Kingdom, as we shall see in its due place.

9. But whereas by the Chronicle of Bromton it would appear that Ethelbald was slain by his Enemies, it is generally affirmed by other Writers, that being a good King he lost his Life by the Treachery of his own bad People, for he was in the Army slayed by Beared or Beornrede, who immediately usurped, taking the title of King upon him. But not long he enjoyed the title. For as he began, so he continued his Reign like a Tyrant, which so incensed the People, that Noble, and Ignoble together, they united themselves, and under conduct of Offa a most valiant young man presently unking'd him, some say by driving him away, others by taking away his Life, and bringing him to such an end as the murder of Ethelbald had deserved. Offa for his pains was made King, in the eighteenth year of Constantinus Copronymus, the tenth of Edilbert King of Kent, the first and last of Ofals King of the Northumbrians, A. D. DCCLVIII. He was the fifth in descent from Penda, as Malmesbury writes, yet others in his Pedegree, which they derive from Woden, make no mention at all of Penda. He was a Prince of extraordinary conduct, courage and success, which for a long time he managed and enjoyed together. The first Action of him we meet with was his subduing by Arms a certain People called Helsing, concerning whom we know nothing, and therefore can say nothing farther. Much about the same time he fought with Aldrick King of Kent, at a place called Orstanford, now Orford, in Kent upon the River Darent, more famous afterward for an overthrow of the Danes, and longer after that for an House of the Kings. What success he had at this place the Annals do not tell us, but it seems it was such as encouraged him the year following to engage against Kinmulf King of the West Saxons at a place called Bisinton, which Town he took. It is that which is now called Benfon, standing upon the River Thames in Oxfordshire, by Marian, said to be a Royal Village, who reports that Ceaulin took it from the Britains in the year DXXXI. and that the West Saxons held possession of it for two hundred years, till Offa thinking it would be both for his commodity and honour that they should have nothing on this side the River won it and subjected it to his own Kingdom. At this day it goes for a Village only, and not long since had an House of the Kings hard by, called of certain Ogreire with Cudrede King of the West Saxons.

But is worsted in the first Battel.

In the next slain.

Secandune, where Repandune.

Beated Offa.

Upon whose Death Offa was made King.

Who engages with Aldrick King of Kent.

And takes Bisinton from Kinmulf King of the West Saxons.

Vide si place in Annal. Secun. ad An. DCCLV. in Huntingdonensi & Chron. Joh. Bromton.

Ben Cynon pul. 3 Op. rā gēpūl-tōn ymb Byornetun 1 Offa nam bene tun.

Sect. 8.

Elmes, Evelme, commonly New Elme, sometime a fair place, but suffered to go to ruine, being not very wholsome by reason of a foggy Air arising from a standing Water adjoining.

10. As to the rest of the Actions of Offa, we may take that observation of the Monk of Malmesbury, who when he compared them with those we have related, and with others, remained doubtfull, whether he should approve of or disprove his course in general. In one and the same man, so many vices were palliated with virtues, and so many virtues succeeded vices, that you would think you had to deal with a very Proteus. Engaging with Kinwulf, King of the West-Saxons, in open War, he easily obtained the Victory, though that Prince was no contemptible Warriour. This same man, faith he, imagining that treachery would do him most service, having by great allurements of fair promises, drawn to his Court King Ethelbirt, on a sudden, and when he never could imagine such Villany, caused him to be cut shorter by the Head, and unjustly seized on his Kingdom of the East Angles, wherein he built a Castle for bridling the Inhabitants, the Ruines whereof may be seen upon a clay Hill, at the Town still from him called Offian in Suffolk. After this he commends him for shirning the Reliques of St. Alban, and blames him for robbing several Churches, and amongst others, that of Malmesbury, which makes the Authour not a little concerned. Finding his carriage in these affairs, and his handling of his People to be of perilous consequence, to fence himself against the worst occurrences, he courted much his Neighbour Princes. To Brittish King of the West Saxons, he married his Daughter Ethelburga, Charles the Great also, King of the Franks, with frequent Embassies he made his Friend, though difficulty could he bring him to what he desired; for formerly there had been misunderstanding betwixt them, and so high it had flown, that commerce was forbidden on both sides. The English in these times travelling to Rome, were very much molested, not only by the Saracens, who possessed the straits of the Alpes, but the Subjects also of Charles inhabiting both Gall and Italy. Hereof he complained, and with much adoe procured a Peace and friendly correspondence, which the sum of Charles his Letter, wherein he styles himself King of the Franks Apud Malmesbury, and Lombards, and Patriarch of the Romans, directed to the Reverend man, and his most dear Brother Offa King of the Mercians, doth sufficiently testify; in what year written it's uncertain, but probably about the time of Offa's death.

11. "Herein after thanks given to Almighty God, for the sincerity of the Catholic Faith which he found in his Papers, he gives leave to such as go on Pilgrimage to Rome, to pass freely and peaceably through his Dominions. But in case any be found among them, who go not upon a Religious account, but for that of gain, at convenient places, they must pay their Tolls. He grants also that Merchants have lawfull Patronage, promising them Redress of their grievances upon application to him or his Ministers. And his Epistle he concludes with acquainting him, what * gifts he had sent to the Churches in his Dominions, together with one Belt, an Hunnish Sword, and two silken Vests unto himself. Such was the kindness at last procured betwixt Charles and Offa, which stood him in such stead, that notwithstanding, he had many Enemies, who ceased not to attempt much against him, yet he spent his time in great ease and prosperity, and made his Son Egfrid, whom he left his Successor, to be accounted King before he died. But of all his Actions, none is more memorable than the making of a Ditch, which with admirable work and labour, he caused to be cast from the mouth of Dee unto Weymouth, for the space of fourscore and ten Miles, to separate the Britains from his Angles or English Men. Hereupon in British it is called Claudio Offa, or Offa his Ditch, and a Town some five Miles from Radnor, from this Ditch which lies under it, had the British Name of Trefy Claudio, afterward changed into Trebeulo, in English called Knighton. To what we have already said of this Work, we shall add, though by way of anticipation, what John of Salisbury writes in his Polycraticon. Harold ordained a Law, that what Welfman soever should be found without a Weapon on this side the limit he had set them, that is to say, Offa's Dike, should have his right Hand cut off by the King's Officers.

His Character.

12. For the main, Offa so carried himself, that he may be accounted of the first Rank of these English Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchy. The grand flaw in his Education, is the Murder of Ethelbert King of the East Angles, and yet Authours of good credit say, that coming to woo his Daughter, he was so basely made away by the procurement of Queendred, Offa's Wife, a Woman that more valued the Countries of East England, than the honest and honourable match of her her Child. But by his Martyrdom (such it was esteemed) great accession of Wealth and Reputation came to the City of Hereford, for being registered in the Catalogue of Martyrs, there he had a Church built and dedicated to him by Milfrid, a petty King of the Countrey, wherein when a Bishops See was established, it grew very rich, first through the devout liberality of the Mercians, and then of the West Saxon Kings, who at length came to be possessed of it. Offa being dead, after a Reign of thirty nine years, was buried at Bedford, in a Chapel without the Town, on a Bank of the River Ouse, in a Royal manner. But it's a constant Tradition, faith Matthew the Flowergatherer, of all the Countrey to this day, that the said Chapel, by long wearing, and the violence of the River, was overthrown, and by its rapacity, together with the King's Sepulchre, thrown down into the water. Whereupon, till this present time, the said Sepulchre, by such as wash themselves in that place, seems to appear deep in the water, and yet at another time, although it be most diligently sought after, as if the thing was fatal, cannot be found. Egfrid his Son, who had been Partner with him in the Kingdom, for the space of eight years, upon his death became sole Possessor of it, being commended by Churchmen for treading in his Father's steps. For he confirmed whatsoever he had given to pious uses, and what out of covetousness he had taken away, he freely caused to be restored. And more he had done, had he continued any longer time. For on the hundred and forty first day after his Father's decease, he departed this life, to the exceeding great grief of all his Subjects. Being so well inclined, and dying in the flower of his Age. Alcuin a Man famous in those days, an English Man, and the moderator of the Studies of Charles the Great, in an Epistle to Osbert a Patritian or Nobleman, wrote that he did not believe he died for his own sins, but because his Father had shed much blood to establish his Kingdom.

Sect. 8.

Was buried at Bedford.

Egfrid Reigns alone.

Dies.

Kenulfe succeeds.

His Character.

He invades Kent, seizing the King and Countrey.

His Munificence.

Kenulfe his Son murdered and buried at Winchester.

13. To Egfrid succeeded Kenulfe or Coenulfe, as the Saxon Annals call him, descended in the fifth degree from Kenwalch the Brother of Penda, in the last year of Constantinus Porphyrogenitus the Emperour, who was deposed, and had his Eyes put out by command of his Mother Irene, the first of Cuthbert King of Kent, the second or third year after the death of Ethelred, the last (in reality) King of the Northumbrians, A. D. DCCXCVI. The Monk of Malmesbury describes him to us as a great Man, as one whose Virtues were greater than his Fame, who never did any thing which malice could justly tax, was at home Religious, in War victorious, a man whose Praise deservedly will mount on high so long as there shall be found a fit Judge thereof in England, to be commended not only for the sublimity of his Throne, but the humility of his mind, which in his greatest prosperity was eminently remarkable. Against the Inhabitants of Kent from Offa he received a successive Enmity, which caused him in the first year of his Reign to invade that Countrey, wherein after much waste made, he took Edbricht surnamed Pren, and carried him bound along with him. To this Relation of Malmesbury Roger de Howden adds, that he commanded his eyes to be plucked out, and in great Pride and Cruelty his hands to be cut off: This done, he laid the Kingdom of Kent to his own Dominion, setting upon his own Head a Crown, and holding a Sceptre in his Hand. Yet Malmesbury affirms, that not long after being touched with mercy to the Captive King, he set him at liberty. For at Winchelcombe (faith he) where he built a Church, which at this day standeth, on the day of the Dedication thereof, he manumitted or set free the Captive before the Altar, there exhibiting a memorable Spectacle of his Clemency. At the Solemnity was Cuthbert present, whom he had made King over the Inhabitants of Kent, and then and there applauded his Royal Munificence. The Church was filled with Applause and rejoicing, and the Streets were thronged with People. Forasmuch as in a Meeting of thirteen Bishops and ten Dukes, none that desired to taste of his bounty was rejected, all went away with their Pouches full. For besides the Gifts he gave to the Nobles, which both for value and number were inestimable in Utensils, Garments, and choice Horses, to such as had no Land he gave a Pound of Silver, to Priests a Mark of Gold: To Monks one Solidus a piece, and many things to all the Inferiour Multitude. And when he had indowed the Monastery with so great Revenues as at this time may seem incredible, in the twenty fourth year of his Reign he honoured it with his own Funeral. His Son Reuclme a very Child and Innocent being murdered by his Sister Queendreda, obtained both the Name and Honour of Martyrdom, and there also resteth. So much Malmesbury. The place he mentions is Winchelcombe, a great Town and well inhabited in Glo-Cambden. cestershire. Indeed a Man would scarcely believe how much this Abby was frequented Beheads Ethelbert, and seizes on the Kingdom of the East Angles.

His Alliances.

Makes his Son Partner in the Kingdom. He is famous for making a Ditch.

* Munera se expresse & interpretatur Priusquam
A Carolo datus fuit Offe na, Cingat in umbellis Clementis, Pallia donantur velut his sacra leguntur.
Tunc mucro sed & uerus munere quod, Indomitus punit, prout pallia arce-na, ne figunt pallia uota Camden. in Silur.

Sec. 8. quented in ancient times for the Relicks of this Kenelme, a Child of seven years old, whom his own Sister, to get the Inheritance unto her self, secretly made away, and our Fore-fathers registered in the Rank of Holy Martyrs. The Territory adjoining was of old reckoned a Sherifdom or County of it self, till such time as Edric, surnamed Streana, that is the Getter or Gainer, who first under King Ethelred, and afterward under Cnut or Canute governed as Viceroy the whole Kingdom of England, adjoynd it to the Shire of Glocester.

An Account of the Mur-ther.

14. Kenulfe by his Wife Alfritha had this Son, thus murdered by his own Sister Quendrida, and another Daughter called Burgenilda. The manner how the Murder was committed, and how it was discovered, was this, which you must take upon the trust of William of Malmesbury and Matthew the Flowergatherer. "The Boy was committed to an Attendant, who carrying him into a Wood under pretence of Hunting, cut off his Head and hid his Body in the Thickets. "A wonderfull thing it was that a thing done so privately in England, should be known at Rome, but so it came to pass by Divine Revelation. For upon the Altar you must know of blessed Peter Prince of the Apostles, a white Dove let fall a certain Paper, which in order discovered both the death of St. Kenelme King and Martyr, and also the place of his Burial. The Schedule being written in English in Golden Letters, the Clerks that were present at the Command of the Pope attempted to read, but in vain. But as it happily came to pass an Angel stood by and interpreting it in Latin, caused the Roman Prelate by an Epistle to give notice to the English Kings of their Compatriot Martyr. Amongst other things this was found written in the Paper. In Clenc kon bath Kenelm kynbeorne lith under thorne beaded by reaved: That is, In the Cow-pasture Kenelme Son of the King lies under a Thorn beheaded, by the head. The Body of the blessed Martyr being thus miraculously discovered to the English Kings, in a great Assembly of Clerks and Nobles, was taken out of the Hole and carried to Winchelcombe. The Paricide (said he) or rather Fratricide (his Sister) being vexed at the singing and noise of the People which rejoiced at the finding out of so great a Martyr, put her head out of a Window, and by saying a Psalm backward endeavourd to enchant and disturb them, but as she was singing both her eyes fell out of her Head upon the Book she held in her hand. Still to this day, he adds, the Psalter is self set in Silver, and besmeared with the blood of the Eyes, gives testimony of this Punishment. So much of this Boy, King, and Martyr. Thus much we may be certain of, that the Murderer, however the Villany was discovered, reaped not the fruit of her Ambition as she intended. For after this Kenelme, Ceolwulfe his Uncle, the Brother of Kenulfe, succeeded in the Kingdom of the Mercians, which henceforth was in a tottering condition, and little or nothing memorable, or which deserved notice, afterward is to be found concerning it, besides the mere Names and Successions of a few Kings. Ceolwulfe reigned but two, some say but one year, and then was driven away by Bernulfe. This Bernulfe in the third year of his Reign, yet durst adventure to grapple with Egbert King of the West Saxons, with whom he fought a bloody Battel at a Place called Ellandune, but was defeated. This Ellandune is now called Wilton, situate upon the River Willey, whence it hath taken its latter Name, and imparted it to the whole Shire, called Wiltshire, of which it some time was the Head. In the Saxon times it mightily flourished. The Danes sorely distressed it, yet fell it not so much to decay till the Bishops of Salisbury turned another way the common Road, which formerly lay through it into the Western Countries. Then by degrees fell it to ruine, and now is but as it were a small Village, having nothing to boast of but a Mayor and a very fine House of the Earls of Pembroke, raised out of the Ruines of the old Monastery. But most overtopped it was by Sorbiadunum, and now by Salisbury, which arose out of the Ruines of this last mentioned City. But as for its Name of Ellandune, one rationally conjectures, that this River Willey is the same with Alan, which Ptolemy mentions in this Coast of the Country.

15. The defeat received by Bernulfe at Ellandune, was but a prelude to a greater Mischief, which happened to him the same year. Offa as we have said had seized on the Kingdom of the East Angles, whither he now repairing as to part of his Dominions, the Inhabitants met him in the Field and slew him, then doubting what might be the Consequence, for fear of the Mercians they submitted themselves both King and People to the Sovereignty of Egbert. After him was King one Ludecan, who keeping in his mind the Insolence of the East Angles, after two can

Next to him reigned Lude- can.

3 hys ealssomen mon ofstoh mib him. 3 hysle feng to pice. Ad Ann. 800CCXXV.

years

years Reign prepared to be revenged on them, but failed in the attempt, being slain with his five Captains, or as the Saxon hath it, his Aldermen. To him succeeded one Wiglaf or Wublaf, who was presently expelled by Egbert, and three years continued in Exile. At the end thereof being touched with Compassion, Egbert suffered him to return, but to hold the Kingdom of him as his Tributary Vassal, paying him and his Son the thirteen years he reigned a sum of money. In the same Capacity reigned Berthulfe his Successour, and just so long a time, who at last by the Danish Pirates was driven beyond the Seas. After this Burhede having Married Ethelfritha the Daughter of King Athulfe the Son of Egbert, by so great an Alliance comforted himself both against his Tributary Estate and the frequent Depredations of the Pirates. But after two and twenty years he was constrained by them to quit his Country, whence he betook himself to Rome, and there died, and at the English School in St. Mary's Church was buried. His Wife he left behind him, but the afterward followed him into Italy and died at Pavia. Then was the Kingdom of the Mercians by the Danes delivered to one Schwulfe the Servant of Burhede, but during pleasure. After a few years Alfrede the Nephew of Egbert obtained it. He Married Elfeda Sister to Edward the Elder, who after her death laid the Kingdom of the Mercians to his own Dominions; Then this Principality which (saith Malmesbury) by the madness of a Pagan man suddenly flourished, through the miserable sluggishness of half a man utterly withered and came to nought: In the Eight Hundred and Seventy Fifth Year of our Lord.

Berthulfe.
Burhede.

Alfrede.

Apud Simeon.
Dunelm. loc modo:
In Clenc, in Condale Ke-nelm Kingi Bern, lith under thorn
bead by reaved.

Ceolwulfe made King.

Then Bernulfe.

Who was defeated at Ellandune by Egbert King of the West Saxons.

Sax. dunel ad Ann.
800CCXXV.
Ellen'dune.

Cambden.

Cerdick and his Son Cy-rick arrive.

The place where they Landed.

SECT. IX.

The Kingdom of the West Saxons. From the beginning thereof by Cerdick, to the Death of Egbert the first English Monarch.

The Space of Three Hundred and Eighteen years.

1. THE Kingdom of the West Saxons, than which (saith Malmesbury) Britain never saw any more magnificent or of longer continuance received its beginning from one Cerdick, and presently arrived at an high pitch of Greatness. This man being by Birth a German, and Nobly descended, as the Tenth from Woden, having by homebred Conflicts molded his Mind to a warlike Temper, resolved to quit his Country and become famous by his Arms abroad. Having fully settled his Resolutions, he communicated his mind to his Son Cynrick, who was in all glorious Actions no farther behind him than that treading in his steps he seemed to tread upon his Heel. He easily consenting to the Expedition into Britain, they came with their Forces in five Keels, in the Four hundred and ninety fifth year of our Lord, which was the fifth of the Emperor Anastasi, the eighth of Esk King of Kent, the fifth of Ella King of the South Saxons, in the days of Clodoveus the First King of the Franks, in the Consulship of Emilius and Viator. His Pedigree is thus drawn from Woden; Bealdeg, Brandi, Fisbogor, Freawine, Wig, Gewis, Ella, Elesae, Cerdick or Cerick.

2. What entertainment they found at their Landing we have already told the Reader, and how by degrees they advanced and got ground. But this is to be farther observed, that the place where he Landed was not within the Bounds of that Kingdom which he afterward founded, and whereof we write. For Cerdic, before, or Cerdicbure, which is still by the Inhabitants called Cerdikefand, lay near to the old City Garianonum, which being decayed, and no Garrison lying there,

Sec. 9.

Sect. 9.

Thence they Sail Westward.
Portsmouth whence is called.He overthrows the Britains at Cerdicesford.Advances the Title of King.

there, as formerly to defend the Coast, Cerdick there landed, and after he had made fore War upon the Iceni, or that part of this people especially which inhabited Norfolk, sailed thence to the Western parts, where he erected the Kingdom of the West Saxons. And not long after, the Saxons getting ground every where, instead of Garinonum founded a new Town in that moist and watery ground near the West side of the River Tare (by the Britains called Guerne, by the English Saxons Gern and Jere) which from it they named Capmū and Liepmū. After the arrival of Port and his two Sons, which was in the seventh year, and not till then, Cerdick seems to have quitted these Eastern parts, and encouraged by intelligence received from him of his success to have bent his course Westward; to be sure the Battle fought with Nazaleod the Britains, Authors place after the coming of Port. But whereas it is storied that Portsmouth from this Port received its Name, this was founded upon often erring Tradition. That famous Creek near which it standeth being by Ptolemy termed Moyas Aquæ, or the Great Haven, in respect of its wideness, like as that Portus Magnus in Africk, as Pliny witnesseth. Yet probable it is that thereabout Port landed, who possibly might take a Sirname, or Nickname from the place, and not the place from him. This makes it more probable that as Portsmouth is in that Province we call Hantsire, the landing of Cerdick in the Western parts, after he had quitted the Eastern, was also in this same County. For hard by its Western bounds, where the River Avon entrench into the Shire, it meets with the Ford of Cerdick, or Cerdicksford, afterward called Cerdeford, and now by contraction of the word Chardford, so named of Cerdick that valiant English Saxon. For here, faith our Antiquary, in a set Battle he so daunted the Britains, that he not only enlarged the bounds of his Empire, but also delivered an ease War to his Posterity, having in the year of our Salvation DVIII, after great Conflicts in this Tract, vanquished the most mighty King of the Britains Natanleod, called also Nazaleod by others, with many of his People. Of whose Name likewise a small Region reaching to this place was termed Natanleod, as we read in the Annals of the English Saxons: which I fought very curiously for, but hitherto could not find so much as any small sign or token of that Name, neither can I guess who that Natanleod should be. But most certain it is, that Aurelius Ambrosius at the very same time fought in this Tract with the Saxons, with alternative Fortune, and yet these Chronicles of the English no where made mention of him; as who (a thing that I have observed) being over-much affectionate to themselves, reported only their own fortunate Battles and Victories, but never mentioned their Foils and Overthrows. Thus Cambden.

3. Concerning this the Reader must call to mind what we have already said, and farther take notice that Cerdiceshore and Cerdicesford are two several places at a great distance, the one in Norfolk and the other in Hampshire, when he reads of them in the English Annals. And where he finds the Saxon Annals, and from them the Archdeacon of Huntingdon relating how Stuf and Witgar the Nephews of Certic arrived at Certicefore, he may conclude that Certicesford is rather to be read, for e'er their coming he had quitted the Eastern parts and had fought the great Battle with Natanleod, except we imagine that they knew not of his quitting the Coast of Norfolk and came thither to find him, which not being able to do, after a Victory obtained over the Britains they betook themselves again to their three Keels, and followed after; but Huntingdon writes as if by the Victory they obtained over the Britains, at their landing, made the Name of Cerdic terrible, so that it must have been fought in conjunction with him. However, after this their uniting with him he became much stronger and victorious, and got such ground of the Neighbouring Britains, that at length the Territories he had conquered seemed to him capable of receiving a Royal Title; yet was not this till three and twenty years after his coming into the Island; so valiant, nay pertinacious were the Britains, that they did not easily quit their Counties nor give them up, being not discouraged by one or two Defeats received, but were overpowered at last by Numbers, however the Saxon Writers have concealed the particulars from us. But then did he by assuming the title of King, which was devolved upon his Posterity, begin the Kingdom of the West Saxons, so called from their situation in the Island, as Geguyr from Gewis his great Grandfather, a Kingdom which at length became the Kingdom of Kingdoms, constraining all the rest to submit unto it. The beginning thereof fell in the second year of Justin the Elder Emperour, the Consulship of the Emperour himself and Eurbaricus Cilica, in the days of Childebert King of the Franks, the Eighth of Orba King of Kent, A. D. DXIX, seventy one years after the first coming of the English Saxons into Britain, twenty seven after the beginning

Cepicer
Cepicer
CepicerCerdic Cynric

beginning of the Kingdom of the South Saxons, seven before the beginning of that of the East Saxons, eight and twenty before that of the Northumbrians, and an hundred and seven before the beginning of Peuda the first King (worth notice) of the Mercians. By degrees it grew upon all, and at length swallowed up the rest; though by its Antiquity therefore it preceded several of them, yet thought we fit to close their number with it, together with this caution to the Reader.

4. Though Cerdic had assumed the title of King, and gave it as appears from the Saxon Annals, to his Son Cynric, yet were not the Britains therewith affrighted, but more provoked to dispossess him of what they thought they had a better right than he. In the very same year they endeavoured to unking him, for though the Annals tell us that he fought against the Britains at Cerdicesford, yet it should rather be said that the Britains fought against him, for they came to him, not he to them, this being the place of his first landing in these Parts. Henry of Huntingdon tells the Story with great advantage on the side of the Saxons, though upon what ground we know not, the Annals only affirming that from this day forward, Royal Offspring (meaning his) reigned over the West Saxons, and indeed that he had the better is probable enough, as that thereby he made fit fast on his head the Diadem, which he had assumed in the City of Winchester, as tells us the greater Chronicle of Thomas Radburn. Seven years he spent, for any thing we can find, in fortifying the Places he had already gained; but in the year that followed he fought another Battle with the Britains, in another place from him also called Cerdicks Lea, with what success we are ignorant, but good ground there is to believe the Britains here victorious, because where the Saxons had the better, their Annals never use to be silent. Yet this must make us think on the other side, that sometimes they are modest, because after this Battle he very much enlarged his Bounds. For after two years he and his Son conquered the Isle of Wight, and slew many men in the place called Witgarabrig, as the Annals or Saxon Chronology affirms. Other tell us from these Annals, that being the first English Saxon, that subdued the Island, he granted it unto Stuffa and Witgar, who jointly together slew well nigh all the British Inhabitants (for few there were of them remaining) in Witgaraburg, a Town so called from Witgar, and now by Contraction shortened into Caresbroke.

5. But as the Annals call the Island by the Name of Wibt, and this Man Witgar I cannot but suspect this Name to have been the Name of his Office, and that he was made by his Uncle Cerdic the Keeper or Guard of the Island, first, and then four * years after, and that wherein he died bestowed it on him, and his Brother Stuffa (his two Nephews) as a Legacy, for this gift they mention the very year they speak of his death. From him this Town which seems to have been the place of his Residence, received its Name as he had his Title from the Island. This same year Cerdic died, after he had reigned sixteen years, leaving all his Kingdom except the Isle of Wight, as Malmesbury observes, to his Son Cynric. This Cynric the Annals ever join with his Father, so that he seems to have reigned jointly with him before, but now came to the sole Management of that Power, he left him in the ninth year of Justinian the Emperour, in the Consulship of Belsarius, the fourth year of Iremeric King of Kent, and about the ninth year after that Erkenwin had begun the Kingdom of the East Saxons, A. D. DXXXV. For matters of War he is said no title to have been inferior to his Father, yet at his beginning do we hear little of him, his great care being to preserve what he had, his Father had got already rather than by striving for more, when what he had was not yet confirmed, he being in danger of losing all. In his fourth year the Annals mention an Eclipse of the Sun, which fell out on the fifteenth of February, whereon that Luminary was darkened from Morning to Evening. Two years after it was so darkened again on the fifteenth of June, that Stars appeared till past three of the Clock. Four years after, died Witgar in the Isle of Wight, and by his burial there gave Name to Witgarabrig, as in those days they called it.

6. At length we hear again of Cynric at the eighteenth year of his Reign, of his giving battle then to the Britains, as a place called Seapobyrg, where he put to flight the British Welsh, as the Annals now term them, they being by this time most of them either killed or driven into Wales, or other foreign Countries. This Seapobyrg called Salisbury, being the same which the Saxons also termed Seapýrbýrg, the vulgar Latinists Sarum, Sarisburia and Salisburyatia, the Name of Searesbirig, having proceeded from Sorbidonnum, by addition of the Saxon word Býrg, which signifies a Burge or Town instead of Dunum, which the Britains and

And gives it to his Son Cynric.Hence another Engagement with Cerdic and his Saxons.

A Third.

After which he conquered the Isle of Wight.Bestows it on his Nephews Witgar and Stuffa.

Dies.

Cynric reigns alone.2 Eclipses of the Sun.He overthrows the Britains at Salisbury.

Sect. 9.

Lib. 2. c. 1.

Ad An.
DXXX.
Cambden.Ad An.
DXXXIV.
* Moe Jensentia accedit illud Henricus Huntingdon
nensis: Ean-dem autem li-brum, quae feil-Laudin dicitur per Vestis dederunt quarto post hunc anno duobus Nepotibus suis Stuf-fo & Witgar.
Witgar verbatim Witbe Custos seu defensor. Gard & Wardem, non semper autem adjutur id, ut in Eadgar & multis aliis.
DXXXVIII.
Idem ad An.
DXL.Ad An. DLII.
Galls

Sect. 9.

Gives them another defeat at Beranbyrig.

Galls were wont to add to places seated on higher Ground, such as this Sorbiadunum was. For Sorbiadunum is by Interpretation the Dry Hill, and upon an high Hill this City is mounted. Kinric was the first of all the English Saxons, that forced it after he had got a notable Victory over the Britains, which so much incouraged him, that four years after this he and his Son Ceaulin, engaged with them again at a Place called Beranbyrig. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon, wherefoever he had his Collections, tells the story with various Circumstances. The Britains faith he to take off that War which lay with such Confusion upon them, and they had endured for five years, gathering together a numerous and well instructed Army, put themselves into a posture of fighting at Beranburi. And when they had formed nine several Battalia's, which Number in War is most convenient, three in the front, three in the middle, and three in the Rere, having appointed to each Body its fitting Officers, and placed their Archers, those that used Darts conveniently with their Horse according to the Roman Custom, the Saxons in one Body fell most boldly upon them. Their Standards they cast down and defaced, and breaking their Lances fought it out with dint of Sword, till the Evening approached, the Victory being still very doubtful. Neither need this seem wonderful, they being Men of extraordinary Stature, Vigour and Courage, although in our Days the Armies are of the one as the other at the first onset are easily put to flight; consisting now of such Men as both in respect of their Stature, Vigour and Courage are inconsiderable; so much he. As for the Place of the Battel, this Beranbyrig is that Town now called Banbury, situate upon the River Charwell in the County of Oxford. About this Town are found Coins of the Roman Emperours, which argue for the Antiquity of the Place. Now the fame of it is for Cheefe, Cakes, and such like things, and lately it could shew a Cattle built by Alexander Bishop of Lincoln (for to the See of Lincoln it belonged, as did many other good Houses, and Manors now swallowed by the inquiry of times) who desiring to dwell stately, rather than quietly, by his vast Structures of this kind brought himself into many troubles.

To Cynric succeeds Ceaulin.

Civil Wars among the Saxons in Britain.

Alla King of the South Saxons begins.

7. Cynric died after he had reigned six and twenty years, and was succeeded by Ceaulin his Son in the five and thirtieth year of Justinian the Emperour, about the beginning of the Reign of Clothair King of the Franks, the same year that Ethelbert became King of Kent, the third of Alla King of the Northumbrians. A.D. DLXI. Ceaulin was a Man of such metal of warlike Enterprizes, that, as Malmesbury phraseth, it to the English Saxons he became an object of wonder, to the Britains of hatred, and to both of them the Author of Destruction. Now had these Saxons been in Britain for the space of an hundred and twenty years, all which time they had been so employed in chusing and settling their new Possessions, that having space enough (a little seems much to them that have none) they agreed well enough amongst themselves, and united upon occasion against them, whom their Interest had made their common Enemies. But now having pretty well secured their new (however got) Possessions, they had more leisure to be proud and idle, and having much, began to think they had not enough, and to envy the Conditions of one another. In the West and North they had still indeed work enough to defend their own, and still provoked by ambition, and Covetousness to wrest more out of the Hands of the Poor distressed Britains, but toward the South-East the Coast was clear, not a Britain left either to disturb or be disturbed, so that these Princes having nothing else to work upon, must needs find work amongst those of their own Nation, not enduring to be idle while they were so employed, to be mere Gazers upon the Actions of others, and to hear every day of their Conquests, Trophies and Spoils, now began to feel and perceive they had bounds to their Dominions, and however their Clothes seemed to be wide in the Infancy of their Kingdoms, now they complained they were strait laced. The first that betrayed this restless humour, was Alla King of the South Saxons, who as Beda tells us was the first of these Kings, that commanded all the Provinces of the English, lying Southward of the River Humber. His Kingdom was not large, and his work was narrow, having quickly dispossessed the ancient Inhabitants, so that having time to look about him, and leisure enough to attempt any Enterprize, he awed the rest who still all of them except the King of Kent, had work enough, time and strength little enough to be employed against the Britains, to win and settle those Possessions which they had already obtained, and either convenience or ambition still provoked them to obtain. They were forced to give him good words, and admit of his Superiority, obey his Commands without opposition. Not one blow can we find, this procured amongst them.

8. He

Sect. 9.

Then Ethelbert King of Kent.

Who invading Ceaulin is overthrown.

Ceaulin overthrows the Britains in two pitched Battels.

And takes several places, as Deorham,

Gleawancestre.

Cyreneester.

8. He being dead and gone, and his Posterity degenerating, some twenty years after Ethelbert came to be King of Kent, who receiving from his Ancestours a quiet possession of that Canton of the Island, grudged himself thus confined unto a Corner. Wealth and Idleness pricked him, and begat the Itch of ambition, which was vehemently provoked by this reflexion, that he was the Great, Great Grandchild (as we improperly speak, rather he his Great, Great Grandfather) the Heir and Successour of Hengist, that great Captain the first Leader of the Saxons, the first that gave them opportunity of obtaining this Wealth and Honour, to whose Sceptre it was but jult and fit, that they should truckle and submit. This was a fair pretence where there was a sharp Sword to back it, but Interest and present Possession afford deaf Ears to matters of Right, much more of Honour and Reputation. Ethelbert could easily give Laws to the South Saxons, the Western were the great object of his Envy, which was increased by that opportunity, which the nearness of their situation suggested to him. While Ceaulin was busied in the settlement and enlargement of his own Kingdom, in which Employment he had now spent Eight years, he invades his Territories. Ceaulin his Affairs requiring he should ever be in readiness, was not unprepared for him, but speedily made head against him, and with Cutha gave him Battel at a Place called Wibbandune, where he gave him a great overthrow, Oslac and Cnebhan, his Ealdormen or great Officers, being slain together with a great multitude of the inferior sort, and drove him back into his Kentish Quarters. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon observes, that this was the first War which the Kings of the English Saxons waged amongst themselves, the first Battel fought on the account of a Civil Quarrel.

9. Ceaulin did not pursue him into Kent, or revenge the Injury and Violence at this time, his main concerns lying at home against the Britains. Notwithstanding all the Attempts of him and his Predecessours, still they continued and held many Places on every side him. Yet the first engagement we meet with in the Annals of those that happened in his time, was that of the eleventh year of his Reign betwixt Cuthwulf, whom Huntingdon calls his Brother, and confounds him with Cutha, at Bedanford which Huntingdon interprets of Bedford, now faith he is the Head of the Circumjacent Province. He came off with Victory, as an effect whereof he took in four Towns, Liganburk, Egleburk, Bennington and Egonesham, that is such as afterward received these Names from their New Masters, for Saxon they are and not British. But Cuthwulf survived his Victory not long, dying the very same year that these things happened. For six years after this we hear of no Action, as if Ceaulin by his Brother's death was destitute of a Commander. But six years after he took his Son Cuthwine with him in his stead, and again made War upon the Britains, of whom were slain three Kings, Comail, Condidan and Farinmail, at a place called Deorham, which done they subdued three notable Cities, viz. Gleawancestre, Cyreneester and Bathancester. This Deorham is a little Town in Glocestershire, not far from Severn, at this day called Derham, where are yet to be seen huge Rampires and Trenches, as Fortifications of their Camps, and other most apparent Monuments here and there of so great a War. Gleawancestre is that we call Glocester, in Antonine named Glevum from Glaw in British, which signifieth Fair or Goodly, the Britains still calling it Caer Glaw. Being built by the Romans as a Curb to the Silures, it was thus wrested out of the Hand of the Britains, first by Ceaulin. Afterward the Mercians won it, under whom it flourished in great Honour, and Ofrick King of Northumberland by permission of Ethelred the Mercian, founded there a great and stately Nunnery, where Kineburga, Eadburga and Eva Queens of the Mercians, were successively Prioreesses one after another. And Edelfleda that most Noble Lady of the Mercians, adorned it with a Church. Cyreneester, that we now call Cirester and Circiter; called Corinium by Ptolemy, and by Antonine, Durocoronovum, from the River Corin (now Churn) upon which it standeth, fifteen Miles distant from Glevum or Glocester, upon the Roman High Street. Bathancester, is that we now call Bath in Somersetshire, on which we are told, the Saxons for a long time durst not set, but left it to the Britains, till Ceaulin had defeated him at Deorham. Then it yielded after a furious assault, and within few years recovering some strength grew up again, and therewith got a new Name of Akmancester. For Ofrick in the year DCLXXVI, founded a Nunnery there, and immediately after when the Mercians had got it under them, King Offa built another Church, both which in the time of the Danish Broils were overthrown, and out of the Ruines of them both arose another Church, wherein Eadgar firamed the Peace-maker, being dicimus.

Z 2

Annals Saxonic. ad Ann. DLXVIII. Den Crealin 7 Cupa sephuton pib Abet bync 7 hinc Cent seymson 7 eperen calpomenon 7 ybanosune orlogon Olac 7 Cnebhan. Ad An. DLXXI.

Ad An. DLXXXVII.

* Ak. egratun. deile eodem sensu lodiue duras, aque optime huc focu quadrat vis maxime faldur, qui artubus suis doloribus laborans quos nos Anglico Sermonis Actus dicimus.

Sect. 2. crowned King bestowed upon the Citizens very many Immunities, the Memory of which they yearly celebrate with solemn Plays. But thus were the Britains disposed of these Countries for ever by this King of the West Saxons, though afterward all these three Places with the Territories about them, fell into the Hands of their Neighbours the Mercians.

Another Victory over the Britains.

Cædlin at last is defeated at Wodenbeorge.

Fearing driven into exile dies.

Is succeeded by Ceolric.

10. No other Battle do we read of that was fought betwixt these Nations, although probably many Contests and Skirmishes happened till the seventh year after, when Cædlin and Cutha engaged with the Britains, in a place called Fethanleage. Here Cutha lost his Life, but the Annals tell us, that Cædlin took Towns, not a few, besides Plunder without measure, yet in great wrath and indignation he returned home. Here one would suspect it were for the death of Cutha; but Huntingdon writes that a most dreadful fight being fought, Cuthwine was oppressed by the multitudes of his Enemies, overpowered and slain. The English were overthrown and put to flight; but Cædlin coming in, in good time, caused them to rally, and setting on afresh, conquered the Conquerers, which done, in the pursuit he became Master of many Territories and innumerable Spoils. Thus flourished he, seeming not to court but to command Victory, while all, as well Enemies as Friends, stood wondering and looking on. But extraordinary Prosperity cannot be called Felicity, ending most commonly in extraordinary Misery. His Brother he lost, and as Malmesbury tells us, his Son of the same name was killed before his face. His great Success and Power, as it procured fear, so envy and hatred, while all that heard but of him, suspected presently their own Estates. This made not only friends but foes to agree in this, to put a stop to his formidable greatness, so that Britains and English conspiring together, gave him Battle at a place called Wodenbeorge, where to great a slaughter was made of his Men that he was totally defeated, and he who so lately commanded all on this side the River Humber, was now forced in a forlorn condition to hide his Head, and lurk in some obscure place, a banished Man from his own Dominions, a miserable spectacle of the inconstancy of sublunary things. This Wodenbeorge is now called Wodensburge, a little Village in Wiltshire near to that Ditch of wonderful work, which being cast up for many Miles together, divideth the middle of this Shire from East to West. The People dwelling thereabout, call it Wand-dike, and upon an error generally received, they talk that it was made by the Devil upon a Wednesday. But in the Saxon Tongue it is called Wodensdic, or the Dike of Woden, who here perhaps was worshipped by the Pagan Saxons, or being a thing of great consequence was dedicated to him. Malmesbury writes, that this great Battle was fought at it, not mentioning Wodensburge, and it's very probable that the Saxons made it to divide the two Kingdoms of the West Saxons and Mercians asunder, this being the very place of Battle between them, while they strove one with another to enlarge their Dominions. For besides this Battle betwixt Cædlin and the Saxons, and Britains, who joyned together; at this Dike, to say nothing of other accidents, Ina the West Saxon afterward, and Cealrede the Mercian joyned Battle, and departed the Field on even terms. It was their custom to make such Ditches, such was that of Offa, of which we have already spoken. Others are also to be seen among the East Angles in Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, wherewith they bounded their Territory, and defended themselves from the Inroads and violence of the Mercians.

11. Cædlin being thus driven into exile, when he had Reigned one and thirty years, died shortly after, in the second year, say the Annals, and together with him perished Cuthelme and Crida, the same year that Ethelfrith began his Reign over the Northumbrians. This his Catastrophe, was the high advancement of Ethelbert King of Kent, who for the reasons but now alleged, having high designs in his Head, was hitherto hindered from bringing them to perfection by the greater abilities and success of Cædlin. By this time he had well ripened his Ambition with more general observation and experience in war, and what he formerly, when raw and unpractised, had attempted, now successfully attained, and by degrees brought all the other Kingdoms between Kent and Humber to bear his Devotion, that of the West Saxons the firmest of all, being now in a very low condition: this gave him the main advantage, being humbled to his hand; the rest yielded not subjection, but as he earned it by continual Victories and the Terror which they procured, his Reputation being farther strengthened by his Marriage with Bertha, Daughter to a King of the Franks. But to return to the Kingdom of Wessex, in its deplorable estate, Ceolric the Nephew of Cædlin, by his Brother Cutha undertook its protection, and as he could in so ticklish times, ordered

Then followed Cædulf.

Next Cynegils and Quicelm, who Reigned jointly.

Who beat the Britains at Beamsune in Dorsetshire.

dered the affairs thereof for five years. After him followed Cædulf his Brother, Sect. 9. who for all the fourteen years he governed, was perpetually employed, either against the English, Britains, Picts or Scots, and came off with advantage. Yet have we nothing particular concerning these great attempts; only this is mentioned<sup>1</sup>, that the same year that Ethelfrith warred against the Britains of Chester, he made war upon the South Saxons. It must be remembered that Ethelbert of Kent outlived him, and therefore he having all his Life the superiority over all the other Kings, he durst not attempt any thing against him, it must have been against his fellow Vassals; and as for the Picts and Scots, he lying at such a distance from them, his warring against them, must have been in giving assistance to the Northumbrians their next Neighbours. He dying after he had Reigned fourteen years, Cynegils the Son of Ceolric (or, as the Annals call him, Ceol) succeeded him. The Translator of the Annals talks of his, and Quicelm taking the Government upon them in the same year. But the Annals themselves say no such thing, and Huntingdon writes, that he took his Brother Kichelm in the fourth year of his Reign, to be his Colleague in the Kingdom.

12. Cynegils began his Reign in the second year of Heraclius the Emperour, the two and fiftieth of Ethelbert King of Kent, the twentieth of Ethelfrith the fierce King of the Northumbrians, A. D. DCXII. The Monk of Malmesbury writes, that Cynegils and Quicelm, the Sons of Ceolric, put on the Ensigns of the Kingdom with equal Authority, they were both stout Persons, and contend betwixt themselves in the mutual Offices of Piety which should exceed, inasmuch, that in respect of their Concord, not usual among Kings, they may be propounded as a Miracle to the present, and an Example to future times. Many Wars they waged, one cannot distinguish whether with greater valour or moderation, either against the Britains or Penda King of the Mercians, a Man exceedingly dextrous in the surprizing feats of War, who having passed beyond his own Bounds, while he labours to get Cirecester into his hands, was not able to bear the flock of these unanimous Kings, but with a few in his Company ran away. Quicelm is not a little blamed, for hiring an Assassin to murder Edwin King of the Northumbrians, a Man of approved wisdom<sup>2</sup>. But if that gentile saying be considered, Dolus an virtus quis in hoste requiritur, he will easily find excuse having done nothing unusual, and led by a desire to remove out of the way by any means he could, one who studied his own destruction. For from the Kingdom of the West Saxons, he had before this wrested much, and at that time irritated by the injury received, the old grudges now coming to remembrance, practised many things which tended to their great damage. But the Kings escaped, to whom not long after, by the Preaching of Binnus the Bishop, the Heavenly Doctrine was revealed, in the twenty fifth year of their Reign, and the fortieth after the coming of St. Augustine, the Apostle of the English. Cynegils was presently won, and abasing his Royal Loftiness, willingly submitted himself to the Priest in Baptism. Quicelm wrined a little, till by the health of his Body, admonished that he should not neglect the Salvation of his Soul he imitated the devotion of his Consort, and died the same year. But Cynegils, for six years after, enjoying long quiet and repose, ended his Life in the one and thirtieth of his Reign.

13. Thus much Malmesbury in general, concerning the joyned Government of these Kings, we shall add what particulars we can light upon in these obscure times. The first is the Battle, which in the third or fourth year of Cynegils they fought against the Britains, at a place called Beamsune, where were slain the English Britains, two thousand and six and forty. Huntingdon here tells us, that they were frightened at the very sight of their Enemies, and at the first onset threw down their Ensigns and fled. Others write, that it was a doubtful and dangerous Battle, each one using his conjecture, rather than having any thing certain from the Monuments of Antiquity, whereon to fix this. We may easily believe that this Beamsune was that Town of Dorsetshire, situate upon the River Frome, which at this day is known by the Name of Bindon. As for that attempt which Quicelm made to take away the Life of Edwin, we must remember that this Prince was the fifth, whose Authority extended it self over all the Provinces of the English Saxons, greater in this respect than any of the other four, that their Territories were now subject to him, but his Dominions never had been in their Power, to which a bound was ever put by the River Humber. He had made bold in several respects, as well with the West Saxons as with others, and would give Law to them all. What therefore could not be done by fair, Quicelm resolved to effect by foul means; for foul it was, never to be excused or reconcilable with yon.

fraht J

Hep Cynegils to pice on per Scax um 7 beole XXXI. p ne. Cy ne. J Cecel Ced ning Cyneg
Ad. an. DCXII.

Hen Cynegils
the yul J Cynegils tells us, that threw Beamsune.
Jorogon epa beunco yea 7 XLVI.
Ad. an. DCXII.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 9. with generosity, even in any Enemy. But the thing was this, as we have it from the Authentick History of Beda himself. A certain Assassinate named Eumere, was sent from Quicelm the King of the West Saxons, to kill King Edwin. Pretending a Message from his Master, he runs upon him with an envenomed weapon (that in case the steel did not, the poyson might take effect) near the River Derwent, where stood at that time the King's Palace. This being perceived by Lilla a faithfull and loving Servant of the King's standing by, he interposed himself and was stabbed, the King also received a little hurt by the blow through his Body. The Assassinate killed another Souldier called Forthere, and at last was killed himself and cut in pieces. The King was exceedingly disturbed at the villany, but his grief was a little mitigated by a Daughter, of which his Queen was brought to Bed the night following. He gave thanks therefore unto his Gods, which being overheard by Paulinus the Bishop, he expostulated it with him, affirming that the Queen through his Prayers had been delivered without much pain. The King well pleased to hear that, promised that he would believe in Christ, in case he would give him Victory over Quicelm, and as a pledge of his promise commanded his little Daughter to be Chriftened, which was done, the Name of Eanfleda being given her, and with her were Baptized twelve others of the Family. Then did he raise an Army and lead it against Quicelm, and beginning a War, either killed all that had been of the Conspiracy, or had them delivered up unto him. To this Matthew of Westminster adds, that Quicelm he slew in the place, which from him is called in the Language of the English Quichelmes haune to this day. In testimony of the Victory he gave this Name to the Place, and so in triumph returned home.

14. The Passage concerning the death of Quicelm is such as agrees not with other Authours, nor can we believe it true, being placed by the Flowergatherer before the Battel betwixt Kinegils and Penda, at which other Writers unanimously affirm Quicelm to have been present. But he, and Florentius of Worcester, otherwise also differ from some of their fellow Historians about this Person, he calling him Quicelm, and both of them accounting him the Son of Kinegils, whereas others speak of him as of his Brother; but to say truth, the Annals make him his Son. Next after this Battel betwixt them and Edwin, that is placed by the Archdeacon of Huntingdon, which he affirms, they fought with the two Sons and Successors of Sebert the King of the Eastern Saxons. He makes them to have been the Aggressours, says, that being more in number they fought boldly but unfortunately. For both of these young men were killed, and icarcely could any of their Souldiers escape their flight, being intercepted both by the Mountains of dead Bodies, and the Torrents of blood. In the third year after he placeth their fight with Penda King of the Mercians at Cirencester, where assembled very great Armies on both sides, and (saith he) they fought it out with invincible Courage, till parted by the Intervention of Night and Darknes; and in the Morning when they were about to renew their fury, the Kings took up the Quarrel by a Truce, or some other Accommodation. What Circumstances soever he may add concerning their Multitudes and the Intervention of Night, that such a Fight there was, and a Ceflation thereupon we are assured by the Annals. That first Kinegils, and then Quicelm was Baptized the year after they also confirm; and moreover, that this very year Quicelm died eight years after the fight with Penda, and three years after the death of Edwin, who therefore could not kill him in the Battel lately mentioned, but yield himself he might into his Hands. Then lastly for Cynegils, that he outlived him six years the said Annals make manifest, placing the Succession of his Son (for his Death they mention not) in the seventh year after the death of Quicelm.

15. Cenwalh the Son of Cynegils succeeded his Father in the Kingdom of the West Saxons in the third year of Ercmbert King of Kent, the eighteenth of Penda King of the Mercians the same that Ofwi began his Reign over the Northumbrians, A. D. DCXLII. By Malmesbury he is described a Prince in the beginning of his Reign to be compared with the worst, in the middle, and the end with the best of Kings. Coming young to the Government, by Luxury he grew Insolent, despising the Example set him by his Father, and lawfull Matrimony; but being by Penda King of the Mercians, whose Sister he had repudiated, set upon with War, he was driven out of his Kingdom, and fled to the King of the East Angles; whereby being disciplined by Adversity and the Perswasions of him that gave him Entertainment, he considered better of it, was fully perswaded in the Faith, and recovered his Kingdom; where, to his Subjects, he presented himself a welcome Miracle of alteration

They invade Sebert King of the Eastern Saxons.

And wage War with Penda King of the Mercians.

Cenwalh begins his Reign.

Is driven out of his Kingdom by Pen-da.
Returns.
Is Baptized.

Bed. Hist. lib. 2.
c. 9.

Ad. An.
DCXXVIII.
Ad. An.
DCXXXV & DCXXXVI.

Ad. An.
DCXLIII.

Cenwalh An-nal. Saxonic. alii Kenwalh & Kenwalld, Cenwalld.

for the better, so valiant that he who formerly was not able to protect his own Territories, now twice overthrew the Britains, who remembering their ancient liberty fretted at their present condition, and therefore often plotted how they might successfully rebell; first in the place called Witgeornesbrug, and again by the Hill called Pene. Upon Wulpher also the Son of Penda he revenged the Injuries received from his Father, taking from him a good part of his Kingdom. So Religious he was, that first of all Saxon Kings he built at Winchester the most beautifull Church of that time, the pattern whereof was followed afterward in founding the Episcopal See, though in a more stately manner. So Munificent that nothing, even of his Patrimony, would he deny to his Kindred, as who bestowed upon his Brother's Son well nigh the third part of his Kingdom. These Royal Vertues of his were much excited by the Admonitions of Angilbert and Lutherius, successfully Bishops of his Province.

16. That Cenwalh was by Penda driven away, the Saxon Annals do testify, the year before he was Baptized; so that if he was not Baptized till his return out of Exile, as by the Annals it appears, he could not be absent from his Kingdom three years, as both they and Beda affirm; but perhaps longer it was e'er he received Baptism. The King of the East Angles, to whom he fled, and who by his Advice brought him to a thorough understanding of himself was Auna, who afterward was slain by Penda the Mercian, without any succour or assistance received from him that we read of. The kindness to his Relations appears from that great gift he gave to Cutbrede his Nephew the Son of Quicelm, and Grandson of Cynegils, as in this place the Annals expressly signify, which was three thousand Lands (as the Saxon terms them) by Aesdune, which Huntingdon interprets of Villages, or possibly they might be so many Hides, as afterward were called the ordinary division of Grounds; but the expression used by Malmesbury of the third part of his Kingdom, seems to hint at as great a quantity as that whereof Huntingdon speaks. As for the success which after his return he had against his Enemies, Authours speak variously thereof; for though Malmesbury and others talk of Victories, * Beda saith expressly that he very often received most grievous Damages from them in his Kingdom. Four years after his Gift to Cutbrede the Annals make mention of his fighting at a Place called Bradanford upon the River Asene, but name none against whom he fought, neither tell they what the success was. Cambden tells us it had the Name of Bradanford from the broadness of the Ford of Avon, which is there enlarged by receiving a little Rivulet; that it is now called Bradford in Wiltshire; situate upon the descent of an Hill. Here he saith Cenwalh King of the West Saxons imbrued his Sword with blood in Civil-war against Cutbrede his near Kinsman. But he names no Authour from whom he had it. If so it was, either Cutbrede was guilty of much Ingratitude, or Cenwalh of much oversight and Inconstancy.

Is kind to his Relations.

He overthrows the Britains in two several Battles.

17. As for the Battel fought against the Britains at Witgeornesbrug, there's none that makes mention of it beside the Monk of Malmesbury himself, and upon his mere Credit it must live. But there might well be such a Fight; for when he was settled after his Restauration he undertook a War against them, or rather they against him, if Huntingdon may be believ'd, who writes, that they knowing full well how he had been beaten by Penda, and driven him from his Kingdom, despised him as one not able to defend himself; and getting together a great number of men, in the pride of their Hearts made War upon him. And in the first engagement the Britains seemed to make the Saxons give ground. But the Saxons desiring rather to die than flee, so pertinaciously maintained the Fight, that the Britains were quite tired out, and their strength melted away like Snow. They gave then their backs to the Conquerours, were chased from Pen as far as Pederde, and an incurable wound was made in the Posterity of Brutus in that day. These are the words. The Annals confirm that he fought against the Britains or Wells as they term them, and that he chased them as far as Pedridan. Pen, Cambden tells us, is now an obscure Village not far from the River Juelin in Somersetshire, though anciently famous, being ordained by destiny, as it may seem, to the overthrow both of Britains and Danes. For at this very place (saith he) Kenwalch a West Saxon had such a day of the Britains that scarcely ever after would they abide to enter the Field against the English Saxons. And many a year after that, King Edmund, surnamed Ironside, gave there a notable foil to the Danes, as he pursued Cnutus their King, then usurping the Crown of England, from place to place. Pedridan is a Town also in that County now of no account, except for the Market or Fair there held, but formerly the Royal Seat of King Ina, now called Se<sup>ct</sup>. 9.

Ad. An.
DCXLVIII.
Hep. C. n-rall genealde Cynpge in Eurendo lon-der be Ar-cepdune.
re Cynppete par Cy-chelling.
Quicelm Cynegiling.
* Lib. 3. c. 7.

Sect. 9.

Pedderion.

called Pedderion from the River Pedred, (commonly Parret) which here runneth into Fuel and robbeth him of his Name.

18. Not long after Cenwalb took occasion to fall out with Wulfhere the Mercian, the Son of Peada his old enemy, and gave him Battle at a place called Possentes Berig. Fabius Ethelward is singular in this story, favouring much the Family of the West Saxons, from which he himself was descended. He writes, that he took him Prisoner; But the Annals saying that he fought at this place in Easter Holydays, add that Wulfere barasswed all as far as Ælfedune, the same year wherein died Cuthbert the Son of Quichelm and King Cenbyrht. That Wulfere wasted the Isle of Wight, and bestowed the Inhabitants thereof on Ethelwald the King of the South Saxons, to whom he was Godfather, and that Eoppa the Priest by command of Wulfere, and King Wulfere himself, first were Auhours of Baptism to the Inhabitants of the said Island, which how it agrees with another affirmation of Beda, we shall see in a more proper place. We have no more to say of Cenwalb, than that he died after he had Reigned one and thirty years: we know not whether we should take notice of what the Archdeacon of Huntingdon thinks to be worthy special remarque. The year before he died happened a mighty fight of Birds in England, which that you may believe to have been no impossible thing, he tells you that in his time the very same thing happened in Normandy, during the Reign of Henry the First. About the City of Rouen, such Combats there were that thousands of them were found slain upon the Earth, and the strangers seemed to be put to flight. A sign he counts it of the Battle fought betwixt the said Henry then King of England, and Duke of Normandy, and the French King Lewis the Son of Philip. In which fight Henry remained Victor, and Lewis was routed and ran away. But as for Cenwalb, at his death, he left his Kingdom to the disposal of his Wife Senburgh. But she survived him not long, holding the Government but one year, which ended, the Nobility expelled her, disdaining, as Matthew of Westminster writes, to fight under the Banner of a Woman, though Malmesbury says, she strenuously discharged all Offices of a good Ruler. It seems she took it to heart, for she died presently after.

Dyes.

A strange fight of Birds in the Air.

Several petty Kings.

As Seaxburg. Æscuin.Kentwin.Ceadwalla.Sets upon Edelwald King of the South Saxons.Seizes the Isle of Wight, Invades Kent.

19. Beda writes, that after the death of Cenwalb, very Petty Kings held the Kingdom divided among themselves, and that for about ten years together, not mentioning Seaxburg. Others speak of Æscuin the Son or Nephew of Cuthgiff the Brother of Cynegils, who Reigned but two years, yet was not petty in his Actions; for he dared to grapple with Wulfere King of the Mercians, with whom he fought a Battle at a place called Bedanhsafe, and about a year after, both of them died. Kentwin the Son of Cynegils, after him assumed the Title, or as Beda hints, Reigned at the same time, being as the Monk notes as well as the other, of approved experience in War; for he defeated the Britains, as Æscuin before him did the Mercians. Of this defeat we have no other account from the Annals than that he drove them as far as the Sea, but whence or to what Sea, we are far to seek. This they place five years after the beginning of Kentwin, and four years after this they tell us that Ceadwalla again began to seize on the Kingdom of the West Saxons. Thus much Beda writes concerning this Ceadwalla, that he was a most valiant young Man of the Royal stock of the Geoffis, and being banished his Country, came with an Army upon Edelwald King of the South Saxons, whom he slew, and then cruelly with Fire and Sword harassed his Dominions. Malmesbury affirms, that being descended from Cutha the Brother of Ceanlin, he was a young Man of immoderate hope, who could not omit any occasion of exercising his Valour. Having by his restless humour provoked the indignation of the Nobility, too powerful a faction he excited against himself, and was driven to Banishment. Being constrained at this time to submit to his Fortune, that he might make his County naked and defenceless, he took away with him all the youth, which either for love to his virtues, or in commiseration of his sufferings, willingly followed him. The first that underwent the violence of his fury, was Edelwald King of the South Saxons, who was so bold as to grapple with him; but being routed with all his People, procured, as the effect of his rashness, a late repentance. But Ceadwalla on the contrary, having by so great success encouraged his Men, speedily returned, and an unlooked for onset easily drove away his Emulators. After this, enjoying the Kingdom two years, he gave many evident proofs of his Military Abilities. Bearing to the South Saxons an irreconcilable hatred, he destroyed also Edrich the Successor of Edelwald, who refused not, but boldly gave him Battle. The Inhabitants of the Isle of Wight, who in confidence of assistance from the Mercians rebelled, he almost utterly destroyed. Over those of Kent he often

Lib. 4. c. 12.

Subreguli.

Sic Malmesb.

de eorum duces.

lex eum a Cenrico devocant.

Ad. An.

DCLXXIV.

Annot. ad An.

DCLXXV.

Ad. An.

DCLXXXI.

Lib. 4. c. 19.

Vide ejus stem-ma apud An-

nal. ad An.

DCLXXXV.

Sect. 9.

often obtained Victory, and revenged sufficiently upon them the death of his Brother. Amongst other things memorable of him, it's hard to say with what Piety he was endued, even before his Baptism; for the Tithes of all his Spoils, he gave to Almighty God. In which thing, as we approve his affection, so we disapprove his example, according to that saying: He that offers Sacrifice of the substance of the Poor, is as if he offered the Son in the presence of the Father. But that he went to Rome to be Baptized, was there Baptized by Sergius the Pope, and called Peter, and as yet being in Albia (or within seven days after his Baptism) died, is more known than that it needs any relation from us.

20. So much doth Beda and Malmesbury write of Ceadwalla, which the Reader must take in the name of all the English writers. For the History of the Britains and the Annals of the English do not agree about this King. The Annals say, he was the Son of Cenbyrht, descended from Ceanlin by Cutha, in the fourth degree, but the Britains affirm him the Son of Cadwallin their King, the same that Ilew Edwin and Oswald, the Kings of the Northumbrians. Of this Cadwallin, they tell a ridiculous story, that being spent with Age, after a Reign of eight and forty years, the Britains embalming his Body, put it into an Image of Brass, resembling him, which they set upon a Brazen Horse, over the Western Gate of London, in memory of the great things he performed against the English: a lye which proceeded from some Monk of a brazen face, who could not be ignorant that London, long before this time, had been out of the hands of the Britains. Now they say also, that under the very Gate they built a Church in honour of St. Martin, wherein for him and the rest of the faithful deceased, divine obsequies might be for ever celebrated. In his Kingdom succeeded his Son Cadwalader, whom Beda calls Cadwalla, a young Man, whose Mother was Sister to Peada King of the Mercians, and Married by Cadwallin, after a reconciliation made with his Brother. All this as a story attended with such ridiculous circumstances, we reject, betaking our selves to the Pedigree of Ceadwalla, which the Saxon Annals afford us, and the more sure testimony of Beda, who affirms him of the Royal stock of the Geoffis. From the same Beda we must add to what we have formerly said concerning his killing Ædilwald King of the South Saxons, that though he had slain him, he was immediately driven away by Berchthun and Andhun, the King's Captains, who afterward held the Province of that Kingdom. Yet he farther adds, that the first of these Captains, when Ceadwalla came to be King of the Geoffis, was killed by him, and the Province subjected to more grievous servitude than before. In the following Chapter he writes, that after Ceadwalla was possessed of the Kingdom of the Geoffis, he took the Isle of Wight, which before this time was wholly given to Idolatry, labouring by a tragical slaughter utterly to exterminate all the Natives, and to substitute in their rooms men of his own Province. From him it appears that one Arnald was at this time King of the Island, whose two Sons having taken, and resolving to kill them, he permitted they should be Baptized before they were put to death. But we cannot admit him for above a Regulus Princeps, or Petty King, remembering that on this Ædilwald King of the South Saxons Wulfere King of the Mercians, his Godfather, bestowed this Isle of Wight, whom Ceadwalla having slain in right of prosecution of War, entered and subdued this part of his Dominions, which lay so conveniently for him. From this time forward our Writers for a great while have not one word of Wight, till the year of our Lord, one thousand sixty six, in which Tostie, King Harold's Brother, with certain Men of War and Rovers Ships out of Flanders, in hatred of his Brother, invaded it, and after he had fleeced the Inhabitants of their Money, quickly again departed.

21. To what we have already said concerning Ceadwalla, his Invasion of Kent. (in the History of that Kingdom) and the Death of his Brother, whom Latin lib. 4. c. 16. writers call Mollo, but the Saxon Annals Mull, we can add nothing more that is material. He being gone to Rome to receive Baptism, Ina the Son of Cenred, whose Father was Ceolwald, the Brother of Cynegils, obtained the Kingdom of the West Saxons, in the third year of Justinian the younger Emperour, in the days of Theodorick King of the Franks, the third of Alfred King of the Northumbrians, and the fourteenth of Æthelred (or Ædired) King of the Mercians. A. D. DCLXXXVIII. The Monk of Malmesbury is very smart and pithy in his Description of him. He writes, that more in respect of the industry of his inventive Virtue than any Pedigree of a successive Offspring, he was taken to be Prince, the only specimen of Fortitude, Image of Prudence, his equal for Religion you cannot find. By such like Acts, framing the course of his Life at home, Ina King of the West Saxons.

Math. Florilegus ad an. 676.

De Regio genere Geoffis, nam, quod Rex Alfdredus per seaxna apellat, nunc quis se Alfdredum ames qui vel modicioris Saxoniæ callem facis nominem, idem seil. qui Prefectus Cyns, Cefes, Juvenius. Anglis hodiernis Prince Edgar. Etheling. Endland darling. Ille cui Regard our Anglo-redum sel eiam Gulielmum Normanum debebat.

Beda Hist. lib. 4. c. 16.

Annot. ad An. 689.

A a

he

Sect. 9.

he purchased favour and reverence abroad. And for eight and thirty years exercising his Function, he waxed old, all along void of the fear of Treachery, a most holy Pander as it were of publick Love. His first expedition was against the Kentish men, bearing still in his mind the burning of Mollo alive. For a little while they made resistance, but after their utmost effort, having left nothing unattempted, and finding every thing unsuccessfull, when they could find nothing in the breast of Ina, which might encourage slothfulness, they began to consider of their Estate, and fairly yielded. With Gifts they make trial of his Royal mind, they solicit him by Promises, and for thirty thousand Marks of Gold, they purchase their own quiet by his retreat. He having received the money pardoned what was past, and returned home. But not only they of Kent, but the Inhabitants of East England, were made objects of his hereditary hatred, all their Nobility being first driven away, and afterwards defeated in Battel. Let this suffice to have been said of the success of his Wars. How great a man he was in the things of God, the Laws which he made to correct the Vices of his People sufficiently shew, which still remain as a living Mirrour of his purity. The Monasteries he built are evident Witnesse, structures of Royal Magnificence, especially that of Glaffenbury. At length he declares how by the solicitations of Ethelburga his Wife, after all his Earthly Triumphs he arrived at the height of Glory and Perfection as he esteems it, and went to Rome, where he lived and died as obscurely as he had desired.

Forces the Kentish men to buy peace.
Invades East England.

Invades with invited King of the Mercians.

Civil Wars at home.

Unites the British and English by Marriages.

22. As for his first Expedition into Kent, others write that Västred unwilling to hazard all for the rash Act of a few, delivered up thirty of those that had been accessory to the burning of Mollo. This expedition the Annals place at the sixth year of his Reign, and are silent as to any other Act of his, till fifteen years after. Then they tell us that Ina and Nun his Kinsman fought with Gerend King of Wales, but where or how they leave us in Ignorance. With as much shortness and obscurity, fourteen years after this they inform us, that Ina and Ceolred King of the Mercians, fought Battel at a place called Wodensboorke or Wodensburge, the same we have formerly mentioned to stand near to Wansdike in Wiltshire, or the Dike of Woden. Huntingdon from what Authority we have not, affirms that they fought horribly on both sides, so that it could not be known, on which the greater Number of Men was lost. But Ina, if not Victour, remained the Survivour, Ceolred dying the following year, who that year that next succeeded, was followed into another World by Ingrid the Brother of Ina, whose Sisters the Annals take here occasion to mention. They were two, Cwesburk and Cuthburk; whereof the later built a Monastery in a place called Winburnan; the other was married to Alfrid King of the Northumbrians, but out of desire to be wedded also to a monastical life, was separated from him while he yet lived. After this time it seems that Ina was vexed at home by Civil Discords, his Title having not been such to the Government, but that others thought their right as good as his. For the Annals at the year which follows, tell us he slew Cynewulfe, and Florent of Worcester gives him the Title of Clyte, the same with Etheling, and given to none but those of the Blood Royal. But no sooner was one cut off, but as soon if not sooner, another appeared, one Ealdbright who seized on a Castle which Ina had built at Tantune. Whom the Archdeacon tells us Queen Edelburk besieged, took the Castle and razed it, Ealdbright being fled into Surrey. He was pursued by Ina from Surrey into Suffex, where the Inhabitants undertaking his protection were overthrown in Battel, and Ealdbright himself was slain, all which the Annals allow. Three years after they tell us that Ina went to Rome, leaving his Kingdom after he had held it seven and thirty years.

An DCCCXXI.

23. That Ina went to Rome at the solicitation of Edelburk his Wife, who also accompanied him, we have already related from the Monk of Malmesbury, and that six years before his departure he was his Wife, the Annals do plainly signify. But elsewhere we hear another story of his marrying Guala, the Daughter of Cadwalader King of the Britains, from which Daughter we are told, that Countrey was called Wallia, which in ancient times had the Name of Cambria. Moreover with this last Wife he received Cambria, Cornubia, and (with her they must all begin) the blessed Crown of Britain, which belonged to Cadwalader the last King of the Britains. All the English which lived at that time, took their Wives from the British stock, and the Britains from the illustrious blood and stock of the English, that is the race of the Saxons. For this was done by the Common Council and assent of all the Bishops, Princes, Nobles and Counts with all the wife men, the Elders and People of the whole Kingdom, and that that by Command of the aforesaid King Ina. Yet some English fetcht their Wives from the Blood and Kind of the Angles of Germany, some English from the blood and kind of the Scots, and almost all the Scots from the best blood and stock of the Angles of Germany. So at that time throughout the whole Kingdom of Britain, they were two in one flesh, and so did he constitute right Wedlock, destroyed Fornication and Uncleanness out of his Kingdom, ordaining right Judgment for the stability of his Kingdom, the strengthening of his People, with a benign Industry. And in this manner were they made one Nation and one People, by God's mercy throughout the whole Kingdom of Britain. Then did all call that the Kingdom of the English, which formerly had been called the Kingdom of Britain.

Sect. 9.

24. All these People ever afterward for the Common Utility of the Crown of the Kingdom, stood unanimously together against the Danes and Norwegians, fought most fiercely against them, and waged together most cruel Wars. For, the aforesaid King Ina was an excellent Prince, bountifull, wife, prudent, moderate, stout, just, courageous and a perfect Souldier, both as to time and place, in the Divine Laws, in secular Affairs, in writings and performing of all good works very glorious. His Kingdom he governed, consolidated and held in peace by his great wisdom and prudence, and where the Case required by force and strength of hand. This is the substance of a great Council, consisting of such great Men as lately were mentioned, said to be held by King Ina, a little after he had married Guala the Daughter of Cadwalader King of the Britains, with which Wife he obtained all Cambria, and the Crown of Cadwalader, found amongst the Laws of Edward the Confessor. But notwithstanding the Authentickness of the Laws among which it is found, there is no good Historian that makes mention of any such Marriage of his with Guala, or any such occasion of the Origination of the Name of Wallia. Who the English Saxons and Germans were wont to call Walls or Guals, we have already shewn. Neither had he any other Wife than Ethelburk, a Saxon not Britain, as her Name demonstrates, who at such time as he went to Rome turned Nun, and became afterwards Abbess of Barking. After this he never married, for they both continued in the monastical kind of life till death concluded it. As for the time of this pretended Council and its Authority, we are full as much in the dark. Some report Cadwalader to have reigned only three years, others five, and Geoffrey of Hunmouth twelve, so that when Ina should have entered upon his Kingdom of Cambria is uncertain. Moreover he makes Ina the Nephew, Matthew of Westminster, and H. Lhuyd the Son, and this Council the Son-in-Law of Cadwalader. But the Britains having feigned Cadwalader to be their King, could not make up the Romance without this story adjoined of his Successour.

Goes to Rome.

Makes Ethelheard his Successour. Who is disturbed in his Government by Oswald a Mercian.

The next King was Cuthrede.

25. The most noble part of Ina his Acts is yet behind, his Body of Laws which we must refer till we come to speak of the Saxon Laws in general. He went not to Rome till he had provided himself and People of a Successour. This was one Ethelheard his Kinsman, who though by the means of Ina, he first obtained the Royalty, yet to confirm it was put to no little trouble. The first that created him, this troubles was Oswald the Son of Ethelbald King of the Mercians, to whom the Annals give the Title of Etheling, and say that in the very year of Ethelheard's promotion they fought, but as to the success they are silent, only the year following they tell us of a Comet, which ushered in the death of Oswald in the succeeding year, a natural death for any thing that appears either from them or others. Malmesbury observes that a check by him was often given to the beginnings of Ethelheard, against whom he stirred up the People unto Rebellion. But not long after he being taken away by death, he writes that Ethelheard held the Kingdom quietly for fourteen years, and so left it to Cuthrede his Kinsman. Cuthrede had grievous contests with Ethelbald King of the Mercians. It seems this Enmity was too severe long to continue; for, two years after, the same Annals relate that Ethelbald and Cuthrede fought jointly against the Welshmen, so that their private Interests and Grudges, at last they submitted to publick Commitments. Here again the Annals are silent as to the Success, but Huntingdon doubts not to assign them a great Victory over an innumerable multitude of Britains, using his ordinary way of expressing the greatness of a Fight. The courageous Kings and their most famous Souldiers laid so about them in their several Quarters, that the Britains not able to sustain any more their violence, gave their Backs to the Smiters, and their Baggage to the Pursuers. Which Victory obtained these Princes returned home, where (no doubt) they were very joyfully received.

A a 2

26. The

Sect. 9. 26. The Success and Prosperity of Cuthred, was three years after interrupted by a sad Accident in his own Family. The Annals note only, that Cynric the Etheling of the West Saxons, was slain. Huntingdon says he was his Son, terms him the Glory of Arms, the destroyer of wild Beasts; tender in Age, but smart in martial matters, little in years, but great in vigour, who still pressing upon his own Successes, and soliciting the fortune of War too much, his extravagance of mind, was punished by a death procured, by the mutiny of his Soldiers. That Hen Cynric he was his Son we may easily believe, from what the word Etheling doth import, Hen Cynric and that it proceeded from a Sedition of the Soldiers, that may easily persuade us, which is mentioned in the Annals at the second year after, that King Cuthred fought with that furious Captain Ethelbun. Huntingdon in his comment upon this text, hath this enlargement upon it, that having raised sedition against his Lord though as to the number of his Forces he was far inferior to him, yet long and resolutely did he maintain his rebellion: And when now Victory seemed to incline to his side, at length a wound inflicted on his Body, and perjury in his mind procured the cause of the King to triumph. But this Rebellion seems of no larger extent than to be contained within the bounds of a Civil War. It raised no new one from without, this Ethelbun having no correspondence with Ethelbald, that by virtue of that Peace and Alliance formerly made betwix the two Kings, now again vanished into nothing. But in the second year after the Fight with Ethelbun, we are told that Cuthred in the twelfth of his Reign, fought again with Ethelbald, at a place called Beorgford. Huntingdon's Copy hath it Hereford, though Authors generally agree, it was Bedford where the Battle was fought. Ethelbun he tells us being now reconciled to the King, was his Captain and Councillor in this expedition. He then tells a long tale in affected words concerning the Fight, and how the King and Consul (as he terms Ethelbun) meeting came to a single Combat, which ended in the Cowardise and Flight of Ethelbald, who outlived not this defeat two years, being slain in another Battle fought against the West Saxons at Secandune, and buried at Repandune, as we have already in the History of his Kingdom related.

Overthrown the Britains.

Dies.

Sigebert succeds.

Is very cruel and tyrannical.

Puts to death his best friend and subject.

Is driven from the Kingdom.

27. Cuthbert being distracted diſtinguiſhed from the attempts of Ethelwald, found himſelf concerned to give a check to the Britains, who in vain reſiſted, the Conquerour of Ethelwald loon ran away, and deſervedly received a great Deſeat, and Huntingdon tells us that without the leaſt ground from the Annals, which are altogether ſilent as to the ſucceſs. But two years after this they acquaint us with the News of the death of Cuthbert after he had reigned ſeventeen years, together with the burning of the City of Canterbury, and the ſucceſſion of Sigebert into the Kingdom of the Weſt Saxons , which he held for the ſpace of one year and no longer. Malmesbury writes that he ſeized upon the Kingdom, a Man of brutiſh cruelty at home, yet abroad infamous for his Cowardiſe. Therefore incurring the hatred of all his Subjects they conſpired againſt him, and after a year depoſed him, cauſing him to give place to a better Man. But as commonly it happeneth in ſuch caſes, the greatness of his calamity reclaimed ſome to pity towards him, by the valour of whom he preſerved in obedience that Province called Hamptonſhire. But his Inclination ſtill prevailing againſt his Succeſs, as well as all Goodneſs and Juſtice, having by putting to death one Cumbra, a Man that of all others had been moſt faithful to him, armed the reſt of his Followers againſt him, he was constrained to betake himſelf to the Dens and lurking places of wild Beasts, whither miſfortune dogging him at the Heels, he was killed by an Herdſman. And ſo the cruelty of the King, having almoſt raged againſt all the Nobility, was brought to an end by a Man of the meaneſt condition. Huntingdon calls him the kinfman of Cuthbert, by whole ſucceſs he became fo proud and insolent, that he became intolerable to his Subjects. He adds, agreeable to the Annals, that abuſing them all manner of ways, forcing the Laws to countenance his unjuſt proceedings, or utterly avoiding them, one Cumbra his moſt noble Couſin, at the deſire of all the People made known the Complaints of the Subjects to their cruel King. But ſeriouſly adviſing him to govern more mildly, and laying aſide his inhumanity, to render himſelf acceptable to God and Man, he wickedly commanded him to be put to death, and, in a manner more cruel and intolerable than ever , encreaſed his Tyranny. Remaining incorrigible in theſe his outrageous proceedings, the Nobility and People aſſembled together, and by a provident deliberation and unanimous conſent of them all he was depoſed, and Cynwulf a choice young Man of the Royal Stock was elected King in his ſtead. Sigebert thus driven away, fled for fear of that he was conſcious to himſelf he had deſerved, into the great Wood of Andred, where

Hep Cutnes peate his fealar.
An. DCCLXII.

(at

CHAP. II. Contemporary with the Constantinop. Rom. Empire. Cynwulf. 191

(at a place called by the Annals Pruntesfloodan) he was killed by an Hogherd belonging to Cumbra, who thus revenged upon him his Master's death.

28. Cynwulf began his Reign over all the Kingdom of the West Saxons except Hampshire, which Sigebert possessed for a little time till the death of Cumbra in the fifteenth year of Constantinus Copronymus, Emperor, in the Reign of Pipin King of the Franks, the seventh of Edelbert or Ethelbert King of Kent, the eighteenth of Egbert or Eadbert King of the Northumbrians, toward the beginning of the Reign of Offa King of the Mercians, A. D. DCCLV. Malmesbury, in short, says he was a Man famous both for the composition of his Morals, and his Martial Acts, being in one only Battel overthrowen at Benfynstun, by Offa King of the Mercians, in the four and twentieth year of his Reign, after which he was afflicted with many losses, and went out of the World in a vile manner. Huntingdon from the Annals writes of his being victorious over the Britains in many Battels, whom having subdued on all sides, he resolved to banish Kineard the Brother of Sigebert, the Story whereof we have at large out of the Annals themselves after this manner. About the one and thirtieth year from the first beginning of his Reign he had a desire to expell out of the Kingdom a certain Etheling called Cynebeard, who was Brother to Sigebyrht. The King having intelligence, that attended with a small company of Men, he frequented the company of a certain Woman, at a place called Merantune, rode thither himself, and searching about the Town, some of his Souldiers found out where the Etheling lay. The King perceiving it, behaved himself in a manner unbecoming his Person, till he got fight of him, which done he rushed in upon him and wounded him fore. But all his Followers, together with him, fell upon the King, and fought with him till they had beaten him down and killed him; which was done before the Souldiers that followed him understood perfectly where he was. His Guard at length perceiving a tumult in this Womens House hastened thither, every one as he was moit ready and could run fastest, to whom the Etheling promised Money and Pardon if they would submit unto him. But they utterly rejected his Offers, and so long fought with the Followers of Cynebeard till they were all killed, one certain Britain an Hostage excepted, who was most grievously cut and hacked. By the Morning the news of the King's death was fled to a place not far off, where many more Attendants had awaited his return, and with others Ofric and Wiferth, two Counts, halted to the House whence the Etheling was not yet departed. The Doors were made fast but they easily got in, which he perceiving began to parly with them, labouring with great promises to draw them off from revenging their King's death and to accept of himself under that Title and Capacity. But they flatly refused to sell their Master's Blood, and resolving neither to spare him nor his Relations, for whom he interceded, put them all to the Sword, except one Youth, to whom Luc their Leader was Godfather, and saved him upon that account, though grievously wounded. But such was the end of Cynwulf after he had reigned one and thirty years: And his Body was buried at Winchester. That of the Etheling, who in a Male line was descended from Cerdic, was interred at Acrem Minster, not at Repanseune, as the Monk of Malmesbury hath it out of a mistake of the Annals, which affirm not Cynebeard but Ethelbald King of the Mercians at this Repanseune to have been buried.

29. After Cynwulf's Death, Byrhtic was made King of the West Saxons, according to the Faßt of Sr. Henry Saül, (which yet allot but twenty nine years to the Reign of Cynwulf) in the fourth year of the Emperor Constantinus Porphyrogenitus, the twenty fifth of Alrick King of Kent, and the seventh of Alfwold King of the Northumbrians, A. D. DCCCLXXXIV. He was, as Malmesbury describes him, a man more studious of Peace than War, being a very Artful in procuring Friendship, pleasing Foreigners with Courtship, and Conniving at the faults of his People in such things as did not hurt the Government. To obtain greater Reputation amongst his Neighbours, he Married the Daughter of Offa King of the Mercians, at that time the most potent Prince, by which he had no Illue that can be known. Incouraged by this Alliance he drove Egbert into France, a young man, who alone survived of all those that were of the Royal Stock, and therefore was a Person dangerous to his Interest. For both this Byrhtic and the other Kings, which Reigned after Offa, though they bragged of their Pedigrees, being such as indeed did descend from Cerdic, yet were they defended in a good distance from the Royal Line. Egbert then being gone, he thought himself secure, and that he might now take his ease, when a Company of Danes accustomed to live by Piratical Depredations, secretly landing from three Ships, disturbed the Peace of his Province. This Company of men at this time came as Spies to discover the fertility of the Soil and the valour of the Inhabitants, as afterwards was evident from the coming of that Multitude which overwhelmed in a manner all Britain. At this time stealing upon the Island, this Kingdom being in profound peace and silence, they suddenly fell upon a Royal Village adjoining, and killed the Overseer or Keeper, who came in to its relief; but the People gathering together they left their Booty, ran to their Ships and went their ways.

Sect. 9.

Marries Eadburgh Daughter of Offa King of the Mercians.

Forces Egbert to fly the Kingdom.

30. To this general account of the Monk, we may add from the Annals, that this Daughter of Offa he married, was by Name Eadburgh, a Woman too well known, as we shall see hereafter. Egbert being descended from Inegild, the Brother of Ina, gave in his Childhood pregnant proofs of much Wit and Courage, which together with his descent could not but excite great fear and jealousy in Byrhtic who resolved his death, and studied the best manner to make him away. Egbert having notice of and having good grounds to apprehend his purpose, betook himself to Offa's Court, where he was no sooner come, Byrhtic's Ambassadors were at the door, both requiring the Fugitive to be given up, for whom they offered a round sum of Money, and farther for a Confirmation of Friendship betwixt the two Kings, desired Offa's Daughter for a Wife for their Master. Courtship effecting more with Offa than Threats and violence could procure, Egbert was forced once more to shift for himself, and over he went into France, which thing in the opinion of our Authour, came to pass by the Council of God, that being ordained for that Kingdom, he should receive his Intimation from the Franks; a Nation which far exceeds (saith he) all those of the West, both in Action and the pleasantness of their Conversation. This affront he made use of as a whetstone to rub off the rust of idleness; to sharpen his wit, and to obtain such endowments as are quite contrary to Pagan Barbarism. Byrhtic however rejoiced in his absence, not caring what advantages education he might have, for his Influence reached not him, nor his possession of what at present he held, he was not far from envying his happiness any where out of England, that he could have heartily wished him in Heaven itself. The pleasing repose he enjoyed was interrupted by the landing of Danes; the first Danes that landed in an hostile manner in Britain, who slew the Governour of these Quarters, the first man of those many thousands which afterward were butchered by that Savage People. Yet though we hear nothing before of their landing, they from the time of Julianian, and about the year of our Lord DLXX begun to rove upon the Coasts of Britain and Gall, and were by the Writers which penned in Latin the Histories of the English named Wicingi, for that they practiced Piracy: For Wicinga in the Saxon Tongue (as Alfred witnesseth) signifieth a Pyrat that runneth from Creek to Creek: Also Pagani or Painims, because as yet they were not Christians: But the Angles themselves in their Language termed them Derufcan, and oftentimes Heathommon or Ethnicks.

A Company of Pyrates infest the Land.

And kill the King's Officer.

The first Danish Invasion.

31. The Officer that went to oppose them, and in his attempt perished, by (a) some of our Authours is called Villicus from that Villa or Town which they write that these Danes attacked. By (b) others Præpositus Regis, which suits better with the word ῥεπειβας by which the (c) Annals do Name him. They affirm, that not knowing what they were he would have brought them to the Town of the King, which some interpret Dorchester, and farther say, that he being the King's Customer there, supplied them Foreign Merchants, and riding to them commanded them to come and give account of their Lading at the Customs-house; but they shewed him no other Merchandize than the Steel of their Sword, where-with they flew him and all that came with him, as an Earnest of the many Murders, Rapines and Hostilities, which afterward they committed throughout the whole Island. But of this first Danish Invasion the Danish History of Pontanus far otherwise relates, as if their Landing had been at the mouth of Humber, and their Depredations far into the Country adjoining, whence they were repulsed by the surprized Inhabitants back to their Ships: What was the reason, by what authority they came there is no mention made, and the thing is the more strange because Sigebert it makes then to have been King, a man who more studied his own peace and quiet than the molestation of his Neighbours. And indeed not only from the

An. 787.

Malmsh. de gestis Regum Anglorum, l. 2. c. 1.

Est opinio gentis illæ & extractionis virorum & Comitum morum cunctarum Oceanum circumdantem facile princeps.

(a) Malmsh. de gest. Reg. Angl. l. 1. Math. Florileg. ad An. 791.

(b) Flamingdon. Hist. l. 4. Eboracen. Annal. Par. prior. Florentin. Wigorn. ad An. 787.

(c) Jon his eadum Cronon ænepe III. c. pini. ῥεπειβας ῥεπειβας.

ῥεπειβας ῥεπειβας.

spýran toðar Cýnin: er tunc sýhe nýrre hýazhy sæpon. 7 hinemon Ofroth. 7 sæpon toðar Cýnin: er tunc sýhe nýrre hýazhy sæpon. An. DCCLXXXVII.

Danish

Sect. 9.

Danish History, but some Writers of our own, we are apt to believe that the first intended Invasion of that People with intention to rifle and pillage the Country, was in the Northern parts about Humber; and those that landed here in the third year of Byrhtic, were but some Rovers or Pirates at Sea, who, as we now said, were wont to infest the Seas of Britain and Gall, and by chance, or distressed by Weather, came on the Western shore; possibly also with a desire of spying the Country. This we are induced to think from a Story or two we find in the Chronicle of John Brompton, which setting forth the Causes of their first Hostile Invasion here we think fit to recite in this place, though the thing happened a good while after.

An Account of the Danes first invading Britain.

32. At that time (viz. in the days of Ethelwulf King of England, the Son of Egbert and of Charles the Bald) one Ofbrith was King of Northumberland, who on a day going to take his pleasure in a Wood, as he returned went privately to the House of one of his Noblemen Bruern Bocard by Name to refresh himself; Bruern knowing nothing of the King's coming, was gone to the Sea side to make sure the Shoar and Havens, according to his Custome, against Thieves and Pirates. But his Wife a Woman of great Beauty entertained the King at Dinner very pleasantly. The King having Dined took her by the hand and led her to his Chamber, telling her he must speak with her in private, and there removing all out of the way but such as were privy to his secret Courtes, by force and violence he lay with her. Having had his will he speedily got him back to Tork. She lamented and mourned, so that her Visage was much altered, which caused her Husband at his return to ask the cause of so sudden a Change and of her unaccustomed sadness. She told him the whole matter in order how the King had forced her, which having heard he comforted her, bidding her not afflict her self, forasmuch as she was not able to resist a man so strong, assuring her that because she had told him the truth he would love her no less than he had done, and if God gave him leave he would avenge both himself and her upon him that had committed the Crime. Then did this Bruern being a Man both Noble and Powerfull, defended of great Parentage, call his Kindred together, to whom he revealed the Affront put upon him, and his Intention of a speedy Revenge, to which they consenting and approving his purpose, with them he took Horse and rode to Tork. The King upon fight of him called him to him very civilly, but he with his Relations at his back defied him, renouncing his Homage and Fidelity, giving up his Land and whatsoever he held of him. This said, without any more words he withdrew, making no stay at all at Court.

33. His Friends consenting speedily he went over into Danemark, where to the King of the Danes he made a great complaint of the Affront offered to him and his Wife by Ofbrith, desiring his speedy relief and supply to put him into a Capacity to revenge himself. Hereat Codrinus the King and his Danes conceived very great joy, having now some reason to induce them to subdue the English. To revenge the injury offered to Bruern, who was defended of his blood, he speedily prepared a great Army over which he made Captains two Brothers called Inguar and Habbe most valiant Souldiers, and to them he gave a Navy furnished with all necessaries to transport an innumerable Company of men. These Adventurers landing in the Northern Parts, and taking their way through Holderness, destroyed all the Towns with their Inhabitants; and coming to Tork provoked Ofbrith to come out and fight. He accordingly issued forth with an Army such as it was, and fighting was slain with his Followers; after which they took the City and therein remained. And so (saith our Authour) the Danes for the cause aforesaid first in an Hostile manner invaded England. But at this time there was another King in Northumberland called Ella, who was promoted to that Dignity by the Friends and Relations of Bruern, because for the affront offered to him by Ofbrith, they would have no more to do with that lascivious Prince. This Ella going out on a time to Hunt, when his sport was over fate down to Dinner, and as he was eating applauded himself for the good luck they had had that day, reckoning up what Deer they had killed. One came just in at these words and told him, though he had got so much that way, yet he had lost an hundred times as much another; for the Danes (saith he) have taken Tork, slain Ofbrith, and now are invading your Country to deprive you of it. Ella hearing this got his men together, and hastened to Tork there to destroy the Danes, but they having notice came out, and not far from the City gave him Battle, wherein they killed him and a very great multitude of his Souldiers, in a place still called Ellecroft from this occasion. Farther, it is reported that the late mentioned Brothers Inguar and Habbe invaded England in an Hostile manner

Sect. 9.

But comes to a miserable end.

Egbert recalled, and made King.

Overthrows the Britains in Cornwall and Wales.

Subdues the Mercians.

Conquers the East Angles.

The Northumbrians submit to him.

He reduces all Britains to obedience.

"thought a Monastery the place fittest for her, there to bewail her heinous sins; in which having assumed the religious habit, she hypocritically spent a few years; for as she lived wickedly in her own Country, so rather more wretchedly did she behave her self there, under the cover of a Veil. Being on a time, as was expected, and thought busy at her devotions, she was busy at another kind of work with a mean fellow of her own Nation, which coming to light, Charles caused her to be thrust out of the Monastery, though extremely against her mind and liking. The remainder of her days she spent in want, misery and disgrace, with one pitifull Servant, begging her bread from House to House, Town to Town, and City to City, till at last she miserably died at Pavia.

38. But Byrhtic being dead, after he had Reigned sixteen years, all mens eyes were fixed upon Egbert the Exile, and by many Messengers, having recalled him, they admitted him unanimously for their King, in the third year of the Reign of the Empress Irene, much about the same time that Charles the Great received the Title of Emperor in the West, in the fourth of Cuthred King of Kent, and the fourth of Conulf King of the Mercians, A. D. DCCC. He so well at the first understood his Interest, as to settle and establish his Kingdom at home in the love and affection of his Subjects. It then being time to look about him, the first trial of his Martial Conduct was against the Britains, of whom, first he subdued them that inhabited Cornwall, and then made those Tributaries, as Malmesbury expresth it, who live North of them, being separated from the other by an Arme of the Sea, meaning those who live beyond the River Severn, and in those Parts we now call Wales. His success was such, as thereby his Neighbours were very much startled, as jealous whether his Power would grow. Beornulf King of the Mercians, was the first that really concerned himself, and thinking it a matter of glory by his courage and resolution, to remove the fears of others, was resolved to quarrel with him, and proceeding to a War, they met and fought at a place called Ellandune, of which we have already spoken. Egbert elevated by this Victory, and founding hopes upon the same grounds, his Neighbours had done their fears, while the fame of his late success was yet fresh, sent Ethelwolf his Son, Ealstan his Bishop (of Sherburn) and Wulfheard his General with a great Army into Kent, to conquer that Province, which he thought was easy to be done at this time, when the Inhabitants thereof were by laziness rendered unfit for War, and his very Name would strike a Terror into them. They that were sent, strenuously executed his commands, and passing over all the Country, found their work more easy than they could imagine; for having driven out Balred the King beyond the Thames, they subdued Kent, Surry, the Southern and the Eastern Saxons. And the same year the King and People of East England, for fear of the Mercians, submitted themselves to his Vassallage and Protection. As for the times of these Victories, Malmesbury placeth that against Bernulf at the sixth year of his Reign, though the Annals set it at a far greater distance, and place those other Conquests with the submission of East England, in one and the same year, which his present Copy speaks of, as having happened in the twenty fourth of his Reign. Neither were these all his exploits of this year, as some interpret the Annals. For he fought against the Devonshire Welsh, they say, at a place called Gafulford, now Camelford; there where Leland will have famous Arthur to have been slain, not far from Tindagium or Tindagel, his native place upon the Sea shore. Indeed Marianus writes, that in this place the Britains and Saxons fought a bloody Battle, in the year of our Lord, DCCCXX. But the Annals speak only of a fight of Welsh, and those whom they call Dena at Gafulford, not speaking of Egbert being concerned in the Battle.

39. The East Angles having submitted themselves to Egbert, never left off till they had slain Bernulf and Ludecan the Mercian Kings, who never could rest from troubling their Neighbours. Their Successor Witlaf he first drove from his Kingdom, then afterwards was received and suffered to Reign as a tributary Vassal. The same year that Egbert subdued the Kingdom of the Mercians, the Moon was Eclipsed on Christmas day, at night, and he led an Army into Deira against the Northumbrians, who submitted themselves with such humility, that they parted lovingly without a stroke; for fearing his displeasure of a long time conceived against them, they gave up hostages or some other security for their quiet and obedient deportment. Having now reduced all Britain to obedience, all the rest of his Life, with Malmesbury, for nine years together he lived in tranquillity, save only that toward the latter end of his Reign, a Company of Danish Pirates landing in his Country, grievously disturbed the Peace of his Dominions. Such is the the incertainty incident to humane Affairs; that he who first ruled over all the English should have little cause to rejoice in the obedience of those of his own blood, being disturbed by a Foreign Enemy, whose violence extended not only to himself but his Successors, without intermission. When he led his English Forces against them, as if Fortune was tyed to certain Rules and Methods, the did not court him in the usual manner, but seemed to be taken with new Faces. For when he little doubted of the Victory which had inclined to him the greater part of the day, he lost the Garland when the Sun went down, though by the darkness of the night, he covered the shame of being beaten. In the following Battle with an inconsiderable number he put to flight a great multitude. At last, having Reigned thirty seven years, and seven months, he died and was buried at Winchester, leaving to his Son great opportunities whence to raise him Glory, and predicting his happiness, in case what he had obtained by industry, he lost not by laziness, too familiar to that Nation.

40. But to be more particular than the Monk, the Annals signify that the Heathen men, so they call the Danes, waited Seapige, and the following year that Egbert fought against thirty five Ships of Pirates, at a place called Carrum, where was made a great slaughter of men. That the Danes remained Masters of the Field: that Ethelrith and Wigen, two Bishops, were slain, and moreover died two great Officers (Ealdormen) Dudda and Ofmod. The defeat was received near Carr, a River in Dorsetshire, whereon standeth a Town called Carmouth, just as it dischargeth it self into the Sea, lucky to the Danes, who here not only had the Letter of Egbert in a Sea fight, but eight years after King Ethelwolf his Son. And this was the only check we read of that ever Egbert received in his fortune, for the Annals tell us, that the very next year a great Navy of Danes arrived at West Wales or Cornwall, and joining with the Inhabitants marched against Egbert; notice whereof was speedily brought to him, and as speedily as he could he met them with an Army at Hengstedune, where he gave them Battle, and defeated as well the one as the other. The Danish Annals themselves of these Invasions make mention, but whether out of their own Records or ours may be justly doubted, for as to those times they are much known in the dark; little have they but fabulous or uncertain, which is the reason we cannot give either theirs or the History of their neighbouring Northern Nations part or share in this present work. As for Egbert, as if he had now done enough to prevent any more misfortunes which might blur the lustre of his former Achievements, he died the following year; a great man, whose fortune so concurred with his Abilities, that he arrived at the Monarchy of the English Nation. For so now we must call it by his order and appointment, who having conquered already four of the other six Kingdoms, and swallowed up the other two also in hope, to the end that they which were subdued and reduced to the Rule of one Prince, might be conjoined likewise in one Name, commanded by an Edict or Proclamation, that the whole Heptarchy should be called Englelons, or England, whereupon it got in Latin the Name of Anglia, taking its Denomination from the Angles, (though he himself was King of the West Saxons, and Conquerors are wont to impose their own Names) as being of the three Nations most in number, and of greatest power. For they possessed the Kingdoms of Northumberland and Mercia, very great and large Countries, together with East England: Whereas the Posterity of the Jutes held only Kent, or with it the Isle of Wight: The Saxons, Eastsex, Southsex and Westsex, a small parcel indeed if compared with the spacious Territories of the Angles.

41. Such was the importance of this Consideration, that even long before this they were generally and throughout called English, and in their own Language Englelond, Englelune, Englelwyn, and Englelmon: Albeit every Kingdom had a particular Name of its own. This appears sufficiently out of other Authors, but especially Bede who intitled his History The Ecclesiastical History of the English Nation, a Name sufficiently known to the Learned and best Intelligent Persons, although King Alfred translating the said History for the understanding of the meaner and general sort added to it the word (Saxon). Nay, during the Heptarchy, these Princes that bore sway over the rest were stiled Genis Anglorum or Kings of the English Nation. Now lay the Name of Britain forgotten and quite out of use among the Inhabitants of the Island, remaining only in Books, and not taken up in common Speech; inasmuch, that any other word would be down rather than it. Boniface the Bishop of Mentz defended of this Nation, called this his Country by the Name of Saxony beyond the Sea. Yet did Eadred a about the Year of our Lord DCCCCLXVIII use in some Charters and Patents the

That of Britains being laid aside.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 10. Name and Title of King of Great Britain; and Edgar about the Year DCCCCLXX assumed this Title, The Monarch of all Albion. But not only the Name of Britain, but of Saxons also was laid asleep; as to the English themselves who thenceforth called themselves no more by it. We say as to themselves: It was in their power to call themselves English, but not to procure all their Neighbours to do the like. For as we have formerly hinted the Britains of Wales and Cornwall, knowing them first by that of Saxons, and having such smarting causes never to forget their first coming into the Island, it so stuck with them, that they never took any notice of the change, neither at this very day in their Language do it. They term us not Englishmen but Saifons, and our Language Saifonaeg. And not only they but the Scots, which still retain the true ancient Scotch or Irish Tongue, and the Irish themselves write us Saxonach in their Orthography, but pronounce us Safonagh. For as well the Irish Language as the Welsh even to this very day is utterly unacquainted with the Names of England and of Englishmen.

SECT. X.

The Monarchy of the English Saxons in Britain, from the Death of Egbert, to the Monarchy of the Danes in Britain.

The Space of One Hundred and Eighty Years.

Ethelwulf the King.

Assists the Mercians against the Britains.

Refrains the fury of the Danes by advice of his two Counsellours.

1. TO Egbert succeeded his Son Ethelwulf (otherwise called Adelwulf, Arbe-wulf, Athulf, Edulf and Edwulf;) in the eighth year of Theophilus Emperour of the East; the twenty fourth of Ludovicus Pius Emperour of the West, the twelfth of Witlaf or Wiglaf King of the Mercians, the fifteenth Indiction, A. D. DCCCXXXVII. Malmesbury writes, that he Reigned twenty years and five Months, a Man of a mild Disposition, who chose rather to live quietly than to rule over many Provinces; for contenting himself with the West Saxon Kingdom the Inheritance of his Ancestours, the other Appendices (as he calls them) which his Father had subdued, he bestowed upon his Son Ethelstan, who died, when and how is utterly uncertain. Burthred King of the Mercians he assisted with his Forces against the Britains, and not a little graced him by the Marriage of his Daughter. The Danish Pirates who stragled through the whole Island, and by their sudden Inroads infested all the Sea Coasts, he not once put to flight himself, or by his Captains; although, according to the chance of War, he received very frequent and heavy losses from them, the City of London and all Kent in a manner being laid waste by them. The greatest help against them was the Activity of his Counsellours, who took such order, that the Enemy never acted any Hostility, but was one way or other chastized for it. For he had two most excellent Prelates in his time: Swithin of Winchester and Alstan of Shireburn, who knowing the King to be dull and heavy, by their often Admonitions and Instructions, still excited him to the discharge of his Royal Duty. Swithin despising Temporal things instructed his Sovereign in Matters Celestial. Alstan concluding that Civil Affairs were not to be neglected, animated him against the Danes, both furnishing the Treasury with Money and taking care for the raising of Armies. Such as read the Annals shall find many things both sedulously began and happily brought to conclusion by him. By these two Ethelwulf being supported, took good care for Foreign matters, and neglected not his Domestick business. After his Triumphs over his Enemies he turned himself to the service of God, to whose Servants he granted the Tenth of all the Hides within his Kingdom, free from all Duties

Goes to Rome paying Peter pence.

On his return marries.

Upon which his Son and others conspire to depose him.

Upon what account.

Afterwards he makes his Will.

And dies.

Duties and Molestations. But this is but a small matter faith the Monk. Having taken order for his matters at home he went to Rome, where to Saint Peter he offered that Tribute which England pays at this very day, in the presence of Pope Leo the Fourth, who had honourably received Elfred his Son formerly sent to him, and had anointed him King. Having there made a stay of a whole year he repaired the School of the English, which as was reported, being first founded by Offa King of the Mercians, was burned the year after. Thence returning home thorough France, he there Married Judith the Daughter of Charles, King of that Nation, surnamed the Bald.

2. At his return he found, what he never suspected, that he had incurred the displeasure of some about him. For Ethelbald his own Son, Alstan the Bishop of Shireburn, and Emulf Earl or Count of Somersetshire conspired together to depose him; yet upon better advice it was agreed that the Kingdom should be divided betwixt Father and Son. However the Partition was very unequal, his Adversaries prevailed that the Western part of the Countrey, being far the better, should be allotted to his Son, and the Eastern left to him, who yet shewed such incredible goodness, that out of hatred to strife and contention, he patiently yielded to his Son, and gently repressed the People, which concerned for his Honour and Dignity, were already assembled to assist them. All this stir was raised about his Wife being a stranger, yet entertained he her with great respect, and placed her on his Throne, contrary to the custom of the West Saxons: For * out of hatred to the wicked Practices of Eadburgh Daughter to Offa King of the Mercians and Wife to Byrtric, and they neither suffered the Wives of their Kings to sit by their Husbands, nor so much as to have the honour of being called Queens. Such was the Decree they made to prevent such mischief for the time to come, but he out of his kindness to Judith now repealed it. A few Months before his Death he made his Testament, whereby after the Division of his Kingdom betwixt his two Sons Ethelbald and Ethelbirth, he assigned a Portion to his Daughter, and for ever in every tenth Hide of his Inheritance, he commanded that a Poor man should be fed and clad; as also every year three hundred Marks of Gold to be sent to Rome, whereof one hundred to be conferred on St. Peter, another upon St. Paul to find them with Lights, and an hundred as a Prefect given to the Bishop. He lived two years after his return from Rome, and then dying was buried in the Bishop's Church at Winchester.

terra perhibente Afferius. † Quis autem sibi vult illud Afferii defuncto autem Ethelwulfo Rege; sepulcrum apud Stemurgan?

3. So much Malmesbury from Afferius concerning Ethelwulf, his History being the best and most substantial of all those of Monks, which therefore we take as text whereon to comment in making out the Affairs of these obscure times; for obscure enough they are, though our baren Writers are so ridiculous as to excuse the length of their short Stories, and tell us they are so * short in their Relations, out of study to avoid Prolixity and Tedioufness, whereas their Accounts they give us are so scant, that little profit can be made of them, and they attribute their brevity to their own contrivance, which indeed is to be ascribed to their want of Intelligence. As for what he writes concerning his giving to Ethelstan all that his Father had conquered, his words are (a) such, as Ethelstan may be conceived, not the Son of Egbert, but of Ethelwulf, and some makes him to have been the Son of one, and some of the other. A late (b) Writer tells us, that the Saxon Annalist, the Authority of whom is ancient, says expressly, that Egbert himself gave to Ethelstan his Son the Kingdom of Kent, Essex, Surrey and Suffex; but the Annals say no such thing, they (c) Translatour indeed has foisted in the word Egbertus, but the text (d) it self which possibly he consulted not, hath no such word in that sentence, but only mentions Ethelwulf therein. Be it Brother or his Son it seems he parted with so great a share of his Dominions to Ethelstan him, which for some years he held, though how long, as Malmesbury observes, is utterly uncertain. The unwelcome disposition of Ethelwulf, might well give Indis, courage to the Danes, who the year following the death of Egbert, came again to * quo fine deferretur in ceterum.

(b) Milton Hist. of England. (c) A. DCCCXXXVI. Hinc Ethelwulfus Egberti filius occidentalem Saxonum Regnum capessit: filio autem suo Ethelstano (Elliensis Cantuariarum) Saxonum Orientalem. & Guthfridum Regem West-Saxonum in Essex, Surrey, Suffex et Essex dedit. (d) 7 peng Ethelwulf Egbert ythung to pær Seaxna rice. 7 he fælde h7 yuna Ethelwulf Cantjana rice 7 ca7 Seaxna 7 Sýppnæa 7 Sýp Seaxna.

Sect. 10. upon the Coasts with three and thirty ships. The Annals (e) say that Wulfheard the Ealdorman, fought with them at Hamtune, that great slaughter was there made, and that he obtained the Victory; but died the same year of Age, it's very probable as one observes, seeming to have been one of Egbert's old Commanders, who was sent with Ethelwulf to subdue Kent. This repulse did not discourage them, but that either pressed on by those that sent them, or allured with plunder and booty, the same year they landed in another place, and gave Battle at Port (or Portsmouth) to (f) Ethelhelm another of the King's Captains with the Dorsetshire Men. For a good while (so the Annals word it) he had the better of them. But at length the Danes became Masters of the Field, and Ethelhelm (whom in this place the Annals term both Dux and Ealdorman) they put to flight or rather slew him in the place.

4. Animated by this Success, in Prosecution thereof they gave Battle the following year to **Herebryht* (or Herbert) another of his Officers whom with many others they slew at a place called Merfwar, whence driving as it were all before them, they suddenly invaded Lindsey (that part of Lincolnshire, which lies North from the City) where wafting all with barbarous Hostility, they pierced into East England, and thence into Kent, putting many to the Sword in all these places. Here was no opposition made against them, or so ineffectual that they proceeded, and not only did great Mischief at Canterbury and Rocheſter, but came to London, and here did their pleasure the next year after. Ethelwulf seemed at his Wits end, as great Violence being by their attempts offered to his peaceable mind, as to the Persons of his Subjects; but by those about him (the Bishop of Wincheſter especially, as Malmesbury affirms) he was excited to make resistance, and to provide a Navy, his best defence; for had the English in those ignorant times underſtood their true Interest as well as afterward Egbert did his, they had not endured those Miseries they suffered from those barbarous Roovers, no way there being to secure the Land but by being Masters at Sea, the best Bulwarks against those hostile Invasions, being stout and well manned ships. But such was their small practice, and thereupon little skill in Maritime Affairs, that they were inferior to the Pirates, continually exercised in Navigation. For the year that followed the Slaughter at London, Ethelwulf fighting against thirty and five of their ships at the River Carr, had the same fortune his Father had had before in the same place, the Danes remaining Masters of the Place of Fight. Yet that the English might not be utterly discouraged, Fortune seemed a little to own them in the next attempt they made the following year. For one Eanulf with the Somerſetſhire Men, Ealstan a Bishop (Alſtan of Wincheſter, doubtless the same that † Malmesbury speaks of) and Oſerick another Officer with those of Dorſetſhire, at the Mouth of the River Pedridan, engaged with an Army of the Danes, made great slaughter of them, and got the Victory.

5. If a judgment be to be made of the state of these Affairs from these small hints we have from the Annals (the foundation of all the later Histories of the Monks) we are to conclude that the Defeat they received at this place was of great consequence. For, for five years after, or more, we hear nothing of them, nor any thing else of Ethelwulf and his Officers, who seemed so amused with these Daniſh Wars, that they were attentive to nothing else, durst meddle with no other business left they should be unprepared for a fresh assault. And their care was not without its due effect. For when they had reassumed their former confidence, and landed again, one Ceorl * an Ealdorman, assisted with the Shire of Devon, Aſſerius relates, and the Annals from him, fought with them at a place called Wicganbeorche, where he killed very many of them and remained Victor. Neither did they fare better in other places. The same year King Ethelſtan, together with Ealchere a Captain, defeated a great number of them at Sandwich, and taking nine of their Ships, forced the rest to shift for themselves: and the Pagans were constrained thereabout to Winter, which they did, as Aſſerius writes (and that the first time) in the Isle of Shepey. Yet for all this being resolute as far as even to deſperation, with fifty Ships did they this same year enter the Thames Mouth, whence they ranged as far as Canterbury and London. Fabius Ethelward writes, that they destroyed both. Aſſerius, though he encreases the number of their ships to thirty, and says they were twice defeated by his Captains. Who being encouraged invaded Lindsey. Waſte East England with Kent. And London. Masters him at Sea. In the next engagement Ethelwulf's Captain obtained a Victory. The Danes were twice more beaten. Yet they enter the Thames and sack London.

Anno domini incanpantur 851. nactantur autem Alſtred: pegy 3 Ceopl Dominice Comer conpaganor Nojmanior rube Danor pugnant in loco qui dicitur Vuicganbeorg 7 Chyrtani victoriam habuerunt 7 et ipſo eodem anno pimum hyemauerunt pagani in inſula que vocatur Secepes 7 quod interpretatur inſula ouium 7 que ricta ert in tameri plumine inter Eart reaxum 7 Cancauapnor. ped ad Cancaum pporion ert quamad Eart reaxum in qua monasterium opacum conpugnatum ert. Alſtred p. 2. Edit. Farveriana qua nos uimur, Saxonica charactribus quibus Alſerius ipſe librum ſcripſit.

three hundred and fifty, yet speaks only of their pillaging of London. The Annals add, that they put to flight Beortulf the King of the Mercians, who made head against them with an Army, then passing Southward over the Thames into Surry, they encountered Ethelwulf with Ethelbald his Son at a place called Aclea, but here they received a great overthrow, greater than ever before or after that Aſſerius heard of.

6. The success of this year brought much reputation to Ethelwulf, whom now being at leisure, two years after, Burhred King of the Mercians and those of his Council besought to give them assistance against the Inhabitants of North Wales, which he readily granted. Through the Territories of the Mercians he marched against the Britains, and forced them all to obedience, as had been desired. This same year did King Ethelwulf, send Alfred his Son to Rome, where Leo the Bishop kindly entertained him, consecrated him King, and adopted him for his Episcopical Son. In the mean time Ealchere (or Ealcher) with the Kentish Men, and Huda with those of Surry, were employed against another Army of the Pagans, which was landed in the Isle of Thanet. At first they had the better of them, driving them from their Post; but afterward so many were slain, and so many drowned on both sides, that the Victory remained doubtful. Yet gave it no matter of mourning to the Court of Ethelwulf, which now was busied in Affairs of Love, the effect of which was, that the King sent away his Daughter after Eaſer was over, to be married to Burhred King of the Mercians, and the Marriage was solemnized in the Royal village called Cippanhamme. However the following year the Danes wintered in the Isle of Shepey, the Annals say now the first time. Whence it is to be made himself more acceptable to Almighty God, whose help he now found was highly necessary for suppression of these perpetual Annoyances, or otherwise religiously moved, he nominated a Book of the tenth part of all his Lands, and his whole Kingdom which he dedicated to his service. Now as if he was fitted for undertaking a Pilgrimage to Rome, he went thither taking with him his young Son Alfred again, and there having lived twelve Months, married and died as the Monk of Malmesbury hath related, after two years.

7. Of the difference betwixt his Eldest Son and him, after his Return the Annals have nothing, but Aſſerius confirms the report, assigning the pretended Cause, being that he had taken with him to Rome his young Son Alfred, there to be inaugurated King, and had brought home with him an Outlandish Wife. Generally he is said to have been averse to matters of War, a Lover of Peace and Quiet which were more apt to believe, having it told us, and elsewhere that in his young years he was Bishop of Wincheſter, and for want of other Heirs was constrained to take upon him the Kingdom. If this be true, then must Ethelſtan formerly mentioned have been his Son, not his Brother or the Son of Egbert, who having him must have had an Inheritance of his Dominions, and no necessity could then have lain upon Ethelwulf of being King. To conclude with Ethelwulf, the Annals give us his Pedigree, which reacheth no higher than to Adam himself. The Monk of Malmesbury is so bold, as to mention it together with that we find in St. Luke, and thinks it not superfluous to put it into his History, although he is afraid, that the noise of barbarous Names may violate the ears of such as are not accustomed to them. I disapprove of his mentioning it with the other in the same Page, in the same Book, nay, the same day or year. I am half afraid of the same thing, and justly of more, that the Reader will give no credit to it; but to be guilty of this once, and no more, as a piece of curiosity I shall leave it to the consideration of our Students in Heraldry, referring them, if they desire more, to other Stems of these Saxon Princes particularly, that of Alfred, which he may find in Aſſerius. Ethelwulf then was the Son of Egbert, Egbert of Ealkmund, Ealkmund of Eaſa, Eaſa of Eoppa, Eoppa of Inga, the Brother of Ina, King of the West Saxons. They were the Sons of Conred, Conred of Coowald, Coowald of Cutha, Cutha of Cuthwin, Cuthwin of Ceanlin, Ceanlin of Cenric, Cenric of Cerdic, Cerdic of Eleſa, Eleſa of Ella, Ella of Gewis, Gewis of Wig, Wig of Freawine, Freawine of Frithgar, Frithgar of Brond, Brond of Baldæg, Baldæg of Woden, Woden of Frithwald, Frithwald of Freawine, Freawine of Freawulf, Freawulf of Fiun, Fiun of Gudwulf, Gudwulf of Geat, Geat of Tetwa, Tetwa of Bæaw, Bæaw of Sceldewa, Sceldewa of Here-mod, Here-mod of Itermor, Itermor of Hrawrain, who was born you must know in Noah's Ark. Now he is of small Learning that knows not the Ancestors of Noah, viz. Lamech, Mathusalem, Enoch, Jared, Mabalaleel, Cainan, Enos, Serb and Adam. The Monk of Malmesbury's Pedigree differs much in Names from this.

Whence into Surry, where Ethelwulf overthrew them. He reduces the Britains in Northwales, to obedience. Beats back the Danes from landing in the Isle of Thanet. The farther reason of the conspiracy against Ethelwulf. Abbreviations Chronorum Antiquorum Radulphi de Diceto Joh. Brompton Abbatii Jernaleu.

Amal. ſeu Chronolog. Saxonica ad An. DCCCLVII.

His Genealogy.

SECT. 10. this. But the Heraldry of the Annals is the Ancients. Let such as desire various Readings upon this Learned Subject, compare this Genealogy with that of his and others: some perhaps may have to little to do. And Reader, if thou hast heard of a wonderful Atchievement, which some who thought themselves very Learned, they say, performed of deriving King James his Pedigree from Adam, behold here the greatest part done, it's but carrying on this Pedigree to the Sister of Edgar, Ethelred married to the King of Scots, and her Daughter to our Henry the Second.

8. Ethelwulf being dead, his two Sons Ethelbald and Ethelbert divided his Kingdom betwixt them. Ethelbald reigned over the West Saxons. Ethelbert obtained Kent, Essex, Surrey and Suffex. Ethelbald began his Reign in the sixteenth year of Michael the third Emperour of Constantinople, the second of Ludovicus, the second Emperour of the West; in the days of Charles the Bald King of the Franks, the sixth of Burbred King of the Mercians, A.D. DCCCLVII. He was, as Malmesbury from Asserius sets him out, heavy and sluggish, one that defiled his Father's Bed, Marrying after his Death his Wife Judith. But he dying after five years, the whole Kingdom fell to the other Brother. The Annals speak nothing at all of him from his coming to the Crown till his carrying to his Grave, which they say, as Malmesbury, was at Sherburn. They add that Ethelbert (or Ethelbryht as they call him) obtained the whole Kingdom of his Brother (his Father rather) and governed it in great peace and concord. During his Reign a great Fleet of the Danes arrived at Hampton (saith Malmesbury) and sacked the City of Winchester, which the Annals do confirm, as to the latter place not mentioning where they landed. But they were speedily encountered by * Osric the Ealdorman with Hampshire (now Hamshire) and Ethelwulf the Ealdorman, with Bearwucshire (or Berkshire) who put them to flight and became Masters of the Field. The Monk to this relation adds, that being beaten away by the King's Captains, after much loss received they went over the Sea, and taking a great compass, chose the Isle of Thanet to Winter in. This he relates as done all in one year, whereas from the Annals it appears, that their coming to Thanet was not till six years after. The Kentish men found themselves concerned to purchase Peace with them by a sum of Money; but the Pirates under pretence of receiving this Money, and confirming the League, made an Excursion into the Countrey, and waited all that part of Kent which lies toward the East. Malmesbury again adds, that the Inhabitants united themselves and drove away these perfidious Wretches. About the same time died Ethelbert after he had Reigned but five years, and his Body was buried with his Brothers at Sherburn.

Ethelbald dies and is buried at Sherburn.

The Danes sack Winchester but are afterwards put to flight.

Ethelbert dies.

Is succeeded by Ethelred.

Who fought several pitched Battles with the Danes.

9. After the death of Ethelbert succeeded Ethelred his Brother, another Son of Ethelwulf, in the first year of Basilus Macedo Emperour of Constantinople, the twelfth of Ludovicus the second Emperour of the West, the sixteenth of Burbred (titular) King of the Mercians, A.D. DCCCLXVII. † Malmesbury having told us, that he obtained his Father's Kingdom, the same number of years which his two Brothers, falls into a bemoaning of the fate of all the three, their miserable and deplorable fate, as he terms it, that they should all die an immature death, yet indeed being Royally defended, and the Nation being involved in such dreadful Calamities, they might well prefer an honourable death before a miserable Reign. They so courageously and valiantly demeaned themselves in defence of their Countrey, that no default is to be charged upon them, if prosperously did not succeed what they resolutely had intended. This King nine times in one year fought with the Enemy in the Field, (as the chance of War is, with various success, yet usually with advantage) besides many sudden Excursions whereby, as he was excellently skilled in Strategems, he often repressed the Insolency of these Rovers. On the side of the Danes were slain nine Earls or Captains, one King, and multitudes of People without number. But above all memorable is the Battle he fought at Eschendune. The Army of the Danes being drawn up in that place, one part of it was led by two Kings, the rest by other skillful Leaders. The King with his Brother Alfred comes upon them: The King must engage with the Kings: Alfred is set upon the Captains. So courageous and resolute were both the Parties, that this day sufficed not to determine the Quarrel, the Controversie must be adjourned to that which followed. Scarce did the light appear when Alfred was up and ready. His Brother staid in his Tent busie at his Devotions, and though a Message was brought him that the Pagans with great rage came on, he refused to stir until they were ended. This Religious Confidence of the King was very seasonable for the restraining of the heat of his Brother's youth, who was already engaged. For the Battle of the

An. dccc. lxxvii. den. Ethelbald's cýn- ing forþe. 7 hyr ic lð æt Scapaburgan. 7 þens Ethelbryht to callum 7am þuc hyrþoðu, &c. 7 þr þone here ge- fuhcon Of- ric ealðop- man mo- scýne 7 fælpelp ealðopman mcsæppuc ryser 7 þone here ge- fymson, &c. 7 De gēstū Re- am glomun lib. 2. c. 3.

the English went to the worst; the Infidels had the Advantage of the Ground, Sect. 10. and made such use thereof, that the Christians began to think of flight. Now comes he unexpectedly into the Battle, beats back the Enemy, encourages his Friends and demeans himself with that Valour and Conduct that by God's assistance the Danes were discouraged, betook themselves to their Heels and ran away. There fell their King Oleg, five Earls, besides an innumerable company of the vulgar sort.

The Mercians and Northumbrians endeavour to revolt.

The East Angles, Mercians, and Northumberland, waited by the Robbers.

10. Here our Writer will have us to remark that the Kings of the Mercians and the Northumbrians taking advantage at these Danish Wars wherewith Ethelred was incumbered, withdrew themselves from the yoke of the West Saxons as much as they could, and had almost recovered their former Independency, each Province therefore envying the prosperity of the other, the several Kings chose rather to harbour the Enemy in their own Bosoms than give any relief to their distressed Countrey-men; and by this means studying rather a recovering than a preventing course, by their laziness they let their Countrey run to ruin. The Danes grew upon them without any opposition, the English were discouraged and terrified, and every Victory by means of the abundance of Captives became instrumental to procure another. The Territories of the Eastern English with their Cities and Villages were possessed by these Robbers, and their King St. Edmund being killed by them in the eight hundred and seventieth year from the Incarnation, on the nineteenth of November by a short Temporal death purchased an Eternal Crown. The Mercians being overrun more than once, lessened their Miseries by Submission, and giving up Hostages. And those of Northumberland having been sometime tossed with Civil Dissentions, when the Enemy was at their heels fairly composed all their Differences. Osbert their King whom they had expelled, they now received again, and having made great preparations, they goe and meet the Enemy. But they are easily beaten, and shut themselves up within the Walls of Tork, which being quickly set on fire by the Conquerors, and the flame increasing, burns the Buildings, and therein they perish and cover their native Soil with their own Bones. Thenceforth Northumberland falling by right of War to the share of the Barbarians, for a long time groaned under their Dominion, and sighed at the thought of its former liberty. As for King Ethelred though unbroken with all his many labours he died at last, and was buried at Winburn.

Hingvar and Ubba Arrive.

11. This short but good account we have from Malmesbury, of the state and condition of these times, how the English Affairs stood both in reference to the Enemy, and to one another. What he speaks of in general, we shall illustrate as much as we can by particular instances, as to time and place, the best course we can take in these obscure matters. In the very first year of his Reign a vast Army of Danes invaded the Land, Commanded by Hingvar, and Ubba, two great Souldiers but very cruel: Hingvar was very crafty and subtle, Ubba was a Man of extraordinary Courage. They landed in East England, where winning, they made truce with the Inhabitants out of design to obtain from them a sufficient number of Horses whereon to mount their Men. Being now become a strong Body of Horse; the following year they passed over Humber as far as Tork, where the Civil dissentions of the People afforded them a notable advantage whereon to work. As Malmesbury observes they had driven into banishment Osbert their King, and set up a Tyrant, one Ala in his room; but now though it was late, and the year declined, they recalled him, and so composed their matters that they feared not to meet, and encounter this puissant Army at Tork, into which City part of the Pagans had already entred: They brake into the Town, but were received so warmly by the Danes, that within as well as without, great slaughter of them was made, and the quarrel was decided betwixt their two Kings, both of them being slain in this Action, together with a great multitude of the People. The Remnant got as good terms from the Enemy as they could; but they were overrun, and the Countrey harraled as far as the River Tine. Egbert one of the English Race, was appointed King over them in room of Osbert. And now should come in the story of Bricena, whose Wife Osbert is said to have ravished, and who called in the Danes to revenge the injury upon the King. The thing if true was very remarkable, but we know not where Brompton had it; his Authority is not great, his Antiquity small.

The invasion of Mercia.

12. But the Danes having wrought their will in the Parts beyond the River Humber, the next year invaded Mercia, and bent their course toward * Shottengam (then, and long after so called from the Caves in the Rocks) at present Nottingham. There they took up their Winter Quarters, which so alarmed Bar-

Huntingd. lib. 5. Ann. ad An. 866. pincer reit namon on Carc Engl. 7 dæg geþrodruc pudon. 7 þilum þur namon. Ann. 867. Den poppe. hepe of Carc Engl. orep han- bpe mýjan to Scop-ic on Non- þumbpe, &c.

* De Notting- gamis sic Af- ferunt.

Sect. 10.

But at Nottingham are besieged by Ethelred, who makes peace with them.

Thence they go into Lincolnshire.

red King of the Country and his Noblemen, that they made an humble address to Ethelred, desiring that he with his Brother Alfred would undertake their Patronage and Defence. This they readily did, and with a considerable power Men marched to Nottingham, where they offered Battle to the Danes. Hingur was so crafty, as knowing himself unable to grapple with them, he would not stir a foot out of the Castle, so that no considerable fight happened, and at length with good words he, faith Huntingdon, obtained a truce of the English, who were not able to break the Wall. Though the Annals seem rather to say that the Mercians obtained it of him, yet Ingulfus writes expressly, that Burfred constrained the Danes to quit Nottingham, where at the Siege he renewed the Charter of Privileges to his Monastery of Croyland, which bears date from the Siege in the year 868. on the five and twentieth of July, from the subscriptions to which it appears that both Ethelred, his Brother Alfred, and also Edmund King of East England, was at the Siege. But a peace or truce was made, and the Danes returned back to York with great booty, where they stayed a year, and there cruelly demeaned themselves. When Winter was over they passed over Humber into Lindsey, and landing at Humberham, as Ingulfus farther tells us, miserably wasted all the Country; particularly that most famous and ancient Monastery of Bardsey they destroyed, killing without mercy all the Monks in the Church. Having made their stay in those Quarters all the Summer, and with Fire and Sword consumed all things, about the Feast of St. Michael, faith he, they enter Kesteven; another part of Lincolnshire, at this time, as well as the other, distinguished by name) where they waste, kill and burn every thing they light on. At length, in the year of our Lord, eight hundred and seventy, in the month of September. Algar the younger (so called in respect of the late Earl Algar his Father) that most valiant Earl, got together all the youth of Homland (now Holland; mark, Reader, the antiquity of these three Divisions of the County and their names, they continuing at this very day the same) and two Souldiers Senefcals (as he calls them) took the names of Wiberton and Lefrinken together with a Company belonging to the Monastery of Croyland, consisting of two hundred most stout Warriours, being for the most part fugitives: Headed by Fryar Toly, a Monk converted of the laid Monastery, who before his conversion had been a Souldier of great Name throughout all Mercia, for warlike enterprizes; Besides these they got from Deeping, Langtoft and Bafton, about three hundred stout Men fit for War; Morcard the Lord of Brunne (or rather Bourne) with his Family which was both valiant and numerous, and the Vice Lord (as he calls him, meaning the Governour) of Lincoln, by name Ofgor, an old Souldier and most hardy, joynd with them with the Lincoln Squadron, consisting of five hundred Men.

13. Being all drawn together in Kesteven, upon the Feast of Maurice the Martyr, they gave Battle to the Pagans, and by God's great mercy having killed three of their Kings, with a great multitude of the ordinary sort, they beat the Barbarians, as far as the gate of their Camp, where making most stout resistance, the Invincible Earl withdrew his Forces. That very night came into the Camp of the Pagans, all the rest of their Kings, from their several excursions, having divided the Country amongst them for the plunder, viz. Gogrom (or Godrom) Bales, Osketil, Halden, and Hamond, with as many Earls, viz. Frena, (or Erena) Unguar, Ulba and both the Sidroks, the Elder and Younger, with their Armies, and too much Booty, besides a multitude of Women and Children. Their coming being known, most of the Christians sorely terrified, slipped away by night, so that with the laid Earl Algar and his Captains of eight hundred (of which his Party consisted) scarcely two hundred Persons remained; with whom, as few as they were, by break of day, having heard Divine Service, and taken their Sacred Vinctum, being all of them most ready to dye for the faith of Christ, and the defence of their Country, they went into the Field against the Barbarians. The most Valiant Earl seeing his own Forces so much diminished, ordered Fryar Toly, with five hundred Men, who had gallantly demean'd themselves to stand on the right hand, assigning him for assistant Morcard of Brunne, with all his Followers. Ofgor with his five hundred he placed on the left side, and with him joynd Harding de Rebase, with all the Stanford Men, who were young and but too Valiant. He himself with his Senefcals, stood in the midst to succour each quarter as need should require. The Danes being much enraged for the slaughter made of their Men, early in the morning buried their three Kings in a Village formerly called Eodem anno pascitur pagonum exspectu nos in nymbror belinguer in Cestria in venio; pinoconga ham asen 7 quos pinnance tiggso con banc inter ppecatu 7 latine au tem Spelunc capum bo mu 7 vide etiam Ingulfus, ad Ann. 868. i Conque Paganum tunc muna apor muna belum bape negapent 7 Chpudha n pange ne mupum non ruppebary pace incept Mep cior et pafanor pac ca suo illi ppaepor cum pur colompebur bonum pome neppu runc item, Ingulphi Historia.

But renewing the fight burn and destroy all before them.

called Laundon, but afterward Trekingham from their Sepulture, and now four Kings prepared themselves to fight together with eight Earls; for two Kings and four Earls were appointed to look to their Camp and Captives. The Christians being so few drew together in form of a Wedge, against the Archers, setting as it were a Pallado of their Bucklers, and against the violence of the Horse a wood of Lances, and in that posture, instructed by their Leaders, continued all the Day till Night now approached: The Enemy perceiving that neither his Bowmen nor his Horse could do any execution, resolved to counterfeit flight and to leave the Field, which the Christians beholding broke their Ranks, notwithstanding all their Leaders could do, and in pursuit of the Pagans were dispersed through the Plain without any Order or Conduct. The Barbarians hereupon return and like Lions fall upon so few poor Sheep. The most valiant, and never to be forgotten Earl Algar, with the Souldiers we named and Fryar Toly, clustering together upon an Hill, for a long time bore the brunt of the Barbarians, till seeing the stoutest Christians dead, they died also, fighting most valiantly over their Bodies. A few young men belonging to Sutton and Gedney casting away their Arms escaped into the adjoining Wood, whence the next Night with much ado, they got to Croyland, and thither brought the sad news of the overthrow, as Theodorus the Abbat and his Monks were at their Vespers. The Danes after this plundered and burnt the Abby of Croyland on the twenty fifth of August, killing the Abbat and all the Fryars, except one Boy of ten years old, Tegar or Turgar by Name, on whom young Sidrok to save him put on a Danish Coat. Thence went they to the Monastery of Medeshamsted, where they did the like; and thence with innumerable Spoils passed on towards Huntingdon, the two Sidroks bringing up the Rere as they ever did, and passing over a Bridge, two Waggon full of Treasure fell into the River Nene, which as the followers of young Sidrok were buied in drawing out, Turgar the young Fryar escaped from them and returned to Croyland.

Next for Cambridge and the life of Ely, which they plunder with East England.

Then to the West Saxons.

Where they are encountered by Ethelwulf.

And fight several Battles with Ethelred.

14. The Pagans still marched on wasting all the Country as far as Grantebri, now Cambridge, and so to the life of Ely, where having rifled and burnt the famous Monastery and killed all they found therein with much Plunder and Carrel, which for the reputed security of the place, had been brought thither out of the adjoining Country, they proceeded into East England, where meeting with Earl Wulstule, who made vigorous resistance, they cut him off with all his Army. Having taken also the most Holy Edmund King of that Country and led him to a Stake as a Butt to shoot at, they first with many Arrows shot him through, and afterward cut off his Head. Having possessed themselves of all East England, there they spent all the Winter, at Thetford say the Annals. The year following (having received great Supplies, as Huntingdon hints, who calls their Army a new and mighty one, and compares it to a River which overflowing bears away all before it) they bent their Course toward the West Saxons, the Territories of whom alone had not felt the effects of their Covetousness and Cruelty, who alone were in capacity to resist them; for the overturning of the Heptarchy (the Monarchy being not yet fully established) had weakened all the other Provinces, wanting now such Officers as should vigorously defend them. Coming to Reading they fortified themselves betwixt the two Rivers Thames and Kenet, and after three days sent out two Earls to forage the Country, but they were encountered by Ethelwulf Earl of Berkshire, who at Englesfeld (or Englesfeld) gave them Battle, killed one of their Earls (Huntingdon names Sidrak) and obtained the Victory. Four days after came King Ethelred with Alfred his Brother and the main Body, and gave Battle to the Danes, wherein on both sides very many fell: Earl Ethelwulf here lost his life, being by Ethelward the Historian called Adulf, who writes that he was buried in the Province of the Mercians, at a place called Northworthige, but in the Danish Tongue Deoraby, and the Danes became Masters of the Field. Yet was not the disadvantage so great on the English side, but that four days after the King and his Brother appeared again in the Field against them at a place called * Asecedune or Ashdowne, where they engaged on both sides with their full strength. The Danes directed their Army into two Bodies, whereof the one was led by linguam Deoraby. Lib. 4. c. 2.

* De nomine sic Simon Dunelmensis ad Ann. DCCCLXXI. Statuunt Legiones in loco qui dicitur Ectofeld, quod Latine mons Fraxini potest reverenter interpretari. Sic Affirmat: in loco qui dicitur fsetetun 7 quos Latine mons fraxini interpretatur.

SeCt. 10. Backseg and Hælfdene their Kings, the other by their Earls. With the first engaged King Ethelred, and Alfred with the other. In the former Battle fell Backseg; in the latter the two Sidroks, besides three other Earls, Osfearn, Fræna and Hæleld. Both the one and the other were beaten and put to flight, many thousands slain, and night interrupted a greater Execution, though Ethelward writes, that the whole Youth of the more excellent Barbarians here perished, neither after nor before was such slaughter heard of, since that the Nation of the Saxons by War obtained Britain. Here some observe that Ethelred both had the disadvantage of the lower ground, and came later into the Battle from his Devotions. Alfred began the Fight e'er his Brother came into the Field. And as for the Danish King, whom the Annals call Backseg, the Danish History talks of one Tuare the Son of Regner.

15. Afferius writes of a supply which the Pagans received shortly after from beyond the Sea. Yet was it not till Ethelred, fourteen days after the former Fight again assisted by his Brother, had encountered their whole Power at Basing, in which engagement they had the better, being headed by Agnere and Hubbo, the Brothers of the slain Ioarnus. But still, as we lately observ'd, the loss received by the English could not be great, for about two Months after they were again to well recruited, that they durst a third time fall upon the Pagans at a place called Merotune, divided into two Bodies, and in the same posture as they had formerly fought. Both these Bodies were put to flight, although for a great part of the day they had had the better. Great was the slaughter made on both sides, and yet say the Annals, the Danes became Masters of the Field, so various was the fortune of this day or rather so uncertain their Intelligence. To be sure Heald and a Bishop was there slain, besides other good men, not a few: And a grievous Plague followed in Summer. Hereof (we may guess, for the Annals speak not expressly) died Ethelred after Easter, when he had Reigned five years, and his Body was buried at Winburn. Brompton in his Chronicle says, that he died of wounds received in a Fight he fought with Somerled a Dane, who returning to Reading from the Battle at Merton, destroyed whatever there he found. But his Authority is but small, compared with that of others. As for the place of his Burial, by the Annals called Winburnan and Winburnham, in other Saxon Monuments is the same with that ancient Town Vindogladia, whereof Antonine maketh mention. Probably it had that Name from being situate betwixt two Rivers, for Windugledy in the British Tongue, foundeth as much as betwixt two Swords, and Rivers, by a peculiar Phrase of their own, they termed Swords, as appeareth by Aberdugledian, the British Name of Milford Haven, as much as to say, the mouth of two Rivers, because two Rivers named with them Gledian, that is, Swords run into it. The last Name Winburn (a Town in Dorsetshire) is compounded of Vin, a parcel of the old Name, and the Saxon word Burne, which also among them betokeneth a River, by the addition thereof, the Saxons being wont to name places standing upon Rivers. Here Cuthburg Sister to Ina King of the West Saxons, being divorced from the King of Northumberland her Husband, built a Nunnery which at length being decayed by time, a fair Church was erected in the place with a Vault under the Quire, and an high Spire besides the Tower Steeple, wherein were placed Prebendaries in lieu of these Nuns. In this Church lyeth Ethelred interred, upon whose Tomb not very long since repaired, in Cambden's time this new Inscription was to be read, Here resteth the Body of Saint Ethelred King of the West Saxons Martyr, who died in the year of our Lord DCCCLXXII, the three and twentieth of April, by the hands of the Pagan Danes. By his Saintship and this Inscription he should either have died or been mortally * wounded in Battle.

Anno namque incarnationis 872 Rex Ethelredus multis praeliis contra Danos vexatus, sed semper invictus, obiit Winburnum & Sepultus est.

16. Alfred, Ælfred, Alured, or Elfred his Brother, the fourth and youngest Son of Ethelwulf succeeded him, in the sixth year of Basilus Macedo, Eastern Emperor; the seventeenth of Ludovicus, the Second Emperor of the West; the one and twentieth of Burhred, King of the Mercians; the fifth Indiction, A. D. Urede (cum V Consonante) Fax Jælle Belgi. Venim & F promissum usurpantur in lingua Teutonica. Urede Frede, Olie Flie, Ullifingen Flufing. Veder Fæder, & multa alia; pro f. scribunt u. f. pronunciant tamen u. f. nobis pronunciantur; pro nostris th. d. est illis in usu; dat. th. dander blunder; mille alia.

DCCCLXXII. He was born at * Wanating, (or Wanantun) now Wantage, a Town in Berkshire, then a Royal Village or Manour of the Kings, at present eminent for nothing, except it be for a Market. His Mother was Osburg, the Daughter of Osae the Panther of King Ethelwulf, but of great Descent, which he drew from the Goths and Jutes of the stock of Striþ and Wibgar the two Brothers, who receiving the life of Wight from their Uncle Cerdic, and Cynric his Son, slew those few Britains they found in the Island, in the place called Swiþgaraburg, the rest had either been killed before, or driven into Banishment. In the fifth year of his Age, his Father sent him to Rome, accompanied with many persons both Noble and Ignoble, where Pope Leo the fourth ordained and anointed him; and if a certain * Chronicle tell us truth, he was the first King of England that was anointed. He adopted him also for his Son. Afterward: when Ethelwulf went himself to Rome, this young Son he took along with him, being more tender of him than any of his other Sons. For beauty and wit he exceeded them all, his conversation being delightfull and charming. But this tenderness grew to such fondness in his Parents, that they neglected the great part of his Education, viz. of learning his Book till he came to twelve years of Age, yet was skillfull to admiration. On a time the Mother having got a Book of Songs by her Hand, shewed it her Sons, and told them that he that could first get them by heart should have the Book; he much enamoured of the first letter for its fairness, took it, and going to his Master, learnt to Reade, and then said it before his Mother. After this he became expert in the Diurnal Course, or Celebration of Hours, as it was called, certain Psalms, and many Prayers, which being digested into a Book, day and night he constantly had about him, and made use of them upon all occasions. But after this time, when his Youth afforded him opportunity of learning the Arts and Sciences, there were no Masters to be had to Teach him, of which he often with many and deep sighs complained, as one of the greatest misfortunes of his Life. But afterward when he came to more ripe years, and had the opportunity of Books, and Teachers, then by sickness, by his extraordinary care and solicitude in business, by the frequent hostilities exercised by the Pagans both by Land and Sea, he was diverted from what he exceedingly desired: yet still as he could he omitted no opportunity, but stole it from his Recreations, to improve himself.

17. When he was twenty years Old, he Married Alfwita, Ethelswida, or Egolfwita the Daughter of Ethelred Earl of the Gains, Surnamed Mucil, or the Great, from his stature, of the Royal Blood of the Mercians. In his two and twentieth year, his Brothers being now all dead, to whom, as Afferius terms it, he had been Secondary, he came to Possession of the Kingdom, though not without reluctance, out of apprehension of that danger which hung over his head, from the constant Invasions and Hostilities of the Pagans. And scarcely had he made an end of his Brother's Funerals, when after one Month he was forced with a slender Army to Engage their whole Power at Wilton. He had the better of it at the first, for he put them to flight, but unwarily giving the Chase, they rallied, and returning upon his Men, now quite tired out, became Masters of the Field. And that it may not seem strange that here the English should be foiled, Afferius shews, that besides the smallness of their Number, in comparison of the Enemy, this one year they had been spent and weakened by eight several Battels fought against the Pagans. In these eight Battels perished one Danish King, and nine of their Earls, with innumerable multitudes of the lesser sort, besides what fell in those Excursions made by day and night, the number of which was not to be counted. The Annals instead of eight, say that nine several Battels were this year fought, and that upon the Southern Bank of the River Thames, wherein one King, and nine Earls were killed. Now this same year the West Saxons made an Agreement with the Danes, on condition that they departed out of their Quarters, which they performed, so wearied were both sides with these incessant Hostilities. The following year (from Reading say the Annals) they went to London, and there they Wintered, whither the Mercians sent Messengers, and renewed the Peace which they had formerly made with them.

18. The year following being the DCCCLXXIV. of our Lord, and the twenty fourth of Alfred's Age, the Army of Danes left London, and went into the Country of the Northumbrians, where in a Region called Lindsey they Wintered, and there again the Mercians renewed the Peace. So Writes Afferius, and the Annals say the same thing, adding this, that the place they Wintered in was a Village called Turcoffe. This Village is at this day known by the Name of Tork

Sect. 10. sey, about five Miles South from Gainsborough in Lincolnshire, in that Division called Lindsey, seated upon the River of Trent, South from the River of Humber (above twenty Miles) as all Lindsey is, being most certainly within the Country of the Mercians, so that a wonder it is that both Aferius and the Annals should place them in Northumberland, which by universal consent was bounded on the South by the River Humber. But here we may suppose they chose to take up their Quarters, because of the conveniency of the River, by which carrying at High Tide Vessels of considerable burthen, they might receive supplies of Men, Arms, or Provisions from beyond the Seas as they had occasion; for this reason afterward they landed sometimes in those Parts, and took up their Quarters also at Gainsborough, where one of their greatest Tyrants was slabb'd. The meaning of it seems to be this, that they designed to pass into the Parts beyond Humber, but here stopp'd because of conveniency, or because Lindsey was sometime under the Power of the Kings of the Northumbrians; thereupon, and because it lies so far North, by some Writers, in a general acceptation it came to be reckoned as part of it. That this was so in the days of Aferius, (who yet being a Welsh Man might be ignorant in the English Saxon Chorography) seems from what he writes at the year following, that the often mentioned Army of Danes quitting Lindsey, went into Mercia, and wintered in the place called Hreopdune. Notwithstanding the renewing of the Peace, here they forced Burhred King of the Mercians, to quit both the Island, and his Kingdom, in the two and twentieth year of his Reign, whence he went to Rome, and not long after his Arrival, died. He being gone, they brought all Mercia under their dominion: yet committed it to a silly Servant of Burhred's, one Ceolwulf on this condition, that he should again restore it the same day it should be demanded. For performance hereof he gave Hostages, and Swore, that in no manner would he contradict their will, but be obedient in all things. Hreopdune is that Town now called Repton in Derbyshire, the Residence of the Mercian Kings, when Derby was scarcely so good as a Village; seated upon the River Trent, where it takes into it the River Dove, eminent both for the Burial both of good King Ethelbald, and the deprival of this Burhred who had all the while he lived supported his Title, partly with fair Language, and partly by Gifts, and now (as one * observes) became an Example to teach Men in how ticklish and slippery a place they stand, who are underprop'd only with Money.

Seize upon the Mercian Kingdom.

19. † The Danes departing from Hreopdune, divided themselves into two Parties. One of them under Conduct of Healfdene one of their Kings, went into Northumberland, where they wintered by the River Tyne, and subdued all the adjacent Countries, and wasted the Territories of the Picts, and Pictish Britains. The other Party Commanded by Gothrum, Ofcitrill and Amund, three other of their Kings went straight to Grantebrig, and there remained a whole year. Alfred in the mean time, sensible that all these mischiefs happened at land, because he was not Master at Sea, rigged up a Fleet with intent to surprize the Pirates, &c. they should land. He met with five (says Aferius, seven say the Annals) of their Ships, whereof one he took, and the rest escaped. The following Summer the Danes moved to a Castle of the West Saxons, called Werham. Alfred now thought fit instead of Fighting, to Treat with them; either for that he being taken up in Sea Affairs was not well provided at Land, which made them so bold as to enter his paternal Territories, or because they doubted of their own strength, and were very willing to entertain Overtures. Some say by Money he purchased a Peace, whereby they were straightway to depart his Dominions. For performance of the Accord they gave up what Hostages he himself named, took an Oath upon Holy Reliques, and upon a Sacred Bracelet; (an Oath so great and solemn as they never before would swear to any Nation) yet as it seems not with any intention to observe it. * For not long after by Night they took their Horses, (Aferius saith they killed all his, or their own; for the words are ambiguous) and went to Exeter. This same year Healfdene their King had brought his Affairs to that settlement and perfection in Northumberland, that he divided the Country amongst his Men, and began to cultivate it with Tillage. And this same year it was as Aferius affirms, that Rollo with his Normans having wintered here in England, passed over the Sea, and invaded France.

Then subdued Northumberland.

And invade the West Saxons.

Alfred then King, forced to purchase Peace.

habebat occidit vespurgue mte Domnamiam ab locum qui dicitur taxonic exanaceatpe Britanic autem Capuivirg Latine quoque civitat in opentali nupa plurimu Vniue pta etia et ppe majore mepiamum 7 quia mteplur Galliam Britanniam 7 inoyante epixit 7ibi htemavie,

20. The year which followed being the DCCCLXXVI. of Our Lord, and the Sect. 10. twenty sixth after the Birth of Alfred, part of the Pagan Army remained at Exeter, and another part in Harvest time made excursions into Mercia. The number of these Rovers daily encreased, so as any that fought with and defeated them never so often, had but the same endless employment as he that cut off the Head of Hydra; for if as this day thirty thousand of them were killed, to Morrow others would succeed them, and their number be doubled. Alfred perceiving that for all his labour for this reason he should profit nothing, but that each Victory (if he obtained it) would prove but a prelude to a farther trouble and danger, gave order throughout all his Dominions for furnishing out Gallies, or long Ships, to prevent the landing of these troublesome Guests. He himself hastened to Exeter, wherein he besieged the Danes, from whom to cut off all supplies, as a long as he manned out his Ships to intercept all provisions that should come by Sea. His Navy met with one hundred and twenty of their Vessels, upon which they set with all violence imaginable, and all the Vessels full of Men as they were, perished; how Aferius tells us not, and the Annals say it was by Tempest near Swanawic. The same year the Pagans quitting Werham, partly on Horseback, and partly on Shipboard, and these at Sea when they came to the place called * Swanawic perished to the number of one hundred and twenty Vessels, more if credit be given to the Copy of Aferius, whereas the Annals mention but one loss at Sea this year, and the identity of the number in Aferius, makes us suspect it one and the same loss, and that his Text is corrupted. However so it happened, that the Danes affrighted with this great loss (or losses) gave him what Hostages he desired, and promised to depart. This they did in the Month of August marching into Mercia, which Region they granted, partly to Ceolwulf, a certain silly Servant of the King, and partly divided amongst themselves.

The Danes suffer great losses at Sea.

The West Saxons submitting to the Danes put Alfred to his shift.

21. In the year from our Lord's Incarnation DCCCLXXVII, and the twenty seventh after Alfred's Nativity, the often mentioned Army of the Pagans from Exeter, in Christmas departed to Ceppanhamme a Royal Village seated * in the Northern part of Wiltshire on the Eastern Bank of the River, in British called Abon, where it wintered. Hence did it make excursions into the Territories of the West Saxons, of whom many it forced to quit the Land, and in great fear and want of all necessities to cross the Seas; such as remained were constrained to submit themselves to their Authority. Alfred with a few of his Nobility, with a small Party of Souldiers and some of his Vassals in Woods and the miry parts of Somersetshire was forced to hide his Head. A miserable life he led, having nothing whereby to subsist except what by stealth and Irruptions he could get from the Pagans or from his disobedient Subjects which had submitted themselves unto them. He was forced to take up his Quarters with one of the Keepers of his Cattel. The † Neatherd's Wife being on a time busied in baking Cakes upon the Hearth, the King late by the fire side sitting and trimming up his Bow and Arrows with his other Habilliments of War. It happened that the Cakes, set too near the fire, burned, at which the Woman very much concerned, in haste ran to the fire and snatched them away, but heartily chid the Guest upon the Bench, saying, How now man wilt thou not turn the Cakes that burn? Thou wouldest be glad to have a share of them when they are bak'd. The unhappy Woman (says Aferius) little thought the spake to King Alfred who had fought so many Battels with the Pagans, and got so many Victories over them. But so great affliction happened to him, as our Author guesseth, for not having in his younger years when he first came to the Government, heard and relieved his oppressed Subjects, for which neglect St. Neolus his Kinsman foretold out of a Prophetick Spirit, that these Calamities would fall upon him. In the mean time the Brother of Hinguar and Healfdene departing from Northwales with three and twenty Ships, where they had made great waste, failed into Devonshire, and facing a Castle called Cymoth, were killed in a Salley made by the King's Garrison, with two hundred of their men. There was taken their Banner called Reafan, said to have been made at one Noon-time of the day by the three Sisters of Hinguar and Hubba the Daughters of Lodebrock. Before every Batrel if they chanced to be victorious, the likeness of a living and flying Crow was reported to have appeared in it, but in case they happened to have the worst it would hang directly down and not move at all. And this hath often been proved by experience, saith our Author.

Aferius, Tunc nex Alpheus surte Cymoth, bar 7 galeat, ar 1 galat, he manned out his Ships to intercept all provisions that should come by Sea. His fabypat set per negm, &c.

* Aferius Gnauepte.

* Que erga nra in r- parte pil- tuncprie 7 in Opentia- h nupa plu- miny quos fore? to hide his Head. A miserable life he led, having nothing whereby to subsist except what by stealth and Irruptions he could get from the Pagans or from his disobedient Subjects which had submitted themselves unto them. He was forced to take up his Quarters with one of the Keepers of his Cattel. The † Neatherd's Wife being on a time busied in baking Cakes upon the Hearth, the King late by the fire side sitting and trimming up his Bow and Arrows with his other Habilliments of War. It happened that the Cakes, set too near the fire, burned, at which the Woman very much concerned, in haste ran to the fire and snatched them away, but heartily chid the Guest upon the Bench, saying, How now man wilt thou not turn the Cakes that burn? Thou wouldest be glad to have a share of them when they are bak'd. The unhappy Woman (says Aferius) little thought the spake to King Alfred who had fought so many Battels with the Pagans, and got so many Victories over them. But so great affliction happened to him, as our Author guesseth, for not having in his younger years when he first came to the Government, heard and relieved his oppressed Subjects, for which neglect St. Neolus his Kinsman foretold out of a Prophetick Spirit, that these Calamities would fall upon him. In the mean time the Brother of Hinguar and Healfdene departing from Northwales with three and twenty Ships, where they had made great waste, failed into Devonshire, and facing a Castle called Cymoth, were killed in a Salley made by the King's Garrison, with two hundred of their men. There was taken their Banner called Reafan, said to have been made at one Noon-time of the day by the three Sisters of Hinguar and Hubba the Daughters of Lodebrock. Before every Batrel if they chanced to be victorious, the likeness of a living and flying Crow was reported to have appeared in it, but in case they happened to have the worst it would hang directly down and not move at all. And this hath often been proved by experience, saith our Author.

Sect. 10. 22. This same year Alfred built after Easter a Castle at a place called * Ethelinelgaeg, whence with his Nobles of Somerſetſhire he made frequent excursions against the Pagans. In the seventh week after Easter he rode to the ſtone of Egbyrht in the Eaſtern part of the Wood called ſelward, in Latine Silva Magna, and Coitmaur in Britiſh, (in the Eaſtern part of Somerſetſhire, now not ſo great) where met him all the Inhabitants of Somerſetſhire, Wiltſ, and ſuch of Hamſhire as had not been driven beyond the Sea, who received their King as one riſen from the dead, with extraordinary Joy, and there they reſted themſelves that Night. Diſlodged as ſoon as it was light, they travelled that day as far as Acglea, and the next arrived at a place called Ethandun, (now Edinſon in Wiltſhire) where they engaged the whole Power of the Danes, and got the Victory. They purſued them to one of their fortiſt Castles, to which Alfred cauſed cloſe Siege to be laid, which having continued fourteen days, the Pagans pinched with hunger and cold and deſpairing of Relief, yielded on condition to have leave to depart out of the King's Dominions; for to depart they were, and gave up what Hoſtages he was pleaſed to nominate, confirming the Agreement alſo by their Oaths. Gothfrus alſo their King engaged to become a Chriſtian and be baptized: All which Covenants they faithfully performed. For after about three weeks he came to Alfred, then lying at Alre a place near to Ethelinelgaeg (now Alre in Somerſetſhire) upon the River Parret, a Village conſiſting of a few poor Cottages) accompanied with thirty of the choicelt of his Army, and Alfred adopting him for his Son, received him out of the Font, and named him Aethelſtan; the ſolemnity of looſing his Chriſtial Ligament, was performed at Wetmore or Wadmore an Houſe of the King's, with whom he continued twelve days (or twelve Nights to ſpeak in the Dialect of our Saxon Anceſtours) and then returned, both he and his followers having received very great Prefents. So good a change was wrought upon them, that they kept their word. For the next year they departed from Cippanham in Cirenceſtre, and there continued an whole twelve Month. Thence removed they to the Eaſt Angles, the Country whereof together with Northumberland, ſome write that Alfred gave to Guntrum at his Chriſtning, to be held in fealty of him.

23. For the Gift of Northumberland, we have nothing to ſay, but as to the other there is extant the (a) Form of a League made betwixt theſe two Kings, in the firſt Article whereof the Limits of their Territories are thus deſcribed. *The Limits of our Land are firſt upon the Thames, then proceed they to the River Lee as far as his Fountain, then ſtreight to Bedford, and ſo up to the River Oule, as far as Watling-ſtreet. The ſecond Article, appoints the value of a Man ſlain, whether Engliſh or Dane, to be four Marks of melted Gold, and the Redemption of each four hundred Shillings. But if the King's Servant or Thane, was accuſed of Manſlaughter. The third Article proceeds, that he be tried by twelve other of the King's Servants. In caſe he was not the King's Servant, but belonged to ſome inferior Lord, he ſhould be tried by eleven of his Equals, and by one of the King's Servants. The ſame Order was to be taken in all ſuits, which exceeded four Marks. But in caſe he reſuſed to undergoe this Trial, his fine was to be increaſed three fold. The fourth appoints Vouchers for the ſale of Men, Horses or Oxen. The fifth and laſt ordains, that none from either Army ſhould paſs to the other without leave. And in caſe it be by way of Traffick, ſuch ſhall find Sureties for their Civil Deportment, that the Peace may not be infringed. Such was the League the Preface to which declares, that it was made betwixt the two Kings, Elfred and Gythrūm (ſo the Saxon) by conſent of all the wiſe men of the Engliſh, and of all thoſe that inhabited Eaſt England, and that not onely in behalf of themſelves, but of their Poſterity. This ſufficiently ſheweth that the Eaſtern Parts of England belonged to the Danes. Yet Polydore Virgil calling this King by the Name of Gormon, vehemently contends that he had not that Country beſtowed on him. Kranzius alſo denies, that Gormon was converted to the Faith; yet confeſſes that about this time, one Froto was converted. Whatever they write, this League evinceth the Diſtinction of their Territories, and the Teſtimony of Aſſerius, is uncontrollable as to his Baptiſm, who lived himſelf at this very time, not to mention that the Annals (ancient Monuments alſo) affirm the ſame.*

24. But the ſame year that theſe things thus paſſed, another great Army of Pagans came from beyond the Seas, and ſailing up the Thames, wintered at Ful-lonham, now Fulham, at preſent the ſeat of the Biſhop of London, upon this River. The ſame year happened alſo a great Eclipse of the Sun. In that which followed, the Army of Danes, that wintered at Fulham, paſſed over the Sea into the Eaſtern France, and continued a whole year at Ghent, whence the Summer following they pierced farther into the Country, and had battel given them by the Franks, with what Succeſs as to particulars we know not, but with no great Diſadvantage ſurely to the Danes, who after the Fight became Horſemen, and afterward paſſed up the River * Meuſe, farther into the Land, and there wintered. Alfred in the mean while, being by experience ſufficiently inſtructed, that his main care ought to be employed how to become Maſter at Sea, in three years time provided him a Fleet, wherewith he engaged ſome Rovers, and took two of their Veſſels, killing all he found therein. Two other ſhips were commanded by two of their Princes, who with all their Fellows being much wounded, and held out in fight caſt down their Arms, and with bended Knees and humble ſupplications yielded themſelves into his Hands. Their Countrymen the following year, failed up the River Scheld, as far as a Monaſtery of Nunns called Cundobit, and there took up their Winter Quarters.

CHAP. II. Contemp. with the Conſtantinop. Rom. Emp. Alfred.

25. The year that followed being the DCCCLXXXIV, of our Lord, and the four and thirtieth of King Alfred's Age, this Army divided it ſelf into two Bodies, whereof the one held on its courſe into the Eaſtern parts of France, and the other making for this Iſland, arrived in Kent, and laid ſiege to the City of Rochefter. Before the Gate they built a Fort, and uſed all means they could to become Maſters of the place, but the Inhabitants made ſtout reſiſtence, and held out till King Alfred came to their relief, the noiſe of whoſe approach frightened away the Beſiegers from their ſhips, whereln they were conſtrained to return to the Coaſts of France. The League which was made betwixt Alfred and Guthrum, it ſeems, was broken by this time, probably by that Intelligence which the Danes, inhabiting Eaſt England, held with their Countrymen, that ever and anon arrived. Alfred found himſelf concerned to man out his Fleet, to leſſen and refrain their Power, which deſign ſo proſpered, that coming to the Mouth of the River Stour, and meeting thirteen of the Enemies ſhips, which came ready prepared for an Encounter, they took them and killed all their Men. But growing ſecure upon this Succeſs, the Danes gathered together all the Veſſels they could make, and ſetting upon them as they lay in the ſame place in a careleſs poſture, ſpoiled their Triumph at their return. The year that followed, a conſiderable Number of theſe Danes who had come from the Weſt, quitting Britain, returned into that Quarter by Sea, and paſſed up the River Seine as far as Paris. There they incamped where they could beſt intercept the paſſage of the Citizens, over the Bridge, the City being ſeated in the midſt of the River in a little Iſland, and continued their ſiege for a whole year, but ſuch was the Vigilancy and Induſtry of the Inhabitants, that they could not force their Entrance. While God Almighty thus preſerved the City of Paris, from the Violence of the Barbarians, at the ſame time he was pleaſed to reſtore the City of London to her Ancient Luſtre, the having as well as many other Engliſh Cities been deſaced, and depopulated by theſe continual Invaſions of the Pagans. King Alfred making it his chiefelt care to repair it, made it habitable, and committed it to the Government of Ethelred, the Earl of the Mercians, to whom he gave his Daughter Ethelſteda in Marriage. To him turned now all ſuch Engliſh and Saxons, as formerly had been diſperſed, and had lived in captivity under the Danes, and willingly ſubmitted to his Dominion, and from the Rovers he reſted quiet for about eight years (ſome ſay thirteen, but to them the Annals bear not Teſtimony) four of which being expired, Guthrum the Northern King (as at the Annals call him) who reigned in Eaſt England, departed this life.

26. All this while the other Northern Rovers employed themſelves upon the Continent making continual Invaſions into France, which they never left haraſſing till they had Neſtria aſſigned them to inhabit, to which they affixed the Name of Normandy. Eight years being paſſed from the laſt hoſtility they had attempted in England, an Army of them being beaten out of France by the Emperor Ernuſt and the Britains, paſſed from the Eaſtern to the Weſtern parts of France, and went to Bologne, where furniſhing themſelves with Veſſels, with two hundred and fifty ſail, they made for the Eaſtern Coaſts of Kent, and there put into a River called Limen, near to the great Wood Andred, a Wood which extended it ſelf in length an hundred and twenty Miles, and in breadth contained thirty. Into this Wood they drew up their ſhips about four Miles from the Rivers Mouth, where they built a Fortreſs. After them one Haefen, with eighty Veſſels more entred the Mouth of the Thames, and built a Fort at Midleton, while the former Army remained in a place called Apletree. Alfred to prevent the ſtorm which he ſaw was

Sect. 10.
Are attended by Alfred.

coming fast upon him, resolv'd to hinder the Correspondence which was wont to be entertained betwixt the new Comers, and those that were already fix'd in the Countrey, a thing which ever prov'd of pernicious Consequence. Those of Northumberland he oblig'd to him by an Oath of Fidelity and the Inhabitants of Essex, from whom he received Hoftages, for ever as any Strangers invaded the Land they were wont either to join with them or commit some Hostility themselves, while the King's Forces were elsewhere employed. Having then got a sufficient Power together, he incamp'd himself betwixt the two Armies at such a distance, as to be ready for either of them, in case they offer'd to remove. And dividing his Army into two Parts, one he kept incamp'd with an Eye upon the Enemies main Body, the other was ready upon all Occasions to restrain such Parties as foraged the Countrey. They ranged up and down till they came into Essex, and thence again pass'd the Thames into Surry, where at Farnham the King's Troops met them, and put them to the rout. Their King was wounded, and with one Party laid behind, the rest cross'd the Thames again into an Island near Colne (some say in Essex, others by Colebrook) where the King's Army besieg'd them so long, till Provisions fail'd. In the mean time the Danes of Northumberland, not able to hold their Hands while they saw their Countreymen enriching themselves with Booty, broke their Faith, and with an hundred ships coming to the East Angles, scour'd the Southern Parts, as they did with forty, the Northern Coasts, and sailing about came to Exeter, which they presently besieg'd. Alfred hearing this hasten'd thither with all his Army, except a strong Party of Welsh, which marching to London join'd with the Citizens, and others that came from the West, and then went Eastward to Beamsfleet. Where Hastien having built a Fort was himself gone out to forage, but had left a strong Party to defend it. But this Party they cut in pieces, plunder'd the Castle, took much Booty and Prisoners, and either destroy'd all their ships, or brought them away to London or Rocheſter.

Their Armies join waiting all near Severn.

Alfred beſieges the Danes in Exeter.

The Danes invade North- wales.

27. Among other Prisoners was taken the Wife of Hastien, with his two Sons which so affect'd the Barbarian, that he begged Peace of the King, giving Hoftages and Oath for his peaceable Deportment. Alfred set his Wife and his Sons at Liberty, to one of which he himself was Godfather, and the other was the Godson of Earl Ethelred, and besides he bestow'd on him a good Summ of Money. But returning to Beamsfleet, he could not restrain his ravenous Inclination, but fell of waſting the County adjacent; which was under the Government of Ethelred his Godson. After this both Danish Armies join'd, and coming to Shobury in Essex, there built another Castle. Thence passing the Thames, with such as join'd with them from Northumberland and East England, they march'd on to Severn, waſting all in their way. Here the King's Captains, Ethered, Ethelm and Ethelnoth, with Forces taken out of all the Countreys adjoining, pitch'd their Camp over against them at a place call'd Buttington (in Montgomeryſhire) the River running betwixt them, and there they faced one another for many weeks. In the mean time the King by a ſiege ſorely diſtreſſ'd the Danes in Exeter, who having eaten part of their Horſes resolv'd to ſally out, and join with their fellows that lay incamp'd on the Eaſt ſide of the River, but the King ſet upon and diſcomfited them all with loſs of Ordhelm, and ſeveral other of his own Officers. Thoſe that remain'd fled to Essex to the Fort they had there built, and their ſhips. But no ſooner was one Party ſuppreſſ'd, but another aroſe. Laſt of their Leaders, before Winter gather'd a great Army out of East England and Northumberland, and depoſiting their Wives, Ships and Monies in the Hands of the Eaſt Angles, march'd, Day and Night with ſuch Expedition, that they came to a City of the Weſt call'd Wirkeal, which they took, e'er the Army that purſued could reach them.

28. Having waſted the Countrey round, the year following, they quitted the place and invaded North Wales, which after they had plunder'd, they return'd ſome into Northumberland, and ſome into East England; whence proceeding into Essex, they ſeiz'd on a ſmall Iſland lying toward the Eaſt, call'd Mereſſ, and another Party returning by Sea from the Siege, land'd upon the Coaſt of Suſſex, where the Inhabitants of Chicheſter ſallying out, ſlew many of them, and took ſome of their Ships. The ſame year they that ſeiz'd upon Mereſſ, drew up their Ships, ſome into the River of Thames, and others into Lee-Road, on the Bank of which, the year following, they built a Fort about twenty miles from London. The Londoners looking upon this as a curb not to be endur'd, with other Aſſiſtents, endeavour'd to demolish it, but were beaten back with loſs of many Men, and amongſt

A great Plague.

The Danes of East England, and North- umberland, waſte the Territories of the Weſt
Saxons.

The Iſle of Wight, and the Maritime Coaſt infeſted with Pirates.

Who are taken and executed at Wincheſter.

Alfred dyes.

His indiſpoſition of Body.

amongſt the reſt, three of the King's Officers. Hereupon the King in time of Har-veſt incamp'd nearer the City, to reſtrain the incurſions of Danes upon the Reapers. As he was Riding on a time by the River Lee, it came into his Head, that by digging of large Ditches on each ſide, he might turn the Stream from the Chanel, and ſo cauſe their Ships to reſt upon the dry ground; which thing having deviſ'd, he attempted with ſuch ſucceſs, that the Danes perceiving they were not to be got off, ſent away their Wives and Children into East England; and on foot march'd as far as a place call'd Quarbrig upon the Severn; where they built a Fortreſs and Wintred. The Citizens of London, very joyfully and in Triumph, brought ſuch of their Ships as they could get off, into their own Road, and the reſt they burnt or diſabled. This happen'd three years after that from the tranſmarine Parts, theſe Danes firſt arriv'd in the mouth of Limeſe. During theſe ſame three years rag'd a great Plague, both amongſt Men and Cattle. The King loſt moſt of his choiceſt Nobility, as Switbulf Biſhop of Rocheſter, and ſeveral great Earls; Cœlmund in Kent, Brithulfe in Essex, Wulfred in Hampſhire, beſides Earlwald Biſhop of Dorcheſter, Eadulf the King's Officer in Suſſex, Beornwulf Governour of Wincheſter, Eigulfe Maſter of the King's Horſe, and many others.

29. This Diſaſter was followed by many irruptions made by the Danes Inhabiting Northumberland and East England, into the Territories of the Weſt Saxons, by means of their long Gallies, which they had built many years before. To overmatch them, King Alfred commanded other Gallies to be made twice as long, higher, and yet both ſwifter and ſteddier than theſe, ſome of ſixty Oars, and ſome of more, like to which were not then in uſe, either amongſt the Danes or Friſons. At this time the Iſle of Wight, the Coaſts of Devonſhire, and other Maritime Parts were much infeſted by fix Pickering Veffels which hover'd upon theſe Quarters. The King commanded ſome of theſe new Gallies to be Mann'd out againſt them for an experiment. The Fight was partly by Water, and partly by Land, manag'd with dexterity and courage enough on both ſides. Two of the Pirates Ships were ſtranded, one eſcap'd away into East England, and all except but ſuch as ſerv'd in this, were either ſlain or taken; but not without conſiderable loſs alſo on the King's ſide. Here fell Lucuman the King's Earl, Wulfheard, Edba and Ethelere, all Friſons, and Ethelfrith the Overſeer of the King's Cattle. All the Friſons perished, of the English ſixty two, and of the Danes one hundred and twenty. The Prisoners were led to the King to Wincheſter, where he commanded them to be hand'd as Pirates and publick Enemies. This year Wulfic the Maſter of the King's Horſe, who was alſo his Governour of Wiltſhire and Wales, which therefore was at this time ſubject to his Command. The year following hath nothing notable, but that Ethelm the Earl of Wiltſhire died nine nights (ſo particular are the Annals in matters of ſmalleſt conſequence) before Midſummer, and this was the laſt of Ethered Earl of Devonſhire, and of the Biſhop of London. Theſe ſuſſer'd into another world the King himſelf, who having enjoy'd two or three years of Peace, as a preparation to everlaſting Reſpoſe and Felicity, in the five and twentieth of October, in the one and fortieth year of his Age, and the thirtieth of his Reign, in the year of our Lord, DCCC. paſſed from a temporal to an eternal Kingdom.

30. Whoever conſiders the worth of his Perſon, will find that our opinion of his happineſs, is not founded merely upon Charity. A Man who (human frailty alone ſet aſide) ſo diſcharg'd all the Offices of a King and of a Chriſtian, as ſcarce any can be found in theſe virtues to have been ſo accurate, by whole (almost I had ſaid ſingle) example no infirmity of Body, no travel of mind, no perpetual diſquiets and dangers can excuſe from the performing of all duties which the Relation, a Man ſtands in both to God and Men, exacteth from him. In what continual diſturbances he liv'd and reign'd, we have ſufficiently ſeen already, how ſeldom he enjoy'd any repoſe and quiet, in what perpetual diſturbances, cares and anxieties, any other man would have been involv'd. But his inward griefs were as great and preſſing as were his outward moleſtations; ſcarce any day from his Infancy, till he came to be forty five years of Age, was he free from extraordinary pains in his Body. From his Childhood, till he came to be twenty, he was exceedingly troubled with the Piles. Then after his Marriage, ſeiz'd with ſo great and ſtrange pain, that no Phyſician could gueſs what the cauſe ſhould be, ſome imagin'd him bewitched, others thought it the mere effect of the Devil's malice, who hates and envies all good Men, others imagin'd it an unuſual fort of Fever, and others his former diſeaſe of the Hæmorrhoids increaſed to a greater Sect. 10. greater malignity. He was afraid left Leprosie, Blindness, or some other dreadful Symptom should follow upon it, which render Men both despicable and unloveable. Therefore as formerly sensible of the proneness of Nature to fleshly Lusts in the heat of youth, and before he was married, he prayed that some Infirmitie might fall upon him which might abate these desires and inclinations, now that he might not be unusefull, he prayed for a Relaxation of this Grief, and as he had been heard in his first petition, so his second was not denied. But though seldom did his pain intermit, or if he enjoyed any ease for a Day, or a Night, or an Hour, yet the fear and apprehension of the return of his almost unupportable Torment, never forsook him, yet was the employment of his time so fruitfull in all respects, as if he had not had the least diversion. Of this Afferius his Chaplain an Eye-witness gives us in the History of his Actions, this full account.

Afferius.

His management of Affairs.

31. Amidst his Wars, the many disturbances of his Life, the Invasions of Pagans, and the daily Infirmities of his Body, he ordered the matters of State concerning his Kingdom, practised all the Art of Hunting, instructed all his Gold-Smiths and Artificers, his Huntsmen and Falconers, contrived new Buildings more sumptuous than any of his Predecessours, he himself being the Inventour and Architect, read Saxon Books, got Saxon Verses by heart, and saw that others did the like. Constantly was he present at Divine Service, Psalms or Prayers he read, his diurnal and nocturnal Hours he ever celebrated, alone in the Night time when all others were asleep, he frequented Churches and then performed his Devotions, oversaw the distribution of Alms to Poor and Strangers, set himself to the searching out the Causes of unknown things, and in all these Employments, and during his Pains belaboured himself with incomparable Affability, and pleasantness toward all Men. Many Franks, Frifons, Galls, Pagans, Britains, Scots and Armenians on their own Accord, became his Subjects, as well noble as ignoble, all whom according to their several Qualities and Conditions, he loved, honoured and relieved as his own Nation. Sermons either from Strangers or his own Chaplains, he heard constantly and attentively. His Bishops, the whole Clergy, his Earls and Nobles, his Servants and Familiars, he loved most affectionately. Such of their Sons as were at Court he took personal care of no less than his own Children, instructing them himself Night and Day in good manners and literature. But as if in all these he had no comfort at all, and as if no other thing either internal or external troubled him, Night and Day he was very sad, and with many sighs bewailed his condition both to God and his familiar Friends, that he was destitute of Divine Wisdom, and of the liberal Arts.

His desire and improvement in Learning.

32. He made it his business to get such men about him as could best supply this defect which his own humility represented to him far greater than indeed it was. As his utmost wish and the greatest Boon he beg'd, was like to that of Solomon, so the success of his Prayers was (though not proportionably) the same, God giving him both learning and Wisdom, and (if not Riches yet) Honour in such abundance, as no Prince of his Age, nor for many Ages afterward attained. Four learned Clerks he sent for out of Mercia, and some he had in his own paternal Dominions of the West Saxons, by whose endeavours his insatiable desire of knowledge was still exercised. For both Night and Day when he had any spare time he heard them read, never being without some one of them in attendance, whereby it came to pass that he had a thorough knowledge almost of all sorts of Books. Yet not contenting himself with what they could teach him, he sent for the learned men he could hear of out of France, and out of Wales, for Affer the Writer of the Story, all whom he rewarded and preferred suitably to their Merits. By assistance of these men he arrived at such eminent learning, (that Age especially considered) that he became not only the most knowing of all Kings, but in universal knowledge exceeded almost all, both his own Subjects and others. He was learned in Speech, but especially made it his business to be thoroughly versed in Divine and Practical knowledge. He penetrated to the profound Mysteries of all Liberal Arts, which he acquired with utmost diligence. The greatest part of the Roman Library he made familiar to his English Subjects. He was so universally learned that he became both an excellent Grammarian, Philosopher, Rhetorician, Historian, Musician and Poet; nay, a most perfect Architect and Geometrician. He himself for the benefit of his Subjects, whom the Invasions of the Barbarous Danes had well nigh deprived of all Learning, translated into their own Language the History of Orosius, the Ecclesiastical History of Bede, (which Translation we make frequent use of) and death prevented his finishing an English Translation of the Psalms of David.

Ingulphus, Malinesbury, Baleus, &c.

33. The

His Devotions.

33. The more wonderful this is still, if we consider that his Devotions took up so much time as scarcely any Religious Person, whose work alone it was, spent more in God's Service. He made a Vow to dedicate to him one half, excepting that of sleep and necessary Refreshings. And because herein he could not be accurate for the cloudiness of the Air and want of Clocks, (which in this Age were not invented) he caused six large Tapers of Wax to be provided, each twelve * Inches in length, by the burning of which he measured out the four and twenty Hours. Perceiving that the burning of them was unequal by reason that the Wind through the Windows, the Crannies of Walls of his Chapel, or the thin Cloths of his Tents got to them; to prevent this inconvenience he invented a Lanthorn made of Wood and Horns of Oxen. But that which took up not the least part of his time thus divided with the hearing of Causes and Administration of Justice, wherein to relieve the Poor and Distressed, Night and Day he travelled indefatigably; for in all that Kingdom (saith our Author) besides him alone they had no Protector, or very few, Persons of publick Spirits as well as Employment, having always been rare in this Nation. Such Partiality and Contention were there amongst inferior Judges, that he was perpetually pestered with Appeals, wherein he was so Sedulous an Inquirer, that all Villany was ever brought to light. But besides Appeals few Causes were heard in inferior Courts of any moment, which however decided he did not examine. If he found his Judges unskillfull, he gravely admonished them as such, who in case they did not study improvement were to loose their Places. This made them so vigilant and industrious, that though his Officers all in a manner were illiterate from their Infancy, yet in their elder Age did they apply themselves to learning, and such as by reason of Age or other Avocations could not doe it, brought up their Sons, their Kinsmen or their Dependents and Servants to read to them. As he being the Superiour Judge (not only as to Authority but Administration of Justice) took care that his People should be furnished with able Ministers, so he provided them of good Laws, and for the better Government of the whole English Nation, brought up several laudable Customs, which still to this day continue, and we shall declare when we come to speak of the Laws and Policy of our Saxon Ancestours. To keep up Civility and Learning he erected School for the training up of Youth, and used severity against such as broke the Peace, that he might by Punishments deter, as well as by Rewards and Encouragements allure, the two great Engines of Magistracy. Thieves and Highwaymen have profecuted, that he rid the Land in a manner of them, to the terror of each, causing upon high Posts in the Cross ways certain Chains of Gold to be hung, as it were daring any one to take them down; so that during his Government Justice did not only reign but Triumph.

He administered Justice.

Encourages Learning.

And ride the Nation of Thieves and Highwaymen.

The management of his Revenue.

34. We have seen how he employed his time, one of the greatest Concernments of a Prince; another remains as great, viz. how he spent his Revenue. Making this a main point of Conscience, and having vowed to the Service of God, as well the half of his Revenues as his time, he commanded all his Annual Income to be equally divided into two parts. The first of these he appointed to secular uses and subdivided it into three Portions. The first he appointed to pay the Wages of Souldiers, his choicest Ministers, and those that by their turns attended him in his Court. For of such he had three Divisions each whereof waited their month, and then resting two at their own homes again returned to their former monthly service. The second Portion he assigned to Workmen and Architects, of whom he kept employed almost an innumerable Multitude of all Nations. The third he freely bestowed on Strangers that came to him from all parts far and near, whether they asked it or asked it not, as their Qualities were, and (according to that which is written, God loveth a cheerful Giver) with a cheerful mind. Thus did he employ the first half of his Revenue. The second half of his whole Revenues and Incomes with a most free will he devoted to the Service of Almighty God, and caused it to be divided into four Portions. The first of these he conferred on such Poor as flocked to him out of all Nations. The second on two Monasteries he had caused to be built at Ethelingaege, and at Scotseburg. The third to a School which he had erected for the Instruction of the Nobility of his own Nation, said to have been at Oxford, but Afferius mentions no place. The fourth to the Monasteries round about in Saxony (the Countrey of the West Saxons he means) and Mercia, and some years by turns to the Churches and Servants of God in Britain, Cornwall, Gall, Armorica, Northumberland, and also in Ireland he either according to his ability sent relief, or resolved to doe it as opportunity and his Treasury would permit.

Sect. 10.

* Ut una quaque cancella 12 uncias pollicis in re longissime habeat. Affer.

35. Such

35. Such was the demeanour of Alfred in his Religious and Civil kind of life, a demeanour accurate indeed, but not such as can denominate him a formal or foppish man, for under all this Discipline he was not srowe or melancholly, but carried himself (as an eye or ear witness left recorded after his Death, when he could have no temptation to flatter him) with wonderfull Affability and Facetiousness. To his severer Studies and Practices he also joyned the gentile Divertiments of Musick and Hunting (things not possible to be reached by formal Fops, may our Wits be Judges) and his Military skill and valour was so admirable, that no Difasters or Discouragements could abate it. Malmesbury testifies of him that while he was overthrown and lay as it were groveling on the Earth, he was still a terror to his Enemies. In all Battels he was present every where, striking in to the Hearts of his Enemys fear and coldness, and palefies into their Faces, adding fresh Courage to his own Men. He alone would expose his Breast to the Enemies Swords, he alone would restore the Fight when his Army was ready to run away, and by his Example constrain his Souldiers to repell the insulting and pursuing Pagans. Nay, after he had been forced to flie, he became more terrible to his Foes, the memory of his Defeat made him more Circumspect, and an ardent desire of Revenge more venturous. Fifty six bet Battels by Sea and Land he fought against the Danes, and of these eight in one day, so that by his miraculous Courage and Conduct he so afflicted and tired them, though they still came in fresh numbers upon him, that they were forced to give up what Hostages he pleased, and submit to such Conditions as he thought fit to impose. That there are no Flourishes, the universal consent of Writers bears Witness, all who admire him as an Heroe, and by an unparallel'd example tax him with no Vice at all; somewhat Alessius speaks of Niulus's object to him the neglect of administering Justice, which was in his young years, and for which in his riper he made abundant Compensation. Upon the whole we cannot but dismiss him with the Exclamation of Wonder, into which Sir Henry Spelman, upon due consideration of all things, breaketh forth. "O Alfred, the Wonder and Astonishment of all Ages! If we reflect upon his Piety and Religion it would seem that he had never gone out of a Monastery: If on his Warlike Exploits, that he had lived no where but in a Camp: If on his Writings and Studies, that he had spent his whole life in an University: And lastly, If we regard his Administration of the Affairs of his Kingdom and Subjects, one would think that his whole time had been employed in nothing else but enacting laws, and promoting Justice in his Tribunals and Courts.

36. King Egbert is generally esteemed the first Monarch of the English Saxons, and as such we have placed him, his time better agreeing therewith, but indeed was a Monarch in the same sense that the other seven were, which Beda mentions, the Authority of whom extended through the Heptarchy, though the several Kingdoms had their several Kings. He as Julius Cæsar to Angulus shewed the way, and chalked that out which was afterward perfected by his Glorious Son Alfred, who indeed was toward his latter end Monarch of all the parts of England Vide Math. Florib. bbe. which were not possessed by the Danes, for if a petty King afterward was set up in Northumberland or else where, so inconsiderable was his condition as deserves not to be taken notice of. But, not only were the English his Subjects. The Wells or Britains had also submitted to him, over whom he appointed a Governor, as we lately observed him by Name out of the Saxon Annals. But Afflerius acquaints us with the Affairs of that his own Countrey, more particularly in relation to the Obedience they paid to Alfred. He tells us that at that time and long before all the Regions of the South (Western) parts of Britain (Dextralis Britannia he terms it) did belong, and so did still to the Dominion of King Alfred. Namely Hemeid, with all the People of Demetia or South West Wales, being forced to submit to him by the violence of the six Sons of Rotri. In like manner Hovel or Houli, the King of Ris King of Gleguising, moreover Brochmail and Fernal Sons of Mouric, Kings of Guent, being oppressed by the violence and Tyranny of Earl Eadred, and the Mercians, of their own Accord submitted to him as their King, that by his means they might be protected from their Enemies. Besides these Helised the Son of Tendry, King of Brecknock (Rex Breckonia) driven thereto by the violence of the foresaid Sons of Rotri, voluntarily gave up himself into his hands. Nay at last Anaraut himself with his Brethren the Sons of Rotri, deserted the Alliance they had contracted with the Northumbrians, from whom they received no emolument at all, but rather hurt; and earnestly desired the King's friendship. He was admitted into his Presence, and with much honour

His Divertifements.

His Courage.

His Domini-one.

nour entertained by him, who at his receiving confirmation from the hands of a Sect. 10.
Bishop, acknowledged him his Spiritual Son, and at his departure presented him very richly. The effect of this Meeting was, that he subjected himself to the Soverignty of King Alfred, to be obedient to him in all things as Earl Ethelred and the Mercians were. Neither in vain did any of these obtain the friendship of King. For such as desired Earthly power hereby found a means to increase it, and as desired Money had Money, such as designed Familiarity got Familiarity, and such as would have both obtained both. All of them procured Love, Defence, and Protection on every side, as far as the King was able to protect himself and his own Subjects in his Wife, with whom he lived in all Conjugal

7 as pa-cy in fili-confirma-tionem acceptum.

An Account of his Wife and Children.

37. King Alfred by Elfwita his Wife, with whom he lived in all Chastity, temperance, had several Children. His Eldest was * Ethelreda, married to Eadred * Ethel-Count of the Mercians. The next was a Son named * Edward. The third a * Eadp Daughter, Ethelreda as some call her, but Aelfric names her * Ethelgeofu; the * Ethel-Count was Abbes in the Nunnery founded by her Father at Shaftsbury. The fourth was Elfrida, Aelfric calls her * Ethelfrith, married to Baldwin the second Count of Flanders. The fifth and the youngest was * Ethelward, who by Divine Council (saith our Author) and the admirable Providence of the King, together with well nigh all the Noble Children of the whole Countrey, and many of the Inferior fort, was committed to the Discipline of the School under the diligent carriour of Masters. In this School Books of both Languages, viz. Latin and Saxon were diligently read. They were taught also to Write, inmuch that before they had strength to undergoe Manly Exercices, which befit Noble Persons, as Hunting and the like, they became Studious and ingenious in the Liberal Sciences. Edward and Ethelfrith were always brought up at Court (Estate and Government) being exceedingly beloved by all, both home born and Strangers, to whom they carried themselves with all humble Affability and Gentleness. To their Father they shewed all manner of Duty and Subjection, neither were they amid their other Employments fuitable to their Birth suffered to live idly and carelessly without Liberal Studies. For they diligently learnt Psalms by heart, read Saxon Books, and especially got by heart Saxon Poems, and very frequently made use of other Books.

To Alfred succeeded Edward.

A Glorious King.

Despising the Attempts of the Danes.

Ethelwald hi Kinsman Re-bells.

38. Of these Edward the Eldest Son succeeded his Father in the sixteenth year of Leo the Sixth, Porphyrogenitus Emperor of the East, the second of Lewis the Fourth Emperor of the West, the same year that Charles the Simple began his Reign in France, in the Fourth Indiction, A. D. DCCCCI. Ingulfus and Malmebury after him writes of him that in Learning he was far Inferiour to his Father, but incomparably more glorious in the Power of his Kingdom, that he indeed had conjoynd the two Kingdoms of the Mercians and the West Saxons, but held only that of the Mercians as King in Name and Title, it being assigned over to Duke Ethelred. But his Son after the Death of Ethelred first wholly brought under his Dominion and Propriety the Mercians, then presently after fully the Western and Eastern Engliff, or those of Northfolk, the Northumbrians, who had imbolded themselves with the Danes; then the Scots inhabiting the Northern part of the Island and all the Britains or Welsh did he subdue by his Sword; and having cast out the Pagans from all Cities and Walled Towns, placed Christians in their rooms; neither ever in any Battel was he worsted. He ingeniously invented ways to restrain the Excursions of the Danes, by either repairing old Cities or building to new ones in convenient places, which he furnished with sufficient Garrisons to protect the Inhabitants and to repell the Enemy. By this means the valour of the People was so much excited, that upon report of the Enemies coming they would proceed without consulting the King or his Captains arme themselves and valiantly charge the Invaders, whom they always overpowered both by their numbers and Military skill; so that the Danes became contemptible to the Engliff Soldiers, and a Laughing-stock to the King himself.

39. But notwithstanding his great felicity, the beginning of his Reign was much disturbed by Ethelwald his Kinsman, viz. his Cousin German by Ethelred his Father's Elder Brother, though others call him the Brother of Edward, for his Genealogy is variously related. Most probable it is, that he was the Son of Ethelred, and founded his pretensions to the Kingdom upon no weaker ground than being Son to the Elder Brother, whom he failed to succeed only at that time for want of Age as some think, or rather because Ethelunfe by his last Will and Testament had appointed Alfred his Youngest Son to succeed, in case he survived his three Brothers. For by the Testament of Alfred himself, which Affersius hath bath

Sec. 10. hath transmitted to Posterity, it appears that this King had some scruples in his mind, or conceived that others might have some cause to question his legal Title to the Crown. "After the Death of my Brethren (saith he) the inheritance of King Ethelwulf my Father devolved upon me by virtue of an Authentick publick Writing made by him, and confirmed in a general Assembly of the States of the Kingdom at Langdene. This Writing upon the Death of my last Brother, Ethelred, I commanded to be freely and openly read in the Audience of all the Deputies of the West Saxons. It being read, I required and adjured all that were present, as they loved me to declare sincerely whether they knew or had heard of any others who could justly claim any Right in this mine Inheritance, for I my self did not know any. This Adjuration I again repeated in these words. "I beseech you my dear Friends, let not any of you either out of love or hatred to me, spare freely, to speak the naked truth: for I have no desire or intention at all to prejudice the Rights of any of my Kinsmen in the least matter. When I had thus spoken, then all the Nobles and Princes of my People with a serious protestation Answered. "That never any Notice had come to them of any one that had a juster Title than my self, neither could they imagine or by any Writings Discover that any such there were.

40. Though this may seem to have relation to certain Lands left him by his Father, yet is it evident from the Testament, that this was such an Inheritance as was to descend to all the Brothers, and the Regal Title so conjoined with it, that the longer liver of them both by their Father's ordination, and their own consent should possess it, together with the whole Kingdom, assigning such Lands to his Brothers Sons as were convenient for their subsistence. He came therefore to the Crown by virtue of his Father's Conveyance, which was both ratified by the States, and confirmed by the mutual agreement of the Brothers, yet to remove all scrupulosity this excellent Prince would have his Pretensions to be scanned, and his Title examined in another Assembly before such time as he would undertake the Government. However Ethelwald knowing his Title would be war-rantable enough if he could but get success to strengthen it, resolved to try his Fortune, and for that purpose seized on two Towns, called Winburn, and Tweonam. In Winburn he fortified himself, affirming there he would live or dye; but his resolution profited him little, the memory of King Alfred having so great a place in the Hearts of the People, that they had no room to entertain any Inclinations toward any other Pretenders to the Royal Dignity than his Son and Heir. Edward assured of their fidelity, led an Army down to a place called Baddanbyrig, not far from Winburn, which so affrighted his Rival, that he who had boasted of what valour and constancy he would shew in that place, fled out of it by night, and got him into Northumberland, where he joined himself with the Danish Army. The King commanded some to pursue him, but this being in vain, he caused his Wife to be seized, which being a Nun Professed without leave from the King, or licence of the Bishops, he had taken out of a Monastery, and returned to the place and Profession from whence she came. This Monastery was that at Winburn in Dorsetshire, where we have for merly related King Ethelred the Brother of Alfred to have been Buried. Baddanbyrig is now called Badbury, being a little Hill upon a fair Down scarcely two Miles off from Winburn, compassed with a triple Trench and Rampire. It's reported to have had a Castle which was the seat of the West Saxon Kings. But if ever there were any such, it now lyes so buried in its Ruines that no token of it appears.

41. Edward thus drove away Ethelwald without fighting, and the Kentish Men the year after at a place called Holme fought prosperously against a multitude of Danish Pirates. In the mean time Ethelwald was (as some Authours affirm) chosen King by the Danes of Northumberland, who deposed their King Osbert. Matthew Westminster writes, that from Northumberland he passed the Seas into France, there to strengthen himself by the addition of a greater Force, (of Normans, as we may very well conjecture) who being of the same original with the Danes, had then by this time obtained Neustria to inhabit, a considerable Province of that Kingdom. The year after returning into England with an Army he thereto joined a great number of Pagans, inhabiting Northumberland, East England, and other Places, and then invading Mercia with Fire and Sword, destroyed all things he met with. A later Writer tells us, he drew into his Society Eric the Successour of Guthrun the Dane, in the Kingdom of the East Angles, a Prince whose malice to the Nation of the English was most deadly. Huntingdon mentions his first landing in Essex, and subduing that Country without delay; to which the Annals bear witness, but place his return from beyond the Seas in the third year after his flying into Northumberland. In the following year he gathered together his Forces in East England, and wasted the Territories of the Mercians as far as Greccaglade, (so the Annals call the place) where passing over the Thames, he pillaged all places aswell within Bradene as round about; and so returned. King Edward with what force he could make made as much haste as possible after them, and laid waste all their grounds lying betwixt the Ditch and the River Ouse, as far as the Northern Marthes. Thinking fit thence to return, he gave orders that all the Army should Disodge, and March together. But on the Kentish Men notwithstanding seven several messages he sent to them, laid behind, which delay of theirs, and separating the King's Forces, encouraged the Danes to give them Battel, which was very bloody, many Men falling on both sides; the King, lost Sigulf, and Sigelm Earls, Eadwold his Minister, Cenulf an Abbat, besides Sigebyrht and Eadwold the Sons of two Noblemen. Of the Danes, besides great numbers of lower Rank, died Eolric their King, and Ethelwald a Nobleman, the author of this War; Birbiffger, Isp Hold, and Oskinel Hold. On both sides a great slaughter was made, but a greater of the Danes though they continued Master of the Field.

42. There being no better way both for understanding and remembering of History than a knowledge of the places where eminent Actions have happened; it will be the Readers Interest and Delight to have a brief Account of such Names of Towns, and other places he meets with, especially being in his own Country. That place by the Annals called Greccaglade, by Marianus and others Crecklade, is that Town standing in the North Part of Wiltshire, watered with the Thames, known by the Name of Greeklade, which Name forsooth some believed it to have received from certain Greek Philosophers, who as the History of Oxford reporteth began there an University, which afterwards was translated to Oxford. That they call Bradene is Breden Wood, now Breden Forest, which beginning at Wotton (that is Wood Town) Basset not far from Greeklade, stretched it self far and wide. As for Dike, betwixt which and Ouse King Edward wasted all the Country, it's the same with that which the People call Devil's Dike, and cuts overthwart the Plain of Newmarket in Cambridgeshire so many Miles together. Those great and long Ditches which are seen in those Parts were (most probably) cast by the East Angles to restrain the Mercians who with their sudden Inrodes were wont to waste and spoil all before them. The first of them begins at Hinkleton, and runs Eastward by Hilderham toward Horbeath, about five Miles in length. The second called Breuditch near to the former, goes from Melburn by Fulmire. Another there is which begins at the Eastern Bank of the River Cam, and runs by Fenn Ditton (or more truly Ditch Ditton, saith Cambden, so named of the very Ditch) between great Wilberham and Fulburn; as far as Balsam. It's now commonly called Seven Mile Dike, because it's seven Miles from Newmarket, but anciently it had the Name of Fleam Dike, that is in Old English, Flight Dike, of some memorable flight which there happened.

43. More Eastward from hence within the Country is to be seen the fourth Fore-fence or Ditch, meant by the Annals the greatest of all, with a Rampire adjoining; which the common People out of Admiration of its greatness, as the work of Devils and not of Men, use to call Devil's Dike; but others Reob Dike, of Reob a little Town where it begins. Above Reob the Country is fenny, and was therefore impassible where it lay open to Excursions, there this Dike begins, and ends near to Cowledge, where the Passage by reason of Woods, was more cumbersome. It was the limit aswell of the Kingdom as of the Bishoprick of the East Angles, but the Author of so great a piece of work is unknown. Some later Writers mention King Cnut the Dane, but besides what here the Annals say of this Battel, Abbo Floracen who Died before Cnut was King of England describeth it, together with the site of East England. Such as wrote since the time of Cnut have termed it St. Edmund's Limit, and St. Edmund's Dike, verily thinking that Cnut cast it up, who being most devoted to that King and Saint, granted to the Monks of St. Edmund's Bury, to make satisfaction for the cruelties exercised by Swane his Father upon them, very great Immunities even as far as this Dike. Certain it is that the two Fore-fences last mentioned were called St. Edmund's Dikes. And therefore Matthew Westminster (which the Reader may observe) hath written, that the Battel betwixt King Edward and Ethelwald was fought between the two Dikes of St. Edmund. Lastly, by Ouse must be meant Ouse the Greater, a River which disporting it self with manifold Branches and Divisions, separateth Cambridgeshire from Norfolk. This is the nearest Ouse to the Dike: for Ouse the Less

E c separa-

Who fortifies himself at Winburn.

But upon the approach of King Edward, flies.

The Town of Greccaglade, where.

Bradene.

Dike.

Callona lon<sup>6</sup> be- lost Sigulf, and Sigelm Earls, Eadwold his Minister, Cenulf an Abbat, besides Sigebyrht and Eadwold the Sons of two Noblemen. Of the Danes, besides great numbers of lower Rank, died Eolric their King, and Ethelwald a Nobleman, the author of this War; Birbiffger, Isp Hold, and Oskinel Hold. On both sides a great slaughter was made, but a greater of the Danes though they continued Master of the Field.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Dicunt.

Sect. 10.

separateth (together with the River Waveney) Norfolk from Suffolk. As for Ouse or Jys which joineith with Tame, and makes the River Thames; Ouse in Torkshire, or others (for this is a common Name of Rivers aswell as Avon, and therefore in British is thought to have signified a River or Water in general, aswell as it) they can have no relation to the matter in hand.

Which produces a Peace.

44. To pursue our story, whatever was the Success of this Battel it seems to have produced this effect, that in the second year after a Peace was concluded betwixt the King and the Danes of East England and Northumberland, at a place called Ittingsford, which lasted for the space of three years. Then was it broken, the Annals say not by whom first, but Hoveden lays the fault upon the Danes, who he says prevaricated with the King, and thereupon he sent an Army of West Saxons, and Mercians into Northumberland, where staying five weeks, it made a great devastation, and having killed very many of the Danes, compelled them to renew the Peace they had lately broken. But this Peace the Annals tell us they broke again the year following invading Mercia, where, as write Hoveden and Florent of Worcester, they were met by the English at Totenbale or Tetnal in Staffordshire, and overthrown. King Edward was then in Kent, and had got together about an hundred sail of ships, besides such as being sent the Southward, met him at Sea. The Danes imagining that he had split the main of his Forces, took liberty to rove up and down whither hope of booty led them, beyond Severn. King Edward sent before the lightest of his Army, to entertain them, till he himself could be ready to come. Then following with the main Body, he set upon them in their return at Cambridge or Cambridge in Gloucestershire, where he gave them a very great defeat. The Annals relate, that many thousands of them were slain together with Eccwils their King; but Huntingdon mentions two Kings, viz. Haldene and Eolwulf, besides Other a Consul as he calls him and eight other Noblemen, whose Names are harsh and without any loss to the Reader may be omitted.

Ethered his Brother-in-Law dies.

Edward's employment in building and repairing several Towns.

45. The year that followed died Ethered the Earl or Duke of Mercia, the Brother-in-Law of King Edward, who hereupon took into his Hands the Cities of London and Oxford, with the Territories thereto belonging. The year after about * Martinmas he caused to be built the Northern Borough of Hartford, betwixt Memeran, Benefican and Ligan, and afterwards in Summer betwixt the Rogation days and Midsummer, he marched with his Army to Maldune in Essex, and there lay incamped while his Souldiers built the Town of Witham. At this a good Part of the Country formerly subject to the Danes, submitted themselves to his Authority, and in the mean time another Part of his Army built the other Borough of Hartford, on the South side of the River Ligan now Lea. But whereas the Annals talk of building these Boroughs of Hartford, the Reader must know that that Town which gives name now to the whole shire, was much more ancient, being found in some Copies of Beda, called † Herdord (which some interpret the Red Ford, others the Ford of Harts) where he treateth of the Synod there holden in the year of our Salvation, five hundred and seventy. Therefore by building some Houses, must be onely meant repairing of the Town. Or chiefly the Castle to be understood, which standing upon the River Lea, tradition reported to have been built by Edward the Elder, as enlarged afterward by the House of Clare, to which it belonged. By Memeran and Benefican are meant two Rivolets, which scarcely a Mile off from the present Hartford, increase the stream of Ligan or Lea, Benefican is guessed to be that on which standeth Benington, and Memeran the other Brook on which Puckerich is seated. Maldune is that we now call Maldon in Essex upon the River Chelmer, even the same with the famous Roman Colony Camalodunum, which many Ages since adorned that shore. Witham is that now called Whitham, in the same County, a fair Thoroughfair, a Mile distant from Easterford, and as much from Blackwater.

Another rout given the Danes for their Inroads.

46. The year that followed, faith Huntingdon, but in the fourth year after say the Annals, Easter being past, the Danes from Northampton and Ligeracester, or Leicester, broke the Peace by an Inroad made into Oxfordshire, where they committed all Rapine, and made great slaughter of all they met, while another Party with worse success fell into Hartfordshire, where the Inhabitants now taking Courage, and sufficiently inured to such Allarms stoutly resisted them, drove them back and recovered the booty they had taken, withall making themselves Masters of their Horles. In the mean time Ethelfleda the King's Sitter, and Relict of Ethered the Duke of Mercia, having the charge of this Country becomhaved herself, as she had done all along in her Husband's Life time, with such Courage

The Queen of the Britains taken by Ethelfleda Sister to Edward.

Her Buildings.

Courage and Conduct as she became a great help to her Brother in his Wars, and stoutly defended all those that were under her Care. But the Britains who were Neighbours to the Mercians, disdainig to be curbed by a Woman, were so bold as to make some Incursions into the English Pale. She to divert and chastise them, sent a Party into Wales, which easily routed the Welsh, took the Castle of Bricenamer, and besides thirty four other considerable Captives, brought away Prisoner that King's Wife into Mercia. By this Bricenamer is to be understood, that we now call Brecknockmeer, a Lake of standing water two miles from the Town of Brecknock. Marianus Scotus witnesseth that this Lady in the year DCCCXIII, entering into the Land of the Britains, wonne by assault a Castle at Bricenamer, and there took Prisoner the Wife of the King of the Britains. But whether this Castle was Brecknock it self, or Castle Dinas, which standeth over it upon a Rocky Hill, which the higher it riseth, the slenderer and smaller it becometh, is not certainly known, faith Mr. Camden. But forasmuch as Dinas in the British Tongue signifies a Palace, and that the Queen of these Britains was here taken Prisoner, I judge it next door to certainty, that this was the Castle whereof we write.

47. But this Virago not onely took Castles and Towns from the Enemy, but is exceedingly celebrated by all Writers, so many she either repaired or built within the English Territories. Hoveden gives us a list of them, with the time of their building or repairing, which as a memorable piece of Antiquity, we are obliged not to omit. In the year DCCCCV. by command of her and her Husband Ethered that City faith he which in British is called Karlegion, and Legacestre in the Saxon Tongue, was re-edified. Now there were two Cities in Britain, which the Saxons called by the Name of Legacestre, from being the Seats of Roman Legions as is thought, though many others for the same reason might have had that Name, one of the Coritani, which we now call Leicester, and another belonging to the Cornavii, and a Roman Colony which we still (retaining the later part of the word) call Welchester, and simply Chester. Mr. Camden was of opinion, that the Town repaired at this time was Leicester, which Ethelfleda he faith strongly walled about. But we cannot agree with him in this point, because both Hoveden and Florent of Worcester, say it was that Legacestre, which the Britains called Caerleon or Caerlegion, by which Name they never called Leicester, but if we give credit to their great Antiquary, *Humphry * Lhuyd* by that of Caerkeir, whencefoever the Saxon Name of Legacestre was taken, which might first be given to it upon some other account than that of a Legion, or rather one but like unto it. It's evident enough, that at the time when those Authors wrote, it had not the Name of Caerleon, but that Chester had is most certain, and that first by way of Excellency, then alone by it self, the Names of other Places being changed, as of that City which from Caerwetheling, by reason of the Roman Legions having changed its Name to † Caer Lleon, afterwards from a Noble Britain that repaired it, received that of Caerwgwayr, and by the English is called Warwick. But besides this reason from the Name, another as strong may be fetched from the Place. Her repairing and building of Towns was not accidental, but as the Exigency of Affairs required, so as the Country might be secured against the Danes and Britains. Now there could not be so great need for Leicester to be reinforced as for Chester, which as some say by the Invasions of the Danes had been destroyed, besides it was a Frontier Town, and a mighty curb against the treacherous and inconstant Welsh, if such they were indeed as our Writers would make them.

48. In the year DCCCXIX, on the second of the Nones of May, he marched with an Army to a place called Seargeate, and there built a strong Castle, and thence to Brige seated on the West side of the River Severn, where the cause another to be erected. The year following, at the beginning of Summer, he went with her Mercians to Tamwirting and repaired the City. Florent of Worcester calls the Place Tamewordin, Marianus Tamawordia, but Matthew of Westminster more truly Tamworth, being the same with Tamworth in Staffordshire, situate upon the River Tame, whence it hath part of its Name, and the other half from the Saxon word þorp, which signifies a Farm-House, as also an Holme or River Island, any place encompassed with water, as in German Keyserwert and Bomelswert, betoken as much as Cæsar's Isle, and Bomel's Isle. As long as the Kingdom of the Mercians continued, this was one Place of the King's Residence, a Town of great resort and very well frequented. Hoveden proceeds and tells us, that in the year DCCCXI, he built a City called Eadesbyrig, and in the end of Autumna another called Warwick. Eadesbyrig, as several others, was some obscure place; as for Warwick, it must not by

Sect. 10.

A Legion vicissim vice.

* Fragment.

† In Annali-bus scribitur. Lysena Caerpe.

‡ Item ibid.

Huntingdon Wintonie.

Scct. 10. by any means be granted that she built it anew, rebuild it the might, as one writes, that it is much bound to her because she repaired it when it was greatly decayed. It was an old Town by the Saxons called Yappinging, but by the Britains Caergruauic and Coerleon, as we lately hinted from Guarth, which in Britijh signifies a Garrison, and from the Roman Legions. For this was their Præfidium, or Garrison Town standing in the middle of the Countrey, as Præfidium in the Island of Corfica stood in the middle of that Island. These are such as Hoveden relates her to have built or repaired. Matthew of Westminster adds, that she went to Stanford, and there on the Northern Bank of the River Welband repaired a Tower. That the same year wherein she built Eadesbyrig ( which he calls Jadesbyri ) she built another Town called Wartham. That the year following, she erected three more, viz. Cherenburth, Weadburth and Runcofe ( now Ruckome in Cheshire, brought by mutability of time to Cottages ) to which some add Stifford, Litchfield and Shrewsbury.

Huntingdon
Cereburik Wardebirk Rumcoun.

49. What Matthew ascribes to her concerning Stanford, Marianus attributes to her Brother King Edward, writing that he built a Castle, but it was just now against the Town on the Southern Bank, as the Annals also affirm, which now is called Stanford Baron, of which yet at this day there appeareth not the least token. Wadelsburgh is now Wedsborough a Town in Staffordshire. But as for Stafford it self, it's ancienter than fo being called Betheney, before it had the Name of Stafford, but a Castle was here built about the year of our Lord DCCCXCIV, on the South Bank of the River Sow, which Marianus attributes to King Edward himself, which might be, because in his Reign it was erected. Lichfield was also ancienter, being by Beda called Licidfeld, which one interprets the Field of dead Bodies, from a Number of Christians which were there martyred under the Persecution of Dioclesian. And as for Shrewsbury, whensoever and by whomsoever it was built, it rofe from the Ruines of old Eboriconium now called Wroxeter, which being an ancient City of the Romans fell to decay in the Saxon and Danish Wars. Some four Miles from it arose that we now call Shrewsbury, in old time Pengwern, that is the Head of an arle Alder, or high Plain of ground planted with Alders, in which fence by the Saxons termed Scrobesbyrig from its being a thicket of Shrubs upon an Hill. It was the feat of the Petty Kings of Powis sometime, and when taken out of the Hands of the Britains might be new fortified and repaired, which our Builders to aggrandise the Act of this Heroical Lady call Buildrig. For this is observed of her, that such Places as were repaired by her were such as by her Valour and Conduct, were formerly wrefted by her out of the Hands of the Enemy. But that we may conclude this story of this Lady all together, the year after she had taken the Castle of Brecknock from the Britains, a little before Auguft the fet upon the Town of Derby then in the Hands of the Danes, took it by storm, after that they refused Battel in open Field, and then subdued all the County round, though with the loss of four of her choicest Officers who were slain at the Entry of the Gate. Huntingdon adds that after this Victory she conquered Leicester with the greater part of the Danish Army that lay in these parts, as also that those of Tork promised submiffion, and all good deportment. After this Convention, this most prudent Virago to be preferred before the ancient Amazons in the opinion of Inghulphus, died at Tamworth twelve days before the Feast of St. John, in the eighth year of her Government of Mercia, and was buried in the Porch of St. Peter in Glocester by her Husband. Huntingdon farther writes, that she was reported to have been a Woman of fo great Power, that by some she was not only called Lady and Queen, but King also, out of admiration at her worth. She left one only Child, a Daughter named Alvina (or Algina) for it's said that abhorring the pains of Childbirth after she was born, she would never more accompany with her Husband. To which passage Inghulphus adds, that in respect of the Cities she built, the Castles she fortified, and the Armies she managed, one would have thought she had changed her Sex. Matthew of Westminster tells us, she made her Daughter her Heir ( of her Kingdom he terms it ) but King Edward fo far understood his interest, that within a year he sent for his Niece into Welford, and seized Mercia into his own Hands.

Annal. ad An.
DCCCCXVIII.

50. That we may w<sup>e</sup> return to him. The year after that Derby was taken, a new Fleet of Danes from the Southward arrived at Lidwic in Devonshire under Conduct of two Captains, called Ottor and Roadl. Sailing Westward about the Lands end, they entered the mouth of the Severn; where landing, they wailed the North Welsh Coast, and coming to Ircingafeldd, they there took Cameleac a hpinga Bishop, and carried him away to their Ships, whom afterward King Edward re-rel deemed deemed with forty Pounds. As they proceeded, the Inhabitants of Hereford, Sect. 10.

Gleefeer Shires, with others out of other Cities opposed their Progress and put them to flight, killing their Captain Road, with the Brother of Otter and very many others. They pursued them into a Wood, where they besieged them till they had given security for departing out of the King's Dominions. The King hovered with his Army between Severn and Avon, so that they durst not touch upon those Quarters, except in a stealing manner twice by Night, and then they came short home, being all cut off, but some that by Swimming escaped to their Ships: The rest being almost all famished in a small Island, removed from place to place, till at last about Martinmas time they passed over into Ireland, this was the issue of this Invasion, and the Countrey enjoyed a breathing time from these Calamities. Those that bore the greatest brunt of this Storm were the Herefordshire men, especially those of that part of it which from Gildewvale declining and bending Eastward, was in those days called Ircingsefelda, and at this time with like variation Ircenfeld, but in Doomday Book Archenfeld, which Book signifies that certain Revenues by an old Custom were there assigned to one or two Priests, on condition that they should go on Embassies for the Kings of England into Wales. And whether it was in memory of their Sufferings and Service in this Inroad of the Danes, the said Book hath this farther Observation: The Men Archenfeld whenever the Army marcheth forward against the Enemy, by a Custome make the Vane Guard and bring up the Rere in their Return.

He forces the Danes in Bucks and Bedford- shire to submit.

Guard and bring up the Rere in their Return.

51. The Pirates being gone, King Edward to secure himself better from the Attempts of their Countrey men who lived about the Shires of Buckingham and Bedford, and fill were ready to joyn with any fresh Gamblers, led his Army to Buckingham, where he staid an whole Month, and gave order for raising Forts on each side of the River Ouse. This it seems fo startled the Danes that judging that they could not now doe better, several of them submitted themselves, as Thurcytel an Earl, together with moit of the considerable men about Bedford, and many of them that belonged to Northampton. This obliged him the following year to go down to Bedford, which soon yielded it self to him whither then repaired such as had been formerly on his side. Here he also staid a Month and took care for building a Burb, as the Annals call it, on the Southside of the River Ouse which Townele, as the best Copies of Hoveden have it, was in the Saxon times called Micklegate. The year following, somewhat before Midsummer, he went again to Maldon, where he built another Burb and fortified the Town, and in this year Thurcytel finding he was like but to have a small Trade here, where the King fo minded his busines, got leave to carry over some men into France; where he knew his Countreymen might find him employment. And the King followed on his busines indeed. The next year before Easter Holidays he went to Toucester, which he caused to be fortified, and about Rogation Week caused a place called Wiggamere to be built and strengthened. That Toucester is now the Town called Toucester in Northamptonshire, in the Roman times Triponitum; from three Bridges made over so many Channels, into which the little River divideth it self. Marianus names it Toucester, writing that it was so fortified in the year of our Redemption DCCCXVII, that the Danes by no means could win it by Assault, and that King Edward the Elder afterwards incamped it with a stone Wall. Yet now no Tokens of any such Wall appear. Onely there's an Artificial Hill remaining, which they call Beryll, turned into Private Gardens. Wiggamere is now called Wigmore a Town of Herefordshire, not far from the River Lug.

Several Skirmishes betwixt the Danes and Edward.

led Wigmore a Town of Herefordshire, not far from the RIVER Lug.
52. While Edward was builed about the Fortifications of Wigmore, the Danes of Northampton and Leicelster not being well pleased to find themselves curbed with so many strong Towns, laid Siege to Torcelster. For a whole day they belaboured it, but it standing fiftly out till Supplies came to them, they went their ways by Night, but were pursued and surpriz'd betwixt Burmoode and Eglebyrig or Aylebury, where many of them were taken with the loss of much of their Baggage. Much at the same time the Danes of Huntingdon, not judging their Castle convenient enough demolished it, and being assisted by those of East England built another at Temesford as more opportune, from whence to make their Excursions. They went also to Bedford with intention of recovering that Town, but the Garrison issued out repulled and flew a great part of them. After this a greater Army was raised both out of East England and Mercia, which went and laid Siege to Wigmore, plundering the Countrey round about, but after a days trval the Defendants obliged them to rise and be gone. Hereupon many of King Edward's Friends about these parts gathered themselves together and uniting their Forces went and Besieged SECT. 10. Besieged Temsford, which they took by Assault, therein slew their King together with Toylea and Mannan his Son both Earls, his Brother and all the rest they could find, for they peremptorily stood it out against them. This Temsford is a Town in Bedfordshire standing upon the confluence of Ouse and another Brook which some call Fuel. Provoked or incouraged by the example of their Countrey-men the men of Kent, Surrey and Essex, and several out of other places went and laid siege to Colne Caſtle or Colcheſter, and perſonally carried on their Assault that they took it, and put all they found therein to the Sword, except ſuch as had the good hap to eſcape over the Walls.

53. Hereat many Danes both inhabiting the Countrey and the Port Towns much alarmed gathered themſelves together, and being prevented as to the Relief of Colcheſter pleaſed themſelves with the hope of revenging the Injury received upon Maldon, but the Inhabitants held out till relief came, which ſo diſcouraged the Beſiegers that they drew off, but in their Retreat were purſued, and many thouſands of them ſlain, Pirates and others, by thoſe that they hoped to have devoured. King Edward being jealous of all their Countrey-men halted this very Summer with an Army of Weſt Saxons to a place called Pæſſanham, ſo called from paſſing over the River, now Parham, a little diſtant from Stony Stratford, where he continued till Torcheſter was incircled with a ſtone Wall. This had ſuch influence upon the Danes of theſe Quarters, that Thurſerib an Earl with the Lords of the Towns thereabout, and all their Army as far as Hampton North of Woolind came and ſubmitted themſelves unto him. Now the King's Army deſired to return home, yet part of it was ordered to Huntingdon, where he repaired the Town and repaired ſuch Breaches as the King had formerly made, upon ſight whereof all the People of thoſe Parts ſubmitted, deſiring the King's Protection. Then with his Weſt Saxon Forces this very year before Martinmas did he march to Colcheſter, which Town he repaired and fortiſd at what time the People of Eaſt England and Weſt England living under the Danes, together with the Daniſh Army in Eaſt England, ſware obedience to him, as well by Sea as by Land fully to obſerve his Commands. Thoſe of them alſo that lay at Granbrig took the ſame Oath as he had commanded. The year following wherein died his Siſter Ethelfleda, betwix Rogation Week and Midſummer he went to Stanford, where, ſay the Annals on the Southern ſide he built a Caſtle, whereupon all ſuch aſheld that on the other ſide, ſubmitted themſelves to him as their Lord.

54. By her death all Mercia, as we ſaid, fell unto him and willingly ſubmitted, and about the ſame time Howel, Cledanc and Jeothwell the petty Kings of North Wales with all the Northern Britains, put themſelves under his Dominion. After this he viſited Nottingham, which he repaired, and therein placed both Engliſh and Danes, of both which Nations, all inhabiting Mercia, now became his Subjects. To purſue and complete his good Fortune, the next year he went down with an Army to Thelwall in Cheſhire, where he took care for the building and fortiſying of the Town. The Annals onely tell us ſo much, but Matthew of Weſtmiſter tells us the reaſon of the Name, which came from the Bodies of Trees (the Boughs being cut off) ſet ſer in the ground, wherewith he fenced it round: For the Saxons in their Language called the Trunks or Bodies of Trees, Thel, and Wall as we name it at preſent. While he ſtaid at Thelwall he ſent for another Party of Souldiers out of Mercia, and ordered them to Maniſe Caſtre in Northumberland to repair and Man it. This Maniſe Caſtre is Mancheſter in Lancſhire ſaid to be in Northumberland, for that this Countrey, as well as others, North of Humber were formerly under the ſame Kings. Lying ſo as it doth, it ſeems to have been quite deſtroyed in the Daniſh Wars, wherein becauſe the Inhabitants demeaned themſelves like very valiant men, their ſuccellours will have their Town to have been called Mancheſter, that is, as they expound it, The City of Men; in which conceit they wonderfully pleaſe themſelves. And ſo they ſhould for me. But one already has told them that Mancunium was the Name of it in the time of the Britains and Romans, ſo that the Etymology thereof out of our Engliſh Tongue, can by no means ſeem ſo much as probable. He derives it rather from Main a Britiſh word, which ſignifies a Stone; becauſe upon a Stony Hill it is ſeated, and beneath the very Town at Colybuſt there are very excellent and famous Quarries.

The reaſon of its Name.

55. The next year King Edward ſtood ſecure all about him went down with an Army to Nottingham, where he ordered a Borough to be built on the South ſide of the River right over againſt, and a Bridge to be made for entercourſe betwixt them. Thence he marched as far as into the Territories of the Picts, to a place called Bedecanwyllan, where he commanded a Town to be built and ſtrongly forti-

Propoſe to Colceceastre.

Jeal rehe- pe ſe to pamcune hyſee nopye peolus.

Canen in Lancſhire.

The King of the Scots and ſeveral others ſubmit.

Edward dies.

An Account of his Wife Edgiva and her Iſſue.

His Iſſue by Elfreda his other Wife.

SECT. 10. Now did the King of the Scots ſubmit unto him as his Lord and Sovereign, together with the Scotiſh Nation it ſelf, Reginald the Son of Badali; and all the Inhabitants of Northumberland, Engliſh and Danes, in the North as well as in the Southern Parts, as alſo the King of the Strengſedwalli with all his Subjects. Theſe are the great Achievements of King Edward, as they are ſummarily laid down by the Annals, which ſpeak his Power ſo great, that no King before him extended his Dominions to ſuch a Proportion. By another we are told that as it were to complete his Felicity, a little before he died he reduced to obedience the Inhabitants of Cheſter and the Countrey about it, who having conſpired with the neighbouring Britains, had attempted to ſhake off the Yoke; but he by his diligence prevented the joining of their Forces, and by his Courage and the terror of his Name, conſtrained them again to ſubmit themſelves. In ſo great glory he died in his Return toward his ancient Province of the Weſt Saxons at Faverdon a Town of Berkſhire, where for the moſt part he kept his Court, after he had reigned four and twenty years.

56. He was well nigh as happy in his Iſſue as in the courſe and ſucceſs of his Government, yet not ſo happy in that of his firſt Wife becauſe he knew not certainly how to call their Conjunction a Marriage. Concerning their Acquaintance and firſt meeting together, beſides the Monk of Malmesbury, John Brompton the Abbat of Jornval relates, That in the Reign of King Elfred when his Son Edward was young, there was in a certain Village of the Weſt Saxons the Daughter of a Shepherd called Edgiva, who falling aſleep dreamed that the Moon ſhone out of her Womb ſo bright that all England was lightened by the ſplendour of it. The Dream ſhe told to a certain grave Woman that had been Nurſe to ſeveral of the King's Children. She thereupon takes her into her Houſe and brings her up as carefully and tenderly as if ſhe had been her own Daughter, inſtructing her ſo to demean her ſelf as might become a Perſon both of Birth and Breeding. In proceſs of time it happened that Prince Edward, the King's Eldeſt Son, paſſing upon ſome occaſion thorough this Town, thought himſelf obliged in honour and good nature to viſit his Nurſe, which as he did he got ſight of this Maid, being exceeding beautiful, and fell paſſionately in love with her. By his importunity he got her conſent to lie with him, and by one Nights lodging he became with Child, which proving a Son in reſpect to the Mothers Dream, the Father gave him the Name of Ethelſtan, which ſignifieth the Moſt Noble. Some call this Woman his Wife, (he might be Married to her afterwards) and others reckon that Lady for his firſt, whom he Married afterward. However by her he had another Son named Elfred, who died ſeveral years before his Father, and a Daughter called Editha Married to Sithric the Daniſh King of Northumberland. So ſome write; but Malmesbury calls his ſecond Son Ethelward, begotten of Elfreda Daughter of Earl Ethelin, a Prince very well learned and much reſembling his Grandfather Alfred both in Countenance and Diſpoſition, but he died preſently after his Father.

57. By this Elfreda his (firſt or ſecond) Wife, beſides this Ethelward, whom ſome call Elfwald, he had a ſecond Son named Edwin, and a third called Gregory, as ſome write, who ſerook the world and became an Hermit; of Daughters good ſtore. As firſt Edſteda, who became a Nun in the Monaſtery of Rumſey, Egwin, called alſo Edgitha and Edgiva, married to Charles the Simple King of France, Son of Ludovicus Balbus, and Grandſon of Charles the Bald, whoſe Daughter, as we ſaid, Ethelwulf married in his return from Rome; Ethelhilda who was never married; Ethilda married to Hugh the Great Count of Paris, to whom he bore Hugh Capet, afterwards King of that noble Countrey; Edgitha and Elgiva, both which their Brother Ethelſtan ſent over to Henry Emperour of Germany, who beſtowed the firſt on his own Son Orto, afterwards Emperour, and the ſecond on a certain Duke, whoſe Territories lay near to the Alpes. This numerous Offspring he had by his Wife Elfreda. By his laſt Wife Edgiva, he had two Sons, Edmund and Eared, who both of them came to be Kings, as we ſhall ſee; and two Daughters, viz. Eadburga, who became a Nun, and Edgiva a Woman of extraordinary Beauty, beſtowed in marriage by her Brother Ethelſtan, upon Ludovic Prince of Aquitain. His Daughters he ſo brought up, as in their Infancy they all were taught to read and write, and then to uſe the diſtaff and needle; by ſuch employments to paſs the time of their unripe Virginity: his Sons in ſuch a manner, that firſt they might be fully accompliſhed with Learning, and afterward come not rude and ignorant, but like ſo many Philoſophers, to publick buſineſs, as the Monk of Malmesbury words it.

Sect. 10.

Ethelwald dies.Athelstan crowned.At Kingston, whence to called.A conspiracy against him.York seized by Inguald King of the Danes.Northumberland added to his Dominions.

58. Of his Sons, Ethelward died a few days after his Father, and by his death, made way for the Succession of Athelstan, who though the eldest, and legitimated as it were by the after marriage of his Mother, yet being born of a then Concubine, could hardly have obtained the Crown, by reason of the great love and esteem which was born to Ethelward, as well for his own Learning and Vertues, as for the great resemblance he bore to his Grandfather King Alfred. He being dead, and the rest of the Sons of Edward being too young for so weighty an employment, Athelstan by consent of all the Nobility was chosen King, and Crowned at the Royal Town or Village (as Malmesbury tells us) called Kingston, not without the foredesign of his Father in his last Will and Testament, who might possibly guess that his Son Ethelward would not be long lived. He was now about thirty years of Age. By his own pregnancy and care of his Parents, Employment, For Alfred his Grandfather is said to have prefigured to him a lucky Reign, being much enamoured of him for his great towardsness and the extraordinary elegance of his Features. When he was very young, he conferred on him the dignity of Knighthood, by investing him with a purple Robe, a Belt adorned with Gems, and a Sword of the Saxon Fashion, inclosed in a golden Scabbard. He caused him to be educated in the house of his Daughter Ethelfreda, the Wife of noble and valiant Ethelfrede, that by the instructions and example of so great Captains (such we may term them both) he might by degrees be trained up in such actions as might render him fit for that good Fortune and Condition, which the hopes conceived of him did portend. Accordingly after his Fathers and Brothers, he was Crowned King at Kingston upon Thames, a Town as some have written, formerly called Moreford, and standing upon a flat ground, subject to the Inundation of the Thames, which caused it to be removed thither, where now the present Kingston stands. The Kings of the West Saxons now found it their interest, being Monarchs of the English Nation, to remove their Seat into these Quarters, not so much in respect to London (which for opulency and multitude of its Inhabitants, had not been all along these Saxon times so considerable, but sustained great Calamities by Fire) as to the invasions of the Danes, which were frequently made up the River Thames, and to be nearer to the East Angles, amongst whom these Rovers had fixed themselves. Therefore Athelstan, and after him Edwin and Ethelred, were openly Crowned Kings at this Town; which from them took the name of Kingston.

59. Athelstan began his Reign in the sixteenth year of Constantine the eighth, surnamed Porphyrogenitus, Emperour of the East, the sixth of Henricus Anceps, Emperour of Germany, the twelfth Indiction, A.D. DCCCXXIV. His own deserts, and the general affection of the People were not effectual to prevent all inconveniences proceeding from the condition of his Birth. One Alfred made considerable opposition against the choice, as of an illegitimate Person, and conspired with his Complices to lay hold of him in the City of Winchester, and to put out his eyes. But the Plot was happily discovered, and Alfred it seems denying it was sent to Rome, there to purge himself before that Bishop, where coming to take his Oath before the Altar of St. Peter, he fell down, and being carried by his Servants to the English School, there died the third night after. The Pope would not dispose of his Body, but sent to ask the advice of Athelstan what should be done with it, whether it was to be buried amongst those of other Christians. The Nobility and the Relations of Alfred, earnestly desired that it might be bestowed in Christian burial, to which the King assenting, and the Pope therewith acquainted, it was accordingly done, and his whole Estate was adjudged confiscate for his Treason. Such good fortune had Athelstan against this homebred Enemy. In other places he found little trouble, except on the Northern side of Humber; Charta quodam Donatario Monasterio Malmesburienfis per ipsum Regem Athelstanum apud Glastonem Monachum de Glos. Reg. Angl. l. 2. c. 6.

Sect. 10.

He invades Scotland.England invaded by the King.

60. Hereupon Anlaf the Son of Sitric fled into Ireland, and Godefrid his Brother into Scotland, whom followed shortly after Ambassadors from the King, both to Constantine King of the Scots, and Eugenius King of the Humbrians, demanding the Fugitive to be given up, or denouncing a speedy War upon refusal. And as others say, a War indeed hemaded, passing into Scotland with great Powers both by Sea and Land, where he drove his Enemies before him by Land as far as Dunfedor and Werlmore, and by Sea as far as unto Cairness. But Malmesbury affirms, that not daring at all to displease him, without fail they came to a place called Dacor (or Dacre in Cumberland) where each delivered up himself and all his into the hands of the English King, who was Godfather to the Son of Constantine, now ordered to be Baptized in Testimony of the Accord. But for all this Godefrid escaped while they were preparing for the Journey, and with one Turfrid travelling into several Parts, at length got some Men together, and laid Siege to Tork, the Inhabitants of which they assailed both by fair and foul means to let them in, but not prevailing they went their ways, yet were both taken shortly after and shut up in a Castle, whence they escaped by deluding their Keepers. Turfrid not long after was Shipwrecked at Sea, and became a prey to the Fishes. Godefrid, endured much misery both by Sea and Land, and at last came in the posture of a suppliant to the King's Court, who kindly received him; but after he had been profusely feasted for four days together, he got him again to his Ships, grew an old Pirate, as accustomed to the water as a very fish, in the Monk's opinion. In the mean time Athelstan demolished a Castle in Tork, which the Danes had fortified, that therein they might no longer throud themselves. And the large Booty found in it he divided man by man amongst his Souldiers.

61. But a great tempest began to gather against him in the North-western Parts, where Constantine the King of the Scots exasperated by the late Invasion joined with * Anlaf the Son of Sitric (others but more improbably will have him not this Son, but another of his Name who was King of Ireland, and the Isles adjacent) and drew in Eugenius the King of Cumberland, with great Forces from several Nations to their Assistance. After preparations of some four years they invade England by the River Humber, and pass up the Countrey to a place called † Brannaburg or Bruneford, which Camden placeth in Glendale of Northumberland, on the Scotch Borders; Athelstan on purpose giving way, to obtain some better advantage against them, as some write, or, as others, they being fearful to grapple with him. Anlaf perceiving with whom he had to do, puts off his Royal Ensigns, and becomes a Spy in the habit of a Musician, attending with an Harp in his hand at Athelstan's Tent, to which Instrument Singing, he was easily admitted to the King's presence as one who got his living by that course of life. There he made them merry till such time as having eaten and drank sufficiently they began to debate seriously about the work they had in hand, and he all the while made what Observations he could, till then he received his wages, and was put out of the Tent. The Money scorned to carry with him, he hid into the Earth, of which a certain Souldier took notice who had formerly served him, and thereby coming to know him, after he was gone acquainted the King. The King blamed him for not giving timely notice, which the Souldier excused as having formerly taken in Anlaf's Service the Military Oath, affirming that had he betrayed Anlaf, he himself to whom now he was in the same Relation could have expected no more fidelity; but he advised Athelstan to remove his Tent into another place. This Advice was looked upon as very good, and how seasonable it was very shortly appeared. A certain Bishop coming to the Camp this night in that very place, as being pleasantly situated, pitched his Tent. Him Anlaf, with a design to destroy the King, fell upon, being ignorant of what had passed, and easily killed him with all his Followers.

62. Ingulphus (who is more to be credited than any other Historian in this matter) writes that Anlaf though he had brought with him an infinite multitude of Danes, Norwegians, Scots, and Picts, yet either out of diffidence or the craft familiar to his Nation, chose rather by night to surprize his Enemy, than fairly give him Battle in the open Field and by day light. He fell suddenly upon the English, and killed the Bishop who was come but that night to the Camp, which causing a great tumult and noise, the King though a Mile off, and his whole Army took the Alarm, and putting themselves into such order as the surprize would give leave, by break of Day came up to the place of the slaughter, where they found the Invaders tired and disordered by their late travel, and for want of sleep. It happened that Athelstan in person leading all the West Saxons, light upon Anlaf himself, and Turketul his Kinsman and Chancellor,

Sect. 10 Edwin both by word of mouth and by messengers, by Oaths and Imprecations protested his Innocence. But this would not prevail against the Whippers of Parasites who affirmed, that being driven into banishment, he would be commiserated by foreign Princes, and still more endanger the King. Therefore is such a course found out, as under the Notion of Banishment, may tend him away to his long home. A ship rotten of it self, and not able to endure the violence of the Waves is found out, to the Government of which no mariners are appointed, only he himself and his Page (or Armour-bearer) put therein. For sometime they weathered out at Sea, till the young Prince brought up tenderly, and not used to hardship being weary of his life, cast himself headlong, and so perished in the Ocean. His Servant better advised was contented to live, and making use of better fortune, landed with his Master's Boy at a place called Whitland, not far from Dover.

Which is punished with that of the Contrivers.

67. The fact was not long committed before Athelstan's Repentance began to follow, which he is said by a seven years penance to have testified to the World, as by the Punishment of him who was the principal Instrument in the late Tragedy, and whispered jealousy into his Ears. This was his Cup-bearer, who upon occasion being to present a cup of drink to him, one of his Feet slipped, but by the nimbleness of the other recovering himself, he offered these words: Thus one Brother helps another. The King hearing them, and sadly calling to mind how little he himself had helped his Brother, oppressed by the Calumnies of this parasite, caused him to be put to death. This is the tale told by Malmesbury, and by Matthew the Flowergatherer who delivers it (as many other grand Improbabilities) for a truth, whereas the former tells it as a story of which he himself doubteth. But Buchanan the Scotch Writer runs away with it as a certain truth, joining it with more of the same credit, viz. that he was the Murderer of his Brother Edred also, and was vilely suspected to have by his contrivance brought his Father himself to a violent death, so far as Writers give him the Title of Edward the Martyr. The very mentioning of these brings the other into suspicion; for that Edred survived and succeeded Athelstan next but one in the Kingdom is sufficiently known, and the other suspicion shews the Writer both ignorant and malicious. For who but a mere stranger to English History, can imagine Edward the Martyr the same with Edward the Elder, the Father of Athelstan? If one consider his extraordinary kindness to, and care for all the rest of his Brothers and Sisters, this will still seem more improbable; for whose sake as some will believe he obtained even from Marriage, making them his Companions in the Kingdom. His mercifulness to his very Enemies, is taken notice of by Writers who generally incline to quit him from this charge of murdering his Brother, as grounded rather upon uncertain fame and rude songs, than upon certain or approved History. Even such as believe him Author of the Fact acquit him from the Crime, by affirming Edwin to have practised Treason against his Person.

68. Athelstan being dead, after he had reigned sixteen years, though the Annals give him but fourteen years and ten weeks. Eadmund his Brother a youth of eighteen years of Age, succeeded him in the thirty second year of Constantine the Eighth surnamed Porphyrogenitus Emperor of Constantinople, the fifth of Orto the Great Emperor of the West, A.D. DCCCCXL. In courage he was no way inferior to his Brother. In the second year of his Reign he invaded Mercia, which was generally held then by the Danes, and putting them out of Power, took from them five Cities, viz. Leicester, Lincoln, Nottingham, Stanford and Darby, where it seems they had been plac'd by King Edward, but at this time it was not thought convenient that they should continue. For from what Simoon of Durham relates it should appear that he had matter of Jealousie and provocation from the Danes, inhabiting Northumberland, the King whereof Anlaf, from Tork, wasted all Southward as far as Northampton, but was met and stopp'd by King Eadmund at Leicester. Here Peace was made betwixt them by the Intervention of two Archbishops, Odo and Wulfstan, which was ennobled by the conversion of Anlaf, to whom as the Annals witness Eadmund was Godfather the same year, who also a little after received Regenald, another King from the Hands of the Bishop at Confirmation: moreover it is said, that their Territories were bounded North and South by Waringstreet. Who this Anlaf should be is something uncertain, whether him spoken of so much heretofore or another. Huntingdon will have him, another, not that Anlaf who died this very year. But the Annals are rather to be credited, which two years after call this Anlaf (now first of all) the Son of Sitbric, relating that Eadmund now drove both him and Regenald the Son of hansa.

Who invaded Mercia.

Subdues Anlaf, and joins Northumberland to his Dominions.

Bunga pye Ligona cepten 7 Lino-cylne 7 cynong-ham 7 plice stanpopo eac beorape, 7u b cymung peng Anla-pe cynnye ac fulph-
ce. 7 Ey
yican gea-pe, 7u b ceala me cæc hæ on peng Regenole cynnye æt byrceop

Eadmund cymung peng Anla-pe cynnye ac fulph-
ce. 7 Ey
yican gea-pe, 7u b ceala me
cæc hæ
on peng Regenole
cynnye æt
byrceop

Guthferd

Guthferd out of Northumberland which he subdued, and forced to submit to his Sect. 10 Dominion.

Harasses Cumberland, and gives it Malcolm King of Scotland.

Being assisted by Leoline Prince of Wales.

Edmund is stabbd at Puckle Church in Gloucestershire.

Edred succeeds.

The North-umbrians revolt.

Are assisted by Wulfstan Archbishop of York.

Edred dies.

69. The year that followed King Edmund harassed Cumberland, and gave it to Malcolm King of the Scots, on condition to assist him in his Wars both by Sea and Land. Hitherto, though much distressed and disturbed by their Neighbours, the Picts, Scots and English, the ancient Welsh in this Country had continued a kind of State and Government, even after several of them being wearied out, had retired into North Wales, and there erected the Kingdom of Sratclwyd, which we formerly mentioned. From this time they continued under the Power of the Scots, but fell again to the Dominion of the Normans when they had conquered Scots, and at this day their Country retains the Name of Cumbri or Kumri, England, and at this day their Country still call themselves, although the Remainers of them still inhabiting these Parts, by reason of continual Commerce with their troublesome Neighbours, have lost the Language which only sticks to certain Towns and Places, not so subject to alteration. But as to this conquest of Northumberland, Matthew of Westminster gives us farther the Circumstances, that Edmund did it by assistance of Leoline Prince of Wales, and that he put out the Eyes of both the Sons of Dunmail King of the Provinces, whom he had deprived of his Kingdom. Thus did Edmund flourish, giving hopes of still greater things to be performed by him, when in the height of the Expectations of his Friends and his own Confidence; a too venturesome act cut him off, and a strange Accident deprived his People of him. The year which followed this Alteration in Cumberland he kept the Feast of St. Augustine, with many of his Nobles at a Place which has in Writers several Names, but now is called Pucklekerke or Puckle-Church in Gloucestershire, in memory of his first converting the English Nation. As he sat at Meat amongst his Guests, he espied one Leof a noted Thief, who for his Robberies had been banished six years before. Hereat transported with Rage, he rose from the Table, ran upon him, caught him by the Hair, and pulled him to the ground. The Thief expecting no less than death, thought he would not dye unrevenge, but pulling out a short Dagger thrust it into the Breast of the King as he lay upon him with all the violence he was able. He was deadly wounded, and that e'er the Company could turn or imagine what the matter meant, but when it was perceived they flew upon the Murderer, and cut him in pieces, who yet like a furious wild Beast at a Bay laid about him, and e'er he was killed, wounded some of his Assailants. To this lamentable end came Edmund after he had reigned six years and an half, and was buried at Glastenbury.

70. Edmund died not without issue Male, as we shall see hereafter, but his Sons being Infants, Edred his Brother, the third Brother of Athelstan, succeeded him, and was Crowned at Kingston, in the thirty eighth year of Constantinus Porphyrogenitus, the eleventh of Orto the Great, and the DCCCLXVI. year of our Lord. The course of his Actions sufficiently shewed that he did not degenerate from his Ancestours. In his very first year he subdued all Northumberland, which ever was revolted by the practices of its petty Princes, and he so ordered his matters by the Reputation hereby attained, that the Scots swore obedience to him to will whatsoever he should will, as the * Annals express it. But the Northumbrians ever * An.
unfaithful, now also shewed the fickleness of their disposition. The Archdeacon DCCCLXVI. of Huntingdon here talks still of Anlaf, as that he should once more be recalled. 7 Ecce and Reigning four years, again be put to shift for himself. Simoon of Durham him ayar writes of their chusing one Eric a Dane, the Son of Harald, for their King, æ polstan against whom Edred entred Northumberland, and having wasted the Country re- cal 7 he turned. Eric fell upon his Kere in his Retreat, which ingaged him to faceabout, polbe.
and prepare to Charge the pursuing Enemy; which so affrighted the Northumbrians, that dreading again to prove what they had already sufficiently experienced, they cast off Eric, killed Amanc the Son of Anlaf, and with great Presents appealing Edred again, submitted to his Government, and quitting the Administration of their petty Kings, were thenceforth Ruled by Earls, of which one Osulf is reported to be the first. Such is the account we have of this expedition in general, the onely particular of consequence is, that Wulfstan the Archbishop of Tork sided, at least connived, as Malmesbury words it, with his Compatriots in their Revolt, for which he was committed to Prison, where having continued a considerable time (but a year saith Stubbes) he was at last pardoned, and released out of respect to his coat and function. As Edred thus proceeded to equal the worth of his Predecessours, he was taken away in the flower of his Age, when he had Reigned some nine years and an half, and was buried in the Cathedral Church at Winchester.

71. By

Sect. 10. 71. By this time Edwi, or Eadwig (as the Annals call him) the eldest Son of Eadwig King, was advancing to Man's estate, and therefore now upon his Uncle's death was admitted King, and crowned at Kingston, in the forty seventh year of Constantinus Porphyrogenitus so often mentioned as contemporary, as also the twentieth of Orho the Great, in the DCC CCLV. year of our Lord. He was about fourteen years of Age, of Beauty, much above the ordinary comeliness of Men, which got him the Surname of Panculus or altogether Fair; which Youth and Beauty exposed him to the Arts and Allurements of bad people. He is generally ill spoken of, though by some his actions are not reprehended with that disadvantage, which particular prejudice in other writers may seem a little to have procured. By them he is reported to have given extraordinary offence by his inordinate pleasure on the very day of his Coronation. There was in his Court a Lady nearly allied to him, who had a Daughter far exceeding her self in Beauty, though she was very handsome, called by the name of Algina. Mother and Daughter, by their unchaste deportment, had so infuriated themselves into his favour, that neither he could be quiet, nor any publick business be dispatched without them. The design of the Mother was he should marry her Daughter, yet is the said to have had as vehement a desire to partake of their lusts, which the often did, he being wont shamelessly to embrace the one in the others presence. The Ceremony of the Coronation being over, the Feast was prepared, or else they fell into a serious consultation about publick matters. But the King quits the place, and without any regard to so venerable an Assembly as consisted of his Prelates and Nobles, flung away into the chamber of these women, where he cast himself upon a bed betwixt them. The Lords hereat exceedingly fretted, as they had reason, and consulted how to reduce the Youth into their company. This was undertaken by Dunstan, Abbat of Glastenbury, and Kinfi Bishop of Lichfield, who was related to the King, and therefore chosen as one whose authority would sway the more with him. They enter the Chamber and find him in that indecent posture; Dunstan rebukes the women, and gently reprehends the King, praying him by his absence, not to put so great an affront upon his Nobility. He fumes, they taunt and scoff, but Dunstan takes him by the hand, pulls him from them, seizes the Crown upon his Head, which he had cast aside, and brings him back into the Assembly.

Edwi made King.

Who is given to Women.

Is severe towards Monks especially Dunstan of Glastenbury.

Is excommunicated.

Part of his Subjects rebel setting up his younger Brother.

His Ministers punished which he takes to heart and dyes.

Edgar King of all England.

72. The women hereat enraged to all degrees of malice and revenge, vowed to procure the ruine of Dunstan, which they so far prosecuted, that the King caused all the wealth of his Monastery to be seized, and banished him into Flanders, nay so great an aversion he conceived against men of his Profession, that miserable was the estate of Monks at that time, as William the Monk of Malmesbury affirms; who complains that his Monastery, which for two hundred and twenty years had been inhabited by Monks, was now made a Stable of Clerks, for so he terms it. He and the Aurbour of Dunstan's Life, and this Monk are they who tell this story with such tart reflexions upon his Person, which others not so much concerned for the Monastical life, relate more indifferently. However he was a Child, and so apt to be seduced, by the pleasing allurements of women, and the conceit of his Royal Authority, which he looked upon as uncontrollable. But Odo, the Archbishop, is said to have excommunicated and pronounced a Divorce betwixt him and his Algina, and the People so to have relented the affronts offered to Religious People, that the Mercians and Northumbrians revolted from him, and set up his younger Brother Edgar, leaving to him the Kingdom of the West Saxons only, the ancient Patrimony of his Family. As for the two Ladies, Odo contented not himself with exercising his Spiritual Jurisdiction in cutting them off as purrid Members from the Body of the Church, but by the Council and Assistance of the Nobility, caused by force, and against the Kings will and pleasure, to be drawn out of the Court Algina the Daughter, because she did most harm to the King, and being nearer to him in blood, was incestuously used by him as his Wife. But this severity ended not here: they added marks of scorn, defacing her Beauty by branding her Face with an hot Iron; and they lamed her by cutting the Sinews of her Hams, which done, they banished her into Ireland. Edwi having been King four years, took these disasters to heart, and died not long after, (some say two years he lived after his Excommunication) and was buried in the new Monastery at Winchester.

Marth. West. monast.

73. Edgar his Brother, a Youth of sixteen years of Age, by his Death became King of all England, in the one and fiftieth year of the often mentioned Constantine Porphyrogenitus, and the twenty fourth of Orho the Great, A. D. DCCCCLIX

No

Revokes his Predecessors Laws, and calls back St. Dunstan.

His Naval preparations.

No sooner was he advanced, but to serve the Interest of the Party that set him up, in an Assembly held at Branford, he revoked all the unjust decrees of his Brother, took care for pursuing, taking and putting to death the Adulterers of Edwi, and for recalling Dunstan with great Glory, whom within a little time he promoted to the See of Canterbury. Concerning the Government of Edgar, Malmesbury gives us this short account, that not any one year is mentioned in the Chronicles, wherein he performed not some great thing, and necessary for the good of his Country. Yet suffered his Kingdom no violence, either by domestic Treachery or outward Force, a story going, that St. Dunstan at his Birth was told by an Angel, that Peace should flourish in England so long as this Boy Reigned, and as he himself should live. That this Peace and Tranquillity was not obtained by neglect and idleness, we may be sufficiently assured from his vast Naval preparations. He understood and practised the true Interest of his Country, which was to give Laws, and to be Master at Sea. He was so wise as to know preventing Physick to be the best, better to hinder the Invasion of an Enemy, than suffer his own Kingdom to be the Seat of a War; which at best must bring devastation and poverty, and make the Conquerour a very great loser by the Victory. He rigged up such a Fleet as for number of Vessels, may seem incredible. Every Summer, saith Malmesbury, immediately after Easter he commanded his Ships upon every Shore to be brought into a Body. He sailed usually with the Eastern Fleet, to the Western Part of the Island; and then sending it back with the Western unto the Northern, and thence with the Northern he returned to the Eastern, being exceeding diligent to prevent the incursions of Pirates; and Courageous for the defence of his Kingdom against Foreigners, and the Training up of himself and his people for Military employments.

74. Each of these Fleets we are told consisted of one thousand and two hundred Ships, and these also very stout ones, so that the number of all must have amounted to three thousand and six hundred Sail; which * some of our Authors speak expressly. But others write of four thousand Vessels, and there are that add to these three a fourth Fleet, by which means the number will be increased to four thousand and eight hundred Sail, as may be seen in Matthew of Westminster and the Flowergatherer. To sustain this charge, besides the private Contributions of his Subjects (of which we shall hereafter more conveniently speak) he had Eight petty Kings, who being his Fiduciary Clients or Vassals, were bound to him by Oath to be ready at his Command, and serve him both by Sea and Land; which Oath they took at Chester, where he had given them order to meet him, as he sailed about the North of Britain with a great Navy. Their Names are Kened or Kineld, King of the Scots, Malcolm of Cumberland (who at this time it seems hath this Name, though as we said the Cumbrians had thrown off that Title, and taken the other of Earls as more modest) Maccus of the Isles, and five of Wales, the Names of whom were Dufwal, Griffith, Huual, Jacob and Juderbil. Having these then altogether at his Court at Chester, to set forth the Splendour and Greatness of his Dominion, he went one day into a Gally, and caused himself to be rowed by the petty Princes, he himself holding the Stern, and steering the Boat about the River Dee: Waited on by all his Dukes and Nobles in another Barge, he sailed from the Monastery of St. John Baptist, where an Oration being made to him, in the same state and pomp he returned to his Palace. Here when he Arrived, he is said to have told those about him, that then his Successors might boast themselves Kings of England, when by so many Kings they should be so attended, and Arrive, as Malmesbury expresses it, at such a Prerogative of Honours. As for these Princes, Maccus by Florent of Worcester, and Hloveden, is termed a King of very many Islands. Matthew of Westminster calls him King of Man, and very many other Islands. And Malmesbury calls him an Archpirate, by which word a Robber is not to be understood; but as Aferius and others of that Age use it, one skilled in Sea affairs, or a Seaman so called from Pira, which in the Attique Tongue, signifies Craft or Art, but afterward it came to be applicable only to such as without any justice infest the Seas. Not long after, the Governor of a Ship of Pirates, came to be called a Pilote from Pile, the name of a Ship in the ancient Gallick Language, some remainders whereof still continue among the Franks. After the infoleny of these Northern Rovers and Pagans grew to great, all the Maritime Towns throughout Christendom might well be sensible of their danger, and the means of their deliverance, as to express their common Faith, and next their common Refuge under God, on one side of their Coin they stamped a Cross, and on the Reverse a Ship, which gave Original to that,

* Hloveden Florentius wigern.

SECT. 10. that, though much practised, yet little understood custome of casting and naming Crofs and Pile to this day.

75. Another of the Kings and those of Wales was Huual or Huwal, who though he be not placed the first in order, yet if we follow the Account of some Authors, must have been the chief of them all, the Prince to whom all the rest performed obedience. The Book of Landaff bids us take notice that at the same time lived Edgar King of all Britain, Huwell Da and Morgan Hew, which two yet were the Subjects of King Edgar. At that time Morgan Hew obtained all Morganwg in peace and quietness, onely Huwell Da endeavoured to take from him Ustradin and Emwias. King Edgar having notice hereof, summoned Huwell Da, Morgan Hew and Heweyn his Son to his Court, where in full Council he debated both their Titles, and it was plainly found that Huwell Da had dealt ill with Morgan Hew and his Son Heweyn, and for this Reason Huwell was driven from the possession of these two Countries for ever without recovery. "Afterward King Edgar gave "and granted to Morgan Hew and his Son Heweyn these two Lands, viz. Ustradin "and Emwias by name, lying in the Bishoprick of Landas, as his own Inheritance, "and the aforesaid two pieces of Land to him and his Heirs, without the Calumny of any earthly man, he has confirmed by our common Assent, and with the Testimony of all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbats, Earls and Barons of all "England and Wales. And cursed is he by our Lord the Father who separates these two pieces of Land from the Lordship of Morganwg, and the Parish (Dio- cese is meant) of Landaff; and blessed be he of our Lord Jesus Christ who "observes this, and by all Christian People henceforth for ever. Amen. More- over you must know that the writing which on that day was made and written before King Edgar in full Council, was deposited in the Church of Landaff. Fare you well. Now this seems to be no other than the above mentioned Hoel Dba, in Latine called Hoelus Haelus, and sometimes Huual; one of these five Welsh Kings, whom Malmesbury relates, together with Kuned King, of the Scots, Mal- colm King of the Cumbrians, and Macculus the Arch Pirate, or rather Chief of the Seamen and Governour of the Seas, to have met him at the City of Chester, and in way of Triumph to have rowed him on the River Dee, by such a Spectacle to shew him as Lord and Monarch both of the British Earth and Ocean. This is that Huwal Dba of whom we have already spoken, whose Laws faith Slr Henry Spelman I understand were Printed by one Salisbury a Welshman forty years agoe, and dispersed among his Countreymen; but I never had the happiness to see them.

76. This Pomp used by Edgar in the Attendance of these eight petty Princes was, as some write, but the Epilogue to a greater Act of State. For this very year he was solemnly Crowned, having the sixteenth year of his Age, wherein he was made King, omitted this Ceremony till he came to be thirty, out of penance for his former sins of Incontinence, as some would have it, whereas upon his Brothers death he might have received the Ensigns of Majesty e'er he came to be so guilty of these youthfull Crimes. The Solemnity was performed with great splendour in presence of the Nobility, and a great confluence of all sorts of Persons, in the old City Ac mans cestre, say the Annals, otherwise called Bath, on the happy day

Is Crowned at Bath.

Murder laid to his charge with the account of it.

Florentius. Hoveden.

On Æape

man's cept-

the. achie

buend obpe

pope Ba-son nem-

nap. 1 cy-gab Pence-cornece

dag.

On Æape of Pentecost. But as for his youthfull extravagancy toward Women being that cald as by alone wherewith he is charged as the blot of his life (for as for his cruelty which was some objected, of it we have no instance, but one that follows) several Stories are told by the Monk of Malmesbury. Ordgar Duke of Devonshire had a Daughter, named Elfrida, famed for extraordinary Beauty, which caused the King to be in love with her upon bare report. But to be certain he sent Earl Aethelwold his Secretary to see her, resolving to Marry her if she were found to be so handsome indeed. Aethelwold made haste and got a sight of her, wherewith he was so much enamoured, that he concealed his Message and resolved to obtain her for himself, which being easily done, he vilifies her to the King as a Woman very ordinary, and such a Dwarf as would much unbecome his Royal Bed. The King's thoughts are hereby diverted upon other Objects; but at last the Earl's Enemies bring all to light how he had deceived his Master; whom to irrage they omit no words to set out, nay enhance the wonderfull Beauty of the Lady. The King conceals his Anger, and resolving by another Device to overreach him, tells him in a pleasant manner on such a day he would see his Wife, a Woman so fair as she was esteemed. He exceedingly struck with a thing so unexpected, earnestly desires her to provide for his safety, by putting on bad Clothes and deforming her self by all other means imaginable. She had by this time perceived how for a King she had Married an Earl, which raised such Womanish Pride, and Indignation in her, that against the coming of Edgar she dresses her self in the most amiable and tempting manner she could devise, which had such effects upon him, that his Love being the more inflamed by being so long defrauded of her, he appointed for a pretence, a day of Hunting in the Forest called Warewell now Harewood Forest, and there slew Aethelwold with a Dart. The Earl's base Son coming when the thing was done, and looking upon his father's dead Body, the King demanded of him how he liked this Game; to which he answered, That what ever pleased the King, ought not to displease him; with which mild Reply the King's angry mind was so appeased, that he ever after highly favoured the Youth, and expiated the Crime committed upon the Father by the great kindness he shewed to the Son. Elfrida he speedily Married, who to make the usual amends for Murders and other horrid Crimes committed, built a Nunnery in the place where her Husband was slain.

Married

He is fleshly given.

77. Another thing is laid to his charge, that he took by force a Virgin veiled out of a Monastery, and used her as his Concubine, for which he was so sharply reproved by St. Dunstan, and laid it so much to heart, that he willingly underwent a Penance of seven years continuance, viz. Fasting, and the want of his Coronation. But it seems he could not abstain from all sorts of flesh. Coming on a time to Andover a Town not far from Winchester, he would have the enjoyment of a certain Duke's Daughter much spoken of for her Beauty, and commanded her to be brought to his Bed. The Mother of the Virgin not daring flatly to deny, yet abhorring to be a Baud to her own Daughter, resolved to deceive him by the darkness of the Night, and sent a Waiting Maid she had in her room, one that was handsome enough, and not unwitty, as she made it appear. When it was Morning she offered to rise, and he demanding of her why she made such haste? She replied, that she must up and do the work her Lady had set her. The King wondering what she meant, as nothing having doubted but that she was the Duke's Daughter, he besought him to let her free from the Service of her Mistress as a Reward for her deflowered Virginity; a Boon his Majesty could not deny her. He for a time wavering and not knowing how he should take it, at last dissembled his Indignation, put off all with a Jest, set her free from her Mistress, and carrying her away with him, used her with all kindness, and onely kept himself to her till such time as he married Elfrida. These were the Vices of Edgar, of which more noise had been made by the Monks, but that he built so many Monasteries (every year one it's said) that they could scarcely think any ill of one so devoted to their course of life, one perhaps as great a lover of Chastity as Solitaries, in another Person. But it's certain England flourished mightily under him, being a man so answering the Epithete given by Homer to a King, That not onely from cruel Enemies but Savage Beasts he secured his People, laying a yearly Tribute of three hundred Wolves upon Ludwal King of Wales, which when he had paid three years together, in the fourth he gave over, professing there were no more to be Malmesbury.

Exact's a Tri- bute of Wolves from Ludwal King of Wales.

Takes care that Justice be administred.

His Courage and Strength

78. What his Employment was in Summer we have already seen. In Winter and the Spring he usually rode a kind of Circuit to administer Justice to the People, and take care that his Officers did the like. A low man he was and slender, but of such Courage and so strong made, that he would provoke the most robust he could hear of to grapple with him, disdainning they should at all spare him out of respect to his person. It happened on a time, that Kened King of the Scots was at his Court, to whom, as Mathew of Westminster relates, he gave rich Presents with the whole Countrey of Lothian, on condition that he and his Successors at high Festivals should come and attend on the English King when he late Crowned; moreover many Lodging places he assigned him by the way, which to ease them in their Journey were till the time of Henry the Second full held by these Kings of Scotland. This Kened as he fate one day Feasting, said jestingly to those about him, That it was a strange thing that so many Provinces should obey such a little Contemptible man. The words were brought to the King's Ears. "He sends for "Kened as to consult upon some important Affair, and carries him into a Wood, "where none being present but they two, he delivers into his hand one of two "Swords he had brought along with him. Now he tells him they were alone, "and so he had a good opportunity to try his strength. He was resolved it should "now be determined which of them ought to rule, and which to be Subject, "bidding him not stir a foot but decide the Controversie with him, for it was "an ugly thing for a King to talk at a Feast and not be forward at a Fray. Kened "hereat exceedingly abashed, without replying, fell down at his Feet, and begged

G g

his

“ his pardon for what he had spoken in jest without any intended Reflexion, which he readily gave him. So great was his Courage and his Power the effect thereof, that if a Charter of his be to be credited, he subdued the greatest part of Ireland with the City of Dublin, and was Lord of all the Isles as far as Norway; but of this no other Writer makes mention, and instead of a Warriour he is usually styled Edgar the Peaceable. However such was his Fame that if he did not go to Foreigners, they came to him out of Saxony, Flanders, Denmark it self and other places. Malmesbury observes, that their coming over did much detriment to the Natives, who from the Saxons received rudeness and fierceness, Effeminateness from those of Flanders, and Drunkenness from the Danes, being before free from these Vices, as contented to defend their own with a natural and innocent simplicity, and not given to admire the Customs and Fashions of other Nations. Hereupon the Monk tells us he is deservedly blamed in Story. But happy had it been for England had his Successors by their deferred Fame and Reputation given such occasion for Reprehension. He died when he had Reigned about sixteen years in the flower of his Age, and with him all the glory of the English Saxons, nothing henceforth being to be heard of amongst them but Death and Ruine.

79. He had by Egelfleda Sirnamed the Fair, the Daughter of Ordmer, a potent Duke (it's uncertain whether his Wife or his Concubine) a Son Named Edward, by Wilfrida another Concubine a Daughter Named Editba, which became a Nun; and by Elfrida the Daughter of Duke Ordgar, Edmund, who dyed five years before his Father, and another Son called Ethelrède. Elfrida, outliving him made a great Faction, labouring earnestly that her Son should succeed, by objecting illegitimation to Edward. By the assistance of Elfer Duke of the Merclaw, she wrought a great disturbance, which by means yet of Dunstan and Oswald the two Archbishops was composed to the advantage of Edward, whom they maintained for Legitimate against her Pretensions, and shewed it to be the late King's Will that he should succeed him. Edward then succeeded his Father in the fifth year of Joannes Zimifex Emperour of Constantinople, the third of Orto, the younger Emperour of the West, A. D. DCCCLXXV year of our Lord. Presently after his promotion Comets appeared, which portended either the misery of the Inhabitants, or the alteration of the Government. For presently followed barrenness of the ground, Famine amongst Men, death of Cattel, and an horrible Contention between Monks and Secular Priests, which we are to relate in another place, here hinting this only, that it put the whole Kingdom into a Combustion. As for Edward, he was so extraordinarily Religious and mild by nature, that out of self-denial and for quietness sake, he let his Step-Mother order all things as she pleased, giving her all respect as to his Mother, and fostering his young Brother with all love and tenderness imaginable. She on the other side from his kindness and love, conceives greater and more implacable malice, and with the Sovereignty the already enjoyed was so ill satisfied, that she must needs have the Title it self from him. Her purpose she covers by notable diffimulation, till a convenient opportunity present it self for the Execution. At length the poor Innocent Youth wearied with Hunting and fore vexed with Thirst, while his Companions followed the Game and minded not what became of him, hearing that her Houfe was near at hand, alone by himself rode thither, fearing nothing because of his own Innocence, and imagining every one meant as honestly as he himself.

80. She receives him with wonderfull good words, and when (as it seems) he refused to light from his Horse, caused some drink to be given, but when the Cup was at his Mouth one of her Servants privately before intructed to stab him with a Poniard. He exceedingly affrighted with such unexpected kindness, put Spurs to his Horse and fled as fast as he could towards his Company, but the Wound being Mortal, spent with loss of blood he fell to the ground, and having one foot in the Stirrup was dragged through by-ways and trac'd by his blood by those the sent after him, who brought back the dead Body, and they buried it without Honour at Werham. Here they imagined they had buried his Memory as well as his Body, but the place of his Sepulture (it's said) grew famous for Miracles, whereupon Duke Elfer that had an hand in his Death, interred it Royally at Shepton or Shaftsbury. Yet notwithstanding this amends, as he thought he had made, did he die shortly after eaten up of Lice. Elfrida was so convinced of her wickedness that from her Courty and Delicate course of life she betook her self to a very severe Penance; wearing Haircloth, sleeping on the ground without a Pillow,

*Ædgarī Regis Anglorum Charta de Ofwaldes law, hoc est de efficiendis Clericis Uxoratis & introducendis Monachis apud Spelman.
Conc. p. 422.*

227

and herein she continued all her life. But so perished Edward after he had born the Name of King three years and an half; for his Innocency and the Miracles wrought after his death, obtained the Sirname of the Martyr, which opinion of his Sanctity was more confirmed by other great Miseries which shortly after fell upon the Land, which the People did verily believe were inflicted on them for his Murder. The place of the Murder (which Hoveden calls Coiffegate) was Corfe Castle (as Mr. Cambden affirms in Dorsetshire, in the Isle of Purbeck; which for a great part of it is an Heath, (and Forest, like) in his time was furnished both with Red and Fallow Deer. Shaftsbury is also a Town in that County.

And succeeded by Ethelred.

81. Elfreda the second Son of King Edgar by Elfrida succeeded his murdered Brother in the third year of Basilus Junior Emperour of the East, and the seventh of Orbo Junior Emperour of the West, A. D. DCCCCLXXXI. Malmesbury gives us this short Character of him and his Reign. That he rather belieged than governed the Kingdom for seven and thirty years. That the course of his life was cruel at the beginning, miserable in the middle, and dishonourable in the conclusion. To cruelty he attributes the death of his Brother, which he approved, because he did not punish; he was infamous for his Cowardie and Idleness, and miserable in respect of his Death. His sluggishness was predicted by Dunstan from his * bewraying the Font at his Baptism; such a Story is told of Constantinus Copronymus Emperour of Constantinople. Yet is not that a sign of ill nature which the Monk adds concerning him, that being then but a Child of ten years old, when he heard of his Brother's death he wept most bitterly, which drove his Mother into such a fury, that having not a Rod at hand he beat him with Wax Candles that lay in her way till he was half dead, which caused in him such an aversion to them that he could never endure any such Lights to be brought in before him. But to come to the material points of his Reign, his Mother, after she had done her Feat upon Edward, assembled the Nobility together for his Coronation, which was to be performed by Dunstan the Archbishop. His work it was, and he did it though with great Reluctancy, not thinking it convenient to set any other Pretender up. But as he put the Crown upon his Head he could not contain himself, but broke out into these Expressions. Because thou hast aspired to the Kingdom by the death of thy Brother, Thus saith the Lord God, the sin of thine Iniquitous Mother shall not be expiated, neither the sin of those that were her Counsellors; but by great Bloodshed of thy miserable People, for such miseries shall come upon England as it never underwent since it had that Name. Not long after, some three years, came to the Port of Hampton near to Winchester, seven ships of Pirates, and waisting the Maritime Coasts again departed; which (saith the Monk) I pass not over, because amongst the English there is great discourse concerning these Ships.

Who is Crowned by Dunstan.

Ships.

82. About the time of the Coronation which was solemnized at Kingsford, one Midnight, a Cloud sometimes bloody sometimes fiery appeared all over the Land; portending the return of the dreadfull Massif Tempest which had long furcast. These barbarous and inhumane Rovers understanding what the Estate of England much needs be under the Government of a Child, in the third year of his Reign arrived at Southampton (as Malmesbury hints) and from seven great Ships took the Town, plundered and spoiled the Country taking away with them great Boory. Thence they went to the Isle of Tanet which they wasted, when about the same time others from Norway did the same by the Country lying about Chester. Following year these Pirates that had done so much mischief at Southampton harassed again the Maritime parts of Devonshire and Cornwall, and in that which followed three other Vessels arrived and very much indamaged the Coasts about Portland, to which Mischiefs this was added, that the City of London was burnt, by what Accident is not discovered; in the year of our Lord DCCCLXXXI. The Disorders hereby raised in the Land were increased by Domestic Troubles. For a difference arose betwixt the King himself and the Bishop of Rochester, it's uncertain upon what occasion, but the King laid Siege unto the City. Dunstan the Archbishop sent him an affrighting Message, that he had best take heed how he provoked St. Andrew the Patron of the Place; who as he was very kind and favourable to such as well deserved at his hands; so terrible in his Vengeance upon such as incurred his displeasure. But though the King was little more than a Child he could not be removed with such Scarecrows, he continued his Siege till Dunstan was fain to purchase his removal with an Hundred Pounds, which to affected the Bishop as to put him into another Propheticall fit. "He sent him word, that be"cause

England infected with Plagues in several places.

Domestick Troubles.

Domestick Troubles.

* Alii de min gendo solum sequuntur ut Huntingdon.
his verbis :
Minxit nam que cum bap tizaretur in Sacro fonte.

Hoveden

Sect. 10.

St. Dunstan dies.

Sneve deprives his Father of the Kingdom of the Danes.

But is afterwards ousted by Heric King of the Swedes.

Who being repulsed elsewhere is entertained by the Scottish King.

The Danes in valuing all parts are bought off.

They return.

"cause he had preferred Silver before God himself, Money before an Apostle, and Covetousness before him; the Calamities formerly related should speedily come upon him, but he the Bishop should first be dead. And within two years he died, his death being ushered in with strange Fevers upon Men, and Fluxes upon Cattel.

83. Immediately followed these Mischiefs, which one less than a Prophet might foresee, the Danes, having got a measure of the present weak estate of the Nation through the King's sloath and want of Spirit. But they themselves had at this time a Prince of a quite contrary Disposition, one Sneve or Sneve-Otto, as Adam Bremenfis calls him, the Son of Harald the Great, one so undutifully active as to deprive his Father of his Kingdom. He made use of some whom Harald had constrained to profess Christian Religion, which now abjuring they renounced their Faith and Allegiance both together setting up Sneve against his Father, and declaring War against the old Man, who had therein the fortune to miscarry, and flying to a City of the Scelavi called Janne there died of his Wounds. Sneve now rid of his Father persecutes Christians, and breaths revenge against the Scelavi; against whom making War he is twice taken Prisoner by them, and redeemed with vast Treasure. After this Heric King of the Swedes takes occasion to quarrel with him, and engaging with him in several Sea Fights has the better of him, and at length outs him of his Kingdom which he quietly enjoys all his life. Thus justly rewarded for his horrid Crimes, he wanders up and down without relief. Thurco the Son of Haco then Prince of the Normans rejected him as a Pagan, and Ethelred the Son of Edgar (he calls him Adalread) remembering what mischiefs the Danes had brought on this Island, with scorn repels him. At length he is entertained by the King of the Scots, who taking compassion of him gave him free Quarter for fourteen years together. But so enraged was he at the repulse given him by the King of England, that ever after he made it his study how to plague and afflict the Country, sometime by his own peculiar Forces, and sometime by the assistance of others, as we shall see. How true this Story is we cannot assert, the Affairs of the Northern Nations as to those times being involved in so great obscurity. However we thought it not amiss to relate it as suiting with the Fortunes and Inclinations of this man, which proved so great a Plague to this our Country that he seems to have been acted by some extraordinary passion, whether of Revenge or Ambition or both together.

84. Not long after the death of Dunstan the Danes invaded the Maritime parts of Devonshire, against whom one Goda Lieutenant of that County, and Stremewold a most valiant Souldier, made head and put them to flight, but died themselves in the Combat. For two years we hear no more of them, but in the third they infested again the Eastern Parts and spoiled the Town of Ipswich (then and long after called Gippswich, from the River Gipping) their Leaders being one Iustin and Gutwin the Son of Steitan. They were opposed by Brithnot the most valiant Duke of the East Saxons, who fought with them at Maldon, where a great Multitude on both sides were slain, but the disadvantage fell to the English by reason of the loss of their Captain. Now were all Havens, all convenient places of Landing filled with the Danes who swarmed in such Numbers into the Land, that it could not be known where most conveniently they might be met with. The readiest course, doubtless, had been for the King to imitate his Father in manning out a stout Fleet to scour the Seas. But he was too lazy to follow his example, and as generally the humour of a Prince makes a strong impression upon the minds of his People, especially the Nobility and those near about him, as he lay idle and useless, so they contracted a great Rust; and resolved it was by the Advice of Siricius the Successour of Dunstan in the See of Canterbury, and of two Dukes Ethelward and Alfric, that those who could not be beaten with Iron should be bribed with Gold, of which ten thousand Pounds were given them on condition to quit the Country, and no more infest the Coast. An Infamous Example (saith Malmesbury) and unworthy of men, to redeem their Liberty with Money, which no violence can wrest from an unconquered mind.

85. This stopp their mouths for a year or thereabouts, but then their appetite was more exasperated by what they had already tasted, being taught the way how to come by more. They land again in the North, and set upon Bebbanburgh, now Bamborow an ancient Town in Northumberland, built by King Ida of which we have formerly spoken, which having taken they Plunder, and then directing their course to the Mouth of Humber, they waste the Country on both sides the River; Lindsey and Torkshire, burning all the Houses, killing all the Men, Women

Febres hominum & lues animalium que Anglice dicitur nominatur. Latine autem fluxus Interaneorum dicitur potest. Hvoeden.

Hvoeden ad Ann. 991.

Simoen Dunstan. ad Ann. Dcccxcvii.

Sect. 10.

Huntingdon. ad Ann. 13. Regis. Edred. Florent. Wigorn.

Simoen Dunstan. ad Ann. Dcccxcvii.

Simoen Dunstan. ad Ann. Dcccxcvii. & Dcccxcviii.

and Children, and gather together vast Booty. The Country Men in an hasty and discomposed manner made opposition, but coming to fight, three of their Leaders, Frana, Frishegill and Godwin being all of them Danes by the Father's side, betrayed them, and procured their defeat. At the same time no less treachery was practised at Sea, not upon the account of Conflagrancy, but Revenge. It was now thought fit to Man out a Fleet to intercept those Rovers before they could land, the Conduct whereof was committed to Alfric the Son of Elfter, Duke of Mercia; and another Nobleman called Torold. This Alfric, the King for some offence had formerly Banished, but now recalled, yet the affront had so inflamed him with malice, that being sent from London to surprize the Danes in some place of disadvantage, over night he gave them Intelligence, and then fled to them, as writes Florent of Worcester, which his Fleet perceiving pursued him, and took the Ship wherein he fled, yet he by some other convenience escaped from them, but by chance falling upon the East Angles they killed and drowned many of them. But Huntingdon says, that the Danes being forewarned by Alfric, not only all escaped, but afterward with greater number of Ships setting upon the King's Navy killed many of the Londoners, and led away in triumph many of their Ships, together with Alfric the Consul, as he calls him.

86. By this time was Sneve King of Danemark arrived, who had brought to his Assistance Anlaf (or as some call him, Olaf the Son of Thurco) King of Norway, and with a Fleet of nine Gallies entred the Thames. On the day of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin they set upon London, endeavouring to break into and Burn it when it was scarcely rebuilt, but the Citizens so strenuously behaved themselves that by the assistance of God and the Virgin, as the Monks write, they forced them with great loss to retire from the Siege. Exasperated by this repulse, they invade Essex and Kent, which they waste with Fire and Sword, especially the Sea-coasts, and then pass into Suffex and the Province of Southampton, where they burn the Villages, spoil the Fields, and without respect to either Sex, rage with all cruelty against Mankind and enrich themselves with great plunder. At length they horse their Foot, and then through many Countries make their outrageous progress, where they commit the same violence sparing neither Sex nor Age. To put a stop to their march by any force no preparation was made, the sluggish King and his as drowzie Counsellours implore again the aid of money, which by his Embassadors he offers to them to take them off from their furious courses. The sum agreed on was sixteen thousand pounds, in expectation of which they retire to their Ships and pass to Southampton, where they winter. This being a time for Compliments rather than Action, Anlaf the Norwegian King received hostages for his safety, and accepted of Ethelred's invitation to his Court which then was at Andover. Being royally entertained and adopted the King's Son at Confirmation (or Baptism) as also nobly presented, he engaged to depart the Land and molest the Kingdom no more; and accordingly returning to his own Country he kept his word.

87. This was no ill advice given to Ethelred, to take off from Swene so powerful an Assistent. But as Arms signify little abroad except there be good Council at home, so in cases of Hostility, Invasions especially, Consultations without strokes will not avail to remove a warlike, unfaithfull and pertinacious Enemy. The influence of the late Tribute or Bribe operated but for three years, or scarcely so much, and then the Danes that had Wintred at Southampton and staid in England, fetching a compass about West Saxony, entred the Mouth of the River Severn where passing they wasted North Wales, Cornwall and Devonshire, and burning very many Towns killed multitudes of poor People, which done they fetch another compass about Devonshire and Cornwall, where having acted the same Hostilities at last they came to Tauestock and there Wintred. The next year they failed to the Mouth of the River Frome, and wasted the greatest part of Dorsetshire, which done they made many Incurfions into the Isle of Wight, and thence often returned into Dorsetshire so long as they continued in the Island receiving Provisions out of Suffex and Hampshire. The English several times made Head against them, but still as they were going to fight were hindered either by treachery or some other misfortune, and turned tail against their Enemies. The year that followed they had the confidence to come nearer to London, passing through the Mouth of Thames to the River Medway, up which they advance to Rocheſter, and laid Siege to it. The Kentish Men took the Alarm and gave them a sharp Encounter, wherein many fell on both sides, but the Danes remained Masters of the Field. Now they horred their Foot, and spoiled in a manner all the West Wasting East England and other Parts.

Sneve with Anlaf King of Norway makes another Invasion.

Anlaf bought off.

Other Hostilities acted by the Danes.

Sect. 10.

tern Coast of Kent, which things at last roused Ethelred and his Counsellours, so that they prepared both a Fleet and Land Army consisting most of Foot. But King and Commanders being all alike, they delayed their march from day to day, and oppressed the Country where they lodged. Neither the one nor the other Army, did any thing at last tending to the publick good, but burthened the People, wasted the publick Treasure, and by their ridiculous and effeminate carriage more imboldened the Enemy to proceed, who the year following passing over into Normandy, upon what account we know not, at their return did more mischief than before.

Another invasion of the Danes.

88. King Ethelred and his Officers dare peep out when there is none left to hurt them, and are grown so valiant, that who is he that dare oppose them. They not onely threaten the absent Enemy, but go to seek some out in Cumberland, where and in the Isle of Man the Danes of the old standing, lived as quietly as did the Natives. These unarmed People they set upon, harass all the Country with a Land Army, the Fleet being ordered to sail about and meet them, which hindered by contrary winds, it could not doe but those that were therein shipwrecked, saw there was no danger of Foes in the Isle of Man, and therefore landed and overran it. But the Danes the next year returning out of Normandy, entered the Mouth of the River Exe, and presently laid siege to Exeter, the wall of which they battered, resolving to storm it; yet did the Inhabitants receive them so warmly, that not liking their entertainment they thought fit to retire, and vent all their malice on the poor Country which went sadly to wreck, having none but helpless People to defend it, which were murdered in great multitudes, after the loss of their Goods and Houses. At length those of Devonshire and Somersetshire assembled themselves together, and made some resistance at a place called Penho, but being overpowered in Numbers were repelled with great slaughter. This both encouraged and enraged the insolent Enemy, who now horning all his men, did greater mischief in Devonshire than ever, and so returned to his ships, wherein he passed to the Isle of Wight, and sometimes in it, and other whiles in Hamshire and Dorsetshire, without any resistance followed his ordinary course of Life, doing such Execution by the Sword against Men, and by fire against Villages, that he affrighted every thing called English, from meddling with him either at Sea or Land. The King good man, was not a little troubled, and his People bemoaned one another with one Finger in the Eye, and another in the Mouth.

A third Summ paid to purchase Peace, and the departure of the Danes.

89. At length they shake their Pockets, where finding something still rattle, they are again suddenly comforted, and a gay and effeminate Courtier called Leoff, by advice of the Nobility with great Vapours, but fitter to eat than fight, except in the Combats of Venus, is sent to offer to the Danes a bountifull Present from the King who, brave Soul (they must know) did it out of his Munificence not any necessity that he or his had to court them. A third Tribute, for so it must be called is accepted but the sum inhaunc'd to twenty four thousand Pound, which paid down, the Danes obtained till the next time from all Hostility. The Messenger Leoff, while the business was transacting, basely killed another Nobleman as valiant as himself, one Eafic one of the King's best Officers, for which he underwent the pains of Banishment. Ethelred having done so great a work as to buy off his Enemy, in the strength of Reputation gained thereby, resolves to make a new Alliance. He had formerly had a quarrel with Richard Duke of Normandy, the first of that Name about his entertaining and protecting certain dangerous Persons that had fled the Kingdom, and it arose to so high terms, that Pope John the Fifth, whose Letter is extant in Malmesbury's History, was fain to interpose and dispatch his Legate into England, by whose mediation the King was wrought to send his Commissioners to Reven, where a piece was happily concluded. Now though we cannot say, that the falling out of Lovers here, proved the renewing of Love, yet their falling out proved the occasion at length of Lovematters. For after about ten years the Wife of Ethelred being dead, he asked and obtained the Daughter of Richard in marriage, which having now gallantly freed himself from all sollicitudes, he had time and opportunity to solemnize. A great Train of the chief of his Nobles is sent to fetch the Lady, more being found ready to go upon this errand, than to fight against the Danes, and into England they bring her with wonderfull magnificence. Her name was Emma called by the English Elgina a Lady of admirable beauty, whereupon she was styled the Flower and Pearl of Normandy. Her Mothers name was Gunnor, descended from an eminent Danish Family, and therefore did the King enter upon this great Design, out of greater reasons of State. For it was hoped, that her interest might be able to work upon the unreasonable Danes, and so save him both blows and money. Sect. 10.

An Alliance betwixt Ethelred and Richard Duke of Normandy.

Idem ad An. 10.

90. Such was the great Plot when he entered at first upon the treaty of marriage, the full advantage yet of which he did not then thoroughly understand. But having fully perceived the strength of his Alliance, he scorned now to buy a peace, he would by his actions command one, and make the Barbarians pay dear for all the Extravagancies they had committed within his Kingdom. One would now think he would rouse up himself, take the Field, provide himself by Land, of stout and experienced Souldiers, by Sea of skillfull Mariners such as knew how and durst effect such gallant Orders as he should send them. The Danes had by the Sword done much mischief, and by the Sword indeed he resolved they should be punished, they had broken many Leagues and Treaties, and it was no crime to deceive the Deceiver. But this must be done, not in the Field but at their private Houses, not by a fair Enemy but through surprize, not by a fight, but in a Massacre. Letters being sent into all Countries, commanding all the King's Subjects upon a certain day (the ninth of July) to set upon them, and without mercy to destroy them all. The pretence was (as no Massacre but has such kind of excuse) that they had a Design to deprive him of his Kingdom and Life, and to destroy all the Nobility, that so they might bring the whole Island into their own Dominion. The Command was executed, and the Danes thereby, who by a League solemnly sworn had been admitted to inhabit quietly amongst the English, were most shamefully and barbarously murdered. No Sex or Age escaped. The Women were butchered as well as the men, and the Brains of Children dashed against the walls. At London, when execution was to be done, many of them fled into a certain Church of that City, but so sacred a place was no security, for they were all without pity murdered as they stood by, and embraced the Altars. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon informs us, that when he was a Child he heard some very old men who lived at that time, report that the King sent private Letters into every City, wherein Order was given to set on the Danes unawares, and either kill them by the Sword, or burn them to death. But they found out other Devices when they perceived themselves Masters of their Game. They were so barbarous in their revenge, that they digged holes in the ground, and therein set the Danish Women up to the middle, which done they set fierce Mastives upon them, which cruelly tore off their Breasts.

A bloody Massacre of the Danes here in England.

Inhuman Cruelties.

91. A Popular fury, especially, when backed by Authority knows no bounds, nor Authority it self, when it has broken the bounds of publick Justice. There were several Persons of great Quality in the Land, received upon the publick Faith as Hostages, to ratifie the Peace lately accorded. Among the rest a Princess called Gunildis, the Sister of King Swane, and Wife to a Count whose Name was Paling. She had several years before this come into England with her Family, where she received the Christian Faith. She was a Woman of great prudence and temper, had often interposed to make Peace between the Nations, and now lately had given up her self, her Husband and her only Son as Hostages to King Ethelred. Duke Edric, to whose care she was committed, caused her Husband and her Son before her Face to be pierced through with four Lances, and after that her self to be beheaded. She most gallantly and undauntedly took her death, not the least fear or change of colour appearing in her Face, but assured the Murderer, that her blood would cost England very dear; which the might easily say without gift of Prophecy, scarcely ever any Massacre having happened, which procured not to the Actors much farther trouble. But that day that the Order was executed at London, where lay in the Streets vast heaps of dead Bodies, some of our Men of the Danish Nation, more swift than their Pursuers seized on a Boat in the Thames, with which adventuring to Sea they passed over to Denmark, and there related to King Swane, the butchery of their Countrymen in England. The King hereat conceived such sorrow as was answerable to the matter related, and assembling his Princes together, acquainted them with the Tragical Act, and desired their Advice what was to be done. Inflamed with rage and grief for the loss of their Relations, they resolved that Revenge was to be taken with all the force the Kingdom could make, whereupon they were sent back into their several Countries to make Preparations, and Posts were dispatched to the Neighbouring Nations, to invite all Strangers to join with them in the Expedition, wherein they proposed to them great hopes of vast Spoils and rich Possessions. King Swane, now resolved to make another sort of War than formerly, not like a Pirate by taking Advantages and flying here and there, but like a just Enemy to push for all and conquer the Kingdom. And his Provocation being just, he prospered accordingly.

Which were related to Swane King of the Danes.

Who prepares for an Invasion.

Math. Westm.

Lib. 6. ad An. 1002.

Wellingham in Hyppog. Neufrie.

Math. Westm.

Wellingham ubi supra.

Sect. 10.

The account of the Mallice.

92. This is the Account of the Maffacre, as it is given us by the Generality of our Historians, all who charge King Ethelred alone with it, affirming, that his heart being puffed up with pride after his second Marriage upon confidence of his Alliance, on slight fufpicions he expofed the Danes to the Revenge and Fury of the People. But the Monk of Wefminfter, who difagrees in the Account of ten years from the reft, has a ftory to tell by himfelf of one Huna General of the King's Forces, and his chief Minifter, he taking notice of the Infolence of the Danes, how infupportably arrogant they were grown after the late Agreement, forcing the Wives and Daughters of the Engliſh of beft Quality; and offering them all the Affronts imaginable, made a grievous complaint hereof to Ethelred, who conceiving from his words an implacable Indignation, by advice of the ſaid Huna, ſent his Letters abroad into all the parts of the Kingdom: Whenceſoever the Suggestion was receiv'd the thing was done by the King's Command, and ſo much innocent blood ſo perfidiouſly ſhed, crying for vengeance, procured him the loſs of that which by this means his pretences were for to preſerve. The Danes loſt no time, but alſoon as the Spring opened, the frozen Seas with a powerful Fleet invaded England. Some ſay their firſt Hoſtility was acted upon Torkſhire, where King Swane leaving his Forces to reſect themſelves, after their Voyage, failed into Normandy; and there with the Duke made a firm and perpetual League, by virtue whereof, the Normans were to have all the Spoils got in the War with England, fold to them at reaſonable rates, in recompence for which privilege all that were ſick or maimed in the Daniſh Army ſhould have as kind entertainment in Normandy as if they had been in Denmark in ſelf. But our Authours who trace the ſteps of the Danes, make no mention of this Invaſion of Torkſhire; and though Ethelred doubtleſs contracted great obloquy and reproach from his Neighbours by the late Maffacre, yet can we ſcarcely believe that the Normans would join in a League againſt to near an Ally as the King of England.

The Danes land, waſting the Country in ſeveral places.

93. The firſt Impreſſion they certainly made was upon the South Weſtern Parts, where by the Folly or Treachery of Hugh a Norman Count indeed, whom Queen Emma had preferred to the Government of Dewſhire, they broke into Exeter; and having demoliſhed the City walls from the Eaſt to the Weſtern Gate, retired with great plunder to their Ships. After this they waſted Wiltſhire, where a ſtrong Body of Men, drawn partly out of that Country, and partly out of Hampſhire, advanced to give them Battel. But when the Armies were come within fight of each other, Alfric the Engliſh General, whoſe Son's Eyes the King had lately put out for his Fathers betraying the Fleet unto the Danes, now it ſeems intending to be revenged upon the King, counterfeited himſelf ſick, and feigned a fit of vomiting, whereat the Army diſcouraged, inſtead of fighting every Man ſhifted for himſelf, which Swane perceiving and laughing in his ſleeve at the mad Conduſt of the Engliſh Affairs, went to Wilton, which he plundered and burnt, and having dealt in the ſame manner with Salisbury, then returned to his Ships. The year following to the Coaſts of Norfolk he failed, where landing, he plundered and burnt Norwich, uſing ſuch expedition, that he ſurprized Ulketel ad Ann. M.V. the Duke of the Eaſt Angles, and a very ſtout Commander, who having no time to levy an Army, took advice with the Nobility of his Province, and made Peace with him. But this Peace Swane perfidiouſly brake, after a Fortnight or three Weeks time ſtealing from his Ships to Theſford, which he plundered, lodged one Night in it, and the next day ſet it on fire. Ulketel having notice of his expedition, ordered a Party to go and burn his Ships in the Harbour, which they either durſt not attempt or neglected to doe. He in the mean time with what ſecrecy and ſpeed he could gathered together his Forces, and marched courageouſly againſt the Enemy, and as they retreated to their Ships made a fierce onſet. But he was inferior in Numbers, and therefore moſt of the beſt Quality among the Eaſtern Engliſh loſt their Lives. The Danes alſo received very great loſs, and with difficulty recovered their Fleet, which they had never done, had all the Force of Eaſt England been preſent. They confeſſed that in the Iſland they never met with ſo rough an Engagement, as this they had with Ulketel.

Then followed a Great Famine by Land.

94. The following year happened ſo great a Famine, that it forced a Ceſſation, driving Swane back into Denmark, but ſupplied, as it were, the Place of his Sword in the Deſtruction of the poor People of England, as many of which are ſaid to have perished by Hunger, as formerly had done in a year by his Cruelties. Moſt dreadful was the Eſtate of England at this time, which all ſorts of miſchiefs contended how to haraſs. A King it had ſo ſtout and warlike, that as if he had been born to ſleep, and nothing elſe, was little moved by any of its Calamities, Maſh. Wghmon. ad Ann. 1002.

Wallingham. Gemetic. de Duc. Norm.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. M.III. Huntingdon. Hoveden.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. M.V.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. M.V.

Sect. 10.

Mallice.

or if at ſome time he began to awake and rouz'd himſelf upon his Elbow, yet either his own drowzineſs or his adverſe Fortune pulled him down to ſlumber again. The guilt of his Brother's Blood lay heavy upon him. No man can well reckon how many Armies at length he raiſed, how many Fleets he rigged, how often he gave out orders to his Officers, but all this to no purpoſe. For theſe Armies wanting the Authority and Courage of a Prince to give them life, and being rude and undiſciplin'd either mouldred away before they came to Action, or elſe eaſily were overthrowen when they came to it. In War the preſence of a General avails much, much his known and approved Valour, but eſpecially Exerciſe and Diſcipline, which theſe Armies wanting procured irreparable miſchiefs to the Inhabitants, and afforded matter of ſcorn and mirth to the Inſulting Enemy; a fort of Men moſt rapacious if not reſtrained by force, but if vigorouſly oppoſed baſe and cowardly. What the ſluggiſhneſs and cowardliſe of the Prince and People effected not, the Winds and Weather procured; for when the Ships lay at Anchor upon the Coaſts for their ſecurity, ſuddenly would a Tempeſt ariſe and daſh them to pieces one againſt another. And what all theſe ſtill left unfinished was completed by treachery, folly or fearfulneſs of Officers. If they met at any time in Council they never agreed in their Opinions, ſeldom did the Major part concur in any thing that was ſeaſonable and fit to be done, having ever a greater reſpect to their private animofities than the publick good; but if it chanced at any time that they hit upon a point convenient, their Councils were ſpeedily betrayed to the Danes. For beſides Elfric the Son of Elſere who murdered the late King, there was one Edric whom the preſent had made Earl of Mercia, the dreggs of Men (ſo the Monk words it) the opprobrium of the Engliſh, a flagitious Glutton, a crafty Knave who had not been enriched by any thing received from his Anceſtours, but by his own prating and boldneſs. This Fellow being a crafty Diſſembler, and an egregious Counterfeit, as a faithfull Councellour would dive into the King's Secrets, and like a baſe Traitor diſcover them. Often was he ſent to the Enemy to mediate a Peace, and as often ſtirred them up to proſecute their former courſe of Hoſtility. Ulketel or Ulkil (as he calls him) was the only Man that made any conſiderable reſiſtence. At length that no fort of miſery might be wanting, what War had left, that Famine deſtroyed; and the Enemy ſo freely and without controll ranged about the Country, that from any place within fifty Miles diſtance from the Sea they ſeetch away all they pleaſed without the leaſt jealousie of any Ambuſhes, or the leaſt fear of Intercepting.

95. The year following in July an innumerable multitude of Daniſh Ships were ſeen in Sandwich Road, whence ſwarms of Rovers overran Kent and Suſſex, ſparing neither Man nor any thing elſe more than they had done formerly. King Ethelred to oppoſe them raiſed an Army out of Mercia and Weſt Saxony, but never could engage them, for they ſhifted from place to place, not thinking it fit to hazard a Battel, and robbed as they could; ſo that till Winter they conſumed the time, and retired then with infinite Booty to the Iſle of Wight, and there ſlaid till Chriſtmas: when underſtanding that the King was in Shropſhire (where if he could not kill Enemies he could murder Subjects, procuring by means of Edric, as was thought, Alſhelma a Duke of great value to be ſlain, and the Eyes of his two Sons to be put out) they overran Hampſhire and Berkeſhire as far as Reading and Wallingford, which they burnt with other places. Thence paſſed they to Aſſdown, and coming to the River Kenet, found the Inhabitants of the Country make head againſt them, but they engaged and eaſily routed them, and thence without moleſtation, returned to their ſhips. The King and his Courtiers were ſufficiently tired by that Dance the Danes had led them: They thought they had done as much as reaſonably could be expected from Mortal men; no courſe remained to be taken with theſe cowardly pilfering Villains, but to give them more Money, a thing which a generous Soul values not. They ſent to them again and offer to buy them off from their Ravenous courſe, but the price is ſtill increaſed, it being as eaſie to obtain more as leſs of ſuch eaſie Enemies. The Sum is now fix and thirty thouſand Pounds, which is raiſed of the People throughout England al ready ruined by their Rapines. And if ſome tell true, whom we are not willing to believe, Ethelred in the Agreement of this year M.VII, yielded to pay an Annual Tribute of thirty fix thouſand Pounds to the Danes, for a longer continuance of the Peace. We read indeed that he yielded to the payment, but nowhere do we read or ſee that he did pay it and ſtood to his Word. This year it was that Ethelred advanced Edric, ſurnamed Streome, to the Dukedom of the Mercians;

Tempeſts at Sea.

And the Treachery of Edric, which ruined the Nation.

Another Invaſion.

A fourth Sum offered to purchaſe their departure.

Idem ad Ann. M.VII.

Chronie. Mel. coſtate MS in Bibl. Cantuarienſiana.

Se<sup>ct</sup>. 10. a Fellow who having raised himself, as we said, to a great Estate by his cunning and a plausible Tongue, proved shortly a mighty Instrument in the ruine of England.

A Tax for Shipping.

96. The next year produced something laudable, which shewed the King to have a little care of his Estate. He enacted, that every three hundred and ten Hides of Land should set out a Gally, and every nine * Hides find a Corflet and Head piece, and throughout all England he commanded ships apace to be built; which being made ready, he Victualled and Manned with choice Souldiers, and appointed their Rendezvous at the Port of Sandwich, to secure the Bounds of his Kingdom from the Irruptions of Foreigners. Now a Hide (as the Archdeacon of Huntingdon and several others tell us) was so much Land as a man could Till in one year with one Plough, being the same with Cassata and Carucata in barbarous Latin. That it was a custome to tax the richer sort by the number of Hides in those days is very evident both from the Saxon Laws and the Breviary or Notitia of England, called Doomsday Book. But as for what Huntingdon adds, that there never had been so great a number of ships before in Brit-in, which also the Saxon Annals of Abingdon do testify, another Notion of Hide we must have to make this agree with their opinion. For if Mr. Camden's Account be good, who out of the ancient Records of that Age casts up the number of Hides not to exceed two hundred forty three thousand and six hundred, the number of ships must have amounted to no more than seven hundred and eighty five according to the Tax; so that this Navy could not have matched that of King Edgar by some thousands. Others therefore there are who determine otherwise concerning an Hide; and most certain it is as a learned man observes, that it was very various according to the different custome of Countries. Whatever the number of the ships was one would now have imagined that England was in a fair way to be protected, when suddenly Dissention the bane of all good Designs, sprung up among the Great Ones. For this very year did Britric the brother of Duke Edric as ambitious, proud, and deceitfull almost as himself, falsely accuse Wulnoth a great Officer of the South Saxons to the King, whereupon he judging it not safe to trust his life in their Hands, who he knew would condemn him right or wrong, got him to Sea with twenty ships and plaid the Pirate upon the Coasts. Upon a report raised that he might be easily taken, Britric with eighty Gallies went in quest of him, but when he had failed for some time, so grievous a Tempest role that it wrecked all the Vessels and cast them upon the shoar where Wulnoth soon after burnt them. This misfortune so dilheartened the King and his Nobles, that they fairly returned home, and the Fleet by his command came up to London. And so was the People taxed and troubled to no purpose.

Which was rather a burthen than a benefit to the Kingdom.

Turkill with other Danes arrive.

97. The next year after, which was the MIX of our Lord, Turkill a Danish Earl arrived with some ships in England, and in the Month of August was followed by an innumerable company of Danish Vessels commanded by Hemming and Eilaf which landed in the Isle of Tanet, and joyned with Turkill. To Sandwich they pass, where landing they go and endeavour to break into Canterbury, the Inhabitants wherof with their Neighbours of the East part of Kent purchase their Peace by the payment of three thousand Pounds. The Danes then going back to their ships fail to the Isle of Wight, whence passing to the Coasts of Suffex and Hampshire, they exercise themselves in their usual Trades of plundering and burning. Ethelred was again so sensible of his Peoples miseries as to levy Forces throughout the Land, which he bestowed in places near the Sea to restrain their Irruptions, but it was done so unskillfully, at least so unsuccessfully that they came and went securely for all this, and practised their Rapines as before. On a certain time being gone farther than usual from the Sea, the King stept betwixt them and Home, seizing upon the place through which they were to return with many thousand men, and resolved to die or overcome, as was the whole Army. But the Traitorous Duke Edric (who now might practise his Treasons more colourably, having married the King's Daughter Egitha) by subtle Arguments urged, that as Circumstances now stood, it was their Interest to let the Danes repass untouched. He persuaded them, and the Danes got back safe to their ships with great Joy, and much contrary to their expectation. After this when Martinmas was now past they went to the Coast of Kent and resolved to Winter in the Thames. They maintained themselves by what they got out of Essex and other places, lying on each side of the River. They often also attempted to seize on London, were beaten back by the Citizens with very great loss.

Who might have been cut off, but for the Treachery of Edric.

Simeon Dunelm. ad An. 1078.
Morinus Secus.
Hoveden.
Florentius.
* Alio otto li. d. habet ut Huntingdonensis, Math. Westmonast. Math. Paris.

Selden in marci clausis, lib. 2. c. 1.

98. For Winter was over, in the Month of January they left their Ships, and through Chiltern Wood passed to Oxford, which having burnt they returned by the River Thames, and wasted the Countrey on both sides in their Passage. In their return they had Intelligence that a great Army was gathering together at London to intercept them, which caused that part of their Army which marched down the North side of the River to pass over at Stanes, where joining with the other and loading with extraordinary plunder they passed through Surry to their Ships, in repairing of which they spent in Kent the Lent following. Ealder being over they departed into East England, where near to Ipwich they came to a place called Ringmere, having heard that Ulkerel lay there with his Forces. He entertained them very warmly. But the English at Pough gave back, a certain * Danish Servant, on purpose, so it seems, beginning the flight and lost the Field, though the Cambridge Men as long as they could stood to it, and fought very manfully, which procured them much honour so long as the English Kingdom stood. Here fell Ethelstan the King's Son-in-Law, Osui a Noble man with his Sons and many other, together with a great number of the ordinary sort. The Danes being Masters of the Field now had East England at their discretion, which horring themselves they spared not more than the most violent Enemy would do, spending three months in plundering, burning and killing all they could meet with. Having done what mischief they could in the Fens, they burnt Thetford, and Grantebrig, or Cambridge; whence (as Huntingdon writes) going back over most pleasant Hills of a delightfull place called Baleham (now Gogmagog Hills) they killed all they could meet in their way tossing Infants on the points of their Spears. But one man (saith he) there was who deserves to be remembered for getting into a Steeple, and there defending himself from the whole Army. After this the Foot by Sea, and the Horse through Essex, returned to the Thames, where continuing not many days again they quitted their ships and went through into Oxfordshire, which first, and then the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford and Hertford they wasted, and having burnt the Towns, and killed Mankind, with all other living Creatures, they returned again to their ships as so many ravenous and noxious Wild Beasts glutted with blood to their Dens. Yet still about the Feast of St. Andrew they burnt Northampton with all about it, as far as they pleased; and then passing to the Thames went into West Saxony, where having waited that called then Cuningamerfe, and the greater part of Wiltshire, they returned after their accustomed manner to their ships about Christmas.

After a Battel the Danes became Masters of East England.

And waste part of West Saxony.

After more Devastations another sum is offered.

Canterbury is taken and plundered.

With its Archbishop.

99. They were neither yet so wearied with travel, nor satisfied with wealth, but that the year following they took a larger scope than ever. For on the North side the River, with Fire and Sword they wasted all East England, Essex, Middlesex, Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, the Counties of Oxford, Bedford and Cambridge, with half of Huntingdon, and the greatest Part of that of Northampton: on the South side Kent, Surrey, Suffex, with the Counties of Southampton, *Wilt*s and Berks. After all these Messengers are sent to solicit for Peace, promising more Money to buy them off from these horrid devastations. They give good words and accepted the Tribute, but without any intention to keep their Faith, which they presently break, first by Plundering the County in several Parties, and toward Michaelmas by besieging Canterbury, which on the twentieth day of the Siege they take by the treachery of Almere the Archdeacon, and burn part of it. Here they committed all sorts of villanies against the poor Inhabitants, whereof some they slew with the sword, others they burnt; many they threw down headlong from the Walls, and some they hung up by the Privy Members. The Women they drag by the Hair of their Heads through the Streets, and then cast into the fire. Infants being snatched from the Breasts of their Mother they either stuck upon the points of their Spears, or crushed to pieces by driving Carts over them. Alsege the Archbishop they take Prisoner, bind and contumeliously use. Almar the Abbat of St. Austins they permitted to depart. Godwin Bishop of Rochester, Leofruna Abbess of the Nunnery of St. Mildrede, Elfreda the King's Governour, with Monks and Clerks, and a vast number of the Common People were also taken; Christ Church they burn, Monks, Men, Women and Children are decimated, whereof nine are killed, and the tenth reserved to a life worse than death; so that of the whole multitude remained onely four Monks, and eight hundred Men. The People being slain, and the whole City plundered and burnt, the Archbishop is taken out of Prison, driven away bound and wounded to the Fleet, where he is kept close seven Months together. In the mean time these

* Thoretil Mil- rednebor id
est capus far- mice primis figam incepi
et opprobrium
meruit semp. ternum. Hun- tingdon.
Huntingdonensis
sed homines Grantebrig- geire viciunt
ostentum,
unde dum An- gli regnave- rant, laus Grantebrigi- censis Provin-
cia floruit. lib. 6. Hist.
ad Ann. M.K.

Sect. 10.

cruel and more than barbarous Miscreants are visited with a Plague in their Guts, whereof two thousand of them miserably perish. Those that lived were sorely afflicted with the same Disease, and thereupon the Christians take occasion to urge the delivery of the Archbishop, but they still defer it.

100. As soon as Spring appeared, before Easter that traitorous Edrick Stremone, and all the rest of the Nobility of both Orders Assembled at London, where they held their Councils and continued so long till the Tribute was paid to the Danes, which now amounted to eight and forty thousand Pounds. In the mean time Alfge the Archbishop had his Ranfome set at three thousand Pounds, which he constantly refusing to pay or procure was at last murdered by them when they were heated with Wine, and farther exasperated by his prohibiting any one to offer any sum of money for his liberty. Being brought out into their full Assembly, they fell upon him with Swords, Stones, Bones, and whatever came to hand, and at length one Thrum whom he had Confirmed but the day before, out of an impious sort of Piety brained him with an Hatchet. His Body was the day following conveyed to London, and buried in the Church of St Paul. Afterward the Tribute being paid, and the Peace confirmed by Oaths on both sides, the Danish Fleet was separated, onely five and forty Ships remained with the King for the Defence of England against all Foreigners on these terms, to be maintained by him with Victuals and Clothing. From the Old Saxon Lambardus de prifis Angl. Legib. f. 128. Dane-geld h.e. ad Danos nannus fce. Bau. Geldet. Gelt, Belgis et Germanis etiamnum Nannus. Vocatur alius depe-gylt-fce Nannus Militaris. Lege Ingulphum. it is resolved that a yearly payment should be made of Money, which from those who usually were the Practisers of this Trade was called Danegeld, that is to say, twelve pence upon every Hide through the whole Land, for the Pay of those that should be employed to hinder the Irruption of Pirates. This we are told by several Authours, continued from this or the following for thirty eight or thirty nine years, till it was remitted by Edward the Confessor, the Son of King Ethelred. The Reader must take notice that there were two sorts of Danegeld. The one was, that Tribute or Tax so often mentioned by us, whereby our English Saxons were forced to purchase Peace, and remove Hostilities and Rapines upon occasion, the several sums whereof we have expressed in their places. It was not paid yearly, but levied now and then as the necessity of the Kingdom required. The other was this first raised in the Year of our Lord MXII. (the same wherein the eight and forty thousand Pounds were paid) to pay the Danish Navy which was now hired to guard the Sea, and defend the Coasts.

101. But both sorts alike contributed to the Ends and Designs for which they were paid. The former took but off the perfidious Danes for a small time, who then again without regard to Oath or Promise violated the Peace in expectation of another gratuity to be bestowed upon them. And this other was so far from securing the Coasts by scouring the Seas, that Turkill who staid behind as Admiral of this now English Fleet seems to have done it to no other purpose (besides the fleeing of the poor Nation of more Money) than to give Intelligence to Swane when it would be most seasonable to reinvade the Land. In July the year following with a strong Fleet he landed at Sandwich, where having staid but a few days, coasting about East England he entered the Mouth of Humber, whence he passed up into the Trent (which together with Ouse out of Torkshire falls into Humber) and sail'd to Gainsborough where he landed and encamped himself. Hither without delay repaired to him Earl Othred with the Northumbrians, the Inhabitants of Lindsey (that Part of Lincolnshire Northward of Lincoln wherein Gainsborough stands) afterward those of Fisburgh, and by degrees all such as inhabited Northward of Watling Street (the great Highway crossing the Land from the East to the Western Sea) yielded up themselves to him, and delivering up Hostages swore to him Allegiance. He onely now imposed upon them the furnishing of his Army with Horses and Provisions, and then delivering the Hostages and the Fleet into the Hands of Canute his Son, with a choice Party of Auxiliaries taken from amongst the English, undertook an Expedition against the Southern Mercians. Having passed over Watling Street he gave order to his Men to waste the Fields, burn the Villages, rob the Churches, kill all the Males they could meet with, relieve the other Sex for their lust, and doe all other sorts of mischiefs they could devise. This being fully exercised, in the terror thereof he came to Oxford, and became Master of it sooner than he expected, where having received Hostages he hastened to Winchester, the Inhabitants of which conque-

Who is slain by them.

Dane-geld raised to secure the Coasts from Pirates.

Swane and his Danes are master'd of great part of the Island.

Simeon Dunelm. ad Ann. MXII.

Vide Simeon. Dunelm. Florent. Wigorn. Hoveden.

Lambardus de prifis Angl. Legib. f. 128. Dane-geld h.e. ad Danos nannus fce. Bau. Geldet. Gelt, Belgis et Germanis etiamnum Nannus. Vocatur alius depe-gylt-fce Nannus Militaris. Lege Ingulphum.

conquered also by the terror of his Cruelties, without delay made Peace with him, giving up what and how many Hostages he required.

102 From Oxford he bent his course for London, and in passing the Thames being neither careful for finding out a Bridge nor a Ford lost many of his Men. He endeavored both by force and all sorts of devices to take this City, but King Ethelred, together with Turkill the Dane being then here Resident, he was beaten off and went to Wallingford, after that to Barth, where waiting all in his way he staid some time and refreshed his Army. Thither came to him Ethelmar the Earl of Devonshire with other Officers of the Western Parts and made Peace with him, giving up their Hostages, which things accomplished according to his desires, and being returned to his Fleet he was by all the Nation of the English both flattered and accounted King, if by right one can call him a King (saith our Author) who acted all things in a manner like a Tyrant. The Citizens of London concluded that it was not safe for them to strive against the universal current, and therefore sent also their Hostages and made their Peace, for they fear'd he would be so enraged against them that having spoiled them of all they had he would either command their Eyes to be pulled out, or their Hands or Feet to be chopped off. Ethelred now in a manner unkinged thought it most consistent with the statuteness of his Fortune to send away Emma his Queen, with his Treasure and his two Sons Edward and Elfred into Normandy to her Brother Richard, the Second of that Name, Duke of that Province. He himself continued sometime at Greenwich with the Danish Fleet, then lying in the Thames, and thence removed to the Isle of Wight, where having kept but a sad Christmas he followed them into Normandy, and at Rouen was splendidly entertained all the time of his abode. In the mean while Swane the Tyrant at Gainsborough laid insupportable Taxes upon the Countrey, besides the contribution for maintenance of his Fleet. And Turkill at Greenwich was not behind hand in his Exactions for enriching of himself and his Followers. So that they were fully agreed in this by their Violence and Rapines to harass and exhaust the poor English Nation.

103. But Swane to all his other cruelties and impieties, added one which in the opinion of our writers, completed his condemnation. He exacted a grievous Tribute from the Town of St Edmunds Bury, or that where the Body of that King and Martyr then rested: Moreover, he would often detract from the worth of the Martyr, and dared to affirm he had no holiness. In case the money were not speedily paid, he often threatened that he would certainly burn the Town over the heads of the Inhabitants, utterly subvert and demolish the Church of the Martyr, and put the very Clerks to various Tortures. Now to tell a story which is so generally told, and was so universally believed, because he would not moderate at all, say they, his wickedness; Divine Vengeance would not suffer the Blasphemer longer to live. At Gainsborough, as he held a general Assembly, when it grew toward Evening, being incircled with Armed Men, he cast out these said threats, but he saw presently St Edmund coming Armed upon him, whereupon he cried vehemently out, Help, help, fellow Souldiers, look here, St Edmund comes to kill me, which words as he was speaking, he received a mortal wound by the Saint's hands, fell from his Horse, and lying till the dusk of the Evening in great torment, he then died on the second of February, and was carried to Tork and buried. So our writers report from the Legend of St Edmund, which seems to hint this truth to us, that Swane was killed by an unknown hand; to be sure here he ended his days, and by his death ennobled this Town more than by his making it the Seat of his Kingdom or Tyranny, for so it was; here being his chief Residence all the short time of his English Royalty; here lay his Ships, hence he made excursions into all Parts.

Is as King esteemed.

Ethelred sends his Wife and Children to Normandy.

Swane exacts a tribute from Edmundsbury.

Is killed by an unknown hand.

Gainsborough.

Danorum Regem qui Swane patri apud Gainsburh mirabiliter et miserabiliter extincto successerat, regnum tandem cum eodem Cnuto aequo pariter.

104. This Town conveniently seated upon the River Trent, which here Ebbs and Flows to a considerable depth, and by the convenience of Navigation and Traffick, hath procured it two famous Marts in a year, each of them of nine days continuance, is both ancient, and was of good account before it became more known by being the Rode of the Danish Ships. To omit impertinent Etymologies nuper Editio hæc habet: Geney-bupuh, vel fortè antiquius Geneypp-bupuh ab Angl. Sax. Geney Perjugium Aylum & Bupuh Oppidum. q. d. Oppidum perjugis Aylum.

Sect. 10.

Denique immensum vulgèra dici qua in generalis placito quod apud Gainsburh remouetur, hoc eadem militans reuerit, &c. Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. 1014. De Edmundo cognom. Ferro latere sic Ingulphus: qui fortissimè dimicauit contra Cnutum

Sect. 10. as if it had its name from being an Asylum or Refuge of I know not who, or from what, it was called Gainsborough or Gainsburb (in Latin Gainorumburgus) as indeed being the chief Burgh, Borough or Town of the Gaini or Gains. If it be demanded who these Gaini or Gains were, I answer, the same with those of which Ethelfred the Father-in-law of King Alfred, was Earl. Afflerius writes, that Alfred Married Exorem of Mercia Nobilem scilicet generis filiam Ethelfredi Gai-norum Comitit qui cognominabatur Mucil. That Alfred Married a Wife out of Mercia, one of a Noble Stock, viz. the Daughter of Ethelfred, Earl of the Gaini or Gains, who was Surnamed Mucil or Great. There was then a sort of People called Gaini or Gains, and these Gaini were seated in Mercia, to which Kingdom of old Lindsey did belong, as is most evident, and not to Northumberland, from which it was separated by that River, though some particular Conquests of these Petty Kings of that Tract might cause sometimes some places to be mentioned, as within the Bounds of their Kingdoms, to which for the main they did not belong. The Reader must observe that, besides the common Names of Jutes, Angles and Saxons, when these People Planted in Britain certain Select Companies of them had peculiar Names, even as the ancient Britains themselves had, which either happened to them from their Principal Leaders or Governours, or were Names they brought from beyond the Seas, or else proceeded from some other accidents. Thus some of the Northumbrians were called Deiri, others Bernicii, the West Saxons were called Geuiffi, and we read of a People called Wiccii, and another Meauuari Seated in Hamshire, not far from Portsmouth, besides the Girni, who as appears from Inglufius, lived not very far from the Gaini, and inhabited the Fens, lying in the Counties of Lincoln, Northampton, Huntingdon, and Cambridge. Those Gaini were such a sort of People, from which this place being their principal Town or Burgh, received its name, as did Ethelfred his Title, though he was descended of the Bloud Royal of Mercia. The Burgh of the Gains it was, and long after the death of Swane gave it not name, yet Habitation to the Noble Barons of Burgh, who by the Scotch Earls of Atbol, and the Percies descended from Sr. William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, by whose intercession it obtained from King Edward the First (after the Conquest) the liberty of having a Fair. This digression is too much not to be practised upon the name of every Town; but so much I ought to this out of gratitude, having received in it a great part of my Education; though born in that of Nottinghamshire, which, on the other side of the River, stands over against it.

105. Swane being dead, his Subjects the Danes, chose Canute or Cnut his Son, for his Successour. But the Inclinations of the English were toward their own true and natural Prince, whom hoping that he would demean himself more like a King for the time to come, as being disciplin'd sufficiently by adversity, they sent for home out of Normandy. Ethelred, before he should put himself into their hands, thought fit to send over his Son Edward to promise all good deportment, and found the affections of the Nobility and People, who having found all things correspond with his desires, returned back with confidence to fetch his Father. The King was received with all joy and applause imaginable, and to make a Show, that he had offered violence to his former disposition, and of compliance with their expectations, used all dispatch in levying an Army against Canute, who lying now at Gainsborough, with the Fleet and Hostages was not wanting to himself, but spent his time in raising Men, and getting Horses, threatening to chastise severely the Revolters from his Father's Empire. But Ethelred's Forces took him before he was fully prepared, and constrained him to quit the Parts of Lindsey, the Inhabitants whereof, for their so readily siding with strangers, as they found them, they put to death. Canute Sailed away with his Fleet, and by the course of the Winds, was driven into Sandwich Road, where to revenge himself upon the English Nation, he miserably deformed the Hostages he had in his power, cutting off their Ears, Noses, and Hands, and depriving some of their Genitals. This done, he set them on shore, and departed into Denmark to recruit his Army. These Danes being gone, another Calamity succeeded them; for on the twenty seventh of September, the Sea arose to such an height by the impetuosity of Wind and Tide, that it brake the Banks, and overwhelmed many Villages, drowning a great multitude of surprized People. However the Nation was hereby impoverished, yet necessity urging a Tribute of thirty thousand pounds, was levied for paying the Danish Fleet, which lay at Greenwich.

106. The year following, being the MXV. of our Lord, a great Assembly of the Estates was held at Oxford, as well of Danes as English, where by advice of

And Gains where

Canute chosen King of the Danes.

Ethelred receives his Kingdom.

Driving Canute out of Lindsey, and those parts.

An Inundation.

Malmsh. Matth. West. Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. 104.

Edric Streone, the King caused several Danish Noblemen to be put to death under pretence of a Conspiracy against his Person. Sigeforth and Morcar, the Sons of one Earningun, of a place called Seamenburg in Northumberland, Edric drew by good words into his own Lodging, and there secretly murdered them. Their Servants and Dependants thereupon arose, and endeavoured to revenge their death, but were beaten back by the King's Forces, and so closely pursued, that they were constrained to betake themselves into the Tower of St. Fridewith's Church, where Fire being set to the Steeple, they were burnt to Ashes. The King seized upon the Estates of the murdered Earls, and commanded Alghitha the Wife of Sigeforth, to be conveyed to the Town of Maidulf (or Malmesbury) and there to be kept in Custody as a Lady of great Nobility and Interest. But not long after, Edmund the King's Son coming thither, fell in love with her, and without his Father's knowledge, married her, after which, he took her along with him into Northumberland, and there seized on the Estates both of Sigeforth and Morcar his Brother. At the same time Arrived King Cnut from Denmark, together, as some write, with two other Kings, Lachman of Sweden, and Olan of Norway, and made for the Port of Sandwich, where it's said that Turkil joyned with him, and gave the English a notable defeat. To be sure Cnut, Coastling about Kent, entered the mouth of the River Frome, and by it passed up into the Counties of Dorset, Somerfet and Wiltz, where he committed all sorts of Hostilities. King Ethelred at this time lay sick at Cosham, a Town in Wiltshire, but had his place very well supplied by his Son Edmund, whose onely infelicity it was, that the false and traitorous Streone was joyned with him in command, which not onely hindered his present success, but brought him into great danger of Life. For Edric made a faction in the Army, and plotted how to have him slain, which being timely discovered, the Prince was forced for his security to depart from the place where he lay. Now whether this discovery made him desperate, or for that he was before prepared, and resolved so to do, for other reasons, he openly revolted; carrying away to Cnut forty of the Danish Ships which served the King, to whom he submitted as his Leige Lord. The West Saxons awed by his Inroads, did the same: gave up Hostages, and made provision of Horses for his Army.

Edric revolts, swearing obedience to Cnut.

The Country waited on all hands.

107. Cnut being thus strengthened beyond expectation, in the following year, which was the MXVI. of our Lord, with Edric the Traytour, passed over the Thames at Greekhead, about Christmas's Holydays, and Invaded Mercia, where in Warwickshire especially, he burnt all the Towns, and killed all Persons he could meet with. Edmund the King's Son, upon the Report, gathered together what Forces he could, but when they were to march, the Mercians refused to engage against the Danes and West Saxons, except King Ethelred and the Londoners would joyn with them, and thereupon the Army disbanded it self. But Christmas's being over, Edmund raised more Forces, and sent to London to his Father to come to him with all the preparations he could make, Ethelred complied with him, and they joyned their Forces together, but by the craft of the Enemy, a Rumour was spread abroad, that if the King did not carefully look to himself, he would speedily be betrayed. This struck such a fear into this pusillanimous Prince, that he disbanded his Army, and retires back to London, which done, his Son hastes into Northumberland, as was imagined to raise a greater Army against Canute. But in this they seemed well agreed, that whereas on one side Canute and Edric waited the Country, on the other, he and Vithred Earl of Northumberland, did the like, this being the onely difference that one Party harassed the poor People, because they would not revolt, and the others pretended to punish them for their neutrality; for, first Staffordshire, and then Shropshire and Leicestershire, they miserably waited because they refused to fight against the Danes. In the mean time Canute and Edric Streone, committed all acts of cruelty in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Northampton, Lincoln and Nottingham, and at last pierced into Northumberland.

108. This approach of their obliged Edmund Clito, as our Writers call him, to leave off his Trade of pillaging, and to betake himself to London. Vithred hereupon hasted into Northumberland, where shortly after he was constrained to submit himself to Cnut, to give up his Country; and deliver Hostages into his Hands, which notwithstanding either by Command or Permission of Cnut, he was killed by one Turebrand a Danish Nobleman, and with him one Turketel, the Son of Navene. This done, Cnut preferred one Eric to be Earl of Northumberland, and hasted Southward by another way to his Fleet; with which Sect. 10. Compara Matth. West. cum. Sim. Dunelm.

Sim. Dunelm. ad Ann. MXVI

Sect. 10.

Etherek dies.

Is succeeded by Edmund in West Saxony.The rest obey-ing Canute.Several Battles twixt Edmund and Canute.Canute besieges
London.

which he joyned his Army before Easter. About the same time Ethelred died at London on the two and twentieth of April, after a tedious and ill management of affairs for seven and thirty years, and was buried in the Church of St. Paul. Edmund his Son by the Nobility at London was chosen his Successor, not his Son by Emma his Queen; but as Matthew of Westminster says by an ignoble Mother, though others affirm her the Daughter of an Earl called Thored, and Ethelred's former Wife. Matthew writes, that though his Mother was base he illustrated the Ignobility of her Descent by the Ingenuity of his Mind, and the Activity of his Body, and indeed such was his Courage and indefatigable Industry, that he obtained thence the surname of Ironside. He having obtained the Title hastened into West Saxony, where he was received and owned by the People of those parts, while a far greater Number with many Bishops, Abbats, and others of the Nobility obeyed Canute as their Sovereign, whom being assembled they had chosen for their King, admitted at Southampton to that Dignity and sworn to him Allegiance, having abjured the Race of Ethelred, and received an Oath from him of good Government in all, as well Religious as secular Affairs.

109. Canute much animated by so powerful a party halted to London with his Fleet about Rogation week, where being arrived on Surry side, he caused a great Ditch to be made, and drew up his ships Westward of the Bridge. The City he begirt with a deep and broad Trench, and with armed men, and often attempted by force to take it. But the Citizens so manfully demeaned themselves, that perceiving he lost but time, and that the Defendants were to be starved out, he left a guard for his ships, and hastened into the West to attack Edmund e'er he could be provided, who indeed was provided ill enough, but as he was with the Company he had got together, he ventured to give him Battle at a place then called Peonun (or Pea) near Gillingham in Dorsetshire with such success, that he forced his Enemy to retreat. Encouraged herewith he made greater preparations, and Midsummer being now past resolved to fight Canute the second time, whom meeting near a Town called Swarthan, he gave him Battle but could only defend himself, though he performed all the Offices both of a stout Souldier, and an expert General, because Edric the Traitor together with Almar and Algar, the chief of the Nobility, having command of the Hampshire or Wiltshire Men, sided with the Danes. It was a drawn Battle, this day the Armies being parted by the darkness of the Night. The next Morning they renewed the Fight, and King Edmund had won the Garland, but for the cunning device of that perfidious Edric, who perceiving Victory inclined to his side, cut off the Head of one Osinear, a Man that in the face very much resembled the King, and lifting it up on high, called to the English bidding them behold the Head of their Party, and if they respected their own Lives, be gone as fast as their Heels could carry them. This very much startled and discomposed them, till Edmund sensible of the cheat from an Hill made known himself to his Souldiers, and tossed a Javelin against Edric, whom yet it had the fortune to miss. They continued the Fight till it grew dark, and then parted as they had done the Night before.

110. Canute seeing what little advantage he was like to receive from a pitch Battle discomfited in the dead time of the Night, and making towards London where he had left his Ships, again besieged the City. Edmund when he knew he was gone, with speed marched into Wessex to recruit his Forces, and now the perfidious Edric, having sufficient experience both of his Valour and Conduct, thought the only way was to be reconciled to him, that he might reveal his Councils, and by his treacherous Insinuations give a Check to the current of his good Fortune. He made application to him, owning him for his natural Prince, sworn for the time to come to be faithful to him, and obtained Pardon for what was past. Being sufficiently recruited, he hastened to London, and raised the Siege, beating off the Danes to their ships. After two days he passed the Thames at Brentford, where many of his Men were lost in the Water, yet coming upon the backs of his Enemies, he put them to the rout. By his loss sustained in passing the River, and the several Engagements, the Number of his men was so diminished, that he found himself obliged to return into Wessex, to fill up his troops, which the Danes perceiving returned and laid close siege to London, which they attacked by all means possible. Yet did the Industry and Courage of the Inhabitants, still frustrate all his Attempts, so that despairing he drew off his Men, and with his Fleet, entered a River then called Arenne, where landing in Mercia, he burnt the Villages, killed the Country People, and made havock of all things at his pleasure. The Foot he caused on ships to pass to Medway, and

De ca sic Matim. Erai iste Edmundus non ex Emma natused ex quadam alio quam soma obscura recondit. De gestis Regum Angl. lib. 2.
cap. 10.

Sim. Dunelm.
Malmsb.

Florentie Wigornius.
Aren.

and the Horse by Land with the Captives and Cattel. In the mean time Edmund Ironside was not idle, but the fourth time having levied a strong Power of Men out of all England crossed the Thames again at Brentford, and marched into Kent, where at a place called Ostford, he found and engaged the Danes, who not able to sustain his violence fled such of them as were horsed into the life of Shepey. All he could take he put to the Sword, and had his Prudence as well as his Courage stood by him, he had obtained a complete Victory. But he was so blind as not to perceive the Treachery of Edric, who by specious allegations procured him to stop his pursuit at Englesford.

111. Edmund finding the Wessexons most firm and true to him, after this Success for Recruits returned into that Countrey, the opportunity of whose absence Canute took to vent his malice and revenge upon a naked People, for going into Essex he thence invaded Mercia, where he shewed more Cruelty than ever; commanding his Men to omit no Act which could be committed against Enemies. Edmund Ironside with an Army gathered out of all Countries overtook, and engaged them in their Retreat at a place called then Afsandune (or * the Hill of an As) now corruptly Afsdune in Essex. The Battle was fought with great resolution and vehemence on both sides, and Edmund had great hopes of gaining the Victory, which the wretched Edric Stroome perceiving as he had engaged formerly to Canute (having coming over for such a purpose) with the Troops he commanded fled over to him, and so leaving the English overmatcht, whom by casting out words again of the King's death he had laboured to discourage, by his Treachery procured their Defeat and Ruine, for they never received a greater blow, almost all their Nobility here falling, particularly Alfric, Godwin, Ulfketel and Ethelward all Dukes: Eadnoth also the Bishop of Lincoln (of Dorchester rather) and Wolf an Abbat who came to the place to pray for the Army, amongst the rest lost their lives, yet did not this disaster, so far discourage Edmund, but that e'er long he was in case to make another Trial of his Fortune in the Field, of which Edric and those of his Faction fearing the Issue, again circumvented him by their wiles, persuading him for quietness and security sake to divide the Kingdom with Canute. After much reluctancy he was drawn to consent, and after many messengers to and fro, and Hosiages received, an Interview of the two Kings was appointed at Dorkirf in Glocestershire, a place situate somewhat low upon the Bank of Severn, Edmund with his men taking the Western, and Canute with his Danes, the Eastern parts side, both the Kings from their Armies waited over into a small Island called then Olanegge, now the Eight, where by oath a Fraternity and firm Peace they established, and divided the Kingdom, which concluded they interchanged their Arm, and the Habits they wore, and having settled the Pay which should be allotted to the Fleet, each repassed to his Followers.

112. Such is the Account which the History that goes under the name of Simeon of Durham, gives us of this matter: others do otherwise relate it. Malmsbury having laid what the Issue of the Battle was at Afsandune, tells how Edmund surnamed Ironside betook himself with very little Company to Glocester; there to gather new Forces, and set upon his Enemies who he thought would be secure after the late Victory, as he saw convenient. Canute was aware of him, and so industrious as to attend and watch his courtes. They were coming to a fresh engagement when Edmund demanded a single Combat, that for the ambition of but two men, the blood of many innocent Persons might not be shed, and they two without any inconvenience to their Subjects, might decide the controversy in their own Persons, and hereby obtain for the care of their People, great renown in future Ages. But Canute was deaf on this Ear, affirming he had Courage enough but not strength sufficient to encounter a Man of so vast a size, and for an expedient propounded, that each of them should enjoy what their Fathers had held, from whom they had both received just Titles. The proposal was well received by the Armies as very equitable, and which would give some breathing to the poor English Nation, so miserably spent by these perpetual Hostilities; and Edmund by this universal approbation was overcome and silenced, the Accord being that he as his Hereditary Kingdom should hold the West Saxons with the Southern, and Canute Mercia with the Northern Parts. Thus one of our Authors speaks of an Accord without so much as the mention of a Combat, another hints that mention was made of a Combat but it took no effect; but another there is who writes both of the Proposal, and the Fighting of the Duel.

A bloody Battle at Af-sundune.

Upon which a Division of the Kingdom ensued.

A farther account of the Battle and Accord betwixt Edmund and Canute.

* In nomine qui Afsandune id est Mons Asini nominatur, abesseunt, confectus Sim. Dunelm.
† Canutus Anglorum
gens, Flec Engle, Flec
Engle, de dis Edmund, quod interpretatur
Fugie Angli, Fugie morum est Edmundus.
Hamingd.
Hist. lib. 6.

Sect. 10.

Another Relation of it.

113. Henry the Archdeacon of Huntingdon speaking how after the Battel at Elsfelduse (as he calls it) the Armies in Gloucestershire the seventh time faced each other, adds, that the Noblemen on one side dreading the courage of Edmund, on the other of Cnut, began to mutter among themselves what Fools they were so often to venture their Lives, and how they should let them fight alone, who designed alone to Reign. This saying pleased well enough the Kings, for Cnut was a King of no small honesty. The Kings therefore fought a Duel. Their Darts and Lances on both sides being broken, they fell to it with their Swords upon each others most incomparable Armour, the noise of which struck the ears of the Lookers on with terror, as their eyes were dazed with the fire which was struck from the Swords upon such admirable Metal. At length the incomparable vigour of Edmund prevailed, whom Cnut very strenuously resisted, yet fearing the success, with fair Language instead of foul Blows thus accosted his Adversary. Young man, of all others the most valiant, what necessity is there that either thou or I should die by the Sword, out of desire of Reigning. Let us be Adoptive Brethren and divide the Kingdom, let me have a share in thine, and do thou command in mine Affairs. Denmark also shall be at thy disposal. With these words the generous mind of the young King was mollified, and a kiss of Peace was given on either part; after which their Followers came together, and weeping for joy, Edmund had the Kingdom of Wessex, and Cnut that of Mercia, who thereupon returned to London. Thus much Huntingdon, with whom agrees Matthew of Westminster as to the Duel, mentioning Edric as the man who first moved it amongst the Nobility. But both Hoveden and Florent of Worcester agree with the first Relation of Simon.

Edmund dies.

114. The Danes retiring to London after the agreement (which was certainly made, whatever might be the Circumstances or the manner) were received by the Inhabitants, and permitted to take up their Winter Quarters in the City, where, about the Feast of St. Andrew died King Edmund Ironside unexpectedly, and was buried with his Grandfather Edgar at Glastenbury. Concerning his death our Authors write variously. The History of Simon, Florent of Worcester, and Roger de Hoveden, tell us onely that he died, without mentioning the cause. Malmesbury confesses it was uncertain of what Disease or Casualty he died, but adds, that Fame charged Edric with hiring two of his Chamberlains, to whose Fidelity he committed himself, to murder him which they effected by thrusting a sharp Iron into his Body as he sat at Stool. Huntingdon will have it done at Oxford by one of the Sons of Edric as the King sat in an House of Office, with whom accords Matthew of Westminster; Radulphus de Diceto names neither place nor a certain person, but says it was done by an Iron Spit at Edric's procurement. Edmund thus in the same year both began and ended his Reign, leaving two Sons behind him, Edwi some call him, some Edmund, and Edward. By his own Mother he had a Brother called Edwin, and by Emma his Step-Mother two more, viz. Elfred and Edward. These Relations he left, but Cnut resolved none of them should succeed him but to Reign himself alone. He summoned all the Bishops and Nobility to meet at London, and cunningly demanded of such as had been present at the agreement betwixt him and Edmund, what provision was made by that agreement for the Sons and Brothers of Edmund, and whether in case he died before Cnut, any of them was to succeed in the Kingdom of the West Saxons? They overcome with fear answered, That to their knowledge Edmund neither living nor dying had made any provision for his Relations, but designed him the Protector or Guardian of his Sons, till they should come to Age. For this their false Testimony they hoped for great Rewards, and some of them indeed he afterwards rewarded with an Halter or some Instrument of such like Desert. But Cnut taking the advantage it afforded him, exacted Oaths of Fidelity from all the Nobility, who readily chose him for their King, and abjured all the English Line, which was disposed of as we shall see hereafter, and set aside for a certain time.

Who are ordered by Cnut.

Leaving Issue.

S E C T. XI.

S E C T. XI.

The Monarchy of the Danes in Britain, from the beginning of that of Canute or Cnut, to the Death of Hardecnute, and the Restitution of the English Line in Edward the Confessor.

The Space of Twenty six Years.

Cnut King.

1. Cnut thus obtained the Kingdom of the English, of which his Father rather had a prospect than firm possession, about two hundred and twenty seven years after the first arrival of his Danish Nation, two years after his Father's death, in the one and fortieth year of Basilus Junior Emperour of the East, the seventeenth of Henricus Junior the German Emperour, in the Reign of Robert the Son and Successor of Hugh Capet King of the Franks. A. D. MXVII.

Is sole Monarch.

2. The Danes had formerly in some parts of the Land, as East England and Northumberland set up their petty Kingdoms, but now obtained the settled Monarchy of all England. Formerly they had been Strangers, now come to be the principal Inhabitants, not in Numbers but in Reputation. Before time they were fierce invaders, cruel and Savage Enemies, as bloody, as Ravenous, and base as ever any Invader had ever been, but now were turned Proprietors, and one of them Lord of the whole, sweetened and civiliz'd not so much by Christianity and good Education, as by self-seeking and worldly interest, for the late Inroads made by Cnut were accompanied with as great Cruelties and Devastations, as those of his Predecessors. Bafeness and fear made the English Nobility servilely to truckle, so that there was no need of any thing more to work his Will but his bare Commands. Nay they would prevent his Commands by doing those things, to which they knew he was but inclined. For Edwi or Edwin the Brother of Edmund, a young Prince of excellent Endowments, and exceeding great hopes, they immediately voted to Banishment, which Resolution as soon as Cnut perceived so full of flattery and injustice, he went much pleased into his Chamber, and calling to him the perfidious Duke Edric asked him by what means he might trepan young Edwin to his death. The Traitor answered, that he knew one Ethelward who could easily do it if he would speak with and promise him a great Reward. Cnut sent for the man, and telling him what the Duke had said of him, not onely promised him all that his Ancestours had enjoyed, but to hold him more dear than a Brother in case he would doe him that Service. He promised to use his utmost endeavour, but as yet had no such intention, and said it onely to puff him off; for he was defended of the most Noble stock of the English Nation.

Edwin the Son of Edmund being banished.

He divides the Kingdom.

Punisheth the Murderers of his Predecessor.

3. Cnut being settled in his new Power and Sovereignty over all England, divided his Kingdom into four parts, whereof one he committed to the Government of Edric, viz. Mercia, it not being as yet seasonable to lay him aside. East England he assigned to Earl Turkill, Northumberland to Irc or Eric, and reserved West Saxony as that which being the ancient Possession of the English Line had most reason to bear respect to it, to his own Care and Vigilance. Then the first thing he did was to punish such as had an hand in the death of Edmund, whom having discovered their wickedness in hope of Reward he kept close up, and now in a great Assembly of the People caused to be put to death, as those whom their own mouths condemned. Having thus sweetened his way, a Covenant with all the Nobles and the whole People now he made, which was confirmed by Oath and an Amnesty decreed for whatsoever had formerly past betwixt the Nations. But this could not put him out of his fears so long as Edwi Etheling lived, who was commonly called

Sect. 11.

Sect. II. led King of the Countreymen. Banishment would not serve his turn, but after a seeming Reconciliation to ensure him by his earnest Solicitations, he procured him to be made away by those whom he had most trusted. Edric now that his hand was in, advised him to put to death also the young Sons of Edmund, the Climaculi, as Simon calls them, viz. Edmund and Edward; but it being esteemed a thing very odious, and which would much incense the People to have them murdered in England, within a while they were sent to the King of the Suedes there to be made away, who notwithstanding the League and kindness betwixt him and Cnut, abhorred the fact, and by all his Intreaties could not be brought to commit it, but conveyed them to Solomon King of the Hungarians, by him to be carefully brought up. Edmund in process of time in that retirement ended his life; but Edward Married Agatha the Daughter of Henry the German Emperour, by which Lady he had Margaret Queen of the Scots, Christina that turned Nun, and Edgar Etheling hereafter to be spoken of. This is the Account given by the general Assent of Historians, although there be a Passage amongst the Laws of Edward the Confessor, which hints, that this Edward out of fear of Cnut, fled to one Malefclor King of the Rugians, who both received him with honour, and bestowed on him in Marriage a Lady of that Country.

He Marries.

4. Cnut having rid himself of all his Competitors, for the Sons of Ethelred by Emma were escaped into Normandy, and all others of the Bloud Royal he had banished, thought he should much farther establish his interest by Marrying with Emma, which he effected in July following, concluding that it would win him the hearts of the People, and take off the thoughts of her Brother Richard Duke of Normandy, from the Sons he had had by Ethelred, and he approved of the Match sending over in July his Sister into England. Being now arrived at the top of his Expectations, he thought fit to remove the Ladder by which he mounted, lest it should serve the end of some other Pretender. What use he had all along made of the Treachery of Duke Edric has been sufficiently discovered. Now instead of loving he abominated the man not so much in hatred to his Vallany as for his own preservation, imagining that he who had betrayed those who had so well deserved of him, would not stick to do the same by him a Foreigner, when there should but a sufficient temptation or opportunity present it self. The former Treason serving his own ends, he loved, but hated the Traytour, because in his destruction he doubted not but he would be ready to serve the ends of others, and therefore resolved to make him away. It's reported, that after he had procured King Edmund to be slain in the manner before related, he came to Cnut, and bade God save him now the only King, to whom when he had told all the Story, the King answered, that for so great a piece of Service he would make him higher than all the Englisch Nobility. Remembering therefore that Promise, he caused him in the time of Christmas to be Beheaded, and his Head to be set upon a Pole on the highest Tower in London. Ingalphus the Abbat of Croyland, who lived in or near those very days, writes, that unsatisfis'd it seems with what had been done for him, he upbraided Cnut with his great services in betraying the two King Ethelred and Edmund, and by his own Mouth being convicted of Treason, was as a Traytour hanged and thrown into the Thames. Later Authours in compliance with this Relation, say, that suspecting the King's intentions of depriving him of the Mercian Dukedom, and upbraiding him with his Services, Cnut said to him with an angry Countenance, Traytour to God and to me, thou shalt die, thine own mouth accuses thee to have slain thy Master, my Confederate Brother, and the Lord's Anointed, and thereupon caused him to be Strangled in the Room, and thrown out of the Window over the Wall of the City into the Thames, where his Trunk lay unburied, his Head being fixed on a Pole and set on the highest Tower, which as some say, Eric at the King's command struck off. Upon this occasion either for that they were familiar with Edric, or upon some other jealous grounds, as his Complices he put to death several other Noblemen, as Norman the Son of Duke Leofwin, and the Brother of Leofric, Ethelward the Son of Duke Aglemar, and Brietric the Son of Elsege who governed Devonshire, all reputed Innocent Persons. For all this he thought himself not yet secure except he kept on foot an Army, for the maintenance of which, the following year, he squeezed out of all England seventy (some say eighty) two thousand Pounds, besides fifteen thousand out of the City of London. But no less than these severities could be expected from an Usurper and a Foreigner. After some years he sent back his Army at the Importunity of the Nobility, having by a severe Law made against killing any Danes, taken security for the safety of his Nation.

Caufes Edric and others of the Nobility to be executed.

Henr. Huntingd. lib. 6.

Vide infra.

5. These

5. These things were done in the South, while in the Northern Parts a Quarrel arose between Malcolm Son of Cyneth King of the Scots, and Urbred the Son of Waldelf Earl of Northumberland, or rather his Successour Eric, for Urbred was (as we have heard) slain by Cnut two years before. The Rupture proceeded to a great War (as our Authour terms it) wherein on the part of the Scots, Engenius Calvus King of the Latineses or Lothians was engaged; but what the effects of so great a controverfie were, he doth not tell us. Cnut having united the Englisch and Danes in one Government, though the best Centent would be to frame their minds to the same Laws and Customs, for which purpose he called a Convention to Oxford, where both Parties agreed to observe the Laws of King Edgar. Now he thought he had so well settled his matters here, that he might without any danger give a Visit to his ancient and Native Kingdom of Denmark, whither he failed the year following, being the third of his Reign, and continued there the whole Winter. The Archdeacon writes, that he led thither an Army of Englisch and Danes against the Wandals, by which he must mean no other than Suedes. That incamping near his Enemies with intention not to fight till the next day, Godwin the Englisch General (whom he terms him) without his knowledge by Night set upon them at unawares, killed many and put the rest to flight. When it was day the King imagining that the Englisch were either run away or had revolted to his Enemy, set his Danes in order of Battel, and marched toward the Suedisch Camp, but here he found nothing but Bloud, Carcasses, and Plunder, which thing caused him exceedingly to prize the Englisch, (who by their valour procured their Captain an Earldom and renown to themselves) and hold them in no less esteem than the Danes themselves. In Spring he returned into England, and in Easter Holidays held a great Council at Cirester, in which he banished Duke Ethelward or Edward as others call him. This same year in the place of the Battel fought at Essandune, which won him the Kingdom, he was present at the Dedication of a Church which there he had caused to be built as others in other places of the Fights he had been in. In this building he was assisted by Turkil the Earl, whom the year following, suspecting it seems his power, he banished out of England with his Wife Egitha. With Turkil others joyn Eric or Irc the Duke of Northumberland, a Dane also by descent. As soon as they set foot in Denmark, Matthew writes, that Turkil (who had been the procurer of the death of St. Elphege, and had first perswaded Swane to invade England) was killed by the Noblemen of the Country. But whether it was that those he banished and sent home, stirred up the People against him, or that being absent his Authority was despised. Huntingdon writes, that in his ninth year he carried over another Army into Denmark against Olaf and Eilaf, who had got a great multitude together against him both by Sea and Land, and now gave him such a Defeat, that of both Nations Englisch and Danes very many were lost. But others make this the same expedition with the former.

He fails into Denmark.

And beats the Suedes.

At his return banisheth Turkil and other Nobles.

Subdues Norway.

Sect. III.

Incubere igitur oritur Angli & vicinarum Confinum Comitatum Ducis, sibi laudem paraverunt. Math. meib. ubi supra. Math. Westm.

Simon Dunelm. ad Ann. MXXVII. Sc.

6. And indeed had his matters been so much imbroiled now in Denmark he would not have cast his thoughts so soon upon Norway, whence having intelligence that the People despised their King Olaf for his plainness and religious simplicity, he sent great sums of Money to make way for him, that rejecting their true and natural Lord they should revolt and chuse him for their King. His Gold had such effect upon them, that not able to withstand the Operations thereof, they promised him a good reception whensoever he would come, which the following year and the MXXVIII of our Lord he did, sailing into Norway with fifty ships. The King Olaf he drove out of the Countrey, and then easily subdued it to his own Command, whither Olaf the year after returning to try the minds of the Revolters was slain by them with all his Followers. The year after his Conquest he returned into England, but not till the Feast of St. Martin was past, where being arrived under a pretence of an Embassy, he sent into Banishment Hacung a Danish Count, who had Married Gunilda his Neice by his Sister and the King of the Wendish. This man was grown to powerful and popular, that he stood in fear of being killed or deposed by him, and thereupon he drove him to such straits, that within Twelve months he either perished on the Sea, or else was killed in the Isle of Orkney. Such were his fears, such were the means he used to prevent what he feared, sparing neither fair nor foul, sticking at nothing how unjust soever, for fixing the Diadem on his Head. Now he had no occasion nor temptation to be bad, and therefore resolved to be very good, and eminently religious, as such who have arrived at great wealth by griping and fordid Practices, many times think to make Heaven satisfaction by dedicating some of their ill gotten Goods to Religious

Sect. II.

Journey to Rome.

His Epistle Written from thence.

ous Uses. To Rome he will go to visit the Tombs of the Holy Apostles, a Pilgrimage which would obliterate all Crimes whatsoever. On St. Peter the Prince of the Apostles, he confers very great gifts of Gold and Silver, with other pretious things. He procures from Pope John a Relaxation of all Tribute and Toll to the English School there, both in his way thither and in his return gives large Alms to the Poor, buys off several Tolls and Impositions laid upon Travellers; and at the Sepulchre of the Apostles, vows to God an amendment of his Life and Manners. So much are we told by that of Simeon and other Historians.

7. In the History of the Monk of Malmesbury is extant an Epistle which from Rome it's said he wrote to Ailnoth or Egelnoth, the Metropolitan, to Alfric of Tork with all the Bishops and Primates, and the whole English Nation as well Noblemen as Plebeians. "Herein he gives an account of his Journey, both the reason of his undertaking it, how he was received at Rome, what he had negotiated for the benefit of his Subjects, and then gives directions and command to his Officers to doe all justice and right to the People in his absence. The thing he decreed he says long before, but never could till now accomplish what he had designed for the pardon of his Sins, and the safety of all his Subjects. He signifies that he was received by all the Princes who at that time were with Pope John solemnizing the Feast of Easter with extraordinary respect and honour, but especially by Conrade the German Emperour. That he had dealt with them all about the concerns of all his People both English and Danes, that their passage toward Rome might be more free and open; and had obtained that all well Merchants as others should with all safety pass and repass without any Toll or Imposition. He complained to the Pope that his Archbishops paid vast sums of Money before they could obtain their Pass, which grievance by Decree was taken off. All these Immunities procured from the Pope, the Emperour, King Rudolphus and all other Princes * through whose Territories he Travells were confirmed by Oath under the Testimony of four Archbishops, and twenty Bishops, with an innumerable multitude of Dukes and other Noblemen that were present. "Then follows a Thanksgiving to Almighty God, that what ever he had designed in his Journey had prospered. After this he desires it may be published to all the World that having devoted his Life to Righteousness, and resolved to Govern the People subject to him in all Piety and justice with a respect to Equity in all particulars, in case any thing had slipped in his Youth which might justly be taxed with Intemperance or Negligence, with the help of God he was ready to make for all such Extravagancies full amends. "Therefore all his Officers whatsoever, Sheriffs or others, he charges that neither for fear of himself, nor out of favour to any other Person they pervert Justice, not in respect to himself because there was no necessity that by any unjust exaction there should be any Collection of Money. At last after a great asseveration how much he studied the profit and convenience of his People, he adjures all his Officers before he should arrive in England they would procure all Debts to be paid due according to the Ancient custome, as Alms for the Plough, the Tithes of all Cattle brought forth in the same year, Peterpence, in August the Tithes of Corn, and at Martinmas the first Fruits of the same called Curefcot, or rather Cirefcot because given to the Church. In case this were not paid before his Return he threatens to animadvert upon every one according to the Laws.

8. It's not much that a Foreigner and Usurper should mention the Laws; for such having, though by lawless courses, obtained the secure Possession of what they aimed at to gain the People, usually both observe the Laws of their Predecessors so far as they contradict not their Ends and make themselves very good ones. There be but two courses, viz. absolute Conquest, and force with Sword and Halberd; or else such as may win and cajole the People. The former is dangerous, and must have a standing Army, and the Conquered must be turned out of their Estates, which are to be distributed amongst the Officers and Souldiers; the other more practicable and suitable to such as have a mind to live at ease. Especially the Laws of King Ethelred he commanded under a Penalty to be kept, the latest and most fitting the present case and temper of the Nation, but whereas the Monk adds in all Ages or Times, he understood not that positive Laws or Statutes must be changeable according to the mutability of the state and condition of a People. Besides the reinforcing of these former Laws, others he published in his own Name, as we shall see in another place. From Rome he went to Danemark, and thence at this time (as some would have it) passed into Norway and expelled Olaus the King,

Simeon Duchen, ad xlv. MXXXI.

Cnut Rex totius Anglie & Danemarchie & Norwegie & pariter Suevorum Ailnothi Metropolitanis, & Alfrici Eboracensi, omnibusque Episcopis & Primatibus, & toti genti Anglorum tam Nobilibus quam Plebeis salutem.

* A monne Gayardus usque ad idem proximum mare.

Omnes enim Leges ab antiquis Regibus & maximè Ethelredo sua Ethelredo latas sub interminatione regie multæ perpetuè conservari debent, uti præcipit Malmesb.

King, but better Computers place this Action four years before. At his return he spent his time in building and repairing Monasteries and Churches, which with the Monks the Writers of those times hath so far repaired his Fame and Esteem, that notwithstanding all his violence and injustice, nay notwithstanding he was the Depriver of one of their Saints, King Olaus, and the Procurer of his Death, (if not immediately by fending Assassins to murder him, as some have Written, yet mediately by procuring the Rebellion, and reducing him into the hatred of his People) they dismiss him with a very fair character. Nay some tell us, that for his Piety he was rewarded with another Kingdom, viz. that of Scotland, which, as appears from Matthew of Westminster, at this time depended on this of England, for he writes that the Scots now Rebelled, and that upon that occasion he led his Army thither where he easily Conquered Malcolm the King, with two other Reguli which Huntingdon mentions by the Names of Melbeath and Jermare. From some passages in the Ecclesiastical Affairs of these times it also appears that Wales was subject to him as it had been formerly to his Predecessors, although one Ritherech was styled King of all Wales, by which this only was meant that there were several other Petty Kings which acknowledged his Superiority. But if the Kingdom of Scotland was given him for his Piety, that of Heaven followed not long after, for within two years he Died on the twelfth of November at Shaftsbury, and was Buried at Winchester in the Old Monastery, after he had Reigned twenty years. It cannot be denied but that he was a Magnificent Prince, bountiful both to Religious Men and the Poor, even of other Nations. His fault was that he could never have been so Magnificent or Bountiful, but that he came to that greatness by Indirect means. His method and means were bad; but few that have obtained Crowns so unjustly have managed their Power once obtained with so much Justice and Humanity; so that well may he bear away the Title generally given him of Cnutus the Great.

9. And this he may the better deserve if that Story be true which is commonly told of his sensibleness of his own Meanness as a Man and his ascribing absolute Greatness only to him in comparison of whom Kings themselves, though in respect to one another they may be styled Great, yet are to be accounted little greater than Nothing. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon having told us that before him there was never a King of England so Mighty, as being Lord of all Danemark, Scotland, adds that besides his many Wars he waged, he was eminent for three things especially. The first was his marrying his Daughter to the Emperour with unspeakable Riches. The second was the diminishing or abating to one half all the Exactions or Impositions upon Travellers between France and Rome. The third was this: when the Tide came in he set his Chair on the Sea Shoar, and as the Sea grew to be high he spake to it in these terms: Thou art under my Dominion, and the Land where I sit is mine; neither is there any who without due punishment shall resist my commands. I command thee therefore that thou rise not so high as where I sit, neither presume to wet the Cloaths nor the Limbs of thy Lord. But the Sea according to the custome without any Reverence, flowing up, first to the Feet and then to the Legs of the King, wet as he was he leaped back and said: Let all Inhabitants of the World know that vain and frivolous is the Power of Kings; neither is there any one worthy that Title but he alone whose Command by force of Eternal Laws the Heaven, the Earth and the Sea obey. He adds, that after this he never set his Golden Crown upon his head, but placed it upon a Crucifix. Some sillily blame his carriage as Superstitious, others say such a Demonstration of Almighty God's Prerogative was needless. But the passage was seasonable enough to convince and reprove such as were apt to be dazzled with the worldly glory of those who have so small command over the Sea, that at land it self the Power of the greatest of them extends it self scarcely one intire Mile from the place where they stand, either upward, or below; the surface; so long as he pleases too, they can only call their own.

10. Cnut by Algia of Northampton his Concubine the Daughter of Earl Alfelm had two Sons, whereof one was called Swane, and the other Harold, as the current opinion went, though some speak doubtfully, as if to conceal her Barrenness, the former she had procured from a Priest's Wife (or a Woman Malmesb. Mat. Westm. Humfrid, Floeden. of alii. Servant) and the latter from the Wife of a Shoemaker. By Emma the Relict of King Ethelred which he seems to have Married in the life-time of Algia, though others call Algia Queen, he had a Son Named Hardecnut, and a Daughter of the great Beauty called Gundbilda, married by her Brother afterward to Henry the Emperour

Sect. ii. Empereur of Germany. Before his Death it's said that he appointed Swane to be King of Norway, Hardecnute King of Denmark, and to Harold assigned the Kingdom of England. But this seems no ways probable that he would separate the Son of his dearly beloved Wife so far from her, especially if that be true, which some have written, that he formerly promised to leave the Crown of England to such Issue as he should have by her. However Harold by means of the Danes and the Citizens of London (whom Malmesbury writes to have been almost by this time degenerated into Barbarians by their continual intercourse with them) and afterward by injustice obtained the English Crown, but not till after much contention. For each Pretender endeavoured to strengthen himself with Friends and Forces: as Earl Leofric with the Danes and Londoners stood for Harold; so most of the English contended for Edward the Son of King Ethelred, and some for Hardecnute the Son of Cnut by Queen Emma. No expectation was there but of a great War to follow, which caused multitudes of People (who had not yet forgot the dreadful waives made by the Danish Inrodes) to quit their Habitations, and betake themselves into watrish and fenny places where they thought the Enemy either could not or would not pursue them, particularly to the Monastery of Croyland, where they caused such a disturbance that the Religious of the Place could neither meet in the Church, nor in their Refectory. All seemed now to tend to a slaughter, when by the Interposition of some of the more sober sort Advice was given to the Heads of all the Factions to meet and hold a Consultation to prevent the effusion of Christian Blood. The place appointed was Oxford, where when they sufficiently debated the matter by the Major part it was at last concluded, that the Kingdom should be divided betwixt Harold and Hardecnute, so that Harold should have all the Countries lying Northward from the Thames, together with the City of London; and Hardecnute enjoy all the Southern Provinces.

A contest about the Succession.

Which is ended.

11. Hardecnute's disadvantage was that at the time of his Father's Death he was in Denmark, whither he was sent to order matters, and by his intercourse to gain the affections of the People, and indeed he seems to have been designed by his Father both to the Succession of the one Kingdom and the other. Harold took his opportunity to gain Friends, and some think that at first he was chosen King alone by a prevalent Party, but Hardecnute arriving e'er he had confirmed his Possession, this Agreement was made betwixt them for dividing the Kingdom, which settled Hardecnute's Affairs called him back into Denmark, and then again Harold taking an advantage at his Absence, being already in Possession of the greatest part, seized upon all. But whether in this juncture of Affairs Hardecnute returned into England or was absent all the while, Harold got to be sole King by assistance of the Danes, the Londoners, and now at length of Godwin created for his former Services in Denmark, Earl of Kent, who being a Man made up of ambition and cunning, at the beginning of the Contest had professed himself a stout Champion of Emma and her Children, but now upon the turning of the tide resolved to swim with the stream, or was wrought upon by the promises of Harold, who made as if he would Marry one of his Daughters. Yet did the Clergy stick close to the Children of Emma, and though the Nobility sided with Harold, so much contended for them, that Egelnoth the Archbishop of Canterbury refused the Office of Crowning him, professing that as long as any of the said Children lived he would never give his Assent or Benediction to any other, and affirming (as some write) that Cnut on his Death-bed had commended them to his care and fidelity. The Ensigns of Royalty he laid upon the Altar, denouncing a Curse against his Brethren the Bishops in case any of them should deliver them to Harold, and inhibiting him from meddling with such things, and by his private Authority taking them away which he had commended to God and that Holy Place. Yet for all this was he Crowned, for we cannot but believe * Ingulfus, that he bestowed on their Monastery the Robe of his Coronation. That this Archbishop notwithstanding all this adoe overcome either by his threats or promises, performed the Ceremony, though one of his Successors writes, yet we dare not affirm. † Others will have him Elected King without the Royal Ornaments, but herein they are not to be credited.

12. Harold having secured now, as he thought, his Royal Estate, so far as the People were concerned (which if Simeon tell true, he had by means of Godwin and others so far cajoled, that from being King of the Mercians and Northumbrians, together with the Nobility, they chose him to Reign through all England, † Parker in abjuring Hardecnute, who it was pretended, though sent for, would not return out of Denmark)

Sim. Dinel.

Elegunt cum Dani & Londonie civis qui jam pens in Barbarum mores proper frequentem convivium transierant. De Gestis Regum Anglor. lib. 2. ch. 12. Ingulfus. Malmesb.

* Ipse dedit Monasterio nupro Cisterciensis sue de serico aureo sique floribus inteream, quos postea Secretarius communivit in cappam. &c.

Denmark) cast in his mind, as the custome is, how to entrap and obviate his Emulatours and Rivals. Emma or Algina, as some call her, his Stepmother, he had already deprived of the greatest part of the treasure which his Father had left her, so the less reason he had to fear her effectual tampering with any for her Sons, having nothing present wherewith to allure them, and it being accounted but a spare diet to feed merely upon hopes. But her two Sons, Alfred and Edward, hearing in Normandy how matters passed, could not forbear looking on, if they could not be the principal Actors in these Revolutions: into England they came with a splendid attendance of Normans, and haste to their Mother then lying at Winchester. But passing through Kent, the Charge and Residence of Earl Godwin, Alfred falls into his hands, and then pretending (at least) to be going to London to the King who had sent for him, is stopped and put into close Custody: Godwin affirming it was dangerous under pretence of Kindred, to bring so many strangers, and those of a crafty Nation into the Land, of his followers, some he put into Chains, of some he put out the Eyes, of others he cut off the Hands and Feet, and many he caused to be sold, some he tortured by pulling their Skins over their Ears, of others he caused the Guts to be bound about a stake, and then their Bodies to be turned round the stake till all the Entrails were drawn out, and in conclusion, by various and miserable deaths, six hundred Men he murdered at Guilford; some write, that he only spared one in ten, and after that was done, thinking that too many Normans still survived, he decimated them over again, and amongst the rest thus murdered were twelve persons of great Nobility. Emma having notice of this Massacre, sent away her Son Edward into Normandy, to be out of harms way. And well did the ground her fears; for while the one Brother thus shifted for himself, the other that was entrapped by command of Earl Godwin and others, was sent away to the Isle of Ely, where he was scarcely Landed, when most cruelly his Eyes were pulled out of his Head, which done, he was led to the Monastery, and there delivered to the Monks to be safely kept. But he troubled them not long, presently after his sight ending his days, and in the Southern Porch of the Western End of the Church, was decently buried.

Among whom Alfred is killed by the Treachery of Harold.

13. Thus cruelly was poor Alfred dealt with, but still greater was the cruelty, if it was procured and uhered in by the treachery and forgery of Harold, who as the Encomium of Emma (the Authour whereof seems to have lived about those times) gives us the Relation, on purpose to feed those young Princes into his Hands, counterfeited a Letter as written by their Mother. "Herein performing her, she chides them gently for their delay in looking after their own concerns, feeling they could not but know, that it procured the daily confirming of the Usurper in his Power, who omitted no Arts whatsoever to gain the chief Nobility to his Party. He assures them yet that the English Nation had much rather that one of them should be their King, and in conclusion, desires they would come as speedily and privately as they could to consult with her what course was to be taken. The Letter was conveyed by a suborned Messenger, who by presents sent as from their Mother, and by his insinuations plaid his part so well, that the truth of the Message was not doubted of. Now some Historians say, that the better to conceal themselves, they came into England several ways. Others say, that Alfred only Arrived, and that Edward with forty Sail of well manned Ships came to Southampton, where he found the Coast guarded with Soldiers to prevent his Landing. He adventured to fight, and that with good success, but finding himself too slenderly provided to march up into the Countrey, and Conquer the Kingdom, with much Booty he Sailed back into Normandy. Indeed, considering that Alfred only was taken, these Relations seem nearer to truth, and that Alfred with a few Ships, and not many Men Landing in Kent, fell into the Snares laid for him by Earl Godwin. The Children being thus disposed of, the Mother he thought fit not to suffer here to remain, but presently after banished her the Kingdom, though Winter was begun, she retired not into Normandy, because, as some alledge, Duke William, the base Son of her Nephew Robert, was then brought up in the French Court, and some add what may be more improbable, that her Son Edward was then gone into Hungary to consult with his Cousin Edward, surnamed the Outlaw, whom as we said, Cnut had banished thither. She went straight for Flanders, where she was courteously received by Earl Baldwin, who prying the Case of a distressed Lady and Queen, assigned her Bruges to dwell at, and munificently provided for her all the time she there staid.

Apud Gillingham us scribit Malmesb.

Wallingham. in Hydropom. Neufries, lib. 6. c. 4.

He banished Emma.

14. After two years she was visited by her Son Hardecnut out of Denmark, and they comforted themselves as well as they could with hopes of better Fortune, that either the Hearts of the English would relent, or that the Usurper would by some other means end either his days or his Reign, in which they were not much beguiled. Harold on this side the water, as much encouraged himself in his hopes strengthened by present and actual possession, the main point in the case, and resolved to omit nothing, which now they were gone, might serve to keep them out. For this purpose he provided himself of a Fleet, the only Bullwark of the Island, for the furnishing of which to sixteen ships every Port pay'd Eight Marks of Silver, as had been done in his Father's days, as writes Henry the Archdeacon of Huntingdon. Hereby he incensed the minds of the English against him, which the Welsh it seems perceiving, or for some other reason, began to be so unruly that some stirrings happened thereupon, wherein many of the English Nobility were slain, by name Edwin Brother to Earl Leefric, Turkil and Algeat the Sons of Effi, both of them great men, and many others. But these things could not accomplish the hopes of the banished, which was left to be done by death, Harold dying shortly after when he had reigned four years, and as many Months. Some say he died at London, some at Oxford; but he was to be sure buried at Westminster. Henry Knighon strangely writes, that he had a Body like an Harc, he means surely hairy like that Creature, and thence was called Harefoot, which surname others derive from his swiftnes of foot. Bromton the Abbat of Jornal gives him this Character, that in all regards he degenerated from the worth of his Father Cnut (but others suspected him not to have been his Son) for he was altogether careless both as to matters of War and Peace, only he would pursue his own Will, and what was misbecoming his Royal Estate, chose rather to goe on foot than ride, whence for the lightnes and swiftnes of his Feet he was called Harold Harefoot. He being dead, the Nobility with which now the Londoners joined, sent messengers to Hardecnut still at Bruges, with his Mother, intreating him to come, and receive the Crown as his Right. Hereupon he hastened into Denmark, there to settle his matters, which done with sixty ships, and many Soldiers he came over in August, and landing at Sandwich was cheerfully received, and both by English and Danes admitted as King.

15. Hardecnut began his Reign over England, in the sixth year of Michael the Fourth, the Paplagonian Emperor of Constantinople, the second of Henry firnamed the Black, Emperor of Germany, in the Reign of Henry King of the Franks, A.D. 1040. Having obtained the Kingdom he did little worthy of his condition, or the place he bare, but made them advantages onely to gratify his exorbitant Passions. The first thing was to be revenged on Harold, for the Injuries offered to himself and his mother, whose Body he caused to be digged up by Alfric Archbishop of York, Earl Godwin and others, the Head to be cut off, and both it and the Trunk to be cast first into a Ditch or Privy, and then into the Thames, where being caught in a Fishermans Net, it was by some of his Relations conveyed to land and buried in a burying place of the Danes, which constant Tradition affirms to be this Church and Church-yard of St. Clement without Temple-Bar, in which Parish we reside at the writing hereof. Following on this Course of Revenge (which some stile piety to his Kindred) he defervedly deprived Living Bishp of Worcester, who had an hand in the Murder of his Brother Alfred, but then again within a year, was bought off with money and restored him. Godwin that cunning Earl was glad to buy his Peace with a Gally excellently rigged, having a gilded Stemm, furnished with all all conveniences both for War and Pleasure, and manned with Eighty choice Souldiers, every of which had upon each Arm a Golden Bracelet weighing sixteen Ounces, with Helmet and Corslet gilt as was the Hilt of the Sword with which he was girt, a Danish Scimiter adorned with Silver and Gold hung on his left Shoulder, in his left hand he held a shield, the Bos and Nails of which were also gilded, and in his right a Lance, which in the Language of the English was called A Tegar. But this would not serve his turn except he also took an Oath, that Prince Alfred had not his Eyes put out by his advice or desire, but therein he merely obeyed Harold, at that time his Lord and Master, together with most of the Nobility of the Land.

16. At the same time he thus animadverted upon such as had been cruel to his Relations, he incurred the high displeasure of the People by a Tax he laid upon them, for the payment of eight Marks to every Rower in his Navy, and twelve to every Officer, a burthen that scarcely any could bear, which caused these these who had procured his Advancement formerly to repent them. However he exacted the Tax with all rigour, employing his Houfe Carles as they were called, or his Household Servants, in gathering the Subsidy throughout the Land, where- of the Worcestershire Men flew two called Reader and Turftan, having fled into a Tower belonging to a Monastery of that City. Hardecnute exceedingly incensed at their death, sent to revenge it Leofric Duke of the Mercians; Godwin of the West Saxons; Sinard of the Northumbrians; and others with great Forces; and ordered to kill all the men, to plunder and burn the City and waste the Countrey round about. On the Evening preceding the thirteenth of November they began their injointed work, and continued waiting and spoiling both City and Countrey for four days together. But few of the Inhabitants themselves they could lay hands on, the Countreymen shifting for themselves every way as they could, and the Citizens betaking themselves to a little Island in the Severn called Beles; and which they fortified, and stoutly stood upon their Guard till their Opposers rege, which they fortified, and stoutly stood upon their Guard till their Opposers tired out made Peace with them, and suffered them to return home in Peace, which yet was not done till on the fifth day the City being burnt, the Army retreated loaded with Plunder. After this Act of severity, Hardecnute (as if he had spent his Gall and evacuated his ill humours) began to be good natur'd. For shortly after he gave kind entertainment to Edward his Brother, the Son of Ethelred and Emma, who now returned after a tedious exile in Normandy. To his farther commendation he took good care of his Sister Gunhilda or Gunnildis preferring her to mendation he took good care of his Sister Gunhilda or Gunnildis preferring her to be the Wife of Henry the German Emperour. She was a Lady of admirable beauty, and in her Father's time had in vain been courted by several Lovers. Her Brother set her forth with all the pomp imaginable, the Nobility both accompanying her to the Ship, and contributing to the Expences as much as every one could bear, besides what the King's Exchequer could furnish. But Covetousness was not his crime in extravagant Expences, especially in Feasting he much delighted. Four Meals a day he allowed in his Court, which Huntingdon attributes for his bounty, rather, he saith, desiring that Meat should be taken away untouched from such as were invited, than that such as were not invited should complain for want of Victuals; whereas the custome of our time is, either out of Covetousness, or (as they pretend) because they cannot eat, for great men to allow their Followers but one Meal a day. As Hardecnute lived so he died in his beloved Trade of feasting, at Lambeth at a Wedding, with great pomp and Luxury was solemnized betwixt Tovy surnamed Prudan, a Danish Nobleman, and Githa the Daughter of Ofged Clapa a great Lord also of that Nation. As he was very jolly and merry, Carousing it with the Bride and some of the Company, he fell down speechless, and died on the eighth of June in the flower of his Age, when he had reigned but two years.

CHAP. II. Contemp. with the Constantinop. Rom. Emp. Hardecnute. 251

37. Such was the end of this dissolute young man by that Vice which was but

17. Such was the cruelty of which before they got possession of the Land, when they were once secure and at their ease, Gormandizing and Drunkennells succeeded. But as he exceeded all of them in this kind, so though he was born in England, and upon that Account might have been addicted to the Inhabitants and Customs of this Countrey, yet out of Sympathy with their humour did he bear most affection to them; nay, suffered them most insolently to domineer over the English. "In case a Dane met an English man upon a Bridge, the English man durst not stir a foot till the Dane was passed" "fed over. If an English man when a Dane passed by did not bow the Head in an humble manner, his head should be broken, or for his Clownishness he should be soundly Basted and d. If Henry de Kyngton the Canon of Leicester may be credited, this Hardecoute so far increased this Insolence, that upon every English Family he imposed a Dane as their Lord and Governour, whence some have believed that the word Lordane came, which signifies a Lubberly Idle Fellow. These Danes received into their Houses, ravished their Wives, deflowered their Daughters and their Maids without controll; and many other Villanies they committed to put Affronts and disgrace upon the English Nation. The same Crimes, viz. Luxury and Effeminateness, of which the English formerly were guilty, and which procured their Rule and Domination over them, were now come to an height in the Danes, and as in all great changes of Kingdoms and States procured their Ruine here, and made way for another Revolution. Not that the English were grown virtuous and good, for they were still sick of such Diftempers, as within a few years procured the utter destruction of their Empire, as we shall see hereafter; but Despair and Necessity are powerfull Motives, such Seçt. II.

Suos hufcar-las mifit per omnes Regni fui Provincias ad exigendum quod indixe-rat tributum.
Sim. ad Ann.
1041.

Walter Mer estershier.

But is kind to Edward and Gumbilda his Sister.

Then dies at a Feast.

The Danes domineer ove
the English.

Chronic. Joh.
Brompton.
c. 934.

Editionis Beechiana column.
2326.

But at length were most of them banished.

as will make even the Lame man to find his Legs, and the Coward to grow valiant. Not able to bear the continual Indignities and burthen put upon them, they took this opportunity to shake off the yolk, reassumed some Courage and gathered together (saith mine Authour) a great Army, which was called Howneher, from one Howne who first gave the Advice and was their Captain in the Enterprize. Many Danes they slew, and the rest they banished out of England, (that is, such as they had most cause to be angry with, for that Multitudes had imbolded themselves with the English Nation and still continued, especially in the Eastern and Northern parts is evident enough) whither they never afterwards returned, when they had here tyrannized by times for above two hundred and fifty years, and of these been possessed of the Supreme Power or Royalty, twenty six.

SECT. XII.

The Monarchy of the English Saxons restored in Britain. From the Promotion of Edward the Son of Ethelred, (afterward surnamed the Confessor) to the Death of Harold the last King of the English Race, the final Period of the English Saxon Empire, and the Conquest of England by Duke William the Norman.

The Space of Two and twenty Years, Six Months, and odd Days.

Sect. 12. 1. The English being rid of the Danes, resolved to have no King but of their own Native Race, and having so good an opportunity to discharge their Resolution, by reason that Hardicnut died Childless, agreed to pitch upon one of the Posterity of their late King Ethelred. The generality of Historians concur as to Edward his Son by Emma, that their eyes were fixed upon him, yet Fleury of Huntingdon tells a Story of Alfred his Brother, as if he were still alive in Normandy, and was now sent for by the Nobility, whom the concurrent Testimony of others affirms to have been before this blinded and imprisoned in the Isle of Ely. Most of our Writers will have Edward preferred by the means and procurement of Earl Godwin especially, yet some others tell a Tale, that Godwin Vide Chronicon Joh. Brom. for fear of life, as Conscious of what he was guilty of in reference to the Relations of Edward was fled into Denmark and returned not till he was owned as King, and held a Parliament in the City of London, by Mediation whereof he obtained pardon. But in this case we have best reason to trust to the * Testimony of In-gulphus, who himself lived in this Edward's days, and writes expressly that his Promotion happened by the Advice and Persuasion of Earl Godwin. † William of Malmesbury after him, the Authour of most credit, gives us the Relation in this manner. Hardicnut being dead, Edward was at a great loss in himself, not knowing what way to turn him, or what course to take, but at last resolved to call himself upon the Counsel and Fidelity of Earl Godwin, who being sent for to a friendly Conference for some time fluctuated in his thoughts whether he should own him or not, but at length was content to speak with him. "Edward getting Access, was about to fall at his feet, which when he would not suffer," he told him the sad Story of his Brother Hardicnut's death, and with great Promises craves his assistance for his safe return into Normandy. Godwin gives him

Edward made king by the assistance of Earl Godwin.

* Post ejus obitum omnium Electione in Edwardum Concordatur, maxime cohorante Godwino comite, Sc.
† De Gestis Regum Anglo-rum. lib. 2.
c. 13.

"him this unexpected answer, that he had better live gloriously a King in England, than dye ignominiously in Exile; that the Crown did of right belong to him, as the Son of Ethelred and Nephew of Edgar, one who was of ripe Age, inured to Labour, and who had learnt by experience how to order publick Affairs with Justice, and had been taught by his own late afflictions how to remove and prevent the miseries of his People. To bring this about there would be no obstacle, for if he would but trust him, he should find that his Interest was very great in the Land. He told him that Fortune would be favourable to his Inclinations, which way soever they tended, and if he took it upon him he was sure there would be none to contradict. On condition he would establish a fast Friendship with him and his House, prefer his Sons, and marry his Daughter, he should shortly see himself a King, who now as one Shipwrackt in his Fortunes, and a Man Banished from all Expectations, implored the help of another Person.

2. Edward's Case at this time was such, as not to reject so fair Proposals, but agree to every thing, and comply with the state and condition of the times, whatsoever he required he promised by Oath. Godwin was a Man fitted by Nature for managing such a Business, having a very smooth and pleasant Tongue, so copious and eloquent, that he could work upon the affections of the People, insinuate whatsoever he desired, and draw them with ease to any thing, which he could but design. He procures a Council to be summoned to Gillingham, (some Copies have it London) and there some he persuades by his own Authority, some by promises, and others inclined before to favour Edward's Cause, he fully brings over to his Party, the rest that made opposition, were overpowered at present, disgraced, and afterward hurried out of the Land. On Easter day, which this year fell on the third of April, he was Crowned at Winchester by the two Archbishops, Edsi of Canterbury, and Alfric of Tork, assisted with other Prelates, of whom, Living Bishop of Worcester, contributed very much to the bringing about this design. Thus was the Empire of the English restored to the English Royal Blood, and the People so unexpectedly delivered from the Danish Tyranny, were exceedingly satisfied, yet still making a way for another Revolution, which they little imagined to be so near. Betwixt the Death of Hardicnut and the Coronation of Edward, intervened about ten Months, the one happening in June, and the other in April following, so that this alteration required some considerable time, and probably found as considerable opposition, notwithstanding the great power of Earl Godwin. This Promotion of Edward, if we reckon no Interregnum, and begin his Reign where Hardicnut's ended, fell out in the first year of Constantinus Monomachus, Emperour of Constantinople, the fourth of Henricus Niger the German Emperour, in the year of our Lord, MXLIII. But if we reckon from his Coronation, his beginning is to be fetcht from the year next following.

He seizes on his Mothers Treasure.

3. Edward the creature of Godwin, after his Advancement, conformed himself wholly to his Dictates and Advice. The first thing he did, was to seize on the Treasure of his Mother Emma, then at Winchester. The Cause pretended was, that he had been harsh to him in the time of his banishment and necessities; and indeed, she is thought to have born no great affection, either to Ethelred or his Children; but Godwin however seems to have been the Infiller of this Indignation into the King's mind, bearing her malice for concerning her self about the cruelty exercised toward her Son Alfred. Simon writes expressly, that Edward did it by advice of Leofric, Godwin and Giward, who accompanied him from Glavem or Glocester to Winchester, where coming on her at unawares, he took away from her whatsoever Gold, Silver or Jewels he had then about her; to which Relation, Matthew of Westminster adds, that he yet commanded that she should be supplied with Necessaries, and be free from all farther disturbance, which how far it was observed, we shall see anon. But whatever his Actions were towards his Mother, Godwin would take care he should deal fairly with him, in the marriage of his Daughter Editha or Egitha, which about this time he procured to be Solemnized. The Lady indeed for her perfections, both inward and outward, deserved a Crown, so that this was not the particular wherein this Earl imposed on him. Herein we may give credit to Ingulphus the Abbot, who knew her very well, and testifies that she was most beautiful, most chaste and virtuous, especially humble, and very well seen in humane Learning, favouring nothing of the rudeness either of her Father or Brothers, but mild, modest, faithfull and honest, never doing any ill Offices, so that it became a Proverb, that as a Thorn produces

And marries Godwin's Daughter.

Sect. 12.

duces a Rose, Jo Godwin begit Egitha. When he was a School-boy, and came to see his Father, then living at Court he faith he met her very often, and she would often oppose him of his Lesson, both in Grammar and Logick, wherein she was very expert, and when by her subtle arguing she had non-plus'd him; she would order her Maid to give him money, and not dismiss him till he had also filled his Belly with good cheer, thus she obliged him: but though she did this to him when a Boy he wrote not the story till he was Abbat and an Aged Man.

He banishes many of the Danish Nobility.

4. Edward thus setled in the Throne, yet thought not himself secure as long as any eminent Persons of the Danish Blood continued in the Land. He banished Gunbilda, the Daughter of Worigern (King of the Vandals say some) and the Sister of King Cnut, married first to Hacn, and then to Harold both Earls, but now a Widow, and with her her two Sons Hemmung and Turkill were also sent away. They first went to Bruges in Flanders, and thence afterward proceeded into Denmark. But while he thus as he thought prevented storms at home, a Tempest had like to have fallen upon him from the North, where Magnus King of Norway, the Son of Holy King Olave to revenge, it seems, the Injury done here to his Father in the Days of Cnut, prepared to invade England. Edward to secure himself provided a strong Fleet which lay expecting Magnus in Sandwich Rode, but Swane King of Denmark, though he had no reason to befriend the English who had so lately expelled his Countrymen, yet to hinder the growth of his next Neighbour, diverted him by making an Inroad into his Kingdom. This procured such feuds betwixt these two Northern Kings, that Magnus in revenge the year following entred Denmark, whence he quite expelled King Swane, and made himself Lord of the Country. Now Swane sent his Ambassadors to King Edward, hoping he would return such a kindness as he had received from him when he was in danger. Godwin was for supplying him with a Fleet of fifty Vessels both to requite Swane, and to give a check to the Success and Ambition of Magnus, and the thing had been done but for the opposition of Earl Leofric and others, who thought it safer the King should sit still and be a looker on than perhaps disoblige the Conquerour, and bring danger upon himself. And whereas Swane had formerly indeed by the Inroad he made into Denmark, done that which tended much to the repose of England, yet seeing he took his measures from his own Interest not that of Edward, he could not take it amiss, that Edward also should steer his course by the same compass.

Engages with Henry the Emperor against Baldwin Earl of Flanders.

5. And their Counsel had this effect, that as Magnus during his Life (all which he enjoyed the Kingdom of Denmark) offered no more to attempt any thing upon England, so Harold Harvager his Uncle and Succesour, as soon as he came to the Crown sent Ambassadors to Edward, and made a League and Alliance with him. Thus above ground there was nothing but quiet and serenity, when within the Earth happened on Mayday being Sunday a great motion and concussion, at Worcester, Derby and many other places. A great mortality of Men, and a Murrain amongst Cattel followed, and Fires in the Air, or those Meteors which being kindled are called Ignes fatui, in Derbyshire and other Countries burnt many Villages and much Standing-corn. But while Edward was free from Wars at Home, he was engaged by the Emperor Henry the following year against Baldwin the Earl of Flanders, with whom he had a quarrel about a Palace of his Country, which the Earl had fired. Pope Leo and Swane the King of the Danes he had to assist him by Land, and left Baldwin should escape by Sea he procured the King of England to secure the Coasts, which he did, lying so long with his Fleet before the Port of Sandwich, till he had an intelligence that an Agreement was made betwixt them. In the mean time Swane the Son of Earl Godwin, and whom some make Earl of Berkshire, Oxfordshire and Gloucestershire, having formerly been banished, or at least left the Land, for having defoured Edgida the Abbess of Chester whom he would have married, came back from Denmark with eight ships, pretending a great desire to be reconciled to the King. Beorn an Earl, and his Cousin German the Son of Olaf a Dane undertook to make his Peace. The War being at an end betwixt the Emperor and Earl Baldwin, this Beorn and Godwin who commanded the Fleet with forty two ships, by the King's leave were removed to Pevensey, the rest of the Navy, except what the King kept with him, being dismissed. To Pevensey Swane comes and solicits his Cousin Beorn, according to his promise, to carry him to the King, then lying at Sandwich and obtain his pardon; Beorn mistrusting nothing because of their Consanguinity readily went with him attended onely by three Servants, but he having brought him

Sicut spina resam. genuit Godwinus Egi-tham.

Simson ad An. 1044. Alii.

Simson ad An. 1045.

Simson ad An. 1049. Florent. Wig-tom.

Sect. 12.

him to Bosham where his ships lay at Anchor, and having carried him aboard caused him first to be bound fast, and keeping him till he came to Dertmouth, there he murdered him, which done he cast his Body into a deep Ditch, and covered it with a bundance of Earth. Six of Swane's ships the Inhabitants of Hastings took, and killing all the Men they found aboard them, carried them to Sandwich to the King. With the other two he fled into Flanders, where he continued till such time as Aldred Bishop of Worcester brought him back and reconciled him, for all this, to the gentle King.

6. Crimes of this nature were at this time but too common and too little punished, such was the wickedness of the English Nation which now fell again into security, though the late dreadful Rod was but just removed from their backs. Nay it was at this very time again as it were shaken over them. For Osgod Clapa being it seems banished with his Wife as well as other Danes, had got together nine and twenty ships, with six of which taking his Wife from Bruges he sailed into Denmark, the rest went to the Coasts of Ellex, where doing very much harm in their return they were seized with a mighty Tempest, and lost but two, which being driven into foreign parts were seized, and the men put to the Sword. But not onely were they put in mind hereby of the Danish Cruelties more lately practised, but by something then happened on the other side of the Island of the old Devastations made upon these parts by the Irish Scots, but here was the difference, that whereas formerly the Britains were sufferers, now they were become Actors with them. For, as Florent of Worcester writes, this same year in the Month of August, certain Pirates from Ireland with thirty six ships entering the Mouth of the River Severn, landed at a place called Wileceaxen, where joyning with Griffin King of Southwales, they foraged the Country and did some mischief. Then he at the head of them passed the River Weage, they burnt Dunedam, and slew all the People they could find, the Alarm being now taken by the adjoining Parts, Aldred Bishop of Worcester with some Gloucester and Herefordshire men hastied against them, but certain Welsh men that they had with them sent privately to Griffin, and gave him notice when he might most conveniently fall upon the English, and he taking the opportunity together with the Irish Pirates fell accordingly upon them early in the Morning and killed many, the rest making their escape. The next year that followed but one, King Edward to comfort and relieve his People, sorely vexed with a Famine of which many thousands died, took off the Tax of Eighty thousand Pound, formerly imposed by his Father, and called Danegeld, which had lain heavy on them for eight and thirty years. But as this effect of his good nature to them, tended much to their ease and convenience, so other Acts of his kindness to Strangers this very year, proved of ill consequence unto the whole Nation.

7. Eustace Earl of Boloin Father to Godfrey and Baldwin who were afterward Kings of Jerusalem, and King Edward's Brother-in-Law by a Marriage with his Sister Goda, from Whitland sailed over to Dover, and having had conference with the King about some affair of consequence, and returning back in the month of September, one of his Harbingers at Canterbury was so rude with a Townsman in seeking for Lodgings, that he provoked him to kill him in heat of Anger. Eustace enraged hereat with all his Company, hastied to revenge his Servants death, and killed him that had slain him with other eighteen of his Company; but thereupon the Citizens rising fell upon him and his men, whereof one and twenty they slew, and wounded many others, he himself hardly escaping with one Follower from the Tumult. To Court he posits with great Clamour, and assisted by some of his own Party, greatly incenses the King against those of Canterbury. Earl Godwin is sent for and commanded with all speed to march with an Army and punish the Offenders. He on the contrary affirms, that no man is to be condemned before he be heard, and frets that the King should favour all Strangers more than his own Subjects, for many of them he had preferred to great places, and trust in the English Church and State; one Robert a Norwan lately Bishop of London he had made Archbishop of Canterbury, and another of that Country called William, he had promoted to the See of London, which thing exasperated the English against the Normans. Being backed by some others that loved their Country, he urged that the chief Actors in the late disorders were first to be sent for and fairly tried; in case they were found innocent to be dismissed, but if culpable to be fined, or undergoe some corporal Punishment for the breach of the King's Peace, and the Violence and Affront they had offered to the Earl. He farther put him in mind, that it was his part to protect his People, and not condemn them

The Sea-coast is infested by Pirates.

The Tax of Danegeld resumed by him.

He is kind to Strangers.

Ingulphus.

Vide Malmesb. ubi supra cap. 13. Simson. Dunelm. ad Ann. MLL.

Sect. 12. round about, and drew into his Party first the Inhabitants of Canterbury who owned him as a Sufferer for their fakes, then those of Sussex, Essex, Surry, all the Mariners or Boat-men (Buthfearlas Simeon calls them) of Fleetsings, and others of these Maritime Parts, who promised to live and dye with him. The Fleet having notice of his landing some were sent to pursue him, but he still concealed himself; they returned to Sandwich, whence they shortly after came up to London. Godwin then went to the Isle of Wight, and coasted about till he met with his Sons Harold and Leofwin who joyned their Ships with his, which done they yet forbore all Hostilities, onely made bold with Victuals and other necessities. On the Coasts and elsewhere by fair means they drew as many Men to them as they could, especially Seamen, and so made for Sandwich Road, where no sooner they were arrived but the News thereof flew to London, and so startled them at Court, that command went out from the King to all his loving Subjects to haste and help him in a time of so great necessity.

12. Yet they delayed so long that Godwin had leisure enough to pass up the Thames as far as Southwark, where lying for a Tide he spent the time in conferring with the Londoners, whom he procured to doe whatsoever he designed. It being High Water he advanced farther, and no opposition being made upon the Bridge, rowed up by the Southern Bank till such time as he met with his Land Army, which he formed into a Battalia terrible for those on the other side to look on; and his Navy now he directed toward the King's Gallies, shipping his Men and making all things ready to follow. Edward by this time on Middlesex side had got together a competent Force, and all lookers on expected an Engagement, but the Souldiers on both sides agreed in this, that they were unwilling to fight English against English, which gave the wiser fort an opportunity of mediating a Peace, by virtue of which the two Armies were speedily Disbanded. The conditions of it were, that Godwin, his Wife and Sons were restored to their former honours and Estates, all except Swane, who as a Penance for murdering his Cousin Beorn had undertaken a Pilgrimage bare-foot and bare-leg from Flanders to Jerusalem, and in his return Died of a Cold he had got in Lycia. The King receives Editba his Wife the Earl's Daughter to her former Dignity; Right and Justice is now promised to all Men, and such Normans as had abused his Authority, and given him ill Council against his good Subjects are Banished the Land. Some few, as Robert the Deacon, and Richard the Son of Scrob his Son-in-law, Alverde the King's Groom, Axfrid surnamed Cookesfoot, and some others whom the King much favoured, and who had done no ill Offices, were permitted to stay. But Robert the Archbishop of Canterbury, William the Bishop of London, and Cilf the Bishop of Lincoln with their Followers hardly escaped and got over Sea. Yet afterwards William being a good natur'd Man was permitted to return. Osbirne surnamed Pentecost, and his Fellow Hugh surrender'd their Castles, and by leave of Earl Leofric passing through his Government into Scotland were there entertained by King Mackberth. This same year on St. Thomas's Night happened, so great a Tempest, that it overturned many Churches and Houses, and broke and tore up by the Roots an innumerable quantity of Trees.

13. The next year being the M. LIII of our Lord, Res the Brother of Griffin Simeon, King of South Wales being taken Prisoner, as a Publick Enemy, for the many Insolencies he had committed, was by command of Edward put to death in a place called Bulendum, and his Head sent to the King then lying at Glocester. This ministered matter of discourse, but as little Noises are suppress'd by the greater, this was presently quashed by the Rumour and Talk about the death of Earl Godwin, which happened this same year at Easter. King Edward celebrating this Feast at Winchester, and Godwin, as his custome was, sitting at Table with him, was suddenly seized with so great a Dislemper as struck him speechless, and made him sink down from the Seat on which he sat. His three Sons, Harold, Tosti and Gyrth being present removed him into the King's Chamber, hoping it was but a Fit, and that he would speedily recover, but he lay in that languishing condition four days and dyed on the fifth, being the fifteenth of April, and was buried in the old Monastery. This is the account of his death, to which the Normans, and such as write in favour of them, add a Circumstance which much shews either his guilt or their malice. It chanced at Table, that mention was made of Alfred the Brother of the King, who thereupon looked very fowly upon Godwin. He to vindicate himself, told Edward, that he perceived how upon every mentioning of that Prince he look'd with a frowning Countenance upon him, But (saith he) let not God suffer me to swallow this Morsel, if I be guilty of any thing done, either toward the taking away of his life, or against thine Interest. After which words Seft. 12. freight choakt with the Bit he had swallowed, he sunk immediately down, and never recovered. A man of an active and turbulent Spirit, not tender Conscience in getting or keeping, and not to be excused for his so much meddling and forcing his Sovereign to what he lifted. But had he not been so great a lover of his Country and an enemy to Stranger, those that wrote in the Norman times, and durst not but write what would please their Masters, would have dismised him without this Story, and with a fairer Character than usually they give him. His first Wife was the Sister of Canute, which brought him a Son, who in his Infancy mounting an Horse given him by his Grandfather, was carried into the Thames and there drowned. The Mother was killed by Thunder, a Judgment which it was believed fell upon her for her Cruelty, for the made a great Trade of selling handsome Boys and Girls into Denmark. After her death he Married another Wife, and by her had six Sons, viz. Harold, Swane, Wined, Tosti, Gyrth and Leofwin. His Earldom, some say his Dukedom, of Westsax was given to his Son Harold; the Earldom of Harold, viz. Essex, and the rest was conferred on Algar the Son of Leofrid the Earl of Leicester.

14. The next year, which was the MLIV of our Lord, was Sward that valiant Earl of Northumberland sent with a great Body of Horse, and a strong Fleet into Scotland, where he fought a Battel with Mackbeth King of that Country, whom he defeated, having slain many of his Scots, and such Normans as we mentioned to have gone over to him, and driving him quite away, made King in his stead Malcolm the Son of the King of Cumberland, according to the orders he had received from King Edward. But this Victory cost him dear, the lives of many both English and Danes, besides that of his own Son, of whose death which he heard he demanded whether he had received his Wound before or behind, and when it was answered before, he said he was glad, and otherwise should not have when it was answered behind, he said he was glad, and otherwise should not have thought him, though his own Son, worthy of Burial. King Edward having sent him into the North to fight, much about the same time sent Aldred Bishop of Worcester with great Presents, to treat with the Emperour of Germany about sending for out of Hungary his Cousin Edward the Son of King Edmund Ironside, and remitting him into England; for having no Issue of his own to succeed him and whom the Crown of Right should belong. But Sward the Duke of Northumberland to whom the Crown of Right should belong, was buried in the Monastery of St. Mary without the Walls, built Tork, where he was buried in the Monastery of St. Mary without the Walls, built by himself, as writes Ingulphus, though Simeon talks of his being Interred at a Monastery called Galmanbo of his own Erection. The Archdeacon of Huntingdon, who gives him the Epithete of Consul Rigidissimus, tells us his Disease was a Dysentery, and that he was much grieved he should end his days in such a manner. Perceiving his death to approach, he said, "How ashamed am I that I should not die in so many Battels, but thus to be reserved to the Ignominious Death of Cowses. Put upon me my impenetrable Corset, gird me with my Sword, and set my Helmet upon my Head; give me in my left hand my Buckler, in my right my guided Scimitar, that being a most valiant Souldier, like a Souldier I may die. So he said, and as he said he died in that honourable posture he desired." His Son Walteof being very young his Government was bestowed on Tosti the Son of Godwin.

15. This same year King Edward in an Assembly held at London, banished Earl Algar the Son of Leofric, without any cause saith Simeon, but Huntingdon writes, that he was in the Council convict of Treason. Whether guilty or not, he thought himself so aggrieved that he went over into Ireland, and there getting together a Fleet of eighteen Piratical Vessels, he therewith failed to Griffin King of the Welsh, and desired his Assistance against King Edward. Griffin ready to serve him in this particular, raised speedily great Forces, and joining with Algar invaded Heresfordshire, against whom made Head as we formerly hinted Rodulph the Sister's Son of Edward, one who desired rather to Eat than Fight, and meeting them some two Miles from Heresford on the four and twentieth of October, horrid all the English contrary to their custome who were wont ever to fight on foot. But the Gentleman e'er the Fight was well begun, with his French and Normans first began to run, which the English seeing thought it was no shame to follow their Leader, but in their flight four or five hundred of them were slain, and many wounded. Griffin and Algar encouraged by this success entred Heresford, where they slew seven Canons which would have maintained the great Door of the Principal

SECT. 12. Church against them, which done they burnt the Monastery with all its Ornaments and Relicks, killed some of their Townsmen, took Prisoners more, and having plundered and burnt the City went their ways enriched with great spoil. Edward foundly alarmed with the noise hereof, commanded Forces to be raised throughout England, which meeting together at Glocester he committed the Conduct of them to Earl Harold, who Marching speedily into Wales incamped himself beyond Straddale where Griffin and Algar durst not look him in the Face, but knowing him to be a Man both of skill and metal fairly betook themselves into South Wales. He perceiving they were not to be reached, left there the greater part of his Men with orders to engage the Enemy if they could come at him, and with the rest returned to Hereford, which he fortified all ways possible; during which employment of his the two Captains thinking it best to obtain Peace, sent their Messengers and procure a meeting at a place called Elygesleage, where a firm Peace and Friendship was concluded, in pursuance whereof Algar sent his Ships to Chester till he could pay them off, and he himself went up to the King from whom he received his former Command. But Griffin the year after broke the Peace on his part by setting upon Leofgar Bishop of Hereford at a place called Glasbyrig, whom he there slew, together with his Clerks, Agelnoth the vice Earl of the County, and many others.

16. The next year being the MLVII. of Our Lord, Edward the Son of Edmund Ironside at the desire of his Uncle came into England out of Hungary, being destined by him his Successeur; but he Died not long after at London, and was Buried in St. Paul's Church, leaving behind him Edgar Etheling, and two Daughters Margaret and Christina. Nor long after he was followed to a better life by Earl Leofric, who Died in his own Village of Bromleage, and was Buried in a Monastery of his own Founding at Coventry, a Pious Charitable Man, and the Nefor of his Age, to his Councils all the Kings he served, and the whole Realm of England being beholden. In his Earldom succeeded his Son Algar, but quickly found a mis of him, being Banished the second time not a year after his Father's Death. Yet by the assistance of Griffin, the Welsh King, who would not desert him, and a Fleet of Norway Men, which by chance came in to his help, he is said shortly after by force to have recovered his Government. The following year, Malcolm, King of Scots, came and gave a visit to King Edward, and contracted to great a Friendship with his Neighbour, Tofti the Earl of Northumberland, who brought him on his way, that they became sworn Brethren, though to what effect, the event shewed within two years; for Tofti being gone to Rome with Aldrid the Archbishop of Tork, to fetch his Pall from Pope Nicholas, his sworn Brother fell in upon the places under his Government, which he cruelly wasted, and brake the Peace of St. Cuthbert, in the Island of Lindisfarne, as Simcon complains. While Malcolm thus disturbed the Northern Parts, Griffin the King of the Welsh, ceased not by his frequent Inrodes and Depredations, both by Land and Sea, to hurry the Western, which gave so great discontent to King Edward, that sensible how much he was concerned in honour, he dispatch'd from Glocester, where he then lay, after Christmas's Holy-days, Harold against him with a Party of Horse, if possible, to surprize him. Yet got he notice of his coming, and made a shift to escape; but left behind him most of his Ships, which he commanded to be burnt, and so returned. But about Rogation week, having got a Fleet in readiness, from Bristol he set Sail, and compassing the greatest Part of Wales, joyning himself to the Horse, with which his Brother Tofti, by the King's Order, met him, and did such mischief in the Country, that the Britains yielded themselves up to him, delivered up Hostages, consented to pay Tribute, and renounced quite their King Griffin. At present Griffin escaped, but the following year, he was taken by Griffin the King of North Wales, and slain, his Head, with the Head of his Ship, being sent as a present to Harold. He sent them to King Edward, who was so kind as to bestow the Dominions of Griffin, upon his two Brethren, Blecbogen and Rithwahn, who in Harold's presence, swore Allegiance to him, to obey him, both by Land and Sea, and engaged to pay without fail, what had been paid out of the Country to former Kings.

17. Griffin left behind him a Son named Caradoc, who could not digest his Inheritance, thus made over to his Uncles. Harold, as a curb to the Country, and for his own (or the King's as he pretended) convenience for hunting, caused in the British Country, at a place called Portascirb (now Portskewoth in Monmouthshire, upon the Severn Sea near to Wymouth) a great House to be erected, and furnished with all conveniences for eating and drinking. Caradoc having notice

tice of it, out of disdain and revenge, on St. Bartholomew's day, the year following his Father's death came down upon a sudden, slew all the Artificers that there were at work, and took away all the good cheer that was provided. Thus was Harold robbed of his good cheer, in those Parts; and within a little after, his Brother Tofti was in danger of being bereaved of his Life, by a Conspiracy raised against him in his own Government, upon these occasions. There was one Gospatrik, an Officer in Northumberland, with whom he having a quarrel, his Sister, Queen Egitha, caused him to be slain at Court, the Christmas before. The quarrel being taken up by the Friends and Companions of Gospatrik, two of them, viz. Ganiel the Son of Orne, and Elf the Son of Dolphin, he himself having treacherously drawn them in, had also killed in his own Chamber. Besides he had laid intolerable impositions upon the People, which so incensed them, that three or four of the principal Men, viz. Ganiolbarn, Dinstan, the Son of Agelnoth, and Gloineorn the Son of Heardulf, with four hundred Men in Arms, entered Tork a little after Michaelmas, and first slew two of his household Servants, (his Huscarles) Amund and Ravenheart, having reached them, though they were fled out of the City, and the day following, above two hundred more of his Attendants, on the North side of the River Humber. They broke open his Treasury, and having rifled all they could find, then went their ways. Tofti hereupon made a loud complaint to the King, and at his desire, was appointed Harold his Brother and others to take up the Business. But as they were going down into the North for this purpose, the whole Country in a manner met them at Northampton, where, and afterward on St. Simon and Jude's day at Oxford, they vehemently opposed the Resolution of Tofti, and by no means would admit of Reconciliation; and so vehement they were and resolute, that after the Feast of all Saints, they procured him and his Ministers to be banished. He went over with his Wife to Baldwin the Earl of Flanders, his Father-in-law, and Morkar, the Son of Algar, was made Earl of Northumberland in his room.

Tofti one of Godwin's Sons banished.

For his cruel murders and other Villanies.

18. Such was the occasion of Tofti's banishment, as most probable, though the Archdeacon of Huntingdon (who lived in the time of the Normans there) Rule over England, and heard many tales of the hated Earl Godwin, and his Sons) tells us another story. On a day, as the King sat at Dinner at Windfor, he was served with the Cup by Earl Harold. Tofti being present, and not able to endure that his younger Brother should be more favoured than himself in the King's presence, flew in his Face, and caught him by the hair. The scuffle being parted, the King foretold that their destruction was nigh, and that the wrath of God no longer would be deferred. For they were come to that height of barbarism and cruelty, that if they but liked the House or Possessions of any one, they would by night procure the owner to be murdered, with all his Offspring, to get his Estate: And those were the Justiciaries of the Kingdom. Tofti in great rage leaving the Court, went to Hereford, where at that time his Brother Harold had made vast preparations for Entertainment of the King. There he made a most terrible havock of his Servants, into each of the Vessels of Wine, Mead, Ale, and other Liquors, putting either a Man's Leg, or an Arm, or an Head, sending word to the King, that he should take no care for pickled Meats, as for other sorts he might carry them down with him to his Farm. For this so horrid a villany, the King commanded him to be banished, which the Northumbrians understanding, for the many murders he had there committed, they drove him thence with all his Family, as well English as Danes, and seized on his Treasure and Magazine in Tork. Into his Place they preferred Marger (so he calls him) the Son of Earl Algar, who with them, and multitudes out of Lincolnshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire, went as far as Hamton. Against him marched Edwin his Brother, with Men under his Command, and many Britains, and at last came up Earl Harold, whom the Northumbrians procured to go to the King, to get leave that Marcher might be their Governour, which he granted, sending back Harold to them to Hamton. They in the mean time burnt and pillaged the Country, killing many of the Inhabitants, and when their request was granted, many thousands they took along with them, doing that part of the Kingdom so much mischief as it could not recover many years after. Such is the account which Huntingdon gives us, strange as to the manner of the behaviour of the Northumbrians. And had Tofti been guilty of such a rash Act toward his Brother in the King's presence, the King would never have interceded with those of Torkshire, for his keeping his Place as it appears from Simcon that he did. Nay, Malmesbury tells us plainly, he had it from those that knew that another was put into Tofti's place by the

The Scots infest the North of England.

And the Welsh the Western Parts.

Who are subdued, and Griffin their King slain.

Sim. ad Ann.
1065.

Ad An. Edw.
24.

Sect. 12. the endeavour of Harold, quite contrary to the inclinations of the King, who bore a great love to Tostig, but being spent with his Disease and Age, he now began to be flighted by all, and could not succour whom he affected, but thence fell into such trouble of mind, that his Displeasure being thereby increased, he died not long after.

Harold another Son of Godwin Shipwreckt.

19. But if the King upon this or some other occasion predicted the Ruine of the Sons of Godwin (who doubtless were enough to blame) to be near at hand, he was so much in the right, that their ill Stars about this very time began to operate; for if Tostig was banished by the King, Harold was also driven from England by the very Winds and Weather. About the time that his Brother went into Flanders, he being for his recreation at his house at Bosham in Sussex, upon the Sea side; for his farther Pleasure, he took a Fishers Boat, meaning to plye up and down, but going farther off to Sea than he was aware, a Tempest royle and carried him crosse the Channel to the French Coast, where glad to be safe any where, he was forc't to Land in the Territories of the Earl of Ponthieu. The men of the place (according to their custome and that barbarous practice which is on foot in most places, to make a prey of distressed and shipwreck'd Persons) presently fall to work. Armed they seize upon the naked, a multitude upon a few, on their hands they put Manacles, and Fetters on their Feet. Harold considering what was to be done, hired a Messenger to goe to William, by whom he acquaints him how he "was sent by the King, by his word and presence, to confirm what other little "Messengers had but whisper'd, but was kept Prisoner, and hindered from the "discharge of his Message by Guido Earl of Ponthieu. It appeared they had a "barbarous and extravagant custome in that Countrey, that such as escaped drown- "ing, should on Land it self be endangered, that it would suit well with a man "of so great repute as he was, not to suffer such villany to goe unpunished, hav- "ing detracted from his Authority, by daring to cast bonds upon one that had "appealed to his Justice; if with money his Liberty was to be redeemed, he would "willingly pay the price to Earl William, but not to such an half Man as Guido "was. By command of William he is quickly set at liberty, and by Guido con- ducted to his Court, where being honourably treated in all respects, he is assign- ed to an expedition into Little Britain, where at that time the Norman had War. By his Wit and Valour he so approved himself to the Duke, that he was very much taken with him, to whom, that he might the more endear himself, he promised by Oath, that in case King Edward died, he would deliver up to him the Castle of Dover, which belonged to him, and procure him to succeed in the Kingdom of England. This said, the Duke's Daughter, as yet too young for Mar- riage, was betrothed to him, and he was sent home with great gifts.

Bosham how obtained by Godwin.

20. Some said he was sent over on purpose by Edward, who finding himself decay, had in his thoughts pitched upon his Kinsman William for his Successor, but Malmesbury approves of the other report, that he was driven by Tempest. However, by this promise of his, he intangled himself and incurred the indignation of William by his breach of it, which procured him his end, so that he had reason to curse the time of his knowing Bosham, which because it was wrong- fully and deceitfully got from the right owner, seemed indeed to draw down a curse upon him the second Possessor of it, and it is not amiss here to insert the story, the more to discover the humour of his Father Earl Godwin, who as by this and other passages, it appears, to be but got, cared not by what means he came at it. This Bosham (or Bosham, as anciently it was called) lying under- neath Cliffe, in the confines of Hants and Sussex, environed round about with Woods, and the Sea together, was formerly before Bede's time, onely famous for a small Cell, which one Dicul a Scotch Monk had in it, where he lived with five or six other Religious Persons, very poorly in the Service of God: Af- terwards it came into the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Godwin upon sight of it had an itching desire after it, and therefore with a great Train of Gal- lants, comes smiling and jesting to the Archbishop, with these words. My Lord, I pray you give me Bosham. The Archbishop much marvelled what he meant, but at length, whether he thought he alluded to Basilian a Bulle, as now we term it, which in times past was used in doing Homage, or was unwilling to dis- please him, answered; I give you Bosham. He hereupon, immediately with his Followers, falls down at his Feet, as was beforehand ordered, and kissing them, with many thanks went back to Bosham, of which as Lord, he kept possession by strong hand, and having the slender Testimony of his Friends and Followers to back him, praised much the Archbishop to the King, as his Benefactor, and so held it it peaceably till he left it, as it seems, to his Son Harold, whose passage hence into Sect. 12. Normandy, procured the Shipwreck, though not at present, both of his Person, of his Fortunes, and indeed of his Father's Family.

Waltherus Ma- ppe de Regis Curia.

Several ac- counts of Harold's passage into Normandy.

21. But as to the Message carried over to Duke William, there are still more opi- nions. Ingalphus obliged by the Duke, and therefore a favourer of him, writes, that King Edward, not long before his Death, perceiving his Kinsman Edgar Etheling, the Son of Edward Athelno, lately deceased, both in respect of his body and Mind, unfit for Government (of which temper his Father is also reputed to have been) and that the evil Off-spring of Earl Godwin, daily increased, and got more strength and interest, fixed his thoughts upon Earl William of Normandy, his Kinsman, and fully resolved to have him succeed him in the Kingdom of England, for he was then become famous in War, had triumphed over the French King, in the Exercise of Arms, was invincible, a most just Judge in deciding of Causes, as well as most Religious and devout at Divine Service. Hereupon he dispatched to him Robert, the Archbishop of Canterbury, to acquaint him that both in respect to his Kindred and Merit, he had designed him his Successor. Besides this, Harold the Major domo of the King's Palace, going into Normandy, swore not onely to keep the Crown for him, after the decease of King Edward; but to marry also his Daughter, which things having passed, he returned magni- ficently rewarded. This is the account we have from Ingalphus, but such as will not hold in reference to the Messenger, for Robert the Archbishop, was driven out of the Land before, and therefore King Edward could not send him from his side, or presence, as the Abbat words it. Simoon has another Story, which sends Harold into Normandy, but upon another occasion quite different. When Godwin, he tells us, was reconciled to the King, he was constrained to give up Hostages for Edward's security, which were Wulnoth his own Son, and Hacn his Grandson, by his Son Swane, and were sent into Normandy to William the Barlad Son of his daughter Rodbert, who was Son to Richard the King's Mothers Brother. In process of time, when Godwin was dead, Harold asked leave of the King to goe and fetch home his Brother and Nephew, to whom he answered, that he would not be Authour of his Journey, but that he should not say that he hindered him, he might goe whither he pleased, and try what he could doe; onely he foresaw his Journey would tend to the detriment of the whole Kingdom of England, and his own disgrace. For he was assured the Earl was not such a Fool as to dismiss them, without he knew it would redound to his own convenience. But Harold ventures to take Ship, and by a great Tempest, is cast upon the Coast of Ponthieu, into the mouth of a River called Maia, where his Vessel is seized on, as a wreck by the Lord of that Countrey. Hereupon he procures one to goe to William, to let him know in what a condition he was, who immediately sends to the Lord of Ponthieu, to discharge him, and upon refusal, a second time, threatening elfe to fetch him away by force. Being now set at Liberty, he goes to William, who, very courteously receives him, on purpose to draw him over to his design.

The Engage- ment betwixt Harold and Duke Wil- liam.

22. When he thought him fully prepared he broke his mind, acquainting him how when his Cousin Edward lived there with him in exile, he seriously inga- ged to him, that if ever he came to be King of England, he would transfer the Inheritance of the Kingdom upon him. He added, that if he would oblige himself to assist him in this matter, keep the Castle of Dover with the Well of Water for his service, would send his Sister to him in time convenient to be married to one of his Noblemen, and promise to take his Daughter for his Wife he should now receive his Nephew, and as soon as he came to be King of England his Brother should be set at liberty, and when he was once settled in the Throne by his as- sistance he should have every thing else he could reasonably desire. Harold was sensible of the case he was in, and saw there was no remedy but promise whatso- ever he required. But William with his bare promise would not be satisfied, but bringing forth the Relicks of Saints, made him open their sacred Bodies to swear really to perform whatsoever they had now agreed, which done Harold took his Nephew, and with him returned into England. When upon the King's Demand he had given him an account of what had passed, he said, Did not I tell thee that William was no fool, and that many mischiefs might happen to this Kingdom by that thy Journey? I foresee great Calamities coming upon this Nation of ours by that shine. Alas, which I pray God may not happen in my days. And his Prayer was grant- ed, for King Edward shortly after died; and Harold as before his death he had ordained succeeded him in his Kingdom. So writes Simoon, with whom agrees Edmerus as to the occasion of his Journey. Though Matthew Paris believes him driven

Ad Ann. 1065.

Hinc Rex Ed- wardus Rob- ertum Archie- piscopus Can- tuarie lega- tum a latere suo direxit.

Señt. 12. driven thither by force of Tempest, but when he came to get his liberty to have told another Tale quite contrary to the meaning of his Heart, and to have entred with him into that secret confederacy out of Necessity. Of this opinion also as we said is Malmesbury, and it seems the more probable.

King Edward dies. 23. Whatever the occasion of his Promise and Engagement was, the time was at hand, that he should be put to the Trial. For now approached that year, that drawfull year to him and his English Saxon Nation signalized by a Comet, which portended as Ingulphus is of Opinion that great change of Government, that Slaughter of the People, and that great misery which came shortly upon the Land. King Edward grew every day more sickly, yet kept his Christmas at Westminster, and assisted at the Dedication of St. Peter's Church there, which he had re-edified with all magnificence; but on the Eve of the Epiphany or Twelftide he died, and the day following was buried in his late dedicated Church with Royal rites, to the great sorrow of the miserable People. The general opinion is that he was a simple, honest, harmless Man, and much devoted to Religious Exercises, exceedingly hampered by Earl Godwin and his Sons, who were but too sensible that he received his Preferment from their Family, and upon that ground were too confident and imposing, as often it happens in such cases. It was the Misfortune of the Nation as well as of himself, that he was driven into banishment, and living in another Country was molded into the humour, fashions and customs of it, and out of good nature constrained to be grateful to such as had well deserved of him in his Necessities, more than the Temper if not the Interest of his own Subjects could bear or brook. Most of them yet were in compliance and conformity with him so transformed into foreign shapes, as foretold their Subjection in a short time to those the manners and usages of whom they had already taken up, so that the Conquerours needed but to come to master their Bodies, their minds and affections were theirs already, their humour was already run out of England, so that the Normans needed not herein to play any after-Game.

Is mightily Frenchified. 24. Ingulphus an Eye-witness is our informer, who writes that Edward being born in England but bred in Normandy, through his long continuance in that Country was almost changed into a Frenchman, and brought very many over with him whom he promoted to various Dignities, and greatly exalted under the King and other Normans; thus introduced all the Land began to leave off their English Customs, and to imitate the manners of the French. All the Noblemen in their Houses spake the French Tongue as mighty gentile, made their Charters and Writings after the French fashion, and grew to be ashamed of their own usages, both in these and other matters: and this humour more and more increased, till to those they admired, at length they became Slaves and Vassals. But so King Edward died, or as Malmesbury words it, being full of years and glory yielded up his simple (that is his innocent well-meaning) Spirit to the Heavenly Kingdom, after he had reigned, saith Simeon, three and twenty years, six Months and seven and twenty days, which must be reckoned then from the death of Hardecnute, and not from his own Preferment, which was as we said in the year following. He is said to have been so chaste that though he was married, yet he never as a Husband enjoyed his Wife, which some attribute to the Aversion he had to her for her Father's sake, but if that was the Cause of his Abstinence, his self denial, and in this respect his suffering, he could not in this deserve the Name of a Confessor (given to those that suffer for Christ though not unto death) which yet in respect of this or other parts of his Conflicts against flesh and blood he obtained, and came to be known by the Name of St. Edward. But in him the Royal Regnant-Line of the West Saxon Kings, which from Cerdic according to the Calculation of Malmesbury had in Britain, Dominion for five hundred and seventy one years, and from Egbert two hundred and sixty one years, received its Period.

A dispute about the Succession. 25. To the Glory and Happiness of this West Saxon Family, it did belong not by its ending to put an end to the English Empire, and in its own Ruine involve the Catastrophe of the whole Nation: this was reserved to a baser House, out of which an Uplart should arise to pull down the whole Fabrick, and bury himself in the Ruines thereof, Edward being dead there were three that laid claim to the Crown. The first, whose undoubted Right it was, was Edgar Erbeling the Son of Edward, the Outlaw lately mentioned, the Grandson of Edmund Ironside, the Elder Brother of him who had the last Possession, though according to the Right of Primogeniture not the best Title. The next was William of Normandy, the Kinsman of the late King by his Mother being her Brothers Grandson, one who in blood could Anno autem Domini 1066. Cometa in caelo apparuit, quod Regni mutationem magnam populi sciret, & multorum terre miseriam portendit: unde dicitur illud mercurio.

Anno Millesimo Sexagesimo quarto. Anglorum mores Crimen infuse Cometa. Ut enim Philosophi dicunt quo dirigit, Crimen, illic diff. Crimen, Sic Crimen, Ingulphus.

Rex autem Edwardus natus in Anglia sed nutritus in Normannia & diuissimam imperatorem in Galliam transfusus. Sc. Caput ergo sua terra sub Rege & sub alio Normannia inductus Anglicos ritus dimittit, &c. Vide ad Annum 1043. Ita enim plenus & glorie simplicem spiritum coelestem Regis exhibuit.

could find no pretext; but upon the kindness and pretended promise of his Kinsman. The last was Harold the Son of Godwin, who could not produce any shew of Right by Descent, but alleged the late King's Designment, and thought he could plead more merit than them both. Edgar was a Stranger, had had neither time, nor ability in Estate or mind to make any more Interest than what mere Conscience had wrought in the minds of men, which is usually very inform upon such Occasions. William indeed was a considerable Prince, and as such acknowledged, but betwixt him and England there was a deep Ditch, not easily got over as was imagined, and Dangers at a Distance are not so much regarded. Harold was Noble, a goodly Man, the greatest Minister of the deceased King, one of much Valour and excellent Conduct, a Person civil and obliging, of such Qualifications as fitted him for a Crown; and what was more than all, had all the Court and Grandees at his beck, whom by kindness he had either won, or by awe had conquered and brought over to his Party. He took the advantage and knowing delays to be dangerous, the same day that Edward was buried he assumed the Title and was crowned King, being chosen, as Simeon saith, by the Princes of all England.

Harold is chosen King.

Takes good Countes at first.

His Brother Tostig infects the Land from Flanders.

26. Being King he sleight took those Courtes, which most of those who are conscious to themselves of their bad or weak Titles are wont, and all other Princes ought to take. All unjust Laws he antiquated, seemed not only to respect but became a Patron of Churches and Monasteries, seemed not only to respect but even reverence Bishops, Abbats, Monks, and even all the Clergy; to all good men he shewed himself pious, humble and affable, and to all that was bad he manifested an Aversion, commanding all his Officers in general to lay in wait for all Thieves, Robbers and Disturbers of the Peace; in conclusion, he made it his Business to defend his Country both by Sea and Land. But both his own Fate, and that of the Nation was too urgent to suffer him long to continue these practices. On the twenty fourth of April a dreadful Comet appears, seen, as was reported, throughout the world with great Lustre for seven days together. The first mischief portended thereby, was from Harold's own Brother Tostig, who having been banished chiefly by his procurement to be out of the way, and not able to digest his preferment to the Regal Dignity, was moved with so much Envy and Indignation as to endeavour all ways possible to unking him, for which purpose he came out of Flanders with some Ships to the Isle of Wight, whence after he had forced Money from the Inhabitants, he departed and plaid the Pirate upon all the Coasts till he came to Sandwich Haven. Harold being then at London, upon notice thereof got in readines both a strong fleet and a good Party of Horse, with which he resolved in Person to go to Sandwich, which Tostig understanding took along with him all the Seamen he could find, and went to the Coast of Lindsey, where he burnt many Villages, and killed many Men; but Edwin Earl of Mercia, and his Brother Merka Earl of Northumberland, halted into those Parts with an Army, and soon forced him to quit the Country. Thence he sailed into Scotland to King Malcolm, and with him continued the whole Summer.

27. Harold lying at Sandwich in expectation of his Brother when he perceived he had taken another course, sailed to the Isle of Wight, and about those Coasts he plied all Summer and Autumn, having a land Army bestowed in all places he saw convenient at the Sea side. For another Guest he looked for who required greater Preparations for his Reception than his Brother Tostig, viz. William the Duke of Normandy, who had before this sent to him to put him in mind of his Promise and Oath, and to require a performance of what had been agreed betwixt them. "This Harold thought was very unreasonable to require of one who was already in Possession of a Kingdom, and was come to it by the unanimous consent of the Nobility and People. He answered, that what he then promised was in Captivity at a time when he was not his own Man, and that could not be called his own Act which Constraint and Necessity forced from him. But he had he voluntarily done what he was so far from intending, it could not have been valid, forasmuch as he could not take an Outlandish Woman to Wife, being King, without the Assent of the Estates, much less could he Swear away the Succession and Right to the Crown without their knowledge, consent and allowance. To these reasons which he looked upon as very good when backed with a better Sword it's said that he added contempt, because as he thought he was out of danger, sending away the Ambassadors on lame Horses. That on which he chiefly insisted was, that William's Daughter was Dead, the Marriage with whom was the foundation of all that had passed before."

M m

De eo sic Malmesb. testatur: Incepto Haroldus post mortem Regis intelligit, ut fratrem exlegaret. De William primo, lib. 5 p. 104.

"twixt

Sect. 12. "twixt them, and this was the ground of his confidence, that he looked upon
"his Rival as having his Hands full from the Neighbouring Princes in his own "Country. The Duke hereupon resolved to attempt by War what by Words he could not compass, but to proceed gravely and with due preparations, considering the greatness of the Enterprize; for he knew his Adversary to be a stout and resolute Man, and made no other account but that he was to grapple with the strength of a whole Nation.

28. Therefore with all diligence did he set himself to the work he had in hand. All his own Souldiers he kept in pay the whole year, and though to his great charge hired others from adjacent places. He used great discretion in the choice of his Men, lifting such as were tall and of strong constitution. His Captains and Officers were both practised in Warlike matters, and of mature Age to govern both themselves and others; not heady rash Young Men, who usually by their heat and indifcretion ruine an Army. And indeed he was exceedingly well served at this time, his Prelates striving who should excell one another in Acts of Religion, and his Nobles in Deeds of Magnanimity and Liberality, so that the Monk of Malmesbury admires how within the term of sixty years they should become so degenerate, not considering the luxurious effects of wealth and prosperity, great Possessions and Affluence of all things in a new Conquered Country. But as William made all as sure as he could at home, so abroad he fought for Reputation to his cause, by sending to the Pope, and making his Preterences as plausible as he could, which Harold omitted, thinking himself strong enough without the help of a verbal or Paper Assistance. Pope Alexander in token of his Approbation sends him a Consecrated Banner, well satisfied with his bare affirmation that King Edward himself, besides what Harold had engaged, by the Advice of Earl Seward, Earl Godwin, and Strigand the Archbishop, had chosen him for his Successour, and had as Pledges or Hostages sent over to him both the Son and the Nephew of Godwin. Having received the Banner as a good Omen, he assembled his Nobility and Officers at Lillibone, where laying open the whole matter to them, they promised to stand by him with their Lives and Fortunes, which resolution he cherished by great promises of Reward, and according to their several Abilities appointed what every one was to contribute towards a Fleet. This done he dismissed them till the Month of August, and then they all met again at St Valerie a Port Town, where they staid many days for a Wind, which stay made the Common Souldiers mutter, blaming him for attempting to get another Man's Country, and alledging, that his Father having such a design had miscarried, and that it was fatal to the Family to be crossed by God. Almighty in their endeavours after things too high for them.

29. The Duke was sensible whether these Discourses tended, and how much his whole Affair was thereby endangered. Taking Council then with his Officers, he caused the Relicks of St. Valerick (one of the Disciples of Columbanus who by King Clothair was made Abbat of a Monastery in this place, in the Territories of Amiens on the Mouth of the River Some, and imparted his Name unto it) to be brought forth and expost for the obtaining of a fair Wind, which without delay followed upon the Ceremony. Then very cheerfully did they call one upon another to get out to Sea, the Earl himself being the first that went on shipboard, by his example to draw on the rest. Following close the Admiral Gally they had a fair Passage, and after they had refreshed themselves arrived at a place called Pevensey, as some write, or Bulwerhith three miles distant, as others most in the right, or at Hastings as some also deliver, following herein the custom of the Ancients to ascribe a Battel or any memorable Accident to the next place of Note in that Country wherein the thing fell out. As William was going ashore his Feet slipped, and down he fell on his Hands, which a Souldier observing told him a-loud, That he had already taken Possession of England. His Army he forbade to Plunder or at all to indamage the Country which was shortly to be theirs, which saying being by Ancient Historians related of former Conquerours, the Monks apply to him; but with no good reason, for when after the overthrow of King Harold they had better reason to think the Country would be theirs, he had no such Injunctions upon them, but permitted them to burn and kill at their pleasure. But so he landed, and for fifteen days he kept himself quiet, not to refresh his Army; but either to consider better what he was to do, or to build a Fort to have recourse to in case of Danger, for his Ships he burnt: that his Men might think of no mean betwixt Death and Conquest.

30. His

30. His whole Fleet is said to have consisted of nine hundred Sail, but others increase the number to above a thousand, which are not then to be understood of such Ships as ours now-a-days, but flat bottom'd Boats, or Hulkes, such as were fit for transporting Men and Horses. Hereof as an Anonymous Writer, about the Reign of his Son Henry, wrote, William his Sewer the Son of Ofbern supplied him with sixty Vessels. Hugh his Nephew, afterward Earl of Chester, with so many; Hugh de Mumfort with fifty Ships, and sixty Souldiers; Ramus the Elemofynary of Tescan, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln, with one Ship and twenty Men. Nicolas the Abbat of St. Audoen with fifteen Ships and an hundred Men. Robert Earl of Angus with sixty Ships. Gerold the Sewer with as many. William Count of Deu-rons with eighty Ships. Roger of Montgomeri with sixty. Roger de Bunnoot with sixty. Odo Bishop of Baieux with an hundred. Roberti de Mortimer with an hundred and twenty. And Water Giffard thirty Vessels with an hundred Men. Besides these which by the Authour's computation make a thousand, from others of his Dependents he had many other Ships from every one according to his Ability. His Wife Matildis for honour of the Expedition caused a Ship to be made Named Mora wherein he himself crossed the Sea, having on the Prow a Child of Gold with the right Hand pointing to England, and with the left holding an Ivory Whistle at his Mouth; for which out of requital Duke William her Husband assigned her the County of Kent, when he had got full Possession of that Province.

31. William's Arrival was accompanied with some of those lucky hits, circumstances or accidents which ever attend upon Conquests. Harold was now out of the way. He had expected him all the Summer, till about the middle of September, when judging he would give him no trouble that year, and Provisions failing, both the Fleet and Army quitted the Ports he had assigned them at the Sea side. As if Tofti had been hired by the Normans on purpose to divert his Brother from the Maritime Parts, to weaken his Force, nay to break in pieces his whole Power, Helms and Assistances, he applies himself to Harold Harvager King of Norway, whom he knew to bear a Months mind to the Kingdom of England, and agrees in Conjunction with him to make an Invasion. Having united their Fleets they failed up into the River Humber; and from it into Ouse, and landed at a place called Rickale, whence they marched to Tork, and took it after a fierce Assault. Harold upon notice having made due preparation hastes into the North, but before him the two Earls, and Brothers, Edwin and Morkar, with considerable Forces had marched against them, and upon St. Matthew's Eve on the Northern bank of Ouse at Fulford, engaged them with good Success at the beginning, for fighting very valiantly they did great Execution. But the English after a long fight, not able to sustain the violence and Numbers of the Norwegians, turned their backs after many of them were slain, and more were drowned in the adjoining River. This done, the Norwegians received from those of Tork five Hundred Hostages, and leaving there an hundred and fifty of their own, returned to their ships; and on the fifth day after, being the five and twentieth of September, King Harold with a great Army comes to the place. Thence marching to a place called Stanford-bridge (afterward from this occasion Battelbridge, upon the River Darwent in the East Riding of Yorkshire) he gave them Battel, wherein after terrible resistance made, were slain both Harold Harvager and Tofti, and the Victory remained with him. Olave the Son of Harold, with the Earl of Orcade called Paul who were left with the Army to keep the ships he suffered to depart with twenty Vessels, and the remainder of their Forces, having first received their Oaths and Hostages to attempt nothing against him for the time to come. But here we are to take notice what Malmesbury tells us of a certain Norway Man, who alone by himself for some time retarded the Victory of the English, though methinks we can hardly believe it. This Man standing upon the entrance of the Bridge, having killed not one, or two, or three, but many of his Enemies, hindered the whole Army from passing. Being spoke to to yield himself, and bid be assured that a Man of such strength and metal would find good usage; he derided them, and with a grim countenance reviled them for pitiful Men that could not master him alone. At length none would come to him thinking it madness to encounter with a Man so desperate, but one at a distance shot him with a Dart, while like a Braggadocio he behaved himself negligently; and so he falling the English got passage, and obtained the Victory in the manner aforesaid. The Body of Tofti being known by a Wart between his Shoulders, was carried to Tork and there Buried. In the Plunder of the Field if we may believe Adam Bremenfis,

M m 2

10

Sect. 12. so great a quantity of Gold was found, that twelve lusty young men were scarcely able to bear it on their Backs.

32. Harold having obtained the Victory and so much Treasure, became Penny wife, as the Proverb is, and Pound foolish. He thought it behoved him to play the Good Husband, not to be lavish of his Money, but fill his Coffers, and lay up for future and distant Events. He little imagined that this great Gamester was landed, and that he must now speedily push for all. In the two last Battels he had lost the flower of his Army, most of his best Souldiers were slain; and those that remained he so disoblged by taking all the Plunder to himself, and defrauding them as they alleged of the price of their blood, that they renounced his Interest, repented of what they had done already for him, and resolved, in case he should have the like occasion, to suffer him to fight for himself. This error was no sooner committed, but as he late feasting for joy at York he had the News of the Norman Duke his Arrival with very numerous and Disciplin'd Forces. And now he being to be ruined, his Fate hurried him to Resolutions and Actions quite contrary to those of him who was to raise himself out of his misfortune. As he had disoblged these men who were to fight against Souldiers that loved and had been obliged by their Captain, so, whereas his Adversary went soberly and judiciously to work, in making preparation for the main Encounter, he did nothing less. He neither took any care in gathering together his Souldiers, nor any time for Consultation about so weighty an Affair, but all bloudy as he was, and with but a slender Company hastes towards the place where the Normans lay, as if the fortune of Cæsar, only to come to see, and then overcome, were devolved upon him, because of his late Northern success. Coming to London all in an Heat, he would not tarry for such Supplies as were on their way toward him, but hurries into Staffex, and would needs find out the Enemy and engage e'er one third part of his Army could be put in order. Yet he sent some Spies before to survey the number and strength of the Normans, whom being discovered (as Malmesbury writes) William cautioned to be led about the Camp, and after they had eat and drank plentifully to be sent back to their Master. Being demanded how matters stood, they spake much of the Magnificence and Confidence of the Duke, and seriously professed they believed, that well nigh all that were with him were Priests, because they were shaven, not only in Face, but both the Lips; for at this time the English wore large Mustaches on the upper lip, a custome which Julius Cæsar takes notice to have been amongst the Ancient Britains. The King laughed and said they were not Priests, but stout and courageous Souldiers, knowing well enough the Qualities of the Normans, with whom he himself had been but lately conversant. His Brother Gyrth a Youth of Courage and Knowledge above his years, at his extolling the valour of the Normans, took occasion to tell him that he thought it was Indiscretion for him to fight with them, so far as much as he could not deny but that either willingly or against his mind he had given William his Oath. He advised him to withdraw himself, and suffer him and the rest to try their Fortune, who were never obnoxious by any Oath, and might justly fight in defence of their Country. If he should fight it was to be feared he must either die or flee; but in case they did the same, he might either succour and unite them flying or revenge their death.

33. Harold by no means would hearken to his Advice, as that which tended to his dishonour, and by objection of Cowardice would blemish the Actions of all his Life. And in as great heat and haste he rejected the Monk who brought him three Proposals from the Duke, "Either to resign the Kingdom to him, according to what had formerly passed betwixt them: or to hold it of him: or to decide the Controversie with him before the two Armies in a single Combat, to prevent the Effusion of Christian Blood. His Answer was, that God should be Judge betwixt them; or as others write, that the Swords of the Nations should decide it. No hopes then of any Accommodation appearing, each according to the custome of his Country prepared to fight the next Morning. The English are said to have spent all the Night in Singing and Drinking, the Normans in Confession of their Sins, and in the Morning to have Communicated. The Fatal day being come, which was the two and twentieth of October, the English were drawn up into a close Body armed with Battel-Axes and Shields, and by the Standard stood the King on foot with his Brothers, that the danger being common, none might think of running away. The forefront of the Normans consisted of Foot, being most Archers, and flanked with a Wing of Horse on each hand, wherein consisted the great strength of their Army. The Duke himself cheerfully and audibly affirmed his

Then hears of the Duke's Landing.

But acts without consideration.

Rejects all good advice, and the Proposals of Duke William.

They prepare for Battel.

Præcelsa igitur universis, exercet simul, nec detrahebat paucis. Simo enim aliquis Concomitur. Ingulph. Perueniens cælius Hastings, Colletteque ille aliquando popularium tumultu, confectus ex his acie ad exercitum non misit & seneca, fatis urgentibus contra Crastinum dimicant. & scripsit. durans ac se agens puer more gerens militis manu ad maximum congregant cum ad. per aris robustissime dispositi dantes a deo. tris & similes, corruis. Landen in diei crepusculo, in quodam alio. flos collegatis. minus legitur. Idem.

Simen. Malmesb. Alii.

Cause was just, and that God would accordingly respect it, and called for his Armour, which being brought to him in an hurry, his Corset was put on the wrong way, which error he corrected by this pleasant Conceit, that He perceived his Dukedom was changed into a Kingdom. At the Head of his Army he put them in mind of the Valour and Renown of their Ancestours, and especially of Rollo, how they had beaten the French King in the very Heart of his Kingdom, and compelled him to give them as large a part of his Country as they would accept. How since that they had taken another French King Prisoner at Rosen, and compelled him to restore Normandy to Duke Richard when a Child, and last of all he brought to their Memories what memorable things they had done under his own Conduct, and concluded with confidence of Victory both from the guilt of Harold who had wilfully Perjured himself, and of the whole Nation, upon which he cast the cruel and traitorous Murther of his Kinsman and their own Prince Alfred.

34. The Normans then beginning the Song of Rowland by the Martial Example of that Heroe, as they accounted him, to excite themselves to imitation, and imploring Divine Assistance went against the English, who were as ready to meet them, though the ground they stood on was strait and inconvenient for fight; which as Simen writes, caused many of them to take the opportunity of slipping away. Those that staid to be sure fought very valiantly, and neither by the showers of Arrows nor any other means could their Impenetrable Body be broken, till William bethought him of this Stratagem, to cause his Men to retire back as if they fled, which by a desire of Pursuit drew them out of their order; this done, they faced about and fell upon them, who by this means had half routed themselves. Yet in their flight did they often rally and make Head against the Pursuers, selling their Lives at very dear Rates, and part of them having got an Hill, when the Normans all in a heat climbed up after them, having got the advantage of the ground they tumbled them down, and by casting down Stones quite overpowered them. In another place by their knowledge of the Country, being more dextrous in passing a Ditch, they made very great slaughter of their Enemies, and filled it up with their dead Carcasses. Thus remained the success doubtful, sometimes seeming to incline to the one side and sometimes to the other, from nine of the Clock in the Morning, till it grew dark, and then Harold after he had discharged all the Parts both of a skillful Commander and a valiant Souldier was shot into the Head and died. He being gone, about whom the Controversie was, though their Country was as much concerned, the English Souldiers began to loose their Courage and take the advantage of the Night to flee. With him fell his two Brothers Gyrth and Leofwin and the greatest part of the English Nobility. William hereby remained Victour, who by his Courage and Activity deserved the Garland, having so bestirred himself all the day, and ventur'd his person, that three choice Horses one after another were killed under him. Toward his dead Enemy he shewed himself generous, freely and without Ransome giving up his Body to his Mother, though the offered much Money for it; and, before that, when, as it lay in the Field, a certain Souldier by way of Contempt and Revenge gave it a cut in the Thigh, he was so displeased with the man, that he instantly cashier'd him the Army, for doing so piteously and Cowardly a Deed.

Wherein Harold is slain, and his Army routed.

35. Harold by his Mothers care was buried at Waltham in a Church of Canons founded and endowed by himself. When the News of his Defeat was spread abroad, the two Earles Edwin and Morgan who had upon discontent withdrawn themselves from him came to London, and sending away their Sister Aligitha the Queen to Chesler, they tampered with the Citizens to make one of them King, but found them very cool in the business, for as in duty they were concern'd, their Inclinations were toward Edgar Etheling, and with them joynd Aldred the Archbishop of York and many of the Nobility. Hereupon the two Earls went away in discontent into Northumberland, where they thought Duke William would not come, not caring what became of the Cause of Edgar or of their own Country, because their ambitious purposes were not gratified. The Conquerour having settled his matters about Hastings, made not first to London, and afterwards went back into Kent (as Spot the Abbot of St. Augustin's in Canterbury, and others following him, have erroneously written, and thereupon told a Tale of the Kentish men their meeting him with Boughs, and procuring from him a Confirmation of their Privileges) but took his Journey toward Dover Castle, which he and many others long time after esteemed as the very Key of England. In his passage by Romney

Sect. 12.

Romney Marsh he avenged himself of some Savage kind of People dwelling thereabout, who had killed some of his men that by mistake had landed at that place. To the Castle Multitudes of People had betaken themselves because it was held impregnable, yet affrighted at his presence they straight way surrendered it, in the fortifying whereof he spent eight days, and then proceeding Northward at a place not far distant the Kentish men of their own Accord came in to him, sware fealty to him and gave up their Hostages for performance. Continuing then his March he understood what canvassing there was at London betwixt the two Earls and those that stood for Edgar Etheling, whereupon he made toward them and fate down not far from the City. Thence certain Companies issued out against him, but with five hundred Horse he easily repelled them, killing divers in the Chace, and here began the misery of poor England. The Duke seem'd resolv'd before this to carry himself with all gentleness (at least some to believe) and bring over the English by kind usage, but seeing they made head against him, and put him to farther trouble and danger, he changed his purpose resolving to make an absolute Conquest of the Land. For upon this Sally all the Buildings South of the Thames he commanded or permitted to be fired.

36. Passing the Thames he removed to Wallingford, whither Stigand the Archbishop, and others of the English Nobility, confounded in their Designs, and not knowing what other course to take, came to him deserting young Edgar; as also did the Londoners, who giving up themselves into his Power, delivered such and so many Hostages as he thought convenient. Thence by degrees he came to London, permitting his men all the while to do as in an Enemies Country with Fire and Sword, and on Christmas day was Crowned King at Westminster by Aldred the Archbishop of York, for against Stigand of Canterbury objection was made, that he did not legally hold that Place, nor had rightly taken his Pall. Before the Crown was set on his Head, he gave his Oath at the Altar, in presence of the Nobility and all the People, to protect the Church in its Rights and Liberties, to govern the People according to Law and Justice, to maintain them in their Rights, and protect them from Spoil and Rapine. Here is our Period. For having set him on the Throne, the Discourse of his Life, and how by Particulars he either governed according or contrary to his Oath, whether he that had made such a noise with the Perjury of Harold, had not ever a special care not to be guilty of that horrid Crime, belongs to a Treatise of the New Dynasty of the Normans. Yet shall we, though we have no full prospect, admit the Reader to look as it were through the Curtain, and see a little how he acted his Part of King over his new Subjects, by the assistance of Ingulphus, who was himself a prime Spectator, if not a sort of Actor, being preferred to be Abbat of Croyland, and otherwise much favoured by him. Having instanced in several Noblemen, whom either he had imprisoned or banished, he adds, That the Earldoms, Baronies, Bishopricks, and the Preferments of all the Land be distributed to his Normans, and scarce admitted any Englishman to any State of Honour or Power. Nay, they so abominated the English, that how deserting soever they were, they were outed of all Preferments: And Strand Prelates sinners less fit by far, of any Nation under Heaven, were admitted gratis into their places. How they abominated and altered their Language and Customs, it's not convenient here to insist. Almost all the Kentish Lands he seized, as well as those of other Provinces; Church Lands were every where devoured, and all things belonging to the English became Prey and Booty.

Then the Londoners.
Duke William Crowned King at Westminster.

But neglected his Coronation Oath.

Coronationis autem Officium noluit ab Archiep. Stigando percipere (cujus dignitatis solibus illud Officium ex debito pertinebat) eo quod ab Apostolico Papa illum Calumniam audierat suum pallium non fuisse Canonice Ingulph.

run ascendere permixti. — Tenuim tunc Anglicos abominati sunt ut quicumque merito pollebant, de dignitatibus pellentur; & multo minus habiles alienigena de quacunque alia Natione que sub calce est, existerent, gratanter assumerentur. Gervasius Dornborn.

37. But here it may justly be said, that the English were the forgers of their own Fortune; all these mischiefs having come upon them through their own Egreious folly and neglect. So they behaved themselves as if they had a desire to be enslaved by those whom they did so much admire, but only imitated in what was worst; and being so set for their own destruction, destiny put to her helping hand. For how strangely, how like an harebrain'd Man did Harold in this business behave himself; how contrary to his former wisdom and conduct: He being really a Man for all accomplishments, very well worthy of a Crown. He could not but know that William would invade him the next year, if he came not this, and yet he must disoblige his Souldiers, and that by a dirty action of taking all the Booty to himself, a folly of which at another time he could scarcely have been guilty. Then doth he amend one error by another, hurries away against the Enemy, that he knew must be both resolved and desperate; that must be fully bent either to conquer, or dye, being penned in by a deep Ditch, the Bridge over which he himself had broken down. Without staying but a day or two for supplies, he hastes away as one who had designed first to fight with a disoblige Army, and then with no Army at all, alone, and in his own Person. The Battle shewed it was not Courage but Conduct, that the English wanted, if so few stood it out, and that upon even terms with the Normans, till their Captain fell, how easy would the Victory have been, had he used any moderate care in his management? Then after his death, how easy might this loss have been repaired? Though many of the Nobility fell, and many Souldiers, yet these Souldiers were but such as he picked up as he could, the strength of the Nation was not much more impaired, than after the Northern expedition; for Ingulphus writes expressly, that he flew away to Hastings, not staying for the Army. Such Forces as were coming up to Harold, with those of Edwin and Morkar, would have been sufficient, or might have been filled up with such numbers (all willingly giving in their Names at such a time as this) as might have made the Norman repent he had burnt his Ships, for all his late success he obtained in Success. His expedition was not so quick, nor his march so in haste, but they had time enough to unite. Nay, he so carried himself in this, as if he had a mind they should reinforce themselves; for his best way had been to march directly for London, to dissipate all Forces, and hinder the forming of new Armies, for being every where Master of the Field, Forts and Castles must have come in of themselves, being of no great value in those days, as appeared by the large swinge the Danes took throughout the Land, without any considerable let or interruption from Castles, notwithstanding all the Fortresses said to be raised, or repaired, by Edward the Elder and his Sister. But instead of preparation for driving away the common Enemy, they become Enemies one to another, and stand in competition for that Crown which he had already got, on the point of his Sword, though not on his Head. These were prodigious miscarriages, not incident to any that had reason about them, but absolute effects of such vicious tempers as insatiate Mens minds, and enervate the Powers of their Souls, both effects and signs, and carrying the punishments along with them, of some notable extravagances, of which, not only particular Families, but even the whole Nation it self was guilty.

Guil. Picta. vestit Guil. dicit Crispell. lant in ejus Gestis & Oratorum Vitalis. Hist. Eccl. Lib. 3.

Coronationis autem Officium noluit ab Archiep. Stigando percipere (cujus dignitatis solibus illud Officium ex debito pertinebat) eo quod ab Apostolico Papa illum Calumniam audierat suum pallium non fuisse Canonice Ingulph.

Deinceps ergo Comitibus & Baronibus, & Episcopis, & Regibus distribuit Rex Anglicum & ex antiquo Anglicum ad honoris statum vel aliquid dominii principibus.

38. And that the English were now guilty of such extravagances, as ever fore-run such Calamities and Revolutions, as by debauching their minds, render them abject, pitifully, and fit for slavery, we have but too good Testimony to assure us, The Monk of Maheshbury, who being of English Descent, as well as Norman, professes he had no prejudice to either Nation, and we may take his word, the course of his writing making no shew of the contrary, taking a view of their manners from their first entering and planting in the Island, observes that they were various. "At their first coming, their gesture and look was altogether barbarous, and they were wholly given to War as long as they continued Pagans. "When they had once received Christian Religion, they applied themselves in a manner wholly to it, giving to Arms but the second place; and here he instances in Rich and Poor, Ecclesiasticks and Seculars, Kings, Bishops, Hermites and Abbats, not one Nation indeed being able to vye with this in that respect. "But the study of Learning and Religion were grown quite out of fashion, in the foregoing Age; not a few years before the coming of the Normans. The Clergy contenting themselves with a trifling kind of literature, scarcely able to pronounce the words belonging to their several Services. He that understood Grammar, was a wonder, and Matter of astonishment to the rest. The Monks went fairly clad, and observed not the Rules of their Orders, as to Meat and Drink: The Nobles were given over to Gluttony and Lust, not going to Church in the Morning as Christians ought to do. The common People was exposed as a Prey to the great ones, both in their Persons and Estates, many having got their Women Servants with Child, when they had satisfied their lust, turned them over either to the common Brothel Houses, or kept them perpetually in that course of slavery. They were universally given to Drunkenness, spending night and day in Tipling, making great cheer, and being at great expence

A general character of the English.

Several miscarriages of Harold and the English.

not

Sect. 12.

expende in their mean and pitiful Houses, of a quite contrary disposition to the Normans in this respect, who in fair and stately Houses lived very thrifly. And Drunkenness was accompanied with the usual Vices which debauch and render effeminate the minds of Men.

39. Hence came it to pass, that rather carried headlong with temerity and fury, than any true skill they had in War, they engaged with Duke William, and by loosing the day, inflamed both themselves and Countrey. In Sum, the English then wore their Clothes short, cut their Hair, shaved their Faces, (all, he means, but their upper Lip) loaded their Arms with golden Bracelets, marked their Skin with divers Images, would Eat till they forfeited, and Drink till they vomited, which last Vices they communicated to the Conquerors, in all things else taking up, and admiring their Modes. But this he would not have understood of all, but of the English in general; forasmuch as to his knowledge there were many good Men, both amongst Clergy and Laity. But, saith he, as in times of prosperity, the goodness of God most commonly cherishes the bad with the good, so in the Captivity of a Nation, sometimes his severity involves the good in the same Calamities with the bad. They had formerly, as Ingulphus assures us, run out of themselves, and become French, by idolizing and imitating the Normans, in all that was light and trivial; now they must serve whom before they ador'd. Those that were so enamoured of all things that were French, that they would with rather to be served by a French Dog, than an English Man, now had the privilege to be called and used as Dogs, by their late Lacques, upon whom, out of the influence of their former affection, it's to be presumed, that like Spaniels, they more fawned the more they beat them. And such Women as ravished with the Persons, and deportment of their French Guests, would flock to stare at and admire them even at the Gallows, or when they were Arraigned or led to Execution, now might stay at home and save their pains, might view and fatisfie themselves with that contenting sight, while they beheld them knocking on the Head, or hanging up their dull English Husbands, Sons or Brothers, at their own Doors. But no more of this dismal Subject. Onely, Reader, remember that the same Causes ordinarily produce the same Effects. We will dismiss our English Saxon Ancestors with what is more comfortable; by taking a view of their Polity, their Laws, and better Customs.

The Government Monarchical.

40. To begin at the top. From the course of this History, the Reader will observe that the Government was Monarchical, and that not onely in respect of the particular Kingdoms during the Heptarchy, which had their peculiar Kings, but even of the whole Body of the Nation, which was usually Commanded by one of the seven, of all which Beda takes notice till his time, and Egbert more effectually than any of them completed the Design, leaving his Posterity in possession of that Power, which brought the Sovereignty to the House of the West Saxon Kings, that which none of the other could accomplish as to their Families. The nature of the Monarchy we must believe at the first followed the condition of the Tenure, absolute Conquests and Territories, both got and held by the Sword alone, usually producing absolute Governments, which many times either by reason of the infirm Foundations laid by the Conquerors themselves, the humour of the People not enduring such subjection, or other accidents, change into more moderate and less Arbitrary. That Hengist, Ella and the other Captains, when they first erected their Dominations, Governed their Souldiers, whom now being Kings they called Subjects, with as great Authority, and as full Command as formerly, we little doubt. The Polity and Frame of their Governments for a long time could not be very Politick; Laws and settled Orders having little to doe amongst Arms and Confusion, and with Arms they were wholly taken up. Conquering by dint of Sword every foot of ground they called theirs, generally throughout the Countrey, which having by main strength, and after much contention and tugging on both sides, wrested out of the hands of the Owners, they were afterwards as buſie in defending it, as well from the Incroachments and Rapines of one another, as the Re-entries of its former Masters. Therefore till the time of Ethelbert the first Christian King, hear we nothing of Laws, they having been formerly Governed by common Rules of natural Prudence, according to the Exigency of Affairs, and the nature of Circumstances, or such Customs as they brought along with them from their own Countreys.

And Arbitrary as by Conquerors.

These Laws are enacted.

Who are admirers of the French.

Who are now come to settle their fancy.

Verum sicut in tranquillitate malis cum bonis foret plerumque; Dei sententia, ita in captivitate bonis cum malis nonnunquam ejusdem contrarium. De Willielmo primo, lib. 3. p. 102. Edit. Savilianae. Ut quasi per tranſitus videtur quomodo tyrannici et crudeliter Normanni Angliam tradiderunt pte Ingulphi Historiam, et eam pariter consule que de Thome Talbot tractat. Nam hoc non potest ad hoc nostrum volumen.

41. After

By what Titles the Kings styled themselves.

41. After that their Kings became Christian; they styled themselves such, (in the Singular Number, I, though the Plural in King Edgar's days was given to single Persons) by Divine Dispensation, By (a) the Mercy of God, By (b) Divine Dispensation, and By (c) the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, or such like, though some of them omitted such Expressions, writing onely themselves Kings of such a Countrey. The other six Kingdoms being brought under that of the West Saxons, the Welsh and Scots became also tributary, or acknowledged such Subjection, that Eadred the Son of Edward the Elder, A. D. 948. styled himself King (d) of Great Britain. After him Edgar took the Title of Monarch (e) of all Great Britain, and King (f) of Great Britain, and King (g) of all Albion, as also of the (h) Maritime or Kings of the Islands, and of King of Albion and the (i) Neighbouring Kings, in which Titles he acknowledged the very large Munificence of Almighty God, in that he was advanced above all his Progenitours. The reason of these high Titles, may be fetch'd from what we have written of his being waited on, and rowed in a Boat by Eight Petty Kings or Princes, amongst whom is found Maccus King of the Isles, for Edgar is said to have been Lord of all the Islands, as far as Norway. But this Dominion of the Northern Isles continued not long, but as with Edgar the Grandeur and Felicity of the English Monarchy, so this large Title fell with him, not extending it self to the Orcaes, which as both Giraldus Cambrensis and others affirm anciently were subject to the Kings of Norway, with one of whom, viz. Harold Harvaeger, as we have lately seen, Paul the Earl of Orcaes came and fought against our King Harold, the Son of Godwin. Yet though they might not use the Titles, did many of the succeeding Kings hold both Wales and Scotland in Subjection. The English Saxon King whom they termed Cynyn, and contractedly at last Cyns, (as we now do the Saxon Language not knowing K) had Sovereign Power and Rights of Majesty, made Laws, raised Money, and had power of Life and Death, as we shall see hereafter. The Wife of the King they called Cren, as we at present Queen, and she was Partaker with her Husband though not in Sovereignty, yet in Respect and Honour, till by reason of the pragmatical Carriage of Eadburga, the Daughter of Offa, and Wife to Birtric, this Custom common to all Nations was interrupted in the Royal Palace of the West Saxons, where the Wives of the Kings were not suffered to sit by them, nor to enjoy the Title of Queen, till this Decree was repealed by King Ethelwulf, though with much trouble in favour of his Queen Judith the French Lady. The King's Son or the Heir to the Crown was called Etheling, in Latin they termed him Clito, (signifying the same, as Caesar, Princeps juvenutis or Nobilissimus Caesar, amongst the Romans) though these Names were in a manner given to all of the Blood-Royal, whom Hoveden in a diminutive way calls Clitunculi. The Eldest by the Prerogative of his Age challenged justly the Title of King after his Father's death, but the Reader in perusal of this History may take notice how often this Course was changed, when either force prevailed, a former agreement had passed, or the next and immediate Heir was but a Child.

The Queen.

The King's Heir and other Sons.

Two sorts of Councils.

The great Assembly or Council for governing the Nation.

42. Of all the Instruments by which the Kings governed, their Principal were their Councils. Of these they had two sorts, viz. their Ordinary or Domestick, consisting of Domesticks, or such as were near their Persons; or Extraordinary; which was the Great Assembly or Council held for determining the great and urgent Affairs of the Kingdom. This was called pretenagmote, or the Assembly of Wisemen, and consisted of the Prelates and Noblemen, or chief Magistrates of the Kingdom. Hereof, besides what the Laws of Princes speak, we have ample Testimony from several Charters of Kings, as well in the several petty Kingdoms during the Heptarchy, as after it came fully to be reduced into one Monarchy. Bertulf the King of the Mercians in a Charter, wherein he confirms the Revenues and Privileges of the Monastery of Croyland, signifies that the Monastery had exhibited their complaint before the (a) Prelates and Nobles of his whole Realm of

(a) Ita Ethelbaldus Rex Merciorum in Chartographo quod exeat apud Legulphum.
(b) Sic Kenulphus Rex Merciorum.
(c) Ita Wistilph. Ethel. et Bredredus.

(d) Ego Eadredus Rex totius sub Imperiali potestate Regis Saeculorum eternis Principibus magna Britannia temporale gerens Imperium.
(e) Ego Edgarus ejusdem Dei nostri largitus Munificentia possidens totius magnae Britanniae Monarchiam. A. D. 956.
(f) Ego Edgarus Rex ipso sacro Regis praesidentis Regno magna Britannia. A. D. 970.

(g) Ego Edgarus totius Albionis basileus nec non marisimorum seu insularum Regum habitationum, adeo ut nullius provinciarum subjectione largitus Dei gratia supponebam sublimitatem. A. D. 974.
(h) Ego Edgarus totius Albionis finitimarumque Regum basileus.

Topograph. Hiberniae. Dist. 2. c. 11. cu addit Ordericum Vitalium in Eccles. Hist. lib. 10. Chronicon Regum de Monte comitatus. Chronic. Sigeberti ad Ann. 1162.

per Fraterem Atkillum Commendacium vestrum palam coram prelatis et proceribus totius Regni mei Mercie apud Beringdon ultimo congregatis. Omnibus venerandis compatiensibus—placuit; apud Ingulphum, p. 838. Edit. Francofurti.

N n

Mercia,

Seçt. 12. Honour) from which it is derived. Yet do they use the Adjective Erlig, that is, Erlig ocht.
Honoured, with which they are wont to subscribe their Letters.

46. But of such Persons did the Publick Assembly of the Nation consist, viz. on the Lay part of Viceroys, Princes, Patritians, (which Title King Edgar gives to Turketule the Chancellour) Dukes, Earls, Counts, Prefects or Governors, and Hlaifors, all who are comprized under the Name of Aldermen; and so also are Archbishops, Bishops, Abbats, Priests and Monks on the part of the Clergy. These were also the Wife Men and Elders which King Ina meant, for Seniors, Senators, Elders and Aldermen are the same, and moreover those of the Clergy are they whom he calls the Servants of God, this being an appellation in those times peculiar to Ecclesiastical Persons, a phrase taken up by Bishops, Priests and Monks, is notorious to any one but meanly conversant in the Monuments of those Ages. All they are comprized under the Name of the Servants of God, as well as the Lay Members of this Great Council under the Name of Aldermen, the Thanes only excepted, who must be added to the former, as appears by several Subscriptions both to Councils and Charters. Now **Thanes* were of two sorts, either † Ecclesiastical, or Secular. The Secular were also distinguished into two ranks, whereof the Greater were in Degree next to Counts, (as Pavafors were to them) being called the King's † Thanes as now are called the King's Barons. The other sort were the lesser **Thanes* or under Thanes, being the same with the lesser sort of Barons, Lords of Manors, Pavafors, and the like. In Latin they subscribed themselves Minister, after those who styled themselves Comites; and I little doubt but that the King's Thanes, or the Ministri Regis were meant here. By, though some of the lower sort of Thanes might occasionally be called to the Council as there was occasion to employ them, as by some Subscriptions we find not only the Queen, but Abbesses, Priests and Monks to have been present. But as to any Representatives of the Common People, we must profess as doth † Sir Henry Spelman, that we can find no such in these Greatest Councils of our Saxon Ancestours.

The Laity comprised under the Name of Alderman. The Clergy called the Servants of God.

Thanes.

But no Representatives of the Commonalty.

Spelman. Glossar. in voc. Thognus & Baro & Selden. Titles of Honour. Item Somneri Glossar. in voc. Tegnio.
† Sed ut uberius dicam de Personis in istiusmodi Concilio convocatis: occurrit primo nusquam me reperisse inter Saxones nostros plebi locum, cui in Germania Tacitus potiorum tribuit in voc. Parlamentum.

The Governors of Council out of Parliament.

47. What we have said already of the several great Officers of the Kingdom being Members of the Great Council or Meeting of Wifemen may much serve to shew how the King out of the Council governed as well as in, for something has been said in reference to the nature of their Office and Employments. The chiefest Officer under the King was his Chancellour; for governing of the People, were the Earls, Counts or Aldermen of the Counties or Shires, who for this purpose held another Assembly or Council, which from the Folk or People therein gathered together was called Folcmote, and from the shire Scynagomote, over these the Aldermen of the shire presided, but in them assembled all the Great men in King Edward the Confessor's Laws called Principes, the Bishops, the military Men and Freeman of all England, therein they swore Allegiance to the King. The Business of the Shires were here transacted, and hence it was not lawfull to appeal to the King's Court but in failure of Justice, and here were chosen the Deputies of the Aldermen of the Shires called in Latin Viccomites, as also another sort of military Officers called Heretochs. The Deputies were in Saxon called geþeap and Scyngeþeap (whence our Shire-reeves contractedly Sheriffs) and in the Absence of the Aldermen they managed the Business of the County, and governed the Folcmotes. Before them as appears from Ingalphus Propriety was tried, and when evicted they were to put the right owner into Possession. From the same Writer it farther appears, that there were certain Officers formerly in Latin called Vicedomini, out of which two sorts were made, viz. This of Viccomites, and another whom he calls Iustitarii. Yet that the Vicedomini continued afterward is evident enough, but one of these two sorts might be meant, viz. either a Sheriff or a Justiciary, for it's an ordinary thing for the Species to be denominated by the Genus.

48. The Heretochs who as we said were also chosen in meeting of the Shire, are thus described to us by one who in the time of the Normans interpolated the Laws of Edward the Confessor. "There were other Powers and Dignities (saith he) constituted throughout all Counties and Provinces, and through the se"veral

A Description of Heretochs.

"veral Shires which the English called Heretochs, viz. Noble, Eminent, Wife, Sect. 12.
"Faithfull and Courageous Barons, in Latin Ductores Exercitus, whom the French
"named Capital Constables, or Marshals of Armies. In Battels they Marshalled Ar"mies, and raised Forces as occasion served, and when they thought fit for the "Honour of the Crown, and the benefit of the Kingdom. Now these Men were "chosen by the Common Council, for the common Utility of the Realm through "all the Provinces and Countries, and the several Counties in full Folcmote, as "the Sheriffs of Provinces and Counties ought to be chosen; so as in every Coun"ty there was ever one Heretoch chosen to conduct the Forces of his Shire accord"ing to order received from our Lord the King for the Honour and Profit of "the Crown of the said Kingdom, always when need required. Whosoever for "fear of Battel or Death shall fly from his Lord, or Associate in the Conduct of "his Heretoch, either in an expedition by Sea or Land, is to loose all he hath,
"life and all, and the Lord may seize upon that Land which he formerly gave "him. Here add that all Men were bound to be provided of Arms, out of St.
"Edward's Law. 35. They were chosen then as Sir Henry Spelman observes in full
"Folcmote, not in the Assembly of the beginning of May, of which we shall speak
"anon, but at the beginning of October. At these Folcmotes these Heretochs * were "present, and with the approbation of the Assembly ordered what was to be done,
"in reference to the Militia. This Popular Election of them seems to have been taken "from the Germans, as appears from the Laws of the Boii. † And as Thing so
"Name came from them, with whom still at this day Hertog answereth to the "Latin Dux, and they as well as our Saxon * Ancestours still give that Title to "those Princes, and great Nobles which with us use the style of Dukes. Yet
"these our Heretochs were no such kind of Persons, but either of the same
"Dignity, and account with the Sheriffs or inferior to them. For the "Laws of Henry the First directing who should be present at the *Shire-
"Elfferum* qua
"mote order that there be the Bishops, Comites, and Viccomites, then the He"retochs, Tringereves, Ledgereves, &c. Sir † Henry thinks them the same with those "whom the Laws of Ethelstan call Holdes; for as he joins Shire-reeves and He"retochs together, so doth he also Holdes and Hebgereves, by which no other "than the Shire-reeves are signified. But thus we have shewed that both the one "and the other were chosen in the Folcmote, which as to the Shire-reeves held "till the ninth year of Edward the Second, or the year of our Lord 1315. After"wards great Content and Tumults arising they came to be pricked by the King
"in the manner they are at this present.

How these Officers were chosen.

Their Power, Duty and Reward.

49. But farther, What has been said of the Power of the Heretochs, as to raising and management of the Militia of the Shire, must for all this be meant subordinately to the Earl or Alderman. For in the Saxon Annals and other Histories throughout, upon all occasions we find these great Men, those whom in Latin they called Duces and Comites, still to be up and fighting, and of these Heretochs, otherwise than in the Law Books, find we no mention, their Actions and Authority being hid under that Employment of the Counts. They were chosen by the People in the Folcmote, as the Knights of Shires at this day, the Alderman, Count or Earl, was appointed by the King, continued during pleasure for a time, or was now and then Hereditary as the Prince thought convenient. The Office of Count, Earl or Alderman, was to prevent and punish Force and Injury, restrain Robberies, and keep the King's Peace, not only by the vigour of the Laws, but if need served, by force of Arms; the King's Dues, as Customs and Tributes, he Collected and brought into the Treasury. Yet the Causes of Noblemen were not tryable in his Court, a thing in force so much at this day, that Actions of Debt or Injuries cannot be tried in the County Court, if the value of the thing contended for be not under forty shillings. This is farther remarkable, that no Man by the Laws of King Alfred, could change his dwelling without the knowledge and testimony of the Alderman, in whose Shire he lived. In case he had taken a Thief and dismissed him, or concealed the theft, he was to loose his Shire, except the King pleased to dispense with him by the Laws of Ina. As the reward of his service, or stipend from the profits arising out of the Mulcts and Pleas of his County, he received the third penny, as did the French Counts, in the time of Charles the Great, which Custom was continued by the Normans after the Conquest. From Doomday Book also, it appears, that the Earl or Count received certain Rents or Payments from particular Towns, as that of Chichester paid fifteen pounds to the King, and ten to the Earl. Such was the power, duty and reward of this great Officer, in Saxon called Alderman, in Latin, Dux, or Comes.

C. 33.
C. 34.

Sect. 12. Comes, and often Conful; for our Writers about the Norman times, confound these Names, and finding them given to great Officers abroad, handle them hand over head; inasmuch, that William the Conquerour himself, they more commonly call Comes than Dux. His power was great, the extent of it was through his Shire or County, of the Original of which, and the nature of it, we must add a little.

50. Shire or Scire, signifieth a Section or Division, being a certain Portion of A rcypian the Kingdom, into many of which, the whole was, as it were, cut or divided. scindere, divi-
In Latin it was called Comitatus, from the Officer of it in the same Language dere, adin- stiled Comes, as County at present from the Count, in French Comte, which word manent, To we reject, though County and Countess, thence derived, we retain. At what time, ficer, a pair and by whom this Partition of the Land was made, is something controverted, of ficers, and the general opinion following the credit of Ingalphus, who writes, that Shires, a share.
were first made by King Alfred. Speaking of this Prince, how in ordering the matters of his Kingdom, he was most careful and sagacious, he tells us the occasion to have been; "That some of his Subjects, taught and encouraged by the example of the Danes, practised Robberies, and committed violence upon their Neighbours, whom desiring to restrain, he first changed all the Pagi and Provinces of England into Counties, Counties he divided into Centuries or Hundreds, and Hundreds into Tenths or Tithings, that every legal Inhabitant might be found in some certain Hundred and Tithing, and if any one was suspected of a Robbery, by his Hundred or Tithing he should either be condemned or acquitted. He adds, that the Governours of Provinces, whom formerly they called Vicedomini, he divided into two Offices, viz. into Judges, whom we now call, faith he, Justitaries, and into Viccomites, who still retain the same Name. "By the care and industry of these Men, the Countrey was presently brought to so great tranquillity, that in case a Traveller left any money in the Fields or High-ways, if he came the next day, or a month after, he might find it. So much Ingalphus."

51. Before the Division into Shires, we see by him there were Pagi or Territories and Provinces. And several of these we now term Shires, after by Affersius called Pagi, as those of Sommerfet, Suffex and Cornwall; and Wilsire he calls by this very Name. Nay much antecedent than this is the word Scire * being found in the Laws of King Ina, who speaks of the Ealdorman forfeiting his Shire, as also of * Scirmen. Now as we have seen before in the History of Alfred, Affersius lived in that King's time and wrote his life, and a wonder it is that speaking of many other remarkable things he should make no mention of this famous Division of the Land. To be sure whether there were those same Divisions we now call Shires, there were those Officers they then in Latin called Comites, who not being merely Titulars surely had their several and relative Districts called Comitatus. For in the History of the same Ingalphus, in the Charter of the Foundation of Croyland Abby by Ethelbald King of the Mercians, in the Year DCCCXVI, we find one Egga subscribing by the Title of Comes Lincoln, another Leucitis by that of Comes Leicester, and another calling himself Saxulph the Son of Count Saxulph. Nay in the same Authour in the Charter of King Kenulph which confirms the other in the Year DCCCXVI, mention is made of Thorold Vicecomes of Lincoln, above threecore years before King Alfred came to be King. It's certain during the Heptarchy, the several Kingdoms had their Districts, Territories and Divisions, sometimes taken from the Habitation of such and such a People, as the Wiccii, Meauuari, Girmi and Gaini, of whom we find the Father-in-law of King Alfred, to be styled Comes. So that Province of Mercia, lying near Lincoln, or that we now call Lincolnshire, was anciently divided into three Parts, the very same, and by the very same names they are now known, viz. Lindsey by Beda, called Lindissi from the City, doubtless, which he terms Lindcolina Civitas; Kesteven by Ethelward, the Historian, called Cestsepe Wood, and Hoyland, which if Ingalphus may be credited, took its name from Hoy, by which our Saxon Ancestours meant that we now call Hay, or else being in quality like to Holland, in the Low-Countries, from the same reason fetcht its appellation, being as infirm, or hollow as it.

52. Now for the Shires, probable it is that such other Divisions as were formerly made, during the Heptarchy, being found convenient, still continued; and that others were made as there was occasion, by reason of any newer Town, that was found fitter to be the Head of the Division; for the convenience of resort to the Fulcmote or Shiremore, and by reason of the decay of a former place. Of this later nature, we take the Town of Derby to have been, which was not of any note till that that Repardune (now Repton) the Seat of the Mercian Kings was decayed, but Sect. 12. being a lurking hole of the Danes, whereas it's former Name was Northworþhige, from them, as Ethelward witnesseth, or in their Tongue, received that of Deoraby, contracted as some think from Derwentby, because situate upon the River Derwent. Ingalphus writes expressly, that in the time of the Danish Kings, the Limits and Bounds of Territories and Shires, were translated and very much altered from the ancient state wherein they had stood, as often as rich Men who had money wherewith to bribe, were concerned. In the times of the Danes were thirty two Shires, of which they invaded sixteen at one impression, which number, in the time of the Conquerour, as appeareth by Doomsday Book it self, was increased to thirty four, although some have written of thirty six. We said that some Districts, during the Heptarchy, might be continued afterward, when the whole Monarchy came to be afterward divided into Shires; but that generally it was not so; we may guess from a certain fragment, which belonging to some time of the Heptarchy, shews that the Land had other Regions distinguished by Hides after this manner. Myrena contained 30000. Hides, Wokensetna 7000. Westerna 7000. Pecsetna 1200. Elmedsetna 600. Lindesfarona 7000. South Gyrwa 600. North Gyrwa 600. East Winnia 300. West Winnia 600. Spalda 600. Wigelta 900. Herefina 1200. Sueordora 300. Bylla 300. Wicca 300. Whitgira 600. Noxgaga 5000. Obitgaga 12000. Hwinnia 7000. Clinternsetna 4000. Hendrica 3000. Vneungga 1200. Arosetna 600. Fearfinga 300. Belmiga 600. Witberigga 600. East Willa 600. West Willa 600. East Engle 10000. East Sexena 7000. Cantwarena 15000. South Sexena 7000. and West Sexena 100000. Hides. Of these Hides, we shall only remark, that from division of such Territories as here are, into but so many, the quantity of them must be very various, for other reckonings do not agree with this. In ancient times they much used the word Setna, for Inhabitants, terming also those that lived upon Mountains, Dunsæten. We are told that this Catalogue only respects the Land lying on this side Humber; so that the Kingdom of the Northumbrians being left out of it, and the five last Regions containing so many other Kingdoms of the Heptarchy, that of Mercia must have contained the rest before mentioned. Pecsetna, was the Seat of such as Inhabited the Mountains, or the Peak, which was with other low grounds, afterward assigned to Darby. Lindesfarona, was Lindsey, South Gyrwa and North Gyrwa, were the Fenry Habitations of the Girovis or Gernii, formerly mentioned, part were belonging to Lincolnshire, viz. North Gyrwa, and the rest to the other Counties adjoining. East Sexena, South Sexena and Cantwarena, being formerly Kingdoms, and found to be of a proportionable size, without much variation, were left and made so many Shires of themselves.

53. Some Divisions therefore or Shires, King Alfred might find, others he might add, and he or his complete the Number which we said were found in the Danish times. If he divided not all the Land first into Shires, the Shires he subdivided into Hundreds, and these Hundreds into Tithings. Of these after Ingalphus the Monk of Malmesbury writes, that because the Inhabitants, taking occasion from the Barbarians "practising Robberies, so that there was no Travelling without defence of Arms, he ordained Centuries, which they call Hundreds, and Decims, which they name Tithings; that every English Man, living honestly, might be found in his proper Hundred and Tithing. If it happened that any one were accused of a Crime, out of his Hundred and Tithing, he was to produce Sureties or Bail, if none would Bail him, he was to undergoe the severity of the Laws; in case any accused Person, either before or after Bail given, should make his escape, all in the Hundred and Tithing should fine to the King. By this Device, he procured such Peace to the several Countries, that where Highways parted, he caused Golden Bracelets to be hung upon Posts, which deterred the avarice of Passengers, of whom none dared to take them away. "This gives us an account of the occasion of their Institution, and of the Success. As for the Division of the Land into them, it was neither certain nor equal. Gervase of Tilbury wrote, that an Hide of Land consisted of an hundred Acres, and an Hundred of certain hundreds of Hides. St. Henry Spelman, takes notice, that of purpose he assigns no certain number, for one Hundred was three or four times bigger than another. Some have held that an Hundred consisted of an hundred Villages, as Giraldus Cambrensis describes the Welsh Centred. But at present, scarcely any where are there to be found throughout England, an hundred Villages in one Hundred; scarcely half so many; they are great ones that contain thirty or forty. Many have but ten, some but two, and some, as the Hundreds

The Division of the Land.

Into Provinces, Shires, Hundreds and Tithings.

Their Governours.

Of the Comites and Viccomites.

An Alteration of the name of the Shire.

* LL. Ina 36. & 39.

* L. 8. vide infra in LL. Ina.

The occasion of subdividing the Land into Hundreds and Tithings.

This Division not certain, nor equal.

See Sancti Regibus Swa-
mon, Cunctis, Haraldus tot- ram Angliam opprimimus, et multa im- munitionum, plurima pri- viligia mon- asteriorum,
ac prorsus suf- flata: limites
ac termini Territoriorum, et Comitatu- um translati et a statu ve- teri sensim mutati,
prout pecunia decimus in membris bar- barorum qui nihil aliud
quam ruinas querimus, propendunt
ut. p. 511.

De gestis Reg.
Angl. l. 2. p. 44.

Sec. 12. dreds of Cherham and Marden in the County of Kent consist but of one a-piece. And Stanford in Lincolnshire, as appears from Doomsday Book, paid for twelve Hundreds and an half.

The Government of the Hundred.

54. My Opinion is, that at first an Hundred consisted of 100 Hides, and that afterwards the quantity came to be altered, as all humane Institutions are subject to change, and Ingulphus tells us that great alteration was made in the Divisions of the Land in the time of the Danes. Just so at Rome when the several Centuries of the People were first ordained, a respect was had to the Number, but afterwards when Servius modelled the State anew he increased the numbers of People very much in some of them, but let the Name still remain as in that History we have observed to the Reader and given him warning not to take a Century for an hundred Men; but such a Division of the People. The Hundred to be sure was a part of the Shire, where an hundred men presided as Prefervers of the King's Peace, being called Hundreders, and in Latin Centuriones and Centenarii. They had Cognizance of the middle sort of Causes and Suits; the most inferior being heard in the Tithing or Decuria, by the Tithingmen or Decuriones, (each Hundred containing ten Tithings) and the highest in the County Court or Sciremore. Over these Hundreders and the whole Hundred, one presided, called the Lord of the Hundred; not in his own right, but of the Count or Sheriff of that Shire, to which the Hundred did belong. Most anciently he was chosen by the People, though a Statute of Edward the Second long after appropriated the Election to the Chancellor, Treasurer, and Barons of the Exchequer. He received money from those that were under his Jurisdiction, and had many Privileges. The Court of the Hundred, by the Laws of King Ina and Edward the Confessor, was to be held every Month, except the King's Affairs required haste, and then several Hundreds sometimes were called together for quicker dispatch. It was not lawful for any to be absent, as appears from the Laws of King Edgar. The Thanes here assembled, whom Posterity called Barons and Ecclesiastical Judges too, for as the Bishop was to be present at the County Court, so others of the Clergy at this, and as there, so here both Ecclesiastical and Secular Matters were heard and determined, till William the Conquerour distinguished the Jurisdictions, and commanded the Courts to be held a-part, as is evident from a Writ of his directed to all that lived within the Diocese of Lincoln, which prohibits all Bishops and Archdeacons any more to determine their businesses in the Hundred; or to bring a Cause concerning the regiment of Souls before Secular Persons. But if any application was made about any Cause or Crime relating to Ecclesiastical Laws, they should appoint a place of meeting where they thought convenient, and there right should be done to God and the Bishop, not after the custom of the Hundred, but according to the Canons and Episcopal Laws.

It is also called a Wapentack.

55. The Court day being published a Week before if any one were absent the third time, he was punished as Contumacious against the King himself; and in case he paid not his Fine, all his Goods were to be seized. When the Court was fate, the Laws of Ethelred commanded that twelve Elderly men of free Condition should take an Oath together with the President, that they would neither Condemn the Innocent nor Absolve the Guilty. The Hundred, by another name was and still is called a Wapentack from the Saxon Wapen and Tac, which signifies taking or touching or betaking. Hoveden thinks it so named from the touching or concussion of Weapons or Arms. The ancient Germans indeed, from whom so many will have the English Saxons descended, neither met in Council nor in Judicature without their Weapons, and when any Proposal they liked they testified their approbation by the shaking together of their Arms, as Tacitus informs us. And from them some believe the Institution of Hundreds or Wapentacks it self to have been derived both to us and to the Lombards, from the Laws of whom as also those of Charles the Great it is evident that the Courts of the Centenaries both among the Lombards and ancient Franks were ordered by the same almost Customs and Laws as ours are and were. But we are told by one very knowing in the Saxon Tongue, that the word Tac with our Ancestours never signified Taciturnity in Latin or touching, so that to derive Wapentack from the touching or Concussion of Arms cannot, according to him, be warranted by the Etymology. Brompton the Abbat gives us another derivation, writing that it was called Wapentack from this custom, that when any Lord of the Hundred was new made, those under his Jurisdiction were wont as a Ceremony, and in token of subjection, to deliver their Weapons or Arms up to him. Whether this be more agreeable or not to the Etymology, the Germans are wont from such like Ceremony to term their

LL. Ethel.
f. 1. c. 20.
De don do Be son do semoe poppate.

Papen arma geræcan traders, red-dere.

Sommer. in Cliff. Voc.
Wapentack.

their lesser sort of Vassals, whom otherwise they call Arimanni, Wapendemannen, Sect. 12. or Gewapende.

56. But if credit be to be given to the Publisher of the Laws of King Edward the Confessor, the former Etymology is the truest, the reason this. "When any one, say they, undertook the Government of the Wapentack, at the appointed time and wonted place, all the Elderly men gave him a Meeting, and as he lighted from his Horse all did him reverence. He erecting his Lance received an Agreement or Association according to the custom from all, and all those that were assembled with their Lances touched his Lance, and so by the Contract of Weapons strengthened them, an agreement being thus publicly made. For in English Arms are called þænu, and tacape signifies to Confirm; as it were a Confirmation of Arms; or to speak more expressly, according to the English Tongue Wapentack is the Touching of Arms; for þænu signifies Arms, and tac is Touching. Therefore it may sufficiently be known, that for this Reason all the Assembly was called Wapentack, because by this Touching of Arms they confederated amongst themselves. There were also other Divisions above Wapentacks, which they called þingungar, which was the third part of the Province. Those that ruled over them were called þingunegjar, before whom were brought such Causes as could not be decided in Wapentacks. And so what the English in general called Hundreds, the Counties of Tork, Lincoln, Nottingham, Leicester, and Northampton, as far as Watlingstreet termed Wapentacks, and what they termed three or four Hundreds, these called þingungar. But in some Provinces they were called leð, which these called Þrithinge: And what could not be tried by the Þrithinge, was removed into the Shire. Here the Reader may observe what Counties they were that used the word Wapentack and the word Þrithinge, which he must by no means confound with Tithing; for the one is so named from Three and the other from Ten. The Division of Shires belonged to the King, the Divisions of Hundreds and Wapentacks to the Earl or Sheriff.

Another Division called Þrithinge.

Named also LeithvelLath.

The Governments of Cities and great Towns.

Aldermen.

Their Power and Duty.

These Northern Nations of the same Original.

57. Such was the Division, Government, and Governours of the Countries or Provinces. The Cities and greater Towns had also their Governours, who were also called Ealdormen, which name in them continues to this very day, and their power, as the publisher of Edward the Confessor's Laws affirms, was much like to that of the Governours of Hundreds and Wapentacks. Having told us that Greve was a Name of Authority extending to Shires, Wapentacks, or Hundreds, and to Towns also, that it signified properly what Dominus doth in Latin, that the Teutonicks, as Frifons, and those of Flanders called their Governours Mergreves, he adds, "That in his time they who had authority over others, were called Greves, amongst the Britains in the time of the Romans they were termed Senatours, and Aldermen by the Saxons, not in respect of their Age, some of them being young, but for their Wisdom and Experience, and their knowledge of the Laws. And that I may confess the truth, faith he, the Aldermen also in the Cities of this Kingdom in their Bailiwicks, in their close Burghs, their Walled Towns and their Castles have the same Dignity and manner of Power as the Governours of Wapentacks and Hundreds have in their Bailiwicks under the King's Viccomes, or Sheriff, throughout the Kingdom. For it is their duty to preserve the Laws, Liberties, Rights, and Peace of the King, as also the just customs of the Kingdom, such as are ancient and approved by our good Ancestours, inviolably, without fraud or delay, all manner of ways according to their power. When any sudden, unexpected, doubtful, or ill thing happens against the Kingdom or Crown of our Lord the King in their Bailiwicks, they ought to ring the Bells, in English called mobell, to call all the whole People together, which Meeting in English they call polcmote, that is, the calling or Congregation of all the People, because all that live under the Protection and in the Peace of the King, within the said Kingdom, ought to meet, and there by their Common Council provide for the Indemnity of the Crown or this Kingdom, and for repressing the Insolence of Malefactors. For it is ordained, that there the whole People meet once in a year, viz. on the First of May, and by Oath confederate and unite themselves as sworn Brethren together with the King to defend the Kingdom from Strangers and its Enemies, with all Fidelity to defend his Territories and Honours, and to be faithful to the said Lord the King, both within and without the Kingdom of Britain. This ought all Princes and Earls to do, and swear together before the Bishops of the Kingdom in polcmote; and in like manner all the Nobles of the Kingdom, as also the Soldiers and all Freemen whatsoever of the whole Kingdom of Britain.

Fulstati can-patis quod Anglicè vocant Mobell. In borealibus partibus Anglie Locum ubi convenire sole-bant oppidani sive vocari solunt.
The Moore-Hall.

Seçt. 12. " Britain, ought to doe in full Folcmote before the Bishops of the Kingdom. He ascribes the first Invention of this Law to King Arthur, and saith it lay long buried in Oblivion till raised as it were from the dead by Edgar the English Saxon King.

Two sorts of Folcmotes and the difference of them.

§8. From what this Writer saith, and what farther he adds in the same Chapter, the Reader must observe what formerly we hinted, that there were two sorts of Folcmotes, viz. That of the whole Shire called Shiremore and this other of Burghers or Citizens termed Burghmore held also at several times, and in this they also differed, that by the Law of King Edgar the Shiremore was to be held twice, but the Burghmore thrice in the year. And what he here speaks of Aldermen is not to be understood of such as we call Aldermen of Towns at this day continuing the Aristocratical form of the Government of Corporations between the chief Magistrate and the Commonalty; but those we call Mayors and Bayliffs, being the principal Officers. For this present sort of Aldermen is of a much later date coming up much about the same time as did the Name of Mayor step into the room of the Saxon Alderman, Portreeve, Burghreeve, and the Anglo-norman Bayliff about the Reign of Richard the First. The Folcmote was the Meeting of the Citizens or Burghers, not in their Representative as the Common Council of the City but in their own Persons, as at London of all Freemen at the Election of the Mayor. And as we said formerly of the Folcmote of the Shire that it was held also at extraordinary times by the King's order, if the exigency of his Affairs required. This we find to have been practised in London (the mentioning of which City lately brings it to our mind) long after the end of the English Saxon Polity. For in the one and fortieth year of King Henry the Third, two hundred years wanting ten after the Norman Conquest, the Londoners were by the King's Councils called to Folcmote, and commanded to distribute themselves into Ward-motes, the better to debate and determine the business of supplying the King with Money; and in his fifty fourth year this King himself was present at a Folcmote of London held at the Temple.

The private Division and Government of the Land, viz. Tenement Fee.

§9. We have seen the publick Division and Government of the Land, the next thing we shall consider, is its private Division in reference to Propriety and Possession: And the first inquiry is, whether Lands were held in Fee during the English Saxon Government before the Conquest. By Fee, with Cujus, we understand Right of using and enjoying another man's Ground in perpetuum, which the Lord there grants on this condition, that he which receives it perform Fidelity to him, with Military or some other Service. Or more largely to explain it, A Feudum or Beneficium is that which for good will is granted, so from one to another, that the propriety of this Immoveable thing granted, remaining in the Giver, the usufruct thereof passeth to the Receiver in such manner, that to him and his Heirs Male, and Female also, if they be expressly mentioned, it shall perpetually belong, on this condition, that he and his Heirs faithfully serve the Lord, whether the Service be by name expressed, or the promise be indeterminately made. This last Definition is more agreeable to a Fee of the Inferiour Age, as our Spelman observes, when the Nature of it was altered from its Primitive Institution; but both together lay a sufficient foundation for our inquiry, with this farther consideration premised, that Fees at their beginning were not tied with such Circumstances as afterwards, the thing was more loose, and the Lord not bound by such Bargains and Conditions as following Ages invented. For as elsewhere we have already observed what the Feudal Book it self suggests; In most ancient times it was in the power of the Lords to take away the thing by them granted in Fee. Afterward it came to pass that it should continue certain for a year, and that after that it was continued for term of life to the Vassal. But nothing for all this descending by right of succession to the Sons, at length it was brought down to them, to whomsoever of them the Lord would confirm it, which at this day is so established, that it equally appertains to all the Sons, saith the Book.

60. Now the general opinion of our learned Countrey-men is, that Fees or Tenements were not in use in England before the Norman Conquest, after which the Conquerour, according to the custome of the Countrey whence he came, distributed all England to his Followers, which then began to groan under the burthen of Fees, not heard off in the Age of the Saxons. They urge that the Term or Word Feudum or Feodum, is no where to be found in any Record or Monument of these times still extant, and of credit; for it occurs sometimes in the Laws of King Edgar and Edward the Confessor, as also in several Charters mentioned in Inglulphus's History, the Text is corrupted, or the Laws are of a later Date; and In- hebbe mon þrifa on gean Buphge-more. 7 cpa 7 cpcge-mot. c. 5.

Feud. l. Tit. 1. Feudum offus in pædio alieni, &c. Lib. 2. Tit. in quibus causis Feud. amitt.

Lib. 1. Tit. 1.

Boeland and Folcland.

The general word in Grants.

Fee and Folcland of the same nature.

Villanage.

Gavelkind.

The Antiquity of Fees.

They become Military.

gulfus having been Secretary sometime to Duke William in Normandy before his Conquest of England had both his Tongue and his Pen tipt with Words and Phrases peculiar to those Countreies where he had so long resided. They affirm that no other Tenures were in use, or to use the Scotch expression, Haldings of Land, but these two Boeland and Folcland. The former was a Possession by Book or Writing, and the latter without. That by Writing was a Freehold and by Charter; hereditary with all immunities, and for the Free and nobler sort. That without writing was to hold at the Will of the Lord; bound to Rents and Services, and was for the rural People. But, not much to concern our selves about words, whether in the Saxon times the term of Feodum or Feudum was used, is not very material, for by the most knowing Antiquaries it is granted, that till about the beginning of the Tenth Century, scarcely can any Monument whatsoever of any Nation shew these words, Beneficium being generally used before to signify Lands so granted. And to come to the thing, as the word Feudum was scarcely known in the Saxon times, Fee then were of a more laxe nature, not tied up by such Circumstances, Laws and Covenants, as in after times, as appears sufficiently from what we have already said out of the Books themselves.

61. Then again, the most learned acknowledge some kind of Footsteps of these Customs among the Germans, and that from the Germans our English Saxons issued as well as the Lombards and Franks they ever own. If therefore out of Germany the custome was derived, the Saxons coming out of the Chersonesus were as capable of receiving it as the rest. " If (as the Definition which most agrees with the " Primitive Institution of Fees affirms) the nature of a Fee consisted in this, that " it was granted for some Service or other to be performed (whether Military or other) and at first it was in the Lord's power to take it away when he pleased, I can see no reason why the Folcland they mention may not be accounted of this nature. " For they grant that Folcland was Land letten out, and in opposition to Demefine Land, termed in Servitio, or Tenementalis, that is, granted out in Service by the Lord to his Tenants, to be holden of himself like the " Frenchman's Fief Servant, i. e. Terra Serviens, in respect whereof the Tenants " were bound to be Retainers Attendants, and Followers to their Lords, Sui-tours to their Courts, and were thence called Folgarii. There were also Villani or Villains, not in that sense the word hath lately been taken for Slaves, but as Fitzherbert expresseth it, Base Tenants that did Villain Service, but nevertheless were no Villains, that is, not in the latter sense, for from Villa a Villain was named. Mr. Samner contends that Gavelkind is a Tenure, confesses also, that in its nature is lyable to works, and though he is carried away by the Authority of some Learned men, without examining it, to believe that Fees or Fiefs were not in use here before the Conquest, yet he will have his Gavelkind ancient, supposing it to have been an Universal Custome in England before the Conquest. The Propriety of Land held in Gavelkind was this, that it was partible; and Gerard Niger where he treats of the Original of Fees, tells us, that after a Fee * came to descend, to Sons to which of them the Lord would name, at length in his time it was came to be established, that it should belong equally to them all; * Sic progressus in quem facti dominus vellet hoc beneficium committere. Quod hodie sic stabilitum est, ut ad omnes equaliter filios pertineat. † Hoc Angli Gavelkind dicimus.

61. So Fees seem here to have been in use before the Conquest, as they were in a more lame sense received out of Germany, and as they were in their Infancy. But as afterwards they were clothed with stricter Circumstances and Laws, so were they not in use (as little elsewhere before the tenth Century) not such as Littleton writes in his Book of Tenures, as Fee-simple, Fee-Tail, Fee-ferme, Frank-fee, Grand & Petit seignage, Escuage, Burgage, or the like. Military Fees seem also of a later date in England, than the Saxon times, though they might have been very serviceable for repelling the insolent and pertinacious Danes. In after times in all places the chief part of feudal service became military, and for the most part that of old Fees was granted out militia causa, which thing gave occasion to many Learned Men of Error, both in denying Fees never to have been where indeed they were, and in defining Feudum that which Feudists call Clientela militaris, that is of a Genus by a Species most illogically as Quintus challengeth upon this account Hotoman himself. The general service was that Seçt. 12. Vide Lombard in explic verb. v. Terra ex scriptis.

Vide Samner in Tract. de Gavelkind. p. 114, 115.

* Sic progressus in quem facti dominus vellet hoc beneficium committere. Quod hodie sic stabilitum est, ut ad omnes equaliter filios pertineat. † Hoc Angli Gavelkind dicimus.

Sect. 12. of works imposed upon the Folcland, though not all of it, for most of that which was called Gafolland, the fame with Gavelkind Land (for that Gavel comes from Gafol signifying Census, Rent, or Tribute, and is not derived from Gineall, Mr. Summer hath convinced me) was only subject to Rent or Payment, the works were of a divers Nature. * Fleta tells us, that in (or before) the Conquest there were Freemen, that freely held their Tenements by free Services, or by free Customs, but being cast out of them by those that were more powerful, afterward they returned and received back the same Tenements in Villanage. There were others that were Bafe Tenants amongst the Saxons, who might be called Villains in this sense, that in Villages they lived, and there performed bafe services to their Lords. But a question may be moved, whether during the Saxon times there are such Villains as are the same with Bondmen or Slaves.

Generally work was chiefly required.

Two sorts of Slaves.

The difference betwixt a Villain and a Slave.

The Saxon Name of a Slave.

That of a Villain a Countreyman.

Folcland answerable to Fee.

Allodium what.

62. Some make a distinction of Slaves into Personal and Predial, and contend that as well the one sort as the other, were in use not only with our Norman, but Saxon Ancestours, the one being received from the Romans, and the other from the Germans. The latter sort at the pleasure of their Lords possessed Lands and Estates, and in the Villages did Rustick works and bafe Services, whence they were called Villains, and these seem little or nothing different from the Villains of which we lately spake: their possessing of Lands makes them distinct from absolute Slaves (of whom amongst the Romans, many wrought in the Fields and Villages, but yet held not ground) and shews them like to those of the Germans, who were in far better condition than those of the Romans, as appears from Tacitus. To be sure Doomsday Book makes several the Villani and the Servi, as to instance only in that part of it which concerned the Abby of Croyland, and which Ingulphus hath transcribed into his History. Speaking of Goundaneflowd Hundred in Ading. P. 99. ton, he saith St. Guthlack hath had, and hath two hides of Land, the Ground is of four Carucates. One is in Dominio and two slaves (Servi) and six Villains and three Bordarii, &c. Again speaking of Wendlingborough in Ausfordeshew Hundred, and what St. Guthlack, or the Monastery had both formerly, and at that time there, he adds in Dominio is one Carucate with one Slave, and one and twenty Villains with the Church and the Priest. Afterward he mentions in Badeby, being in Dominio Eight Carucates, Eight He-Slaves (Servi) five She-Slaves (Ancille) and twelve Villani. All these are in the same Page. In the next we meet with four Cotages and three Slaves, and again there is one Slave. Now he saith St. Guthlackus habet & habet, St. Guthlack, both had and hath, which had refers to the times of Edward the Confessor, or before the Conquest. It's true indeed, that there are many words which are purely Norman in that Description of England, and Ingulphus having lived in Normandy, made use of such in his Translation of Englisch Charters, but if Servi and Villani had been the same, he would not have used several words to expresse them. But he plainly distinguisheth them by the Number of each; and if any should yet doubt that this Distinction was brought in after the Norman times, this may satisfy him that Slaves were before the Conquest, because they are frequently mentioned in the Saxon Laws, particularly those of King Ina, by the Name of Theowum. One of this King's Laws mentions those who were for Theft deprived of their Liberty and called Wite Theowum, ordaining that if such Slaves steal again they should be hanged, and no compensation therefore made to their Lords. In case any body killed him, nothing upon that account was to be forfeited to his Kindred, except he had redeemed him within six Months. As for the Villanus or Countreyman he was called by the Name of Ceorl or Ceorlisc, that occupieth Gafolland.

63. For, so in a larger sense were all called, that held that sort of Land called Folcland, whether it was Gafolland especially so called, viz. that for which Rent was paid, or the other for which Services belonged. This Folcland answered to Feudum or Fee, at least such of it as was held by service, and that to which we must now speak, viz. Bocland answered to that which was opposite to Feudum, and termed Allodium. As Feudum or Feodum was so named as Fee-bode or Feb-bode, as one would say Fee-ship, or that to which a Mercenary Fee or Payment of service did belong; so was Allodium called from All-bode, as one would say Totality, All-ship (bade bode head hept, and the like as before we have observed, signifying what in Latin do Status qualitas or conditio) which now are expressed by the word ship, as Worship, Ladyship, Lordship, &c. Yet Man-hood, Woman-hood, Maiden-

* Fucunt etiam in Consequa liberi homines, qui liberi tenementa sua per libera servitia vel per liberas consuetudines

Spelm. Glossar. in voc. Servus.

Sanctus Guthlacus habuit & habet duas hidas terre & quatuor carucatas in Dominio est una & duo servi & sex villani.

price Jeopardum, c. 23.

Ceopl. Ceopl.

Maiden-head and others continue) because it was possessed totally and wholly, being hereditary, perpetual and patrimonial, free without all condition, and in the Power of the Possessor to dispose of it wholly how he pleased, without dependence or asking leave of any. This was of a quiet contrary nature to a Feodum or Fee, which when first instituted was but personal, not (as afterward) perpetual, patrimonial or hereditary, or holden as our ancient Englisch Lawyers phrase it, ad remanentiam, but as a Clergyman holds his Benefice only for life, the Tenant being but a mere Stipendiary, a Termor, at best, as one expresses it, but a Freeholder for life, an usufructuarius, or not so much, for some held only ad voluntatem Domini or precario, not unlike our Tenants at Will. In process of time indeed as we have already shewn degenerating and receding from its first Institution it became perpetual and hereditary, yet holden still as formerly with a condition of service on the Tenants part, and by way of Salary, Pension or Stipend from the Lord, wherewith to gratifie and recompence his Man for his service, to which he was obliged under peril of forfeiture. The Fee was holden but in service, and though the Dominium utile was in the Tenant, yet the directum or the propriety remained in the Lord, together with a Power of restraining his Tenant from alienation, and consequently such Land was but partially, conditionally granted out, not totally and absolutely held by the Possessor, as was Allodium, the Possessor of which had Dominium, both directum and utile, held it pleno jure, integre, ex toto and ex folido, as they say, quit of all services, independently without acknowledgment of any superiour Lord, not unlike the Prince of Haynault, who held as Sir Henry Spelman observes de Deo & Sole, or as other absolute Princes Dei gratia, or to speak in a word answerable to the Etymology, in Totality. Hence the terms of Prædia immunia, terra propria, fundus proprii juris, patrimonium and the like, and in Charters of Foundations given to such Possessions.

64. Answerable to this was that by our Saxon Ancestours called Bocland, which Interpreters into Latin translate by the very word Allodium * as also terra † hereditaria, terra † libera, and terra * testamentalis. It took its Name from the Lands booking or entering in a Codicil or little Book, named a Charter after the Conquest, which in case the Land was made over to a Lay Person, was in way of usufruct delivered to the Party, and if to a Monastery was ordinarily laid and left upon the Altar. Thence was such an Instrument known in those times by the Name of Landbook, and in Latin Tellurigramm, and sometimes Codicillus. The Creation of Bocland (in Latin termed terram hereditario jure conscribere and liberam proclamare) was a Prerogative Royal, and not in the Power of a Subject, yet done it seems not without the consent of the great Council of the Realm. Hence Mr. Sommer tells us, that passages often occur in Grants made by Subjects of Lands in perpetuity to the Cathedral of Canterbury, and other places of such and such a King, that he made them hereditary, and proclaimed them absolutely free. And as it is proper for him that makes to establish, hence King Ethelred's hit gebo-Privilege, or Confirmation of their whole Possessions, to that Cathedral is by one ked on ecc of the Subscribers called Cyninges bocung. Nay this Land was very seldom alienated by the Possessor without (what the Law of Mortmain afterward required) a concurrence by the King, whereof Examples he tells us are obvious in the List of that Churches Lands and Benefactors published in the Antiquities of Canterbury, as also of the Concurrence of the Nobles of such Bocland grants. Particularly in the year of our Lord DCCCXXXVIII. King Egbert and Ethelwulf his Son granted to Christchurch in Canterbury, Mallings in Suffex, which Manor King Baldred had formerly given to that Church, but because it was not done by consent of the Nobles of the Kingdom, that gift was not valid. As Bocland originally flowed from the Crown, so upon all Forfeitures particularly that of the Estate of the Possessor for deserting the Wars, there being no mean Lord betwixt the King and him, by the Laws of Ethelred and Canute, to the Crown it reverted.

65. Bocland was properly tenable by Thanes, as Folcland by Ceorles, and thereupon in King Canute's Laws Thegn and Bocland in the Original Saxon, meet as Relatives, as in the Latin Translation do Thegen and Allodium. Not but that it was sometimes held by Ceorles, who were not absolutely incapable of holding it, but when it so happened it was placed as improperly, and as much out of decorum, as since and at this day, Knights Fees proper to Knights, and the Nobler sort of the People are in the Hands of Socagers, Socmen or Ceorles, whose proper tenure was that of Gafolland. So proper was this Bocland to the Thanes, that those who in the Latin Charters of St. Austlin's are called Allodiarii in the very same Char-

Vide Sommerum in Tract. de Gavelkind.

* Textus Ref. fenf.
† LL. Aluredi c. 47. apud Bromton. Ca. mutic. 104.
† LL. Ethelredi c. 2. in Bromton.
† LL. Canuti c. 32.

Quod viz. manerium prius eidem Ecclesie dedit Baldred Rex sed quia non fuit de consensu Magnarum Regum, domini illi non potuit valere. Et id. c. 11. par. 1. Text. Ref. fenf.
Vide Sommerum ubi suprad. Hinc illud folenne legi butan dam Ceopl. p. on People de lams prius

Sect. 12. Thanes who. Thanes exhibited in English (like as in those of Christ-church) they are styled Thengn. Though their name came at first from Minutring, yet being the King's Minniflers, the word afterwards came always to be taken in an honourable sense denoting in general a Gentleman, one nobly or generously defended, a Man of worship, of honour, whether he was the King's Thane, properly so called, or a Thane of inferior degree; for still he was accounted Noble. But to come to Bocland, it was termed terra hæreditaria, to distinguish it from Folcland, otherwise called Gafolcland, wherein the Tenant being but as a Lessee, Usufructuary or Termour, and having no propriety, upon his death bed, or other expiration of the term, it reverted to the Lord, and descended not upon the Heir as Bocland did, at least might doe, being because the possession in propriety, hereditary, if not alienated by him in his life time, as it might be in regard it was terra libera, as well as hæreditaria, which Folcland never was. It was called terra testamentaria, in regard of the publick Testimony of the Shire, required and used in passing of it otherwise than by Will. Probable it is that the conveyance thereof was recorded and inrolled, and entred in the Shire book, in the publick Shiremote after Proclamation there made, for any to come in that could lay challenge to it. It was also called Testamentalis because devisable, but yet here a question is moved whether it was indeed in the Power of the owner to dispose of it at pleasure.

166. St. Henry Spelman was of opinion that it could neither be given away nor sold, but was to be left to the Heir except the Writings or Conveyances otherwise permitted it; and that thence it had the Name of Terra hereditaria. He grounds himself upon a Law of King Alfred concerning Bocland which runs thus: He that hath Bocland, and left him by his Ancestours, we ordain that he give it not from his Kindred, if there be any writing or witness that it was forbidden him to convey it to strangers by himself that gave it to him, and that it was done in presence (or witness) of the King or Bishop, his Kindred being present. Now against Sir Henry Spelman his Conclusion, Mr. Sumner justly excepts that this Law clearly makes for the contrary, inasmuch as it allows unto the Possessor a Power of Alienation, leaving where his Hands were tied from it by an express Provision, and prohibition to the contrary made by those from whom the Land came to him, a Cause of the same nature with that exception which as we say, firmat regulam in non exceptis. That Bocland was alienable he proves by a passage, he cites out of a Charter of Archbishop Wilfred, who died about the year DCCCXXX. which sufficiently shews, that the Possessors might grant it away in their life time as pleased them, either by Act or Grant, or by Will. So it was before the Conquest. But afterward that Custom of devising it by Will ceased, as did withal the descent of Land generally, by equal division amongst all the Sons. For as the English Laws and Customs in general, from that time suffered a daily Eclipse and Declination by degrees, so this in particular (saving where they were more tenacious of it than elsewhere; or in such places as London, which by special privilege were suffered to retain it) languished, and was at length supplanted by that other kind of Descent, which now regularly takes place throughout most of the Kingdom. Inasmuch, as where Partible Descent cannot, to uphold it self, justly plead Antiquity and ancient Custom, it quite fails and falls to the ground. But yet we must know, that notwithstanding the Introduction of new Tenures by the Conquerour, yet did not the English presently forgoe their Bocland (that kind of Tenure Mr. Sumner tells you he means) but retained it both name and thing, as he proves in several Instances. And evident enough this is from Doomsday Book, where though happily not the name of it (as neither of Folcland, Saxon terms both) yet the thing is very obvious, and often occurring under the name and notion sometime of Tainland, because as we said properly tenable by Thanes, otherwise and oftner of Allodum. And as Bocland, so Folcland survived the English Saxon Government, continuing after the Conquest, and remaining unto this day, though not in the very name, yet in the thing and substance. For as aforetime the Saxons had their Ceorles, Gebures, Folcmen, and the like, as the Normans, afterward had their Villani, Bordmanni, Cottarii, and others; so what the former held was called Folcland, Gafolland, &c. and was opposed to Bocland; what the later Villainage, and in some sense Socage, opposed to Chivalry, Knightservice, &c. and in all likelihood intended by Rusticana servitus, occurring in a Charter of one Walchelinus Maminiot, of which Mr. Sumner and Mr. Selden may be consulted.

- Hinc Tegena: glib. Ge-nerosum Collegium.
Tegebnopen Generosus Pegnycap Thani dig-nitas.

Be boclante. Semon reje boc-lante hab-be. 7 him his magar læfbonfon-ne fetton re 7 he his nemorta ryllan ofhip.
Mægeboph gif ðeþrið geþrit, of-re his geit-nyrre 7 hit jæpa manna forþoe,
&c.

*Inde clomare ad Tainland.
Tenere in Alledio*

Hist. of Tithes.
c. 11.

67. Those

Their Jurisdiction and Privileges.

As Sac.

Sec.

Toll

Team.

Team what.

Infangebef

67. Those that held Bocland, had several Jurisdictions and Privileges, over and amongst those that held Lands of them. Their Franchises or Extents of their Jurisdictions and Privileges, or the Territories, Precincts, or Circuits, where they were exercised, they called Soc, Socne, Soken and the like. * Besides Doomsday Book, Ingulphus mentions the Soca de Donnedike, Soca de Beltisford, Soca de Tad, and Soca de Acumensbury. And in Noringshamshire, as appeareth by a Statute of Henry the Eighth, Lordship and Soke, were in his time indifferently used, as indeed still in the Northern Parts, Soke signifies a Franchise, of such and such a Place, as the Soke of Oswelbeck, mentioned in the now cited Statute. The Tenants that held Lands in this Franchise, might be called Soc manni, and their Service Socagium, in Latin, agium, as a great English Lawyer saith, being a legal termination, signifying Service or Duty, as in Homagium, Escaugium, or the like,) but this Term of Socage, after the Conquest became more abstruse, and as such we shall leave it, as neither belonging to us in these Saxon matters. But he that was possessed of these Privileges and Franchises, usually was said to have Soc, Soc, Tol, and Team, Infangthef and Outfangthef. Soc, as St. Edward's Laws describe it, was this. * In case any one was accused of any thing, and he denied it, the forfeiture for proof or denial should be his. It supposed therefore the Cognizance and Jurisdiction which the Lord had in his Court in Controversies and Suits, arising amongst his Vassals, so as to hold Pleas, and impose, levy and collect Fines and Amerciaments thence arising. The Power of holding the Pleas, and having all his Vassals follow his Court; it seems they expressed by Soc for the Laws, thus obscurely describe it. Soca is, in case any one seek for any thing in his Land, the Justice is his whether it be found or not. In this sense therefore it must signify what the Lawyers call Seila, in Latin Sequela, Señatio or Consecutio, and what in French is called Suite de Li Courr, although in general, as we said, for the word signifies a Franchise or Immunity. Of Tol or Tol, the Laws speak more plainly, telling us that Tol (which we call Tholonium) is that a Man's hath liberty of selling and buying in his own Land. It was the privilege of holding a Market, there being no other word to express the said Privilege, till that of Mercad was brought in by the Normans, which seems yet originally from the word Mercus, to signify great Fairs and Markts, rather than those weekly meetings of the adjacent Countrey People, which are meant by the word Tol, which in a second sense came to signify tribute paid to the Lord of the Market, for the liberty of selling within his Jurisdiction, and in after times, it was as Fleta testifies, brought in to signify freedom from such custom of payment. * Concerning Team, the Laws are again very obscure.

68. But its agreed that it signifies two things. The first is Advocatus or Avou-ry, or Garranty, of which the Lord had Jurisdiction, viz. concerning those that as the Lawyers phrase it, are vocati ad warrantum. Again, it signifies an Offspring or Generation, and here particularly it's applied to the Issue or Offspring of a Lord's Villains, and is defined to be a Royalty, which whosoever enjoys, hath his propriety in his Slaves or Villains within his own Franchise or Fee, and power of disposing of them as of his other things, moveable or immoveable, at his pleasure. Infangthef, was another Royal Privilege, and by St. Edward's Laws, is said to be a Man's Justice over a Thief, viz. of his own Man, if he was taken upon his own ground, as Outfangthef ( though these Laws speak nothing of it ) was Jurisdiction over a Thief that did not belong to the Lord, but being a stranger, was taken within his Jurisdiction. To what St. Edward's Laws lay of Infangthef, they add, they which have not these customs, may do right before the King's Justice in Hundreds, Wapentacks, or in Shires. But as it appears by Bracton, in the Norman times, this Jurisdiction over Thieves only belonged to the King, growing out of use amongst Barons, who formerly had had this Royalty, rather than taken away by any Law, which yet happened to the Hundreds and Shires, which seem to have been deprived of this Privilege by the Great Charter. Concerning such Persons as enjoyed these Royalities of Sac, Soc, Tol, Team and Infangthef, we must add what the often mentioned Laws farther hint to us. Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, and all that have Sac, Soc, Tol, Team and Infangthef, may have their own Souldiers, ( Free Tenants St. Henry Spelman reads it ) and their own Servants, viz. their Sewers, Butlers, Chamberlains, Bakers, and Cooks under their Friborg; as also these their Squires, (Armigeri) or others that serve them under their Friborg, in case they proved faulty, and Hue and Cry was made after them, by the Neighbours, they should see right done in their own Court. Those I say that have Sac, Soc, Tol, Team, and Infangthef. By Friborg is meant, what 32 H. 8.

Sect. 12

Vide Sken. num.
de Verb. signif.
Spelman.
Glossar. in voce.
Somneri Glof.
ar. & Lexicon Saxonic.
item in voce Comellum.
Eam autem derivatur a ryman propagare, par-turire, undc ofstratum a ferming.
Ab in s intus, angan aspere, prebendire, ( unde pigitis hodie ingers qui-yuf. Fangs ) deorfur.

Sect. 12. what the Normans called Frankpledge, in Latin, Fidejussio; the meaning is, that for all these, their Lords were engaged, and as it were gave security that they should well demean themselves.

69. Here it is reasonable for the better discovery of our Saxon Government, to take notice that generally in every Town there was a Friborg or College, Company or Society of ten of the Principal Men, who were each of them Fidejussors for the King, and answerable one for another, invented, as it's said, by that glorious King Alfred. From the Number (as in Latin, Decuria, Decania, Decima, Decanatus, Fidejussio, Decemviratus, and the like) it was called teobung and tean or the number of ten men. The chief of them who presided over the rest, was also called teobungman, teanheros: Bopheartheop, and freobopheartheop, as in Latin, Decurio, Capitalis Decemvir, Vas Senior, Capitalis Plegius, Capitalis Friborgus, & Justitiarius Friburgi. Their Office, Employment, and the effects thereof, are set forth at large by the Laws of Edward the Confessor, in this manner. Farthermore, there is another the greatest and most principal security, through which all are firmly established in their several Conditions, viz. that every one establish himself under the security of this Frankpledge or Suretyship, which the English call freoborges, yet the Yorkshire Men, and they alone, call it, tean manna tala, which is as much in Latin, as the number of ten men. This Security came to pass in this manner, viz. that all Inhabitants of every Town whatsoever, in the Kingdom, should be under this decennial Suretyship. Inasmuch, as if one of the ten proved faulty, the nine were to have one forthcoming for Justice: if he fled, the Law allowed one and thirty days; if he was found out in the mean time, he was led before the King's Justice, and was compelled at his own charge to make reparation for what he had done, and if his Crime was such, Justice was done upon his Body. But in case he could not be found within the compass of one and thirty days, there being in every Friborg a Principal whom they called freoborgeartheop, this Principal was to take two of the best of his Friborg, and out of the three nearest Friborgs, from each a Principal, with two others of the best of every Friborg, if he could procure them, and so be being the twelfth, ought to purge himself and his Friborg, if he could, from the offence and flight of the aforesaid Malefactor; if he could not do it, he and his Friborg were to make satisfaction out of the Goods of the Malefactor, if it could be had, or if not, out of their own Estates, so much as they were legally condemned in. And what they could not do with the assistance of the three neighbouring Friborgs, they themselves were to swear that they would not be in fault for the time to come, and if they could recover the Malefactor, they would bring him before the Justice, or declare to the Justice where he was.

70. The occasion of making over these Friborgs certain Justitiaries they afterwards declare, so far as much as it seems, the other constitution did not sufficiently accomplish its design. But whereas it so happened, that certain foolish and naughty Persons, too frequently and freely committed Insolencies against their Neighbours, wife Men began to consult about it, and over every ten Friborgs constituted Justitiaries, which (in Latin) we may call Decani, but in English, were named teanheros, or the head of ten. These handled Causes amongst the Villages and Neighbourhoods, and according to the offences, punished and made agreements, viz. concerning Pastures, Meadows, Corn-fields, and concerning differences amongst Neighbours, and other innumerable contentions which infect humane frailty, and incessantly make War against it. But when any greater Causes happened, they were referred to their Superior Justitiaries, whom the above-named wife Men appointed over them, viz. over the ten Decani, whom therefore we may call Centurions or Centenariis; for that they were Judges over an hundred Friborgs. Thus we have taken a view of the Policy of our English Saxons, as to the manner and form of the Government. The next that we do, must be to consider of their Laws, in the discovery of which, much will be farther made out as to the Customs respecting the Government; the faults to which the Nation was incident, the sorts of their punishments, with many other incident matters.

71. The English Saxons and Jutes coming out of the Chersonesus of Germany, must doubtless have brought some such Customs with them as were then in use with those Northern Nations, but what they were, as our Learned Glossarist before us, we cannot but very much doubt, there being very little light concerning these ancient matters. We read indeed of the Laws of the Anglii in Germany, but with the Anglii are joyned the Werini and Thuringii, and these Laws were confirmed by Charles the Great. We also read of the Law of the Saxons of Germany, which some ascribe to Herald the Dane, who yet flourished, but about the year of our Lord, DCCCCLXXXIV. Lindenbrogius, indeed will have those of Herald much later than those which he himself hath published, together with those of the Franks; so far as much as the Copies both in the ancientness of the Parchments, and Hand he imagines to have exceeded the times of Charles. But by our Spelman he is advised to take heed what he says, for some things in them relate to the Church, that till the Reign of Charles, the Saxons were not converted to the Christian Faith; nor had submitted to the Yoke of the Franks. Yet that the Saxons had ancient Laws or Customs, not found amongst those that are published, we may easily admit: but these we may also object, were after they came into Thuringia, after the dispersing of this People into those several Quarters from the Chersonesus. But our Saxons came as we formerly inculcated from the ancient Saxons, our Angli from that place we formerly described, and could not descend from those Colonies, which after their coming into Britain, were sent into many places Southward in the Continent. But as they were of the same Original with those other Colonies, no wonder if some affinity may be found amongst their Laws and Customs.

72. For, when as all these Gothic or Scandian Nations, viz. the Goths, peculiarly so called, the Saxons, Lombards, Vandals, Franks, Danes, Normans and others, had carried their victorious Arms throughout the Western Parts of the Roman Empire, and had begun as it were a Gothic Teutonic, or a Scandian World, no wonder that agreeing in Original, Language and Customs, imposing their Laws upon the conquered Nations, and retaining many of their own ancient Terms and Rites, (however in some places their Language, for the main, might afterward be swallowed up by the multitude of Speakers of that of the place) it should come to pass, that betwixt us and the Germans, French, Italians, Spaniards, Sicilians, and betwixt all those themselves, being all of us descended from these fore-named People, so great agreement there should be, as well in the Canon of ancient Laws, as the Names of Magistrates, Officers and Ministers, not to speak of an infinite number of vulgar words. To those Northern Customs we must ascribe then the very first Original of our Saxon Laws, not to any that are now extant in Print. Customs I call them, for they were scarcely written in those Ages, when Hengist and Horsas came into Britain. The Runic Letters I confess might be more ancient, but they were rather employed upon Mythological matters, and things relating to their superstition. The first beginning of all humane Laws, was imperfect and rude, and our Neighbours lately mentioned, as to their municipal Laws, have no more reason to brag than we. * Let them boast that * saltem igitur qui volumus legem suam will, faith our Learned Spelman, of the Antiquity of their Municipal Laws, yet legem suam will, the Original of them, how inconsiderable soever, and barbarous, is not to be fetched municipalium from elsewhere, as shall appear from what follows. For what Conquering People will antiquitatem cerum tantum erigo quantum wink under the Laws of the Conquered, especially when the one is cast out, and the other possessor its Seat?

lacum; sic & barbari, aliunde nunquam videtur expectanda, us & sequentibus elucet, qui enim victor populus sub victi legibus, &c. praefertim cum ejusdem ipsi sedem illi incoluerit? Spelm. in voc. Lex.

73. These last words are well and cautiously added by Sir Henry, for as we have elsewhere observed both of Laws and Languages, when these Northern People (or indeed any other People any other place) conquered those parts of the Roman Empire, if they embodied with the conquered People, and were exceeded by them in Numbers, the Language and Fashions of the Conquered would prevail, as we see in the case of the Franks conquering Gaul, and the Normans conquering England; but in case the Victors overpowered the subdued People in Numbers, or drove them out of their Possessions, then both Language and Laws of the victorious People must needs prevail as in our present case, when the English Saxons drove up the Britains into the Western Mountainous places, destroyed them, or forced them to quit the Island. But here now it comes fitly to our remembrance, that some there are who would have several Laws and Customs to have been by the English Saxons received from the Britains, many of whom, as they contend, continued among them, incorporated with them, and were never driven out. They instance in several Charters made to the Monastery of Glastenbury, wherein is mention made of the British Inhabitants as well as English, and they urge, that had not British Husbandmen and inferior sort of People been suffered to continue and Till the Ground, Bread would presently have failed the Invader himself, and

SECT. 12. and he should have wanted strength to Conquer, because he had not whereon to live. That every where, and absolutely the Britains were driven out no man will affirm; but yet for all this objected, that very few of them continued in the conquered places, we must be persuaded by several Arguments. One is the general change of the Names of Places, very few Countrey Towns retaining Welsh or British Names, and those great Towns that did, having some addition made unto them. Then the Language evidently makes out the thing in question; for in despite of all Laws, Prescriptions, and Orders, (as we see after the Conquest by Duke William) the Vulgar will be Master of Speech, and the greatest multitude of Speakers overpower the rest, each one being addicted to his own Native Language, and however some particular Persons may have an affectation after the Foreign, using his own Dialect as most easie to him. Neither are there so many Welsh words crept into the English as can argue any greater Conjunction and Union than with other neighbouring Nations, with which the English hath had Traffic and Commerce.

74. But as for that Objection of Tillage, it's easily answered from what we have already written in its place of the perpetual swarming of these English Saxon Nations into Britain, which overpowered the poor Inhabitants by their Numbers, and by their Crowds forced them to quit both Seats and Arms and either pass the Seas or seek for shelter in the Mountainous and hardly accessible places. Therefore do we read that those places, whence some of them came, were left desolate, and void of People, Old and Young, Noble and Ignoble, Man, Woman and Child; as well he that handled the Mattock, as he that managed the Sword, having to be partaker of that Booty and Fertile Land, of which they had heard so much Commendation, and of its worth had assurance from this, that none that once came over were willing to return to their former Seats. Some Fashions and Customs, while they held Correspondence in times of Truce, or afterward when the War was finished, they might receive from the Britains, as the Britains also from them, there being a kind of Commutation and Re-action in those Cases, but that any great matters is no way probable. Many Nations agree in several Customs, not so much out of Communication and from their learning one from another, as that those things are either agreeable to humane Prudence in general, of which all People participate, and consequently it dictates to them all the same things, (the Laws of Nations flowing from this Principle) or that as in Words, in Fashions, and all other things relating to Mankind there is no Infinity, but Necessities, Uses and Conveniences, being the same; several Peoples several men must sometimes light by accident upon the self same things. If any considerable Laws can be shewn to have been derived from the Britains, they were rather thence borrowed by such Saxon Princes as finding a great defect at home, were glad to seek elsewhere and provide from abroad Supplies for Domestic Wants, for answering those new Exigencies which continuance of time and settlement in a peaceable condition daily produced. So King Alfred is said to have translated and made English the Laws of Milmatius the ancient British King, of which anon.

75. The first Original therefore of the English Saxon Laws were such unwritten Customs as they brought along with them from beyond the Seas, which were increased by the Dictates of natural Prudence according to convenience, and the Exigency of Affairs, and by Observation and Communication in process of time came to be more full, certain and solemn, in reference to Customs, or to be by Legislatures framed into positive and written Precepts. The first of these, viz. Customs were according to the People from which they proceeded various, and not fully the same throughout the Land, though by resemblance they shewed themselves near akin, and answerable, positive Laws they had joynted to them, either first made or received by their respective Legislatures. The Jutes in Kent had their peculiar Laws, but being reduced under the Government of the West Saxon Kings, they also submitted to the Laws of the West Saxons. The Angli or English properly so called, used the Law called Mercian, and the Laws of St. Edward tell us, that Essex, Essex, or Yorkshire, (or as in the Margent is noted Warwickshire) Norfolk as the Normans called it (which shews these Laws to have been worded after the Conquest) or Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire and Northamptonshire, as far as Watlingstreet and eight Miles beyond were under this Law. Afterwards when the Danes came to settle and domineer in England, they imposed their Customs or Laws upon the Provinces of East England and Northumberland. So came it to pass, that in the Land were in force three several Laws, viz. that of the the West Saxons called Wessexnalaga, that of the English or Mercians called Mercnalaga, and the other of the Danes called Denelaga. This of the Danes is by the forementioned Laws called Lex Norvorum & Danorum, viz. The Laws of the Norwegians and Danes, and to have been the received Law of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Gratabridgehire, or Cambridgeshire, as also of Deira, with the Western and Northern Isles, as those of Man, Cathene, the Orcaides and others, and such as inhabited Guthrie, that is the Fenny places. As for the Norwegians, though generally those Northern People that invaded the Land go under the Name of Danes; yet as we have formerly hinted, the People of Norway, otherwise called Normans, are to be understood as Partners in the Expeditions; for as under the Names of Norwegians and Normans, the Danes are also to be understood, so under that of Danes are also comprized the Norwegians and Normans. The Danes as they settled in England by degrees induced their Customs, which seem to have been enforced after that Guthron from King Alfred received the Provinces of East England and Northumberland; and afterward became the most owned Laws of the Land when King Canute had brought the Sceptre into the hands of that People, where it continued from the days of Ethelred to Edward the Confessor, during which time the Law of the English is said to have been mute. Edward when he came to the Crown would not endure that one and the same Kingdom should be govern'd with three sorts of Laws, surveyed them all, selected and digested out of them that which from the thing was called Lex Communis or the Common Law, and from him the Law of St. Edward the Confessor.

Out of which the Common Law was compiled by Edward the Confessor.

Ethelbert the first Law-maker.

76. So much of the Laws in general, as they respected the whole government of the Land. To come to particular Legislatures, the first that we know of, who made any written Laws, was Ethelbert King of Kent, he who first received Christianity of all the Nation. Concerning him Bede writes, that among other good things he did for the Nation, He ordained for it Decrees of Judgments, according to the Examples of the Romans, with the Council of Wise Men. Which being written in the Language of the English, are hitherto kept and observed by it. In which he first placed how he ought to make amends that should steal any thing from the Church or Bishop, or the other Orders, resolving to protect those whom with their Doctrine he had received. That he ordained was Decrees of Judgments (*Decreta * Judiciorum*) which may be explained by what follows, concerning Sacrilegious Persons, that they should be punished or make amends (the Parliaments in France in their Arrests of Condemnation of Criminals to death, use still the Term of making honourable amends, answerable to the Latin Emendare here used by Bede) and this was according to the * Examples of the Romans. * Except These Decrees of Judgments then were Judicial Laws inflicting Punishments upon Offenders, and were taken from the Roman Books. It was about the year of our Lord DLXI that Ethelbert (according to Sir Henry Savill's Fasti) began his Reign in the thirty fifth year of Justinian, and he reigned about six and fifty years, in which time (Bede tells not in what year) he ordained and published these Decrees of Judgments. But publish them in what year he would, Justinian's Law, or his New Model, was not then known to the European Nations, nor many years after. What therefore he took from the Roman Laws must have been out of Theodosius's Code (which determines of matters as well Ecclesiastical as Civil) out of the Fragments of Gaius, Paulus or Ulpian, or a small part of the Pandects which then was known to the Europeans. So Alarick the King of the Visigoths in Gall had near an hundred years before caused the Code of Theodosius to be abbreviated by Anianus his Chanceller, and published for the benefit of his People.

77. What these Decrees of Judgments were which Ethelbert published, we do not certainly know. Yet are there certain Laws in a Manuscript Book of Rocheſter, called Textus Roffensis, an ancient Monument indeed, but such as in this matter we cannot fully trust. For neither do these Laws of his seem to be taken from the Roman Books; nor doth their Language seem to be near so ancient as King Ethelbert, nor doth Bromton the Abbat of Jornal mention them, though careful to deliver such Laws of those Saxon Kings as he then found, and thought authentick. And therefore shall we exhibit only such as are found in him and Mr. Lambard's Edition. The next Legislature to Ethelbert, at least whom he can receive as such, was Ine or Ira the King of the West Saxons, who began his Reign well nigh an hundred

Lib. 2. c. 5. Qui inter cetera bona quæ genti sue consulendo conferbat, etiam decreta illi Judiciorum juxta exempla Romanorum cum consilio sapientium constituit. Quæ conscripta Anglorum sermone hactenus habentur & observantur ab eo. In quibus primus posuit, qualiter id emendare deberet qui aliquid verum vel Ecclesiæ vel Episcopi vel religiosorum vel sancti juris auferret, velens sed. suumque eis quo & quantum doctrinam susceperat, præstare.

* Rex Alfredus vertit ὁπλοτερε πηχεῖα soma γεγενηεττε.

Unwritten Customs the first original of the English Saxon Laws.

Then that of the West Saxons. Of the Mercians.

And the Danes.

Sec. 12. hard's Interpretation of the word Wealth here for a Welfman, but affirms it signifies only a Servant, as Mr. Lambard himself also sometimes interprets it. For it appears, that the Saxon Kings were wont to send their Domesticks upon Messages, both from this Law and what we have formerly out of Ingulfus observed concerning Ofat the Butler of King Ethelwulf, who was present at the Council held by Bertulph King of the Mercians, and in the name of his said Master, his Sons and all the West Saxons signed the Charter granted to the Monastery of Croyland, both in quality of his Butler and of his * Ambassadour.

80. The three and thirtieth Law provides, That in case any was present at the killing of a man, he shall purge himself according to the value of his Head, or else be punished for his presence according to the value of his life that was slain. As if the valuation of his Head was of two hundred shillings, let him pay fifty; and let the same course be taken in those that are born of any nobler Families. The thirty fourth says what formerly had been said, That if any one slay a Thief he must make Oath that he killed him as a Malefactor, and farther adds, that he must make faith of this by Oath of men not chosen on purpose for the business, to the Kindred of the slain. In case he deny the fact and it become manifest he must pay the value of the mans Head. The next Law provides, That if any one be sued for keeping another mans Goods, and by Oath preconcived hath denied the having of them, and fears not again to swear to the same purpose he swear according to the penalty and the value of the thing. But in case he refuse this Oath, that he pay double for his Perjury. That which follows again, Requires the value of the Thiefs Head of him that shall let him escape. If * he be an Alderman he is to forfeit his Shire, except the King think fit to pardon him. The next imposes Forfeiture of Hand or Foot upon a Countreyman, who having been often accused of Theft hath been sold or convicted any other way. The thirty eighth Law provides, That if a Countreyman have Children and die, the Children abide with their Mother, and to keep them that she have six shillings, with a Cow in Summer and an Ox in Winter; and that the Kindred keep the Seat till the Children come to age. That which follows directs concerning such as flee from their Lords, and lurk in any other Shire, that they be thence sent back, and moreover sixty shillings paid to their Lord. The fortieth requires that the Field of a Countreyman adjacent to his House be fenced as well in Summer as in Winter. If any gap lie open and so let in his Neighbours Cattel, the Countreyman must expell no satisfaction, but must himself take care for keeping out the Cattel and alone go away with the loss. The one and fortieth gives liberty to deny Suretyship, in case he knows that he doeth well.

81. The forty second Law ordains concerning Common Ground, in this manner. If Grass-ground or any other belong to several Countreyman, and some will fence their part, and others refuse to do the same by theirs: if Cattle break into Ceopla go the Ground on that part that lay unfenced, let such as owe this part make satisfaction to the other, and the owners of the Cattle to them, according to Right and Justice: but if there be any Beast that breaks Hedges and is troublesome, and the owner thereof either cannot or will not keep it at home, he that finds the Beast in his Ground may kill it, and the owner of it shall have the Carcases, and no other compensation made. The forty third enjoyns, that if any one set fire to the Trunk of a Tree lying in a Wood and be thereof convicted, he be punished for it, and be punished by pay sixty shillings, for this reason, because Fire is a clandestine Thief. nec.

If any sell Trees in a Wood and be convicted thereof, that for the three first Trees he pay thirty shillings, and undergo no greater punishments how many sower there be of them, because an Axe by the noise discovers the fact, neither can it easily be concealed. The next imposes a penalty of sixty shillings upon him that shall sell a Tree, the Branches whereof can cover thirty Swine: that which follows makes an Annual Liverty, a sort of Garment given to the Family of the value of six pence. The forty sixth imposes penalties upon Breaches of the Peace: as If the Peace be broken in the Town of the King, an hundred and twenty shillings; in the Town of burghy-an Alderman or Senator eighty shillings; in that of the Kings Thane or Minister ce. sixty shillings; if in the Town of the chief Man of the Hundred, having Land, five and thirty shillings; and the purgation of the crime is to be answerable. The forty C. 47. Be seventh takes order, that if any one be accused of Theft, or of receiving a stolen thing

C. 36. Be ðon ðemon þeop follice.

* ȝyþe ealsopman rȝþolgehir rope, buran hun Cȳnung apian ille 7

C. 37. Be Cȳþlyce monner be togehnurpe.

C. 38. Be þon þe juht gehjan beapn hæbban.

C. 39. Be una lyfsetum ræpe framly hlafop.

* Oþpe on oþpe ræpe hne ber-te. Vides his antiquitatem vocis Shire.

C. 40. Be ceoplep reopþige.

C. 41. Be þonȝe onræce.

* Ego Ofat pincerna Regis Ethelwulfi et Legatus ip-sus Domini mei, &c.

C. 33. Be manlyh-

C. 34. Be ceopliht-

C. 35. Be ceopliht-

he free himself from the crime by sixty Hides, if he be accounted fit to swear. If an English Man steal, that he purge himself by a double number. If a Welsh Man, that be obliged to no greater a number of Furrows. And that it be lawful to any one both to prevent by oath the penalty of receiving Thieves, and the valuation of C. 48. Be-one slain in case of capital enmity, if he can, and be not abashed to do it, for so late-That which follows ordains, that if any stolen goods be intercepted, one of servilecondition must not be taken for a Voucher, as bought of him. And the next to that, C. 49. Be-In case any one for his crimes be condemned to slavery, and be accused that he stole something while he was free, the Accuser may beat him once: and the Thief, according to the value of what he stole, is to be beaten how unwilling soever.

82. The fiftieth Law is concerning him that finds Swine feeding upon his Mast, or Acorns, without leave, that he take a pledge worth six shillings: if they never were there before let him that owns them pay one shilling, and according to the value of the Swine, let satisfaction be given that they never were in before; but if it shall appear that they had been in often, let two shillings be paid. He that takes in Hogs to feed upon Acorns, of those that are three fingers thick in fat, let him take every third; of those that are two fingers, every fourth; of such as are the thickness of ones thumb in fat, every fifth. The fifty first forbids him whom these Laws call Gefithcundmon (being of condition below a Thane, and above a Ceorle, probably as we have already translated it, the Chief of the Hundred) if he petition the King or his Alderman, for his Family; or the Lord for any Slave or Free-man, to sue for any remission of a Muilt, because he had not inflicted deserved punishment upon Offenders at Home. That which follows enacts again concerning this same sort of man, that if he held Lands and refuse to go to War, he lose his Land, and pay one hundred and twenty shillings, if he have no Lands, that he pay sixty shillings. A Ceorlismen or Countreyman, if he offend in this sort, he must pay thirty shillings. By the next, He that is accused of a Clawdestine crime must purge himself according to an hundred and twenty Hides of Land, or else pay 50 many shillings. The fifty fourth provides, that in case another Mans Slave be found with a Man, and he be dead of whom he pretends he bought him, that the Buyer go to his Grave, and there according to the rate of forty Hides, make Oath that he bought this Slave of him, which done he is to be acquitted, and the Slave is to return to his former Lord. The same is to be observed in other stolen things. But in case it be known who had the goods of the Deceased, he is to be gone too, and to be desired to clear the sale except he make it good, that the Slave never belonged to the dead man. The fifty fifth orders, that if one be accused to have been at deadly enmity with a slain man, and the value of him be required at his hand, and he will swear that he gave him not his mortal wound; in such case the Oath called the Royal Oath, according to the rate of thirty Hides is to be duly administered, whether those called Gefithcundmen, or Meor Ceorles be joyned with him. In case he be found guilty, yet he may give his Corset and his Sword to whom of his Companions he will, though he be not able to pay the value of the slain. A Welshman deprived of Liberty, must make this sort of Purgation, according to the Rate of twelve Hides. A Slave must be beaten. An Englishman must swear according to the Rate of four and thirty Hides.

83. The fifty sixth, "Sets the price of an Ewe and her Lamb at one shilling, till a Fortnight after Easter. The next, Gives leave to any one that has bought imprudently any faulty thing, and discovers the fault within thirty days to return it to the Seller, except he will take his Oath that at the time of sale, that fault was unknown to him. The fifty Eighth, Acquits the Wife of Theft, though conscious to her Husband's stealing, because she is to be obedient to him. And upon his condemnation, if she refuseth not to swear that she had no part of the thing stolen, she may possess the third part of his Goods. The next C. 59. Be ordains that "He that cuts off the Horn of an Ox pay ten pence, the Horn of a Cow two pence. If the Tail of an Ox four pence, if that of a Cow five pence. "Who so puts out the Eye of an Ox must pay five pence, if the Eye of a Cow one shilling. That which follows concerning Rent Barley is imperfect in Mr. Lambard's Copy, neither doth Brompton's Translation make it much more intelligible. By the sixty first, "If a Countreyman hired a Yoke of Oxen, and had Fod-

C. 51. Berþcuntes monner ȝeþinge.
Vid. Sumnerum in Glossario voc. Sibcundus.

C. 52. Be ðon ðe ȝerþcundman rȝþo þorlice.

C. 53. Be Cȳnum ȝehinge.

C. 54. Baroþrcolenes manner þorþenge.

C. 55. Be ræpþæh þe rȝhdian.

C. 56. Be ceopre rȝþe

C. 57.

C. 58. Be Cȳþlyce monner ræle.

C. 59. Be

C. 60. Be negapol.

C. 61. Be

der hȝpe Græc.

88. The seventh Law "To the sixth of Ina, which gives the King Power of life and death over him that fights in the Court, gives the same Power over him, that shall but draw his Weapon in the same place. Farther provides that "If the Offender flye and be taken, he pay the value of his Head, and according to his offence farther be punished by the payment of a Mulct, or the Value of his Head. The ninth ordains, "That if one kill a Woman with Child he pay the full Value of her Head, besides half the value of the Head of one of her Husband's Children. If the value of the Head come not to thirty shillings it is to be made up, and a farther Mulct of an Hundred and twenty shillings to be imposed. And whereas formerly such were more grievously punished as stole Gold, Stallions or Bees, and other more heavy Mulcts were imposed upon other Offenders, by this Law the same respect shall be had to all; onely herbar steals a Man shall pay an hundred and twenty shillings. The tenth requires, that "He C. 10. Be who whose censor value of his Head, is twelve shillings to be paid for the offence. If the Man's value be six hundred, that the offender pay to him an hundred shillings. He that lies with the Wife of a Ceorl or Countreyman, shall pay forty shillings; for payment of which, if need be, all a Man's Cattel are to be sold, but no Mankind. The next wills, "That if any one wantonly handles the Beasts of a Countreyman's Wife, he pay down to the Woman five shillings: if he cast her down upon the ground, but lies not with her, ten shillings; if he enjoys her, sixty shillings. If another had committed Adultery with her before, one half of this Mulct is to be paid. If he be fued for it, either according to the rate of sixty Hides, he must purge himself or pay down half of the Fine. If violence be offered to a Woman of greater Birth, the Mulct is to be increased according to the valuation of her Head.

89. The twelfth Law, concerning Burning of Wood, alters the forty third of Ina, C. 12. Be concerning this Subject, "Imposing upon him that shall set fire to the Trees of another man, or fell them without his leave, for every greater Tree a Mulct of five shillings, for every smaller five pence, besides a fine of thirty shillings. That which follows willerth, "That if in felling a Tree a Man accidentally be slain, the Kindred of the slain shall have the Tree, if within thirty days they fetch it off the ground; otherwise it is to remain with the owner of the Wood. By the four- C. 13. Be teenth, "The Father of a dumb or deaf Man, is to repair the Damages caused by him. By the fifteenth, "Fighting in the presence of an Archbishop, is punished by a fine of an hundred and fifty shillings, in the presence of a Bishop C. 14. Be or Senator with one of an hundred. By the next, "such as steal a Mare or a Cow, and drive away Foal or Calf from them are to pay the Value of the Mare or Cow, and farther a Mulct of forty shillings. The seventeenth requires, "That if a Man borrow any Cattel which chance to dye in his Hands, if thereto C. 15. Be required he make oath, that he is not guilty of any fraud as to the death of mon myne the Beast. The Nineteenth ordains, "That if one Man lend to another any Weapon to kill a third Person, both of them if they please may pay the Value C. 16. Be of his Head. If they refuse to doe it together, that he that lent the Weapon pon, himself lay down the third part, and then he may make faith, that he meant no harm when he lent out the Weapon. The latter part of the Law, C. 17. Be Commands restitution to be made of such Swords or other Weapons as have been put into the Hands of Artificers, onely for mending or making into other C. 18. Be sorts of Instruments. The two and twentieth Orders, "That if a Man sue a nother before the King's Officer in Folcmote, and afterwards let fall his hope of Action, he make it appear if he can where the Right lies, or otherwise be fined to the value of the thing. The next in order is concerning the "Biting of a Dog C. 22. Be which, if he bite again of twelve shillings, and if the third time of thirty; afterwards doe more mischief and his Master still keep him, he must either pay C. 23. Be the value of the Head, or make other Compensation according to the mischief done. That which follows is concerning Cattel, "if an Ox rent or wound a C. 24. Be man he is to be seized, except the owner of him redeem him. The twenty fifth Punisheth him that ravisheth the Maid-servant of a Countreyman, with the payment of six shillings to the man, and a mulct of sixty shillings besides: C. 25. Be a Man-Slave that lies with a She-Slave with the loss of his Member; and him that ravishes a Virgin of tender Age, as him that lies with one of riper years.

90. The twenty sixth Law inflicts Punishments upon those, "Who kill men by Troops or Companies. If the slain innocent Party, or he that had received a mortal wound, was valued at two Hundred shillings, he that slew him must pay C. 26. Be the value of his Head and a Mulct; and every one that was in the Troop or Company, must also pay thirty shillings. In case he was worth six Hundred shillings, every one in the Company must pay sixty shillings, and he that killed him pay the value of his Head, and the Mulct besides. If he was valued at twelve Hundred shillings, they must pay an hundred and twenty a-piece, and the slayer both the value and the mulct. In case every Man deny, that he gave the mortal wound, all are to be impeached together, and amongst them must pay both the Value and the Mulct. Now concerning these Troops or Companies which our Saxon Ancestours called Hlothum, how many Men made up one of them, the Reader may remember he was told by the fourteenth Law of King Ina: The twenty seventh orders, "That if a Man in a Quarrel killed another, and had no Kindred by the Father's side, such Kindred as he hath by the Mother's side, shall pay the third part of the value of the Head, another third of his Gild or Society, and for the third he is to suffer banishment. In case he have no Kindred neither on his Mothers side, those of his Gild must pay one half, and he be banished for the other. If he that was slain had no Kindred, one half of the value of his Head is to be paid to the King, and the other half to those of his Gild or Society. Those of his Gild in Saxon called Gegyltan, were so named from Gyltdan signifying to pay, as much as one would pay Fellow Paymasters. And they were so called for two Causes, first because they contributed Money according to the Custome, together with their Fellows that had killed a Man, viz. The valuation of the Head of the slain, as they also received money for a slain Brother of their Gylt. Another was because they contributed toward publick Feasts, which at certain times they observed. Hence afterward in the Laws of King Henry the First, they are called Crocca Cowellet, as those whose Pot boils together. In Germany the Bores call their publick Feasts by the Name of Gilde, to which all contribute. A Society or Company in Saxon is called Geboorfscepe and Gyltscepe, in the low Countries Gildschap, and hence comes our more modern Name of Gilde, used to express some Societies of Religious men, as well of Tradesmen and Artificers, which now we call Companies, and moreover of Gildhall, the place of their Meetings and judicial Assemblies.

91. The twenty eighth Law of Alfred was made against the Spreaders of false News, and commands that "such being convicted, be not slightly punished, but their Tongues cut out except they redeem them by payment of the whole value of their Heads. The thirtieth orders that "Merchants when they land, bring such as come ashore with them before the King's Officer in Folcmote, and declare their number, and then keep them with them that they may be ready to answer any thing that shall be demanded of them in Folcmote. And if of necessity they bring many with them from Sea, into the Haven thereof, they are also to certifye the King's Officer in that Assembly. Considering the dangerous times wherein King Alfred lived, when was such flocking of strangers into England, this Law seems very prudently made. The one and thirtieth inflicts "upon him that shall put into bonds a Countreyman who no such thing deserves, a mulct of ten shillings, upon him that beats such an one, twenty shillings; if he hang him up aloft, thirty shillings. If he clip his hair like a fool, ten shillings; if he shave his head like a Priest and bind him not, thirty shillings: In case he cut his beard, twenty shillings; and if he bind him and cut his hair like a Priest, sixty shillings. That which follows "requires of him who carries on his back a spear so negligently that another by chance falls upon it, the value of his head without a mulct: but in case he bore the head of the spear in his hand and another falls upon it, the Law imposes a mulct upon him. If he be accused to have done it on purpose, it's lawful for him to clear himself according to the nature of the mulct; if the point of the spear was three fingers higher than that part behind his back; if the point and all the rest of the spear was of the same height it blames him not. The next directs that if "a servant pass from one place to another, he must doe it with the knowledge of the Alderman or Governour of that County where he formerly served. Otherwise, he that receives him into his Family must forfeit an hundred and twenty shillings to the King; whereof one half to be paid in the County whence the servant came, and the other in that where he is now received. And in case before his removal he committed any fault, he that last received him must make amends, and fine to the King an hundred and twenty shillings besides.

Sect. 12.

92. The thirty fourth Law "Imposes upon him that shall strike or fight in Folcmote before the King's Alderman, both the value of his own head and such a fine besides as shall be thought fit, besides an hundred and twenty shillings to be paid to the Alderman, upon him that by his weapons shall make any disturbance in Folcmote, a mulct of an hundred and twenty shillings to the Alderman. If he be not present, but the thing be done before his Substitute or the King's Priest, an amercement of thirty shillings. Here by the King's Priest is meant the Bishop, as we may very well conjecture, who, as we formerly said, in those times presided also in Folcmotes, and there dispatched business relating to the Church. The thirty fifth ordains that "He that fights at the Homefall of a Countryman, pay the said Countryman six shillings; if he drew his Sword, but struck not, half as much. If the offence be committed in the Homefall of a man valued at six hundred shillings, three times as much is to be paid as laid upon him that fights in that of a Countryman; If it be done at the House of a Man valued at twelve hundred shillings, the double of that which is to be paid for fighting in the Yard of one valued at five hundred. The thirty sixth Law of Burbburce or breach of the Peace in a Town "confirms that part of King Ina's first sixth Law of this Subject; for what concerns the breach of the Peace in the King's Town or City, imposing upon the offender the same mulct of an hundred and twenty shillings. But if it be done in the Archbishops Town, a mulct of ninety shillings; in that of a Bishop or Alderman sixty shillings. In the Town of a Man valued at twelve hundred shillings, a fine of thirty shillings; half as much if done in the Village of one worth but half as much. Him that breaks the Hedge of a Countryman, it fines five shillings: and double the sum, if it be done during an expedition in War, or in time of Lent. Him that in time of Lent draws the Holy Courtain before the People without leave, it fines an hundred and twenty shillings.

C. 34.
Begefohte be ropan caldopenen.C. 35.
Be Cyph-cer monner fletce ge-feohete.C. 36.
Be buphcynnger buphbyce.C. 37.
Be Boclanse.C. 38.
Be Cyph-ce alios fæpe.C. 40.
Bejundum.

Sect. 12.

"six shillings six pence, and the third part of a penny; but in case the Eye be still in the head, yet so wounded that the sight is lost, let the third part of the mulct be abated. Let him that cuts off a Nose pay sixty shillings. Him that strikes out the first Teeth, eight shillings to the sufferer; if those called the Wang-teeth (Dentes Canini) be struck out, four shillings; if the Grinders, sixteen shillings. He that wounds another on the Cheek, let him pay fifteen shillings; that cleaves his Chin-bone, twelve shillings; that pierces the Throat, twelve shillings. He that cuts out the Tongue as much as he that pulls out the Eye. He that wounds in the Shoulder to the breaking of the Member, thirty shillings; that breaks an Arme above the Elbow, fifteen shillings; that breaks both the bones of the Arme, thirty shillings. Let him that cuts off a Thumb, forfeit to the Party thirty shillings: that cuts off the nail of a Thumb, five shillings: he that cuts off the first Finger let him pay fifteen shillings: the nail of this Finger, four shillings; if the middle or longest Finger, twelve shillings; if the nail of it, two shillings; if it be the Ring-finger, seventeen shillings; if the nail, four shillings; if the little Finger, nine shillings; if its nail only one shilling.

ἄνθρωπος ποστος.

95. "If one receive a wound in the Belly, let him receive from the offender thirty shillings; and if the weapon pierced through the Belly, twenty shillings for each Orifice. If a Man be run through the Thigh, he that did it shall pay him thirty shillings, and if the bone be hurt, other thirty shillings. He that pierces a Man through the Leg, let him pay the wounded Party twelve shillings; but if the bone be broke, thirty shillings. If one Man cut off the great Toe of another he shall pay him twenty shillings; if the next to that, fifteen shillings; if the third, nine shillings; if the fourth, six shillings; and if the least, five shillings. If a Man be so wounded in the Genitals, that the faculty of procreation be thereby taken away, the offender shall pay him eighty shillings. He that cuts off an Arme shall incur the mulct of eighty shillings. Let the punishment for every wound, beside the Hair and the Sleeve, and beneath the Knee, be doubled. He that breaks a Mans Loins shall pay him sixty shillings; if he prick them with a weapon, fifteen shillings; if he pierce them through, thirty shillings. If a Man receive a wound on his shoulder he shall receive eighty shillings: If the outward part of his Hand be bruised or wounded, yet so as it may be cured, twenty shilling; but if he loose half of his Hand, sixty shillings. If a Rib be broken, though the Skin be whole, the offender shall pay ten shillings, but if the Skin be broke and some bones be forced out, fifteen shillings. If an Eye be pulled out, an Hand or a Foot cut off; let there be the same penalty, viz. sixty six shillings, six pence and the third part of a penny. If the Leg be cut off above the Knee, the mulct shall be eighty shillings; if the Shoulder-blade be cut off, twenty shillings; if it be bruised so that bones come out, fifteen shillings; if the greater Sinews be cut, yet so as they may be healed, twelve shillings; but if the Party fall lame and his lameness cannot be cured, thirty shillings; if the smaller Sinews be cut, six shillings. If a Man receive a wound on his Neck, so that all his life he goes infirm and deformed, let the offender by way of Compensation pay him an hundred shillings, except in the opinion of wife Men more ought to be given to him. These be the Laws of King Alfred, made by himself and his wife Men; for the Government of all his Subjects. In the League betwixt him and Guthrun the Dane, there were others made by the consent of both Nations; whereof such as respect the Civil state we have already mentioned in the History of Alfred's Life. The rest which respect matters Ecclesiastical, must to such matters be referred.

96. The next Legislator in order of our English Saxon Kings, was Edward the Elder, the Son and Successeur of glorious King Alfred. In the Preface to his Laws, he strictly charges and commands all his Officers, that as much as in them lies, they do Justice according to as it stands in the Judicial Book, and without all fear boldly dispence the Common Law, and that they set and appoint certain days for Determination of the several Causes depending before them. The first Law is concerning Traffic, and in way of confirmation of the fourth Article of the League made betwixt his Father and the Danish King Guthrun ordains that If a Man buy any thing, he have one that will vouch, warrantize, and make good the sale. That no

Be come i ræce.
I hit on ðære bom bec rænde.
De sfo libro Judicialis frequens in his legibus memini nec rament confas quis fuit. Echeberrum legimus Decreta Judiciorum Compofisse. Affricus etiam predit Alfredum Judiciorum decreta Saxo-nica mandasse licere.

C. 1. Be Ceapunge.

Man

Sect. 12.

Man without the Town buy any thing, but (a) have the Portreeve for witness, or other Men worthy of Credit, otherwise he shall (b) undergoe the penalty of Contumacy against the King, and the vouching or warrantizing shall also proceed from one to another till it be ended; we farther ordain that whosoever calleth to warrantize a Party of whom he bought the thing, in question, either produce his Testimony that he did rightly call him, or by interposition of his Oath satisfy the Demandant. In the same manner we determine concerning that that was ones own; for if he contend that it was not received from elsewhere, but was his own, and so used it, let him either produce his Witnesses, or with some other persons (if he can) not chosen on purpose, let him swear that the thing is not the Demandant's. If he cannot doe it, let six Men be summoned out of the Neighbourhood, and one Man swear for every Cow, or any thing of such a value, or more if the thing be of a greater price. We farther Decree, that if any Pawn another Man's Goods, he take his Oath that he did it not deceitfully, but without all fraud and evil design: then let him with whom the Goods shall be found be at his choice, whether he will plead that they are his own, or go to Vouching. This calling to Vouching or Warrantizing, our English Saxons expressed by the word Team, which properly signifies Propago, Soboles, or Offspring, but secondarily, and by way of translation, to make known, call forth or produce another. In reference to the matter in hand: it was the Custome of the Ancients, that if one had sold to another any stolen Goods, and this Man had alienated them to a third, and the third to a fourth, &c. yet might the true owner seize them wherever he found them. Then was he with whom they were found obliged to produce him that sold them to him, to own and make good the Sale, which in Latin they term Advocare. Then was he that was thus called out or produced (Advocatus Causæ) bound to produce his Chapman also of whom he bought the Goods, and this Chapman another, till at length they came to the Thief himself. From this continuation and progress from one to another, it had the Name of Team, as in the Old Norman Law French, Voucher at Garantie; so hence in Barbarous Latin came Garandia, Garantia, Garantum, Garantizare and Garentizare, otherwise written Warrantia, Warrantum, and Warrantizare, the Root of all which, seems to be the Saxon word Waran, which signifies to defend. For the French instead of the Saxon W, always use G, and all these words have their proper signification amongst the Lawyers of England, France and Germany, which no one Roman or Latin word can express. As for the Portreeve mentioned in this Law, it signifies the Chief Governour of a City or Town, he of London and many other Cities in ancient times being known by this Title.

97. The second of King Edward's Laws ordains, that Whosoever denies another Man his Right, either in Bocland or Folcland, demanding it before the King's Justice, whereas he hath no Right in either of these sorts of Land, shall pay to the King for the first offence thirty shillings, as much for the second; and if he offend the third time, that he pay an hundred and twenty shillings for his Contumacy against the King. The third determines of One that hath sworn himself, or born false witness, that no credit be given to him for the time to come, and that he be put to Ordeal. The fourth declares, that King Edward lying at Exeter, and consulting with his Wisemen, studiously enquired by what means he might best provide for Peace and Tranquillity, for he perceived that these things were not so much regarded as they ought to be, and as he had ordained. He intreated therefore and required all that would be corrected and amended, and would with him enjoy common Society, and would profecute with love and hatred the same things as he did both by Sea and Land; that they would look to this one thing, viz. that they did injury to no Man. He that doeth contrary let him (as was formerly ordained) pay thirty shillings to the King; if he offend the second time, as much; and if the third, an hundred and twenty shillings. The fifth commands, that That Reeve or Judge that doeth not Justice according to the Testimony of such as are summoned, pay an hundred and twenty shillings for his contumacy against the King. The sixth wills, That if a servant be accused of Theft, be that recommended him to his Master, or other of his Friends (if any he have) be sureties

(a) Ac hæbbe ðæt portgerefen geþnyrre. (b) Sonneþ he cunn-geþ openþnyrre cýlde. 7 ðang-ge team ðeah folc, &c.

team.
Team propagare team soboles & hinc team iam pro sequela quam vocant natorum vel mancipiorum propagine, de qua prius; quam pro advocacione Autoris laudatione vel productione. Hinc etiam parum Teaming dicimus, à teaming Woman.

Advocatio alio sensu est-jus patronatus vel presentandi, nigratibus vulgo Advocos.

Vide Lambard. Glossar. in voc. Advocare, Spelman. in voc. Garantia & Somneri in v. Advocate.

C. 2.
Be ðone ðe oþrum pnyrre.

C. 3.
Be manypopnum.

C. 4.
Be fpyðe.

C. 5. Be geþeþan þe mis pnyr ne amange.

C. 6. Be cýrpe betogenum.

ries for him, that he discharge himself of what is deposited against him. If he have none to interpose on his behalf, those that are concerned may seize his Goods. If he have neither Goods nor Friends, let him be taken into Custody. The seventh absolutely requires, that Those always be had in readiness that will not goe to their own Homes, and that for no reward they be protected.

98. The eighth Law enjoys that "No man knowingly and voluntarily, have peace with or harbour one that is condemned for a Crime: he that acts contrary and thereby breaks his Oath and the faith given by him, and all the People, let him undergoe the Mult prescribed in the Judiciary Book. That if he refuse to pay, he is to be deprived of the King's and all other Mens friendship, and farther forfeit all his Estate. And if any afterwards relieve him, let him also incur the penalty expressed in the said Judiciary Book. Farther, faith he, whoever shall relieve a fugitive either in this our coast, or in the Eastern or Northern parts of the Kingdom, let him be punished as in the Articles of Peace is ordained. That which follows provides that, if one deprived of liberty for stealing, steal again and all his kindred forsake him, so that none will engage for him, he be set to servile works as opportunity shall be, and his kindred loose the Valuation of his Head. The tenth Law "forbids any Man to receive another Man's Servant without his leave, and he hath fully satisfied his Master: he that doeth otherwise must be punished as Contumacious against the King. The eleventh and last commands that "about every fourth Week every Reeve, or Judge, hold the Gemote or Assembly, Administer Justice to every Man, and determine all causes at the appointed days. If he doe otherwise he is to be punished as was before said. These are the Laws made by King Edward the Elder himself. After them follows the league made betwixt him and Guthrun the Dane consisting of such matters as had been formerly agreed of betwixt the said Guthrun and King Alfred which we have already mentioned, at such time as the English and Danes made Peace and embraced one another. These Articles were often afterward repeated by wisemen, and to the common utility of the Realm, as the Preface words it, increased and amplified. But forasmuch as they respect Religion we must as before we hinted refer them to another place.

99. The next Legislatour after King Edward the Elder was King Athelstan his Son. After a Religious Preface, the first Law he enacts is against Thieves, requiring that "If a Thief be taken in the fact, no Man spare him if he be above twelve years old, and have stole any thing above the value of eight pence: if he be for the fault, and yet for all that the Thief shall not be spared, who if he contumaciously make resistance, or flye for it, for the time to come shall obtain no favour: a Thief cast into Prison, shall there stay forty days, and then after the payment of an hundred and twenty shillings, be discharged. But the kindred must give security for his good behaviour, after which if he steal again, they must either pay the value of his Head, or bring him back to Prison; and in case any one resist them he shall pay to the King, or to any other it concerns the value of his own Head, and if any stand by him, he shall pay to the King an hundred and twenty shillings. The second is against "such as have no Masters, or daining, that "of those that are not of any Man's family, and consequently none can have right against them, the kindred shall give caution for their just demeaning of themselves and in Folkemote put them into some ones service: which if they will not or cannot doe, let such Masterless men be esteemed as fugitives, and be beaten as Thieves, as they are light upon. If any one afterward relieve them let him pay the value of his Head, or according to that value, discharge himself of the guilt. But the third commands that "if a Master denies to doe another man right and defends a naughty and knavish Servant, so that of him complaint is made to the King, he pay the value of the thing in demand, and farther "to the King forfeit an hundred and twenty shillings. But in case any make complaint to the King, before he demand his right as it is prescribed, he shall incur the like Mult as the other should have done for denying Justice. If the Master be convicted to have been privy to the Theft of his Servant, he shall loose his Servant and pay the value of his own Head for the first offence, for the second shall loose all he hath. The same punishment shall the King's Treasurers and Reeves undergo if guilty of the same offence. The fourth ordains concerning "such as conspire against their Masters, that if thereof legally accused, and if the fact cannot be denied, the offender being convicted by threefold Ordeal, it shall be Capital.

Sect. 12.

C. 7.
Be ðon ðe hecan agen nean nýlon.

C. 8.
Be ðon ðe full fpyðe.

C. 9.
Be ðon ðe hæt tom boc recg.

C. 10.
Be ðone ðe oþer-mann unteþe-þe butan leape.

C. 11.
Be gemote antagum.

C. 1. Sax.
Be ðe-urn. apud Jurnal. c. c. 4 & 5.

C. 2. Sax.
Behalpoþ-leapum mannum.

C. 3. Sax.
Jurnal. c. c. 7 & 8.

C. 4. Sax.
Be hlafops-ryppum.

SECT. 12.

100. The sixth Law of King Aethelstan is against "Witchcrafts, Inchantments and such like deeds as procure Death, that if any one by those that use them be made away and the thing cannot be denied, such practitioners shall be put to death, if they endeavour to purgethemselves and be cast by the threefold Ordeal, let them lie in Prison, an hundred and twenty days, which ended let their kindred redeem them by the payment of an hundred and twenty shillings to the King, and farther pay to the kindred of the slain, the full valuation of the parties Head. And then mult the criminals procure Sureties for their good deportment for the time to come. The same punishment shall be inflicted on Incendiaries and such as rescue Thieves. Nay let such as endeavour to rescue them, though no Man be wounded in the attempt, pay an hundred and twenty shillings to the King. As for Inchantments mentioned in this Law, the Saxon word is Liblcam which signifies the Art of Conjuration or Witchcraft, yet not in General, but that sort of it properly called Fascination, or Inchantment used with certain Ligatures, Fascia or Bands. The Romans called this sort Obligamentum Magicum, Phylacteria and Ligaturæ. Hence Nectere came to be a Magical word, as in that verse of Virgil, Nectere tribus nodis Amarylli colores. This he wrote, as Turnebus observes, from the Ancient Custome of Inchantments wherein were reckoned knots, bands and necessities. In those matters also the word Ligare came to be used. And as Isidore writes, to these things belong Ligatures of execrable Medicines which the Art of Physick condemns, whether in precatations, Characters or in any other things to be hung and bound about one, in all which is the Art of Devils sprung from a certain peltiferous society, or compact of evil Men and Angels. Upon which account they are all to be shunned by Christians to be rejected and condemned, with all execration possible.

101. The seventh of King Aethelstan's Laws ordains concerning simple Ordeal C. 7. Sax. that "If one accused several times of Theft be cast by it, and have no body Be pnce- to be surety for him, he be sent to Prison, and thence freed by his kindred, as eapum; Op- was before said. The eighth appoints that "If any man having no House nor Land le. for. 13. of his own, goes to serve in another Shire, and returning to the place whence Be lano le- he came to see his Friends, doeth any mischief, he that received him shall le mans man- give caution that he shall be ready to make satisfaction, or else doe it him- num. c. 14. self to the party aggrieved. The ninth provides that If any one challenge Cat- C. 9. Sax. tel as his own in another Man's hands, five Men out of their Neighbourhood de ypp be- shall be called, whereof one shall swear that he rightly challenges them. But de ypp be- if another Man contend they are his, twenty Men shall be taken out of the rehye. Neighbourhood, whereof two shall swear with him, that he bred them. This Journal. c. 15. may be done without the Common Oath of all; but otherwise if the value of the thing exceed twenty pence. The tenth forbids any Commutation of Goods C. 10. Sax. but in the presence of the Reeve, the Priest of the Town, or the Lord of the Be yppa Soil, or some other credible Person, under the penalty of thirty shillings, gehpeppa. and the forfeiture of the thing changed to the Lord of the Soil. And if any of the these bear false witness, let him be infamous, or no credit be given to him C. 11. Sax. ever after, and let him forfeit besides thirty shillings. The eleventh pre- Be don de- scribes the manner of accusing a Thief that's killed. First let there be three in rylogun- number (if they will take it upon them) two Kinsmen on the Father's side, ge bæce et- and one on the Mother's, which shall swear, that they knew no reason why oylege- their Kinsman should have been slain upon the account of Theft. Then let there num. for- be twelve impanelled, which by their Oaths shall lay Theft to his charge, and nal. c. 16. then if the Kindred of the slain Party do not appear, those who first endea- C. 12. Sax. voured to clear him of the crime shall each of them forfeit an hundred and Be on ne ce- twenty shillings. The twelfth confirms the first part of the Law of King Ed- ward the Elder, Decreeing that no Man buy any thing out of Town which arge bu- exceeds the value of twenty pence, but within the Town, in presence of the Journal. c. 17. Portreeve, or some other creditable Person, or else in presence of the King's Reeve or Justice in Folcmote.

102. The thirteenth decrees, that "All Towns or Castles be repaired within fourteen days after the time of Procession or Perambulation, and that all Bargains be managed within the Town. The fourteenth appoints, that throughout the King's Dominions one and the same Money be current which shall not be Coined out of Town. If any Minter or Coiner imbase the Coin, let him loose his hand, which being cut off shall be

C. 13. Sax. Be bunga gebet- tunge. Journal. c. 18.

C. 14. Sax. Be mynæcepum. Journal. c. 19.

"fixed

"affixed to the Workhouse. If any be accused of adultera- Random suppleis formam, ut qui adul- ting Money, and will purge himself, let him by the Or- terium percutitur summo, addito in- deal of hot Iron cleanse his hands of such wickedness, fuger, ut eorum abscondentur pudente, but if by the Ordeal he be cast, let him be punished: rejectione, Henricus primus ut monuit as now was said. At Canterbury let there be seven Min- Seldenus in Jano Angl. ters or Coyners, whereof four for the King, two for the Bishop, and one for the Abbat. At Rocheſter let there be three, whereof two for the King, and the third for the Bishop. At London eight. At Wincheſter six. At Lewes two. At Hastings one; At Chicheſter one. At Hanton two. At Werham two. At Ex- ceſter two. At Shaſtsbury as many. And in every other C. 15. Be rylogynhtum. Journal. 20. Town one. The next Law requires, that no Target be made of Sheep Skins under penalty of thirty shillings. C. 16. Sax. Journal. 21. That which follows commands, that for every Plough a Man keep two well furnished Horſemen. The seven- C. 17. Sax. Be þam þore þeo- teenth ordains, that he that receives reward from a re mo þearce nima. Journal. 22. a Thief, and thereby hinders another Man's Right, be- C. 18. Sax. Be hopum. Jer. 23. merced the full value of his Head. The eighteenth, for- C. 19. Sax. Be þeopman ðe ful- bids Horſes to be transported, except such as be sent up- þippe æt opale. Journal. c. 24. on free Gift. The nineteenth ordains, that If a Servant be Cast by the Ordeal, the just and simple value of the thing be paid, that the Slave be thrice beaten; or if the full value of the thing be reiterated, this punishment is to be abated.

103. King Aethelstan by his twentieth Law enacts, that "If any one absent C. 20. Sax. himself from Folcmote thrice, he be punished as contumacious against the King, if Be don de- so be that the Holding of the Assembly was declared a Seven-night before. In remede. Journal. such case if he refuse to doe right, and pays not his mulct to the King, the pnce. c. c. ancientest Men of the Countrey are to go and seize upon all he hath, and take 25. c. 26. security for his appearance. If any one refuse to go with his Neighbours for Execution of this Law, he is also to be punished as contumacious against the King, when the Assembly is opened let it be proclaimed, that all enjoy Peace whom the King will have to enjoy it, and that every one abstain from Theft upon pain of loosing his Life and his Estate. And if afterward any one be guilty of Theft, let the ancientest men of the Countrey ride thither, and seize on all he hath, one half to the King, and another to their own use, and take security for his appearance, in case no security can be had, let his Person be seized; if he stubbornly make resistance, and flye not, he may be killed. If any one concern himself for him, and kill a third Party, let the King and all that love him set themselves against such an one, and if any relieve him if he make his C. 21. Sax. escape, let him be fined the value of his own Head, except he make it out that Be ðem de- he knew not that he was a Fugitive, and then according to the value of the Fugitive's Head. The twenty first gives order, that if "any le þungas. one would get off his punishment of Ordeal, if he be able to procure Proc. Journal. c. 27. the don of the Party that received the Injury, but by no means that he escape the Be don penalty inflicted by the Law. The twenty second confirmation of former Laws de oþper requires, that "No man receive another Man's man (as this Law words it) manner into his Family without leave first obtained of his Master. He that doeth o- manusep- therwise shall restore the Man, and pay the mulct of Contumacy against the feþð. Journal. King. And no man is to put away his men that are accused of any Crime, till c. 28. & 29. they have first made satisfaction. By this it appears how ancient in this Nation, Neunþep- the Custome is of calling a Servant by the word used for the whole species, a thing po nan man- in use as well with the Romans, and others more ancient, as with modern neþman, People. etc.

104. The twenty fourth concerning Traffick in Confirmation of former Laws C. 24. Sax. ordains, that "If a man buy any thing with witnesses, which another man chal- Be ðam lenges for his own, the Seller make it good, and secure the bargain, whether de yppa he be bond or free. But on the Lord's day let no market be held, under penalty hyccap. of forfeiture of the wares, and a mulct of thirty shillings besides. The next Journal. c. 31. Law as a terror to such as shall forswear themselves commands, "That such ry þra de- being convicted shall not only not bear Testimony for the time to come, as pncp. People to whom no faith is to be given, but be forbidden also Christian burial, C. 25. Sax. except the Bishop of the Diocese will certify, that he had done all things, that Remanþpo- were enjoined him. Of this the Priest of the Place is within thirty days to give pun. Journal. notice to the Bishop, or else to be punished as the ordinary shall think fit. The c. 33. last of these Laws gives directions, that In case any of the King's Officers refuse C. 26. Sax. to Proc. Journal. c. 32.

R r

Sect. 12. "to put these his Ordinances into Execution, or be remiss in his Administration, he be punished as Contumacious against the King, who will put in another that will be more careful of his Duty. The receiving of the Mulfet he commits to the Bishop of the Diocese. If any one contemn these his Laws and Commands, for the first offence he shall incur a penalty of five pounds, for the second the value of his own Head; and if he offend the third time forfeit all the Estate he hath, together with the Amity of the King and all his People. After this it follows, that these matters were settled and determined in the great Assembly at Greatanlege, at which was present Archbishop Wulfhelm, together with all the Noble and Wifemen, that Ethelstan called together.

105. After these Laws follow others of this same King in the Saxon Edition to which Ethelstan preface in this manner. "The Ethelstan King, make known to all that I have diligently inquired the Cause why our Peace hath not been so well kept as I desired, and was formerly enacted at Greatanlege; and from the most knowing Persons in my Kingdom I received this Answer, that it happened by reason of too much patience, and suffering Crimes to go unpunished. Moreover lately keeping Christmas at Exeter, and there attended by my Wifemen, I found them all most ready to venture themselves, their Wives and Children, to procure those Violators of the Peace, to procure these Violators of the Peace, to be so driven out of the Kingdom, that they might never return again into it; which if any of them should do, he should be punished as a Thief taken in the Fact. And in case any one cherish or hold correspondence with any of them or their Servants, they should forfeit both Life and Estate. For hence we believe it comes to pass, and for no other reason that Oaths are so often violated, suretyship is so commonly broken, and Pledges signify so little as they do. Then follows a Law injoining, that If any one entertained in his House another Man's Servant, which he has removed from his Family for his misdeamour, and as one he cannot govern, such an one pay the full value of the Servant's Head to his Master, and besides that a Mulfet of an hundred and twenty shillings to the King. But in case the Master of any Servant unjustly afflict and abuse him, let him purge himself if he can of what is laid to his charge in Folcmote, and then put himself into any other Family he pleaseth. For we graciously grant, that if such an one prove himself just and honest, he may serve whom he pleaseth. And if any Reeve or Judge pass this over, or unwillingly transacts it so as his fault be evidently proved, let him be punished as contumacious against the King, and if for a reward he hath perverted Justice, let him both be punished as contumacious against the King, and be farther noted with Infamy as was said before; let a Thane so offending be punished in the like manner; and let the Reeve or Judge chuse out Men faithful, and of Integrity the best he can light on within his Precincts, and make them Witnesses and Overseers of all Controversies. And according to the value of the thing of Controversie let the Oaths of honest men, without any picking or chusing of them be interposed. The second Law requires, that If one pursue any Cattel by their Footsteps, and find them in another Man's ground, the owner of the ground shall, if he can, trace their Footsteps to another Man's ground, if not the Footsteps of the Cattel in his Ground shall, when the owner comes to make out his right, be taken as much in evidence as a first Oath.

106. The next thing that follows relating to the Civil State, is the valuation of mens Heads, which we have often heard mentioned by the Laws, but never yet to what particularly it amounted. First then saith the Text. The valuation of the King's Head according to the Common Law of the English, is thirty thousand Thrymses, whereof fifteen thousand are properly the value of his Head, the rest being due for the Kingdom: the last fifteen belong to the Nation, the first to the Kindred. An Archbishop's or Earl's Weregild (as the Saxons called it) or valuation is fifteen thousand Thrymses. A Bishop's and Ealdorman's Eight thousand. A General's of an Army or a High Marshall's four thousand Thrymses. The valuation of a Spiritual Thane or Priest, as also of a Temporal Thane two thousand Thrymses. That of a Countreyman (Ceorl) by the Danish Law is two Hundred sixty seven Thrymses. If a Wellman grow so rich as to maintain a Family, have Land and pay yearly Rent to the King, he shall be valued at two Hundred and twenty shillings: if he possess half an Hide of Land, at Eighty shillings. If he have no Land, yet if he be a Freeman, the value of his Head shall be seventy shillings. If a Ceorl or Countreyman be so wealthy as to possess five Hides of Land, in case he be killed the price or value of his Life shall be two thousand Thrymses. But if he come to have a Corslet, an Helmet and a gilt Sword, though he have no Land let him pass for a Sitthcundman.

And Elale Sir per gere-tes on jam mucian rynop ac Gneacanleage, &c.

C. 1.
Be don of per monne man unbecfeshy?

C. 2.
Be don be-type betpeynse?

Be pepum?

The valuation of Mens Heads.
Of the King,
Of an Archbishop or Earl,
A Bishop or Alderman.
Of a General.
Of spiritual or temporal Thane or Priest.
Of a Countrey-man or Ceorl.
Of a wealthy Wellman.
A wealthy Ceorl or Countreymen.

The valuation of the Mercans.

Oaths how valued.

Punishments by Fines and Mulfets not with death.

Two sorts of them.

Men distinguished by Were.

And if his Children or Grandchildren grow so rich as to possess five Hides of Land let all their Posterity be reckoned as so many Sitthcundmen, and be valued at two thousand Thrymses. The Mercians value a Countreyman at two Hundred shillings; a Thane at twelve Hundred. They are wont to equal the single value of a King's Head with six thousand of Thanes, that is thirty thousand Scats; for so much is the value of the King's Head, and as much more must be paid as a recompence for his death. The value of his Head belongs to his Kindred, and the Compensation of his death to the People. He that is valued at twelve Hundred shillings, his Oath shall be of the same esteem as those of six Countreymen, for were such an one slain, six Countreymen would satisfy over and above for the value, therefore let the value of him and all them be the same. By the English Law the Oaths of a Priest and a Thane are of the like esteem, and in respect of the seven Church Offices, to which by God's Gift he is risen, let his Place and Rank be equal with that of a Thane.

107. By these valuations of Heads from the highest to the lowest Rank, we may perceive, that in those ancient times punishments consisted rather in Mulfets than in Blood, contrary to our present Custom, whereby small offences in comparison (especially if reiterated) are become capital which whence it hath proceeded, whether from this Consideration that Crimes in latter Ages do more abound, or from other reasons is not evident. The Wisdom of Legislators is most seen in this, to ordain such Punishments, as by example and terror may best prevent those Crimes against which their Laws are enacted, no other end or design can be called properly theirs; this is that which vindicates their Punishments from the Imputation of Fury and Tyranny. And if less than Capital will do it, as Men and Christians, they ought to be sparing of blood, and as Politicians where the Country hath not too many Inhabitants. Therefore slavery, rowing in Gallies and digging in Mines, most Nations anciently preferred before Capital Executions, as those which would more terrify than death it self, especially high spirited Fellows, such as have spent their Fortunes, and whom shame of begging provokes to rob upon the High-ways. This was so much practised in the middle Ages, that the Law of the Boii tells us, that No offence is so great, but Life may be granted for the Fear of God. Amongst others the ancient Germans, and other Northern People who afterward gave Laws to Europe, punished the greater sort of Crimes and Homicide amongst the rest with Fines or Mulfets. For the Germans, Tacitus witnesseth, who writes that Homicide was expiated by a certain Number of Cattel, whereby all the House received satisfaction. For the Cimbri and Danes De bello Rithmar.

Nulla sine culpa tam gravis, ut vita non concedatur, propter timorem Dei. Tit. 1. Cap. 7. §. 3.

Our Saxon Ancestours as well as others, as we have seen by some of their Laws, deprived Persons of Liberty, and Mulfets generally they used, not commonly inflicting death upon Offenders, but where the value of the Head could not be paid, for the Murderer was bound to pay the value not of his own Head but of him he had slain, and according to the Crime sometimes a double, treble, nay nine or eighteen values. Their Mulfets or Fines were either greater or lesser. The Greater took away all or much of their substance, being the same with that which we call the valuation of the Head by them called Were, which word originally signifieth a Man, and this valuation or payment secondarily, and by way of Transfation. The lesser sort of Mulfets they called Wite, which differed from Were both in this that it was less, as also in that it was uncertain, sometime more and sometime less, whereas the other was settled and constant, at least for some time. The first answers to the word Redemption, or as it's now used in English, Ransome, and the last to Fine, and Amerciament properly.

108. But by this Valuation of the Head or Were, men were distinguished into certain Classes or Ranks. Of these there were three, viz. The Lowest, the Middle and the Highest. The lowest consisted of such as were valued at two hundred Shillings, thence in Saxon called Tuwyhndemon, in Latin Vir Ducentenus. The middle were of such, whereof each was valued at six hundred shillings, called Sixhyndemon and Vir Sexcentenus. The highest comprized those that were valued at twelve hundred shillings apiece, thence termed Twelhyndemon and Duodectes Centenus. In like manner their Wives were termed Ceorlissa or Tuwyhnda, (for Ceorle and Tuwyhndemon were the same) as also Syxhynda and Twelhynda. Hence comes Dynane it to pass, that from these Classes, going by Hundreds, the word Hyndene is interpreted Lambardo.

I castighi se non hanno per fine il dar Esempio Jono Furori: enon Castighi. Manzini nell Furori, &c. p. 91.

Lib. de moribus Germanorum.
De bello Rithmar.

Weregild, Lycantropus.

Tuwyhndemon.
Tuxhyndemon.
Twelphymnemon.
Societas

Sept. 12
According to the degrees of valuation their Oaths were more valid.

Mægbotewita

Cyne-gild

Satisfaction was made to three ferts of People.
To the Kindred.
To the Lord.
To the King.

Which was called Were-gild.

The value of London.

The value of Thrymsa.

And other Saxon Money.

terpreted a Society of Men. According to the degrees of the valuation of Mens Heads, they were to purge themselves of Crimes by such and so many Compurgations. Herein he that was richer was thought more worthy of Credit, and his Oath was the sooner taken, and therefore we read that the Oath of a Thane was equivalent to the Oaths of six Countreymen or Coorles. As a Man's Value or his Wealth was more or less, so he might be a Purgator for, or purge lesser or greater Crimes, and therefore do we hear so often of Purgation according to the rate of twelve Hides of Land or more or fewer. For there it's observable, from the late mentioned Laws, that if a man was slain, his Kindred sometime received the value of his Head, which payment was called Mægbotewita. In like manner were they bound on the other side to pay the value of the Head of one slain by their Kinsman, in case he became not responsible, and that to the Kindred of the slain party, which in the Saxon Tongue they termed Cyne-gild and Cynebote, the same in signification as Mægbotewita, now mentioned.

109. Thus was the Offender variously punished both in himself, and Kindred for the same Offence, which punishment was sometimes so heavy, that not able to undergoe it, though Pecuniary, his life was taken for satisfaction. Part of the Were or valuation the Kindred received, so called as we have now said; another part was paid to the Lord for the loss of his Vassal, which they called Mambote; and a third Mulct was paid to the King for the breach of his Peace, called Fridwile and Frid-gild. This latter was in use with the ancient Franks, who termed it Fredus and Fredum, as appears both from *Gregory * Thronensis*, and the Salick Laws. As to the Cyne-gild or Mægbotewita, it appears also from Tacitus, that the whole Family received satisfaction for a Kinsman slain. And the Custom might seem to be taken from Moses his Law, who saith, That in case a price of blood be required of him that had killed a Man, he should give whatsoever was laid upon him. But thus much concerning the valuation of Heads, called Weres, the payment whereof they termed Were-gild, to which we shall only add, that these valuations by King Ethelstan were very moderate, and that was the reason why many Were-gilds were by after Laws put upon Offenders, sometimes two, sometimes three, and sometimes nine. Therefore in the Charter of Liberties to the City of London did Henry the first grant as a Privilege, that a Citizen should be but taxed or judged at one Were or an hundred Shillings, at which value he set a Londoner.

And that in his days, Weres also were moderate, appears from this, in that he ordained that who so broke or set at naught a Law, for the first Offence should pay his Were; for the second Offence double his Were, and in case he the third time offended, should forfeit all he had. This is certain, that in the times of the English Norman Princes Weres and Were-gilds were in fashion. They grew obsolete by degrees, but when utterly laid aside it is not certain. And the word Fredum (which was never in use with our Writers) grew also obsolete abroad after the Age of the Emperour Frederick the Second.

110. We have the History of the Valuation of Heads or Weres, but still shall we be in the dark if we know not the price, and that cannot be, except we something understand the value of these Thrymses, by which they are rated in Ethelstan's Laws. That the word Thrymsa comes from the Saxon word Threo, the same with our present Three is agreed, but in what respect it answered to Three is a little controverted. One was of opinion that it contained the third part of a German Shilling, answering to their Tremissis. Another thought it to contain three Pennies; but most probable it is, that it contained Three Shillings English Saxon, without any relation to German or Foreign Money, although the Mercians seem to have differed from the other English in its value. As for the other sorts of Money; five Pennies in those days made a Shilling, and thirty Pennies made a Manes (in Latin Mancusa) as Asfric tells us in his Saxon Grammar. Of those Pence two hundred and forty made a Pound, which consisted of forty eight of their Shillings; and then as Mr. Lambard observed from some Silver Pence of King Ethelred, which he saw, two hundred and forty Pence equalled a pound in weight, that which seven hundred and twenty of ours now will not do, although two hundred and twenty of our Pence also make

Mæg cognatusprogenies; botewita compensatio.
Cyne cognatio gild solutio.

Man famulus Servus Vassallus.

Fride fax. Germ. Frid.

* De Mirac. St. Martini. lib. 4. c. 26.
† Tit. 55. §. 2.
Recipitque satisfactionem universa domus.

Exod. 21. 30.

LL. Henr. I. c. 13. Qui legem apostabit Were sue fit vniu prima vice; Si secundo fecerit, reddat bis Weram suam; qui tertio presumat, perdat quicquid habet.

Labpa on leben is Puntcon englyc. þu þeniga gemacgað ænne rounge 7 XXX þenega ænne manc 7 in extremo fine Gram.

a Pound in value. The Word to express the most Money in those days was the Seate or Scate, which according to Mr. Lambard contained a vast sum, to the value of five thousand Pounds of Silver. Some are of opinion that it signified also a small piece of money to the value of an Half-penny. Besides this Half-penny (if an Half-penny they had) they had also the Fearthling, Fearthling, or Parthing containing the fourth part of a Penny as we may suppose. In short, we are told, that these several sorts and sums of Money were in use amongst our English Saxon Antecessors, viz. Fearthling, Pence, Ose, Scet, Scilling, Thrymsa, and Pund. Concerning Ose I have hitherto read nothing, but suppose Ose is meant, which was worth sixteen pence. Fifteen Oses also in a Book seen by Sir H. Spelman, was put for a Pound, and from a Manuscript Register of the Abby of Burton in Leicestershire, he observed that the word Ora signified the same as Unia. From that time the value of it was reckoned for sixteen pence, and sometimes for twenty pence, whence proceeded the difference of having Ora for twenty pence so often in Doomsday Book.

111. To proceed with our Laws, all that we find of King Ethelstan's in the Saxon Edition of Mr. Lambard we have already related, there are others; though not in the Saxon Language, to be seen in the Chronicle of John Bromton the Abbat of Jornal, of which also we must make mention, such especially as we judge most convenient to be known. The first Catalogue we meet with consists of nine several Laws, whereof the first shows how the Court of the Hundred ought to be kept, declaring, that to the number of four Abbots meet, and that Right be done to all men in that Court. The second appoints how a Thief is to be prosecuted from the Hundred to the Tithing. The third imposes upon him that shall reject the Sentence or Judgment of the Hundred, so that it passeth against him the second time, for the first offence the fine of thirty Pence to the Hundred, for the second offence sixty Pence, whereof one half to the Hundred and the other half to the Lord. For the third offence the loss of all he hath, and be Banished, except the King otherwise dispense with him. The fourth confirms what had been said concerning stray Cattel, that no man should keep them without the knowledge and Testimony of an Hundred or Tithing man, otherwise no benefit of Vouching should be allowed him. The fifth requires, That when one Hundred makes Hue and Cry, or pursues Cattel into another Hundred, this Hundred doe the like or forfeit thirty Shillings to the King. The sixth requires, That if any one decline the Law or make any escape, he that was the Procurer shall pay the value of the thing in question. The seventh again commands, That right and publick Justice be done in the Hundred, and in every other publick Meeting, and that a day be prefixed for every business, which whosoever transgresses, except hindered by the Command or Order of ones Lord, or by visible Infirmitie shall forfeit thirty Shillings, and yet be obliged to doe what he ought to have done at another appointed time. The eighth is very hard to be explained, and the Kernell not worth the labour of cracking the Nut. And the last is concerning Ordeal, of which in another place.

blanbornum & de quibus sic Somerus in Glossar. Locus mirè enigmaticus & meliori Oedipo relinquendus.

112. After this follow certain Judgments, as they are termed, which Wifemen are said to have ordained at Exeter by the Council of King Ethelstan, which were afterward confirmed both at Feverham a Town in Kent, and at Thundresfeld. Herein first are reinforced all the Laws formerly made at Greatley, except what concerned the Market of the City and the Lord's day. The rest contain severe Animadversions upon Thieves and such as receive them, viz. "Confinement into some place of the Kingdom which the King shall chuse. Nay, if one that stole after the Assembly held at Thundresfeld steal again, let he or she be what they will, they are condemned to death, together with such as harbour, or spare them if they meet them. And as to the manner of their death here are certain odd Circumstances. If she was a Free Woman that stole, she should be cast down from an high Cliff or Hill, or else drowned. If a Slave, he should be stoned by twenty of like condition; and in case any one's blow thrice failed he should so many times be beaten. And when the Thief was dead, every one of these Slaves or Servants should pay three Pence to his Lord. If the Thief was a Shepeon'sling, peneg, ose, scætta, rolling, þrymsa, pund.

Seate nummum in genere significat ut Belgis, Sclavi Schat, in Brevitibus erian Angli scribitur Shot aduoc usurpatur pro pennis, puta Cerevisia, prelio. Erian Short.

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

6.

7.

8.

9.

* Pecoris tici-mum & canis Cypa &.

Sec. 12. " slave eighty Women of the like condition should each of them bring three faggots or pieces of wood, and therewith burn her, and pay moreover so many Pence as the He-flaves were to do, or else be beaten. Another of these Laws forbids the receiving of another man's Servant, whom he cannot rule under pain of the forfeiture of an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King, and the return and reparation of the Servant to be made besides. Another ordains, That a Lord shall not deny Hlafordfocna, or his Protection, Defence, or the like, to a Freeman, who (being a Vassal) does him right in all respects. The last decrees, That such Judge or Officer as breaks, or hath not sufficient regard to these Ordinances forfeit an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King, be he Thane or any other kind of man.

113. These Judgments or Ordinances bear not the Name of the King himself, but of the Wifemen of Exeter, who devised them there by the King's Advice or Consent, whose allowance gave them the Power and force of Laws, and those were the Wifemen whom he mentions in the Preface of other Laws to have been with him at that City in Christmas Holydays. These were also confirmed at Feversham and at a place called Thundresfeld. From these and other Passages it is evident, that in the days of this King Athelstan, the Wifemen, or knowing Persons of particular Countries, Provinces and Cities, by the King's consent and allowance were wont to assemble and lay their Heads together, for the framing of such Ordinances as should be most convenient for the government of their particular Countries, and security of their Estates, and for the receiving what was enacted at the General Assembly of the Estates for the whole Kingdom; as in matters Ecclesiastical the Decrees of General Councils were wont to be received, or (as the Word was) confirmed in particular Synods, although of sufficient authority in themselves. And where in the particular Shires or Provinces such knowing men might be wanting, or for other reasons the King sometimes sent down certain from himself to consult with the Bodies of the Shires and Cities as well Noble, as Ignoble, and to convey to them such Ordinances or Laws as were thought most fitting for them. A notable acknowledgement hereof we have of the County of Kent in an Address made to the King, wherein with much Humility and thankfulness they make mention of certain Laws he had sent them; and testify their acceptance of them. This because of the Rarity of the thing, and for that it makes very much for the knowledge of the Mode of Address of that Age, and illustrates the Polity or manner of the English Saxon Government, as well as confers to the farther knowledge of their Laws, we shall as well as we can translate from the difficult Latin of the Abbat Bromton.

The form of a Saxon Address.

114. Most dear, your Bishops of Kent with all Kentshire, Thanes, Counts, and Countreymen, give thanks to you their most beloved Lord, for that you were pleased to give us orders concerning our Peace, and inquire and consult concerning our Advantage in a matter of such consequence to us both Rich and Poor. And this we have slain upon with all the diligence we could, by the advice of those Wifemen, whom you sent to us. And, most Dear Lord, the first is concerning our Tiite, to the which we are very desirous and ready to conform our selves, giving you most humble thanks for your Admonition. The second is concerning our Peace, which all your People desires may be observed as your Wifemen propounded at Greatley, and as now is appointed in the Council held at Fefirelham. The third is, that all are very thankful for the grace you were pleased to bestow on guilty Persons, in that all Forfeitures are pardoned, for such Thefts as were committed before the Assembly held at Fefirelham, on condition that they commit no offence hereafter, and confess all their Robberies and satisfy your Majesty. The fourth, that none receive another Man's Servant without his leave, to whom he formerly belonged, neither within nor without the Limits. As also that a Lord deny not a Freeman his Hlafordfocna, that is, his Defence or Protection, in case he have been faithful to him. The fifth thing is, that he that acts contrary to this is worthy of those punishments which are prescribed in the Instrument of Peace drawn up at Greatley. The sixth, that if so be a man be so Rich, and of such Alliance that he cannot be chastized, and will not cease to commit his former Outrages, that you will cause him to be taken away and removed into some other quarter of your Kingdom, as it is said in the Western Parts, let him be what he will Alderman (or Count) or Countreyman. The seventh, that every one hold all his men in his own Warranty against all Theft. If any there be that hath so many men that he cannot keep them all, let him appoint an Overseer in every of his Villages, whom he can trust, and who will trust his men. And in case this Overseer dare not trust some of his men, let these men find out twelve Persons of their Kindred who will be security for them. And in case the Lord or Overseer, or any other infringe this Ordinance, or depart from hence, let him be thought worthy of what was agreed on at Greatley, except any other kind of Justice better please the King. The eighth is, that what you said concerning the working of Shields contenteth all. Our Lord we beseech you of your mercifulness, that if we have in this matter either exceeded or been defective, you will order it to be amended, as you your self shall think convenient. And we are devoutly prepared for all things which you shall please to command us, and which any way lie in our power to perform.

Karissime, Episcopi cui de Kent, & omnia Kentensium, Thani, Comitibus & Villani tibi domino districtissimo suo gratias agunt quod nobis de pace nostra precipas, &c.

* Cui prius solvovis nec intra Marcam nec extra. Folgere est tradere se alicui in Civitatem, servare, sequi, scilicet, ut olim silebant in qui Angli dicebantur Reteneat. Saxones polypant unde nostrum bodicrum to follows, g (ut sepe) in u vel u mutato. Hinc etiam Folgerius, pro Clence legatorum, a Reteneat. Marca propriè signum est veteris limitis à Saxon. (Cεαπε bodie Marke.

Theft made Capital.

115. Next after this follow some other Articles, which are said to have been devised by the Bishops and Officers belonging to the Court of London, by them published, and confirmed by the Oaths of the Ealdormen (or Counts, he terms them Comites) and Countreymen, or the ordinary sort of men in their Fridgild, Association, or Public Meeting, with the addition of those Laws or Judgments which were first ordained at Greatley, and afterward confirmed at Exeter and Thundresfeld. All these Articles now agreed on tend to the prevention of Theft by the punishment of Thieves and such as harbour or protect them. Theft is now confirmed to be Capital, and not only Associations are allowed and encouraged but also the raising of publick stocks for defraying the Charges of prosecution, and the Incouragement of such as should shew themselves industrious in that behalf. We cannot but here suggest to the Reader what Remark he ought to make of these times, how the Crime of stealing, which generally indeed is taken notice most of in all the Saxon Laws, and most caretaken for the prevention of it, grew more common than ever in the days of Athelstan; the English having, as Ingulfus observes, in the days of Alfred imitated the Example of the Danes, and because they thought the blame would still be laid upon the Danes given themselves to Robbing; For by the strength and sharpness of the Remedy we may judge of the violence of the Disease. But formerly a Wife or Were, a Fine of value of the Head would serve for the Punishment, now nothing but death it self, to be inflicted both on the Malefactors themselves, and those that abetted, received, or would not kill them if they met them. And whereas Gilds, Associations, or Societies were in use among Free People, whereby the Company in general was responsible for each number in particular; the like for prevention of Theft must be erected even amongst Servants and Slaves of both Sexes, they being both condemned to execute one another by the cruel Deaths of stoning and burning, and also to pay Money, as it were a Fine to the endangered Party, as if bound to be Sureties for one another. We see what a necessity of shewing an Example and Prevention can make lawful as to punishments; and may hence take an account of the severity of our modern Customs in particular Towns, and of the Publick Laws against Theft and Robbing. If we in England be more severe against Thieves than in other Countries, and make smaller Offences Capital, it is because our Legislators saw the great proneness of the Natives to this Crime, and in their Judgments this way of punishment seemed more terrible than any other, (and perhaps more than later Ages have found it) and consequently the best way for prevention. Yet cannot I see why, of those two ill qualities which are ascribed to Islanders, from the condition of their Habitation, inclination to Theft should be as proper and Connatural as Inconstancy.

Edmund the next Legislator.

116. The next Legislator after Athelstan was King Edmund his Brother and immediate Successor both in the Kingdom and in the practice of making Laws. We are told that in the solemn Feast of Easter (but not in what year) he held a great Council at London, as well of Ecclesiastics as Seculars, where was present Oda and Wulfstan the Archbishops with many other Bishops to consult for the good of their own Souls, and of those that were under their care and Government. At this Council were enacted several Laws, which being fix in number are of Ecclesiastical Concernment, and amongst such matters must be remembered. These are found both in the Saxon Copy published by Lambard, and in the Latin of Bromton; but in Bromton's Book follow seven others of Civil Concernment, said to have been made by the King, his Bishops, and Wifemen at Culinon, which are not extant in the Saxon Edition. The first of these requires an Oath of Fidelity to King Edmund to be taken by all, in like manner as a Man ought to be faithful to his Lord without all controversy or sedition both in publick and in private, in loving what he shall love, and rejecting what he shall reject, and before the Oath be given, that no man conceal this matter no more in his Brother or Neighbour Exemplo namque Danorum, que colore criminis quidam indigenarum latrociniis ac rapinis incendere ceperunt.

Seet. 12. gage. 3. Then after that, let the * Bridegroom declare what he will give his Bride, besides that which she formerly made choice of with his good liking in case she overlive him. 4. In case they so agree, it's fit she have the one half of all his Estate, and if they have a Child betwixt them, the whole Estate till such time as she marry again. 5. What the Bridegroom hath promised, let him confirm by giving caution, let him carefully observe it, and his friends engage on his behalf. 6. If they be now agreed on all things, let the Kindred of the Bride contrail her to him as a Wife, and engage for her honesty, and then let caution be given for celebration of the Marriage. 7. If afterwards her Husband carry her out of the Territory of the Thane or Baron where she was bred, into the District of another Thane, let caution be given to her friends that she shall receive injury from no Man. And in case she herself doe any ill thing, let her friends be ready to make satisfaction to her Husband, if she have not wherewith to doe it. 8. At the bestowing of her in Marriage a Priest must be present, who of right, with the Blessing of God, shall promote their Conjunction to the attainment of all Felicity. 9. Lastly, There must be good heed and assurance had, that there be no Impediment of Consanguinity betwixt them, lest afterward they be justly separated, who were unjustly joyed together.

The form of Endowing.

120. To the fourth Article of this Constitution, Sr. Henry Spelman, in the Preface doth Margent sets this Note; The ancient form of Endowing, as hinting that it was the Custom amongst the English Saxons; for the Wife that overlied her Husband, to have half his Estate, and in case she had a Child by him, the whole till such time as the Marry another Husband. Accordingly he interprets the Saxon words, gip hit 17a Quod siquidem eveniat; If it so come to pass, viz. that she overlive him. But gip Mr. Sumner who hath discovered other faults in this Edition of Sr. Henry, interprets the words, si se conveniat, viz. If they so agree; the King thinks it just that she have the half if she outlive her Husband, &c. This Endowing, being that which they call Dotarium or Donarium, according to this best Interpretation of the words, was not then necessary, or by compulsion, but so as was thought fit, if it was to agree before the Marriage; but whereas Mr. Sumner in his Glossary, thinks it the same with the maintenance mentioned in the Second Article, by our Saxon Ancestours (as in that Article) termed Fosterlean, his own Interpretation of the other words seems to confute him. For that maintenance or Fosterlean hath relation to their joynt condition during Marriage, or as now we say, whilst under coverture, the viatus as they interpret it, after which follows, who shall maintain them? The one the other uncertain, and according as he himself will have it, to agreement.

Besides this Endowing this Dotarium or Donarium, there was that which our Saxon Ancestours called Morgangife, the Lombards Morgangap, the Burgundians, Alamans, and others Morgengeba, and some Morgingab, so called for all these amount to one because it was a gift bestowed by the Bridegroom on the Bride, that morning they were to be Married. Yet doth * Gregory Turonensis distinguish it a Dote from the ordinary Endowing. It seems to have been some special thing given to the Bride, as an especial mark of the Bridegroom's favour. Some think it to correspond or have some affinity with the English Custom of Endowing or Enticoffing at the Church Door, as they term it. Whereby the Bridegroom, when in the morning he is about to enter the Church to be Married, makes a present, as it were, to his Bride of some piece of Land.

121. But these Gifts and Endowings are quite contrary to the Laws and Customs of the Romans, with whom, Dos, properly signifieth that Portion which the Husband receiveth with his Wife. They were not wont to give their Wives any thing back, and therefore have no proper word whereby to express such a Gift (Donations betwixt Man and Wife being carefully in their Laws forbidden) which we in English call Dower, answering properly to Dotarium Donarium, (a) and the like. Tacitus admires the thing it self, amongst the Germans expressing it thus. The (b) Wife brings no Portion (Dotem) to the Husband, but the Husband (Dower) to the Wife. Yet the Greeks most being necessary, but have it, to agreement.

* Bridguma a bryde sponfa & xuma agymon curat, unde forte agymon Nuptia. Bridegroom nunc dicimus corrupte pro Bridgume, quasi scilicet Sponfus est sponse famulus vel servus die Nuptiarum. The Bride's Groom, ita populus sibi imponit.

A Saxon. forþer i. e. viatus, barbaria unde dotarium nostrum i. Foster nutrire, & learn exhibere.

In leg. Canuri. c. 71.

Morgap gife matutinum donum, sic etiam Germanice Morgin significat mane & Gab donatio.

* Lib. 9. c. 10. Hist. Tem in dote quam in Morgangiba.

(a) Vocatur enim Dotarium Dotarium Dotarium.

(b) Dotem non uxori marito, sed uxori maritus affert.

anciently

anciently as they had (c) words to express both Portion and Dower, were wont thus also to provide for their Wives. Homer feigns Vulcan, to have endowed Venus, and to have demanded back the Dower after that she was taken in Adultery with Mars; and in like manner, Claudian feigns the same thing to have been done by Pluto to Proserpina. For the Galls, Cæsar testifies that the Husband was wont to return the value of what he received in Portion with his Wife. Srabo writes of the Cantabrians in Spain, that they also Endowed their Wives, and left their Daughters their Heirs, which thing he dislikes, as giving Women power over Men. To be sure the Teutonic and Northern Nations, practised this course, as is evident from Gregory of Tours, concerning the Franks in Gall, and concerning the Goths, Hist. l. 9. c. 20. Saxons and Lombards, their several Laws. In some places half the Lands, and some a third part went in Dower, and in others Money. In other places it was left to the discretion of the Man to give what he pleased. The English and Scots have in later Ages, after the Fashion of the Sicilians, allotted the third Part; though Kent and some Boroughs, one half part, as also some Towns in France. But this Custom hath farther to plead for it, that it had the Hebrews also for its practisers, as appears from that place which saith, A Man shall Endow a Woman, and take her for his Wife. And Sichem being begging to Marry Dina, bids them ask what Dower they would, and he would grant it.

How much was assigned for Dower.

122. So much is fit to be pleaded for our Custom, and in favour of the other Sex against the Romans, who yet were so just, as when they put away their Wives, bid them take what they brought along with them; which words were used expressly, to signify a Divorce. Our English Saxon Ancestours were both careful for the main Chance, not to have nothing with their Wives, because meat cannot be bought in the Market without Money, and yet were both so just and kind as to provide for their Wives by way of Dowry when they Married, that they might be able to Live when they were Dead, and were content to be bound up for performance, and not to be left to their own discretions what they would do after Marriage, or at their Deaths. By King Edmund's Constitutions we have seen their care on one side, and that they were not heedless on the other appears by an ancient Saxon Monument, or a Tripartite Writing, concerning a Marriage made in the Days of King Cnut, which here for Illustration of this Subject we shall Exemplify as we have it published by Mr. Sumner. Here appeareth in this Writing the Agreement that Godwin made with Byrthric when he Wood his Daughter. That is, first he gives her one pound weight of Gold on condition that she stand to the Agreement, and he give her these Lands at Strete, with all that thereto appertaineth, and in Burware Marsh one hundred and fifty Acres; withall, thirty Oxen, twenty Cows, ten Horses, and ten Theowmen or Bondmen. This was agreed at Kingdon before King Cnut, in the presence of Living the Archbishop, as also in the Covents at Christ Church, of Ellimere the Abbat, the Covents at St. Augustin's; of Æthelwin the Sheriff, Sired the Elder, Godwin, Wulsey the Son; Eadmer at Burham; Godwine, Wulfstan the Son; and Charles, the King's Servant. And when this Maid was feth'd to Brightling, then went off all these for Sureties, Elgar, the Son of Sired; Frerth, Priest of Folcston; Leofwine, Priest of Dover; Wulsey a Priest; Eadred the Son of Eadelm; Leofwine, the Son of Warelm; Cenwold Ruf; Leofwine, Godwin's Son at Horton; Leofwine the Red; Godwine the Son of Eadgife, and Leofwin his Brother. And which of them longest liveth shall have all the Possessions, aswell that Land which I give them, as every thing. This thing is known to all * Doughty, or Valiant Men in Kent; and in Sussex both Thanes and Churles, or Courtreyemen. And this Writing is Tripartite, one is at Christ Church, a second at St. Augustin's, and the third hath Byrthric himself. See here the manner of Marriage, and settling matters thereto belonging in those ancient Times. And take notice by this Jultment, as also all along by the Laws how cautious they were in all respects; scarcely transacting any thing but by the Intervention of Suretyship.

123. To return, The next Legislator after Edmund, was King Edgar his Son; who began his Reign in the year of our Lord DCCCCLXIX. and ended it in the year DCCCCLXXV. He amongst many Laws and Canons of Ecclesiastical Concernment, published also some which respected the Civil State of his Kingdom; or, as he terms it, to the People, to be observed by them, whereof this is the

The Settlement given to Wives.

En. grycelay on þýran gemyte þa popepape, &c. In Appendic. ad Tractat. da Gavelkind Scriptura 17. p. 196.

* Þýra þinga 17 gecnepe ælð bolctig man on Kænt; &c.

Sec. 12 the first, whereby he enjoyns, that "Every Man, Poor or Rich, enjoy the benefit of the Law, and have Justice done him. And for Punishments, he would have them to be moderated, that thereby, being accommodated to Divine Clemency, they may be the more tolerable unto Men. The second forbids Appeals to the King in Suits; except Justice cannot otherwise be obtained. If a Man be oppressed, he may betake himself to the King for relief. And in case a pecuniary Mulct be inflicted for a fault, it must not exceed the value of the Man's Head. The third imposes a Mulct upon a Judge that passes an unjust Sentence against any Man, of an hundred and twenty shillings to the King, except such Judge will take his Oath that he did it not out of any malice, but only it happened by error and unskilfulness: in such case let him be removed from his place, except he can obtain favour of the King to keep it: and let the Bishop of the Diocese convey the Mulct that is imposed upon him to the King's Treasury. The fourth ordains, that Whosoever maliciously defames another Man, whereby he receives any damage either in his Body or Estate, in case the defamed Person can wipe off those reports, and prove them false, the Defamer's Tongue shall either be cut out, or he shall redeem it with the value of his Head. The fifth is that which we have formerly cited, which Commands every one to be present at the Gemote or Assembly of the Hundred; ordains that the Burghemote or Assembly of the Towns or Cities be held thrice a year; and the Shiregemote or Meeting of the County twice; whereat are to be present the Bishop and the Ealdorman, the one to teach the People God's Law, and the other Man's. The sixth requires, that Every Man find sureties for his just behaviour. In case any one commit a crime and fly for it, let the Sureties undergoe what should have been laid upon him. If so be he stole any thing and be taken within a twelvemonth, let him be brought to Justice, and then let them receive back what they had forfeited on his behalf. The seventh orders, When any one being of evil report and again accused of some crime, absents himself from the Gemotes or Publick Meeting, some of the Court to go where he dwells, and take Sureties for his appearance, if they may be had; if they cannot get them, let them take him alive or dead, and seize on all his Estate, wherewith the complaining Party having had such share as may satisfy him, let the one half of the remainder go to the Lord of the Soil, and the other half to the Hundred. And if any of that Court, being either a Kin to him, or a Stranger to his Blood, refuse to go to put this in execution, let him forfeit an hundred and twenty shillings to the King. Farther, let not such as are taken in the manner of stealing or betraying their Masters obtain pardon of their Lives. The eighth and last ordains, that One and the same Money be current throughout the King's Dominions, which no Man must refuse. That the Measure of Winchester be the Standard. And that a Way, or Weight of Wool be sold for half a Pound value of Money, and no more.

124. The next Legislatour after Edgar was King Ethelred, his Younger Son, who began his Reign in the year of our Lord DCCCCLXXIX, and ended it in the year MXVI. Brompton the Abbat of Jorval presents us with four several Bodies of Laws of this King, made at several times, and in divers places, whereof there is only two extant among the Saxon Laws, published by Lambard. The Laws comprized in the first Body are six, and said to have been made at Woodstock in Mercia, according to the Laws of the English, in a Council of Wilemen, held there by King Ethelred for the Promotion of Peace. The first of these, as the sixth of King Edgar, requires, that "Every Free-man have his trusty Sureties, who shall be bound for him, that he shall be ready to do every Man right in case he be questioned. If one be often accused and made infamous let him undergoe the scrutiny of threefold Ordeal. But in case such an one's Lord contend, and affirm that he hath neither broken his Oath, nor been cast by the Judgement of Ordeal after the Council held at Bromdune, let his Lord call to him out of that Hundred one or two Thanes, who together with him shall confirm by Oath that this Servant neither ever forswore himself, nor paid never any thing upon the account of Theft, except he have some Officer, who (according to his Right) may do it without Swearing. In case they made Oath let the Accused Party chuse whether he will undergoe the tryal of single Ordeal, or make an Oath in three several Hundreds, which shall answer to one pound and thirty pence in equal proportion. But in case they refuse to swear, let the Accused undergoe the tryal of threefold Ordeal:

"Ordeal: and if so be that he appears a Condemned Man, let him restore twofold to the Complainant, and pay the value of his Head to the Lord, and find Sureties for his good behaviour for the time to come. If he offend the second time, let it cost him his Life. In case he refuse to be Tried by the Ordeal, and fly for it, his Sureties shall pay the just value of the thing to the Injured Party, and to his Lord the value of his Head, if he have so carried himself as to be worthy of it. But if it be objected against his Lord, that after the Fact, committed by his advice and assilence, his Servant fled away, he shall take to him five Thanes, and thereof purge himself; which if he doe, he hath shewn himself to be worthy of the Were, if he doe not the King shall have the Were or value of the Head, and the Thief shall be made incapable of any benefit of the Law. The Lord shall answer for his whole Family, and be Surety for the appearance of every person in it. And if any of his Servants being accused, run away, his Master shall pay his Man's Were to the King. And if the Master be Accused as the Advizer to the escape, he shall purge himself by the assilence of five Thanes. If he doe it not, he shall pay to the King his Were; and his Man shall be an Out-law.

125. The second "Appropriates the mulct which is laid upon any Man that possesseth Bockland, for any fault by him committed, to the King; and forbids any compensation to be made for any Accusation, but in presence of the King's Reeve or Officer. The third ordains, that A Bond-man being Cast by the Ordeal, be marked with an hot Iron for the first offence; and being Cast the second time in the same manner, by all means to be put to Death; which Law bears some resemblance to our present Law or Custom, where Clergy is allowed for the first crime committed. The fourth forbids all Buying and Chafferings without Suretyship and Witnesses. If it happen otherwise, the Lord of the Soil is to have the thing in his custody till such time as it appear to whom of Right it belongs. By the fifth, the King's Reeve or Officer is obliged to require Sureties for the good behaviour of such as are of ill fame amongst all Men, which if such an one do not give he is to be put to Death, and Buried in a profane place with Malefactors. And if any make resistance in his behalf, he is to undergoe the same punishment. The sixth, after Brompton, but which hath neither Title nor Number in the Saxon, concludes it thus. "And whosoever neglects or doth allumplo not promote what we have ordained, according to the Sentence and Judgment of us all, shall forfeit an hundred and twenty shillings to the King.

126. The next Body of Laws made by King Ethelred, as Brompton ranks them, are said to have been made at Venetyn, or Wanetyn, now Wantage in Berkshire, the Birth place of the glorious King Alfred. They are thirty in number, and were made by King Ethelred and his Wilemen for the encrease of Peace and Felicity. The first of them is concerning the Keeping of the King's Peace as it was in the days of his Predecessours, and for the punishment of the Breach of it, as that in a Gemote of five Boroughs, with the forfeiture of five pounds, in one Borough by seven hundred (shillings are meant) in a Wapentack by one hundred; and in an Ale-house if a man be killed, with six half Marks; if he be not killed, with twelve Ores. Hence (but especially from the Laws of Ina) we may observe how ancient the Liquour of Ale, and Houses designed to the sale and drinking of it have been in England; how ancient also Quarrelling and breaking of the Peace in such places. But much more ancient have all these been than the continuance of the English Saxons in this Countrey; they were too much in fashion with these Northern Nations in those Days of Tacitus, as appears from what he writes of the Germans; so that what Mr. Camden writes in his Annals, of Drunkennes being first brought into this Countrey by the Soldiers that served in the Low Countries under the Earl of Leicester, and that then Laws were first made against this Vice, is to be understood with an exception of this Antiquity; for when the English Saxons came first into the Island, they brought Drunkennes along with them out of the Chersonesus of Germany. For of the ancient Germans Tacitus reports, that "To pass a day and night in Drinking was no disgrace at all. Being Drunk they would quarrel, and often wound and kill one another. Yet most commonly (saith he) they confit in their Feasts and Banquets concerning Reconciling of Enemies, making Affinities, chusing Magistrats, even of Peace and War: as if at no other time the mind was fitter either to entertain plain thoughts or heat upon great Ale and Ale-houses among the English Saxons.

Sect. 12. "great Conceptions. Quintilian also assures us, that in ancient times, such as had fought in the Field against one another, would be friendly at an Entertainment at the Table. In Germany this Custom, we are told, still continues; and here in England at our Alas and Wakes, Controversies and Quarrels were wont to be heard and compounded. As to Drinking and Drinking Houses, the present Age can shew and say as much or more than any other, both as to quarrels, and as to the doing of business, for no business now is to be done, but in a Drinking House. But in our Greater Towns and Cities, the Scene of these too often tragical Meetings is removed from Germany and England, to France and Spain; or if it be still in Germany, it's removed close to the Rhine. The Grape hath got the advantage of the Barley: and Bacchus (if ever) may now seem a Deity, nay above all the rest, having (by Vulcan's means) in the Capital City lately turned his Houses into sumptuous Palaces, the most sumptuous there to be seen; and in the adjoining Parts justified several Gentlemen out of their Habitations.

127. The second Law requires credit to be given concerning either quick or dead, according to legal Testimony which it will have all Persons, free to make as well as to swear. The third consists of such Terms as certainly cannot be explained. The fourth commands that The public Meetings be observed in every Hundred or Wapentake, and that twelve Thanes (saith Bromton) or twelve men of free Condition (as Lambards reads it) being elderly men, together with their Præpositus or Overseer, swear over Gospels or Sacred things, that they will neither condemn an innocent Person, nor acquit a guilty. From this Law as well as other Circumstances it appears, that the way of trial by twelve men, that we now call a Jury was in use with the English Saxons before the Conquest, and not introduced by William the Conquerour, as Polydore Virgil an Italian, and not much skilled in the Antiquities of this Island hath delivered in writing. To confirm what we have said, the third Chapter of the League, betwixt King Alfred and Guthrum the Dane, very much maketh, which orders that If the King's Thane or Minister be accused of Homicide he shall purge himself if he dare by twelve other Thanes or Ministers. And in case he be in degree inferior to the King's Thane he shall take Eleven of his Equals, and one of the King's Thanes or Ministers, and so purge himself from all suspicion. The like is here ordered to be observed in all suits, exceeding four Mancuses or Marks. And in case one be afraid so to clear himself, he shall pay the treble value of the thing in question. Besides these throughout the Saxon Laws as the Reader may observe, there is frequent mention of clearing, and purging by so many Men called together, sometimes of * twelve, sometimes of † fewer, and the more common and ordinary had this course been even in those times, but for the Ordeal so much in repute, which also got more strength and reputation toward the Days of Ethelred, and the Conclusion of the English Saxon Monarchy. Amongst the ancient Charters of Kings published by Ingulphus, are also Footsteps of this Custom though but in its youth as it were, or growing up to appear. As in that of Wiltles, where punishment is to be inflicted upon a Fugitive from the Monastery of Croyland, his Flight is to be found by six men that must be sworn, so in the Charter of Confirmation granted by Edred, such as injured the Monks, or infringed the Liberties thereby confirmed to the Monastery, are to make satisfaction for all Damages sustained, which are to be taxed by the Oaths of four or five sufficient creditable Men, by whom the Truth of the matter may be the better made out, before his Judges or those of his Heirs and Successors. Therefore neither did Edward the Confessor first bring up this Custom of Juries, or deciding Controversies civil or criminal by twelve or other Number of Persons, though he might introduce the Custom into Normandy, where he long sojourn'd as one of that Country hath written. But the Custom of trying Criminals even by twelve Men, was frequent amongst the Franks, Burgundians, Boi, and where the Custom of Fees took place, as appears sufficiently from the ancient Laws of these Nations.

128. The Laws of King Ethelred made at Wantage, have many of them relation to the Trial by Ordeal, and contain many obscure terms, Bromton, or whoever he was that made them Latin, being a very unprofitable Translator. Others of them are referable to other former Laws, and therefore we shall only pick out from amongst them, such as are most worthy to be taken notice of. The Eleventh makes The adulterating of Coin a Capital Crime. The twelfth Forbids any Cattel to be bought but with two Witnesses, requiring that the Skin and Head be kept three Nights, as also that of a sheep; and in case any one sell the

C. 2.
C. 3.
C. 4.

* Vide Ethel.
Hami. L. 12.
† Ingulph.
L. 9.

P. 155.

P. 275.

Vide Spelman. ni Glossar.

11.
12.

Skin before three Nights be over, he is to forfeit twenty Ores. The twentieth Declares how far the King's Peace shall extend from his Gate every way, that is three Miles and three Quarters, and three Acres in breadth, nine Feet and nine Barley Corns. The two and twentieth directs that Aldredsgate and Cirgelegate (so they are called) have their Keepers or Porters. The twenty third declares, that If a small Vessel came to Bilyngsgate, an half Penny was wont to be given for toll; if a greater bearing sails, a Penny. If a Keel or Hulk, being a long and large capacious sort of Vessel, four Pence are to be given. Out of a ship laden with wood one Piece for Toll. Three a Week toll of bread is to be paid, viz. on the Lord's Day, Tuesday and Thursday. If a Boat arrive with Fish, it is to pay an half penny, if it be a bigger Boat a penny. Those of Rouen in Normandy, that came with Wine or Grampois, those of Flanders and Ponthieu, and others from Normandy and France, were wont to open their wares and free them from Toll. Such as came from Liege and other Places, travelling by Land opened their wares and paid Toll. The Emperor's men coming with their ships were accounted worthy of good Laws, as we also to buy in their ships. And it was not lawfull for them to forefall the Market from the Burglers of London. They were to pay Toll, and at Christmas two gray Cloths, and one brown coloured with ten Pounds of Pepper, and five pair of Gloves with two Vessels of Vinegar, and as many at Easter. From Panniers that come with Hens, one Hen for Toll. Those that trade in Butter and Cheese fourteen days before Christmas, must pay a penny for Toll, and another penny seven days after that Festival. The twenty sixth imposes the same Punishment upon such as wittingly receive, as they that make bad money. The twenty eighth puts it into the King's power whether to fine, or put to death such Merchants as import counterfeit bad money, and impose upon Portreeves that shall be accessory, the same Punishment as lies upon those that Coin false money, except the King think fit to pardon them. The last, That there may be fewer Minters than formerly, ordains that there be three in every great Port Town, and in every other Port one with their underworkmen. And the Governours of these Ports are required, as they will avoid the charge of Contumacy against the King, to see to the weight, and that the pieces be so stamped, that fifteen Ores may make a Pound.

The League twixt Ethel-red and the Danish Army.

129. After these Laws in Bromton follows the League, which was made betwixt King Ethelred and the Army of Anlaf, Justin, and Guthmund the Son of Stegere. The first Article hereof, Establisheth a Peace betwixt the King and his C. 1. Sax. People, and this Army which the King supplied with money, according to the Form of C. 1. apud the Agreement, made by Sigeric the Archbishop, and Ethelward and Alfric Alder-Jornal. man, when they obtained first of the King leave to buy the peace of those Countries, which they governed. If therefore hereafter any violence be offered to England by Sea, this Army, saith the King, is to assist us, and we will prepare all necessities for its subsistence, as long as it shall continue faithful. And if so be that any Foreign Nation make Friendship with them that do the said violence, both we and the Army shall account of them as Enemies. The Second Article, Gives freedom to come into Port though belonging to the Enemy, whether driven thither by Tempest or otherwise. The third, To all their Friends and Allies confirms Peace and Security both at Sea and Land, though they be met in an Enemies Country. In case such a Friend convey his Goods into an Enemies House, he shall lose the Goods, but go free himself. But if he either flye or make resistance, or do not make known himself and be slain, no satisfaction is to be made for him. The fourth requires that If a man be robbed in a ship the Master thereof is to make satisfaction, or by four others taken to him make faith that he came lawfully to the Goods that are challenged. The next Article imposes a Mult of twenty five pounds upon a free Englishman, that kills a Dane of free Condition, except the Murderer yield up himself: the same forfeiture a Dane incurs if he slay an Englishman. If an Englishman kill a Dane of servile condition he shall pay one pound, and the like a Dane if he kill an Englishman. If so be that eight Persons be slain, the League shall be accounted violated, but if under this Number, Compensation shall be made according to the value of the particular Persons.

130. If this happen in a Town the Townsmen are to take the Murderers alive or dead, at least their next Kinsman is to surrender them Man for Man, which if they refuse to do,

Unum monetarium in Stanford in perpetuum libertatem concedimus inquit Rex Edgarus fili. Monasterio Croyland. Ingulph. p. 284.

C. 2. Sax. Be ceaprcpum;
C. 2. apud Jornal.
C. 3. Sax. Be ðær cýniger ppaðmann 7 C. 3. apud For-nal.

C. 4. Saxon. Be ðoni ðemon rcipe beþearp 7 7 C. 4. apud Jornal.
C. 5. Saxonie. Be monþe 7
C. c. 5. 6. apud Jornal.

C. 6. Sax. Be fpyþþec binnan byþp 7. C. 8. apud Jornal.

Sect. 12. the Ealdorman must doe it, if he doe it not the King; if the King refuse,

131. The next Body of Laws which follows in Bromton, and was made at a place called Habe, are all of Ecclesiastical concernment purely except it be the fifth, which prohibits any man to be sold out of his Countrey. But there is published by Sir Henry Spelman the Acts of another Council held by this same King Ethelred at a Place called Æxham, amongst which are some that relate to the Civil State. The sixth prohibits also the sale of a Man out of his own Countrey, especially into the service of a Pagan. The seventh will have no man put to death for a small fault, but inculcates mercy. The nineteenth forbids a Widow to marry within a twelve month at least. The two and twentieth takes care for preserving the Peace, and keeping the Coin uncorrupt, that one and the same goe throughout the Land. The like for just weights and measures, the reparation of Cities, Towns, Castles and Bridges, and warlike expeditions, both by Sea and Land. The twenty third takes care that presently after Easter, the Annual expedition by Sea be hastened, and ordains that if any Man doe any hurt to a Ship designed for the service of the State, he both make satisfaction for the Damage, and be punished as a Breaker of the King's Peace. And if he utterly spoil the Vessel so as he be made unserviceable, he shall make full amends for the Damage, and farther, be taken as guilty of High Treason. The twenty fourth Deprives that Man of all his Fortunes, who defects the Expedition whereat the King himself is present. The next Deprives him that hath killed a Man, or forsworn himself, of all his fortunes; also if he offer to come into the King's presence before he hath made satisfaction, except the King will dispence with him. The twenty sixth Deprives him both of Life and Fortunes that Conspires against the Life of the King. If he deny it, he must purge himself by the most solemn Oath,

13.4. These

SECT. 12. 134. These were the Laws made by the English Saxon Kings, before the Danes established their Monarchy throughout the Land, which Laws King Cnut after his return from Rome, commanded strictly to be observed, especially those made by the late King Ethelred. And being now at leisure from War, and applying himself to the good usage of what he had ill got, he made Laws of his own, respecting both the Ecclesiastical and Civil State, reinforcing some old Laws, and altering and adding others, as he found occasion, in all which, as he tells us in his Preface, he used the Council of his Wifemen, and commands those his Laws to be observed throughout England. "The first of Civil

"Concernment commands Justice to be faithfully and indifferently administered both to Poor and Rich, and abolisheth all unjust Laws. The second commands Mercy to be used, and that no man be put to death for a small Offence. The third prohibits a Christian to be sold out of the Kingdom, especially to Unbelievers. The fourth Banishes or Condemns to Death, Witches, Sorceresses and Whores; and threatens Thieves and such as injure and do violence to the People. The fifth forbids the Superstitions of Pagans, with Inchantments and Delusions. The sixth expels Murderers, perjured Persons, and Adulterers out of the Land except they speedily repent. The seventh exhorts all men to beware of these Crimes and suppress all Flatterers, Lyars, Robbers, Thieves. The eighth commands to all People the keeping of the Peace, orders one and the same good Money to be current, and no man to refuse it. If any one imbase the Money, his Hands are to be cut off without any redemption. And if a Reeve or Governour be accused that it was done by his consent, he shall purge himself by a treble purgation, and if he be cast incur the same punishment.

"The ninth enjoins a due care to be had of just Weights and Measures. The tenth commands as the Law of Ethelred (for these are but as repetitions of his Laws) that "Towns and Bridges be well looked to, and that the Militia both by Sea and Land be enforced according as the necessity of the Commonwealth requires. By the eleventh he promises to use and entertain such Councils as may tend to the promotion of Justice, the profit of the State, and the advancement of Christian Piety.

Of Forfeitures incurred by the Law.

135. That which follows, being the twelfth, is remarkable for comprizing those Forfeitures which the King challenges as due to himself in the Countries of the West Saxons, except he please to confer them upon any other, viz. "The Penalty incurred for breach of the Peace, for breaking into an House, stopping up a Passage, and forsaking ones Colours. If also for some Crime a man be outlawed the restitution of him to his former condition belongs to the King. He also that possesseth Bocland, forfeits to the King, whosoever else may be his Lord. And whosoever relieves or harbours a Fugitive, except he can plead ignorance, shall pay to the King five Pounds. The thirteenth Law makes the same Challenge of all these Mulcts or Forfeitures in Mercia. The fourteenth makes the same Challenge in such parts as are governed by the Law of the Danes, of Mulcts incurred for fighting, refusing to goe out in the Militia, breaking the Peace, and violent entry of an House, except he honour any man else, by granting these Royalties to him. The like is to be said of such an one else as harbours or relieves one that is made incapable of the King's Peace. If any Judge have for hatred or lucre perverted Justice, by the Law of the English he is to pay to the King the value of his Head, and also to be removed from his place, or redeem it as the King shall please, except he plead that what he did was out of ignorance, and then he must confirm this Assertion by Oath. By the Law of the Danes he is to incur the Mulct of the breach of the Law, except he plead Ignorance. In case any oppose or refuse to submit to lawful Judgment, let the Mulct be theirs that are concerned. If it belong to the King the Fine shall be an Hundred Shillings, if to the Earl Sixty Shillings, if to the Hundred thirty. By the English Law, if all be concerned, all are to be pay'd. But by the Law of the Danes, if any one make opposition to the just administration of the Law, he is to pay Labslite.

C. 1. Sax.

C. 2. Sax. c. 25. Apud Jornal.

C. 3. Sax. c. 20. Apud Jornal.

C. 4. Sax. c. 26. Apud Jornal.

C. 5. Sax. c. 27. Apud Jornal.

C. 6. Sax. c. 28. Apud Jornal.

C. 7. Sax. c. 29. Apud Jornal.

C. 8. Sax. C. c. 29. & 30. Apud Jornal.

C. 9. Sax. c. 31. Apud Jornal.

C. 10. Sax.

C. 11. Sax. c. 32. Apud Jornal.

C. 12. Sax. c. 33. Apud Jornal.

C. 13. Sax.

C. 14. Sax.

C. c. 33, 34, & 35. Apud Jornal.

136. This word Labslite is Danish, and first found in those English Danish Laws.

It signifies properly the Transgression or Breach of the Law, but here secondarily, the penalty incurred for that breach. The Reader must take notice, that though the Danes mingled here with the English, yet both Nations preserved their own common Laws and Customs. The English for as much as can be perceived, to every several sort of offences assigned generally their several Mulcts, which they called Gildwites. But the Danes punished several offences by one sort of Animadversion called Labslite. Therefore in these Laws often occurs, Let the English man be punished with Gildwite, and the Danish with Labslite. This one punishment was common with them for several Offences, yet was it various in quantity according to the condition of the Party offending. As, a man of liberal condition his Labslite was five Marks, His Sommer in that possessed Bocland three Marks, that of a Ceorle or Countreyman twelve Ores. Here we have what answers to the English Twelfbind, Sexbind and Twibind men. Some have imagined, that when Labslite is mentioned in general terms or Wite in reference to the English, the value of them is twelve Ores, because of that Article in the League, renewed betwixt King Edward and Guthrum, which ordains, that if a Priest deny Baptism, where it is requisite, he shall pay Wite with the English, or Labslite with the Danes, that is, saith the Text, twelve Ores. But this was the lowest sort of these Mulcts, neither can we imagine that the punishment for breach of all Laws was the same, or not fitted to the height of the Crime.

137. The fifteenth Law of Cnut confirms that of King Alfred, "Whereby is ordained, that he that by defamation does another man damage in his Body or Fortunes, and is convicted of falsehood by the proofs of the Party, have his Tongue cut out, except he redeem it with the value of his Head. The sixteenth also, as other Laws before mentioned, will have no Complaints made to the King, except relief cannot be had in the Hundred, at the Meeting whereof all are to be present, or be amerced for their absence. The seventeenth requires, that the Burglemote be held thrice a year, and the Sciregote twice or oftener, whereat the Bishop and Alderman are to be present to those purposes as has been before said. The eighteenth will have no man by taking away Pledges, or distraining to doe right to himself against any man, except he have four times demanded it, and expected right to be done him in vain in the Hundred; then he has liberty to get his own where he can. The nineteenth commands, that every one of free condition put himself into some Hundred and Tithing as he desires, that being in a condition to purge himself he may also be in capacity to claim from another the value of his Head. Otherwise none that exceeds twelve years, in case he receive any wrong, shall be capable of enjoying the same Privilege with a Free man. Be he Master of a Family or a Retainer, he must be entred into some Hundred or other, and must have Fidejussors or Sureties for his appearance in case he be accused of any Crime. Some great men, as they can doe it, protect their Servants, giving out sometimes, that they are Free, other times that they are Slaves, but we not induring any such unjust practice, command, that every one of twelve years of Age give security by Oath, that he will neither steal himself, nor be accessory to the Theft of any other. Thus doth he revive what King Alfred had before cautioned, that no Freeman should be without Society, without Law, or live at randome, without this most Efficacious Curb of Suretyship, by being thus received. And to what was before, add this Caution of twelve years, beyond which for the publick Peace and security none were to live without being admitted and received into some Hundred and Tithing.

138. The twentieth Law of King Cnut "so far indulges a man unblameable and of good repute, who never brake his Oath in the Hundred, nor was cast by the Ordeal, that his single purgation be accepted. But a man of the contrary reputation shall either be compelled to take his single Oath in three Hundreds, or a threefold one according to the custome of that Court, or be put to the Ordeal. But a single Purgation is to be made with a threefold preparatory Oath. A man of good esteem may have some faithful man in his stead to be his Prejurour, or else he must doe it himself; for a preparatory Oath is never to be omitted. The one and twentieth forbids any man to have the privilege of vouchery, except by sufficient Witness to prove from whom Ab Anglo Danorum lab, lex. & plice rapine; violationes adhuc dicimus sit in two.

gildwite mis Englum 7 mis denum labslite.

His Sommer. in that possessed Bocland three Marks, that of a Ceorle or Countreyman twelve Ores. Glosfar. ex Textu Roffens.

C. 3.

C. 15. Sax. c. 36. Apud Jornal.

C. 16. Sax. c. 37. Apud Jornal.

C. 17. Sax. c. 38. Apud Jornal.

C. 18. Sax. c. 39. Apud Jornal.

C. 19. Saxonic. c. 149. 41. Apud Jornal.

apostatus, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

ut dicitur, dicitur.

136. This

Sect. 12.

"he had the Goods that are found with him. The Witnesse must affirm, as they love God and their Lords, that they have most religiously born testimony, and that both by their Eyes and Ears they are assured that he rightly came by the thing in question. The twenty second revives the Laws about buying without Witnesse, forbidding any thing to be bought above the value of four pence without the testimony of four Credible Witnesse. In case any one buy any thing contrary to this Law, if any one challenge the thing bought, the Buyer shall not have the benefit of Vouchery, but restore him the thing, with the just price of it, and a Mulct to whom of right it belongs. But if the thing was bought by legal Testimony, he shall have thrice allowed him the liberty of Vouchery, and the fourth time the thing is to be delivered to the Owner, except some other make use of his right in challenging it to be his. For neither doth it seem fitting to us that any one should challenge a thing when there are Witnesse to disprove it, and consequently he is convicted to be guilty of Fraud or Malice; neither that what was stole should be recovered within a less time than six Months.

C.22. Sax. c.44.
Apud Jarnal.

139. The twenty third "directs, that if a man of evil report absent himself from the Publick Meetings thrice, at the fourth time some of that Court go thither, and if they can get no Sureties for his appearance, to apprehend him alive or dead, to seize on all he hath, and when the just pretenders have received the true value of what they lay claim to, then of that which is left the Lord shall have one half, and the Hundred the other. If any of the Court, of Kin or Stranger, refuse to goe, he shall for that fine to the King in an hundred and twenty Shillings. Of those that are taken in the manner of stealing, or betraying their Lords, their lives shall in no wise be spared. The twenty fourth forbids one Accusation to be superfed by another, but as the Hundreders shall think fit, orders the first to proceed. The next forbids also the harbouring of a man above three days, except recommended by him he formerly served: As also to remove his Servant from his House till he have purged himself of what is laid to his Charge. That which follows denounceth, that if any one meet a Thief and permit him to pass without discovering him, shall pay the utmost Farthing of the value of the man's head, be it as much as it will, or by a full and perfect Oath make it good that he knew nothing of his Theft. And if he cried out against him, and those that heard him would not pursue the Robber, they shall be punished as contumacious against the King, except they make void the suspicion. The twenty seventh, in case a man be of evil report in the Hundred, and be accused by three several men, admits of no purgation but by threefold Ordeal. But if his Lord affirm that he hath neither broken his Oath, nor since the Council held at Winchester been cast by the Ordeal, out of that Hundred the Lord shall take one or two men of Credit, and with them make Oath, that he neither hath broken his Faith formerly given, nor been condemned by the Ordeal, nor paid nothing for stealing; except some Reeve or Officer there be whose authority may have weight sufficient to clear him without these Oaths. If they make their Oaths, the Accused shall be at choice whether he will be tried by single Ordeal, or make an Oath in three Hundreds, which in proportion shall answer to one Pound and thirty Pence. But in case they refuse to swear he shall goe under the Examination of threefold Ordeal after this manner.

C.23. Sax. c.45.
Apud Jarnal.
c.46.C.24. Sax. c.47.
Apud Jarnal.
C.25. Sax. c.48.
Apud Jarnal.C.26. Sax. c.49.
c.50. Apud Jarnal.C.27. Sax. c.51.
Apud Jarnal.

The manner of Examination on by threefold Ordeal.

140. "The Accuser must find five Persons who shall be Prejurours, and he himself shall be the sixth. As soon as the Accused is cast, the first time he shall pay double damages to the Accuser, and to his Lord, if he have shewn himself worthy of it, the full value of his own Head, and give Sureties that he will abstain from all Crimes for the time to come. But in case he be cast the second time, he shall have no liberty of making any Compensation, but his Hands, or Feet, or both, if the heinousness of the offence require it, shall be cut off. But if after this he doth not leave off his former Courses but still commit more Villanies, then as they shall think fit that are concerned, either his Eyes shall be pulled out, his Nose cut off, his Ears or his Upper lip, or his Skin be drawn over his Ears for an Example, with a respect to the safety of his Soul. If he flee and escape the Judgment of Ordeal, his Sureties shall make full satisfaction to the Accuser, and to the King or some other that deserves it, the value of his Head. But if his Lord be accused for having been accessory to his escape after the Fact committed, with five men of credit he must purge himself, which if he doe, he shews himself to be worthy of the "va."

Sect. 12.

"value of his Servant's Head. If he doe not, the King shall have the value of the Head, and the Thief shall by all men be taken as excluded from the benefit of the Law.

C.28. Sax. c.52.
Apud Jarnal.

141. "The twenty eight will have every Master to be Fidejussour, or responsible for the appearance of all his Family. And if any of his Servants be impeached, he shall answer it in that Hundred where the other brings the Action. In case any of them accused of a Crime run away, his Master shall pay the value of his Head to the King. If the Master be accused as accessory to his flight, he shall purge himself by five men of good repute. If he do not acquit himself he shall pay to the King the value of his Head, and his Servant shall be Outlaw'd. The twenty ninth enacts, that if a Bondman or Slave be by the Ordeal condemned, he shall first be marked with an hot Iron, and if cast the second time, be put to death. The thirtieth ordains, that if a man be of evil report so as no man speaks well of him, the Reeve (the Sheriff doubtless is meant) shall take security for his appearance when he is called, which if he doe not give, he shall be put to death and buried in a prophane place: And if any one stand up in his defence, he shall incur the same punishment. And if any Officer neglect or refuse to put this in Execution, he shall by one universal Sentence pay an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King. The thirty first wills the same manner of Purgation of Criminals be used in all Boroughs. The next directs, that if a man be destitute of all Friends or be a Stranger so that he hath none to be bound for him, such an one, if accused, shall be sent into Custody to be examined by the Ordeal. That which follows denounceth such as are convicted to have forsworn themselves upon the Gospels or Sacra, to loose their Hands, or to give half the value of their Heads to the Lord and the Bishop. The thirty fourth accounts it of small moment, that one who has openly born false Witnesse have no Credit given to his Testimony for the time to come; but orders, that he moreover pay to the King or the Lord the Fine wont to be paid in the room of the Neck being tyed, called Healsfange.

31.

32.

33.

34.

142. The twelve Laws that follow next in course respect Ecclesiastical Matters, and therefore to such we must refer them. "The forty seventh requires, that Adultery be punished more or less as the Circumstances be, affirming it bad for a Married Man to lie with a Maid, much more with another Man's Wife or one in Religion. The forty eight directs, that Incest be punished: Either with the value of the Head, with a Mulct, or the loss of the whole Estate, there being a difference betwixt abusing ones own Sister and another Kinwoman more remote. The next chastizes him that Ravishes a Widow or a Virgin with the payment of the value of his own Head. The fiftieth denounceth, that if a Man's Wife be convicted to have lain with another Man, he shall for ever be noted as Infamous, and her Husband shall have all that belongs to her; besides the shall loose her Nose and her Ears. But if he be only accused of Whoredom, and in the Tryal be cast, the Bishop in such case is to be Judge, and commanded in his Judgment to be severe. As for Married men the next Law enjoyneth, that "if one lie with his own Maid Servant he forfeit her and make satisfaction both to God and Man: If besides his Wife he keep a Concubine, the Priest shall deny him all Christian Privileges till he put her away, and as well by his forbearance for the future as in other things according to the Bishop's direction, he have made ample satisfaction. That which follows banishes Strangers with all their Vices and Fortunes out of the Land if they do not bridle their Lusts. By the fifty third, if a Man upon premeditated malice kill another, he shall be delivered up to the kindred of the slain. If he be only accused of the Murther and be found guilty, the Bishop in that case shall be his Judge.

C.31. Sax. c.79.
c.80. Apud Jarnal.C.32. Sax. c.81.
Apud Jarnal.
C.33. Sax. c.82.
Apud Jarnal.

C.34. Sax. c.83. Apud Jarnal.

C.35. Sax. c.84. Apud Jarnal.

C.36. Sax. c.85. Apud Jarnal.

C.37. Sax. c.86. Apud Jarnal.

"fange,

SECT. 12.

"sunge, if he binds him, with half the value of his Head. The next refrains the violence of Souldiers, ordaining, that if in an Expedition any break the Peace he shall either forfeit his life or the value of it; and if he plunder make sufficient Compensation. That which follows, declares, that he that breaks into another man's Houfe, according to the Law of the English, is to pay five Pounds to the King; if it be done where the Law of the Danes obtaineth, he must be punished according to their Custom. And if he be justly killed in the Attempt, nothing shall be forfeited upon that account. The sixth ordains, That if one man rob another of any thing, he restore the thing together with the value of it and pay the value of his Head to the King. The sixty first declares breaking down and burning of Houses open Theft, manifest Murthers and betraying of one's Lord, according to humane Laws, to be Crimes, for which there is no bote or satisfaction to be made, by way of Mulct or Compensation. The next fines such as shall deny to pay toward the Repairing of Towns, or mending of Bridges, as shall refuse to go upon the Warlike Expedition, if he be an English man, an hundred and twenty Shillings to the King; if he be a Dane, he is to make satisfaction according to their Custom; or fourteen men are to be named to him, out of which number he may make his choice of eleven to purge himself.

144. The sixty third in like manner declares, that "all ought to contribute to the repairing of the Churches. The sixty fourth denounces against such as shall harbour Excommunicated or Outlawed Persons, that they shall bring them forth to Justice, make satisfaction to those that are concern'd and pay the value of their Heads to the King. But in case they will keep and defend them, loss of Life and all their Fortunes. The next wills, that Mercy be shewn as much as may be to such as plainly and unfeignedly amend their ways. And by that which follows, the King declares he will put a difference betwixt small and Great, Rich and Poor, Young and Old, Infirm and Healthfull, forasmuch as some men may offend out of a kind of necessity, and a distinction is to be made betwixt a forced and a voluntary act. Therefore will he succour where there is most need of his Help. The sixty seventh contains an Act of Grace of the King to his Subjects, whereby he relieves such as formerly were oppressed. He enjoys all his Officers, that they make provision for his House out of his own Lands and Tillage, and that they compel no man to furnish him with any Conveniences in this kind, upon pain of paying the value of their Heads if they impose any Mulcts upon Refusers. The sixty eighth ordains, that in case any man by neglect or by the suddenness of his death depart this World Intestate, his Lord shall take nothing of his Goods but what is due to him as an Heriot. But all is to be distributed by his Judgment to the Wife, Children, and next Kindred justly according to their several right. The sixty ninth in order settles the Rates of the Heriots, ordering that the Heriot of every one be according to his Dignity. As first, that of an Earl eight Heriots, whereof four with Furniture and four without, four Helmets, as many Corsets, eight Spears, as many Shields, four Swords, and two hundred Mancufes of Gold. That of a King's chief Thane four Heriots, whereof two with Furniture and two without, two Swords, four Spears, and as many Shields, one Helmet, one Corset, and fifty Mancufes of Gold. The Heriot of an Inferiour Thane an Horse with Furniture and Arms, or amongst the West Saxons the sum that is paid called Halsfange, in Mercia and East England two Pounds; but amongst the Danes the Heriot of a King's Thane, who has free jurisdiction, is four Pounds. And if he be nearer to the King his Heriot is two Heriots, whereof the one with Furniture and the other without, a Sword, two Spears, as many Targets, and fifty Mancufes of Gold. But the Heriot of a Thane of the lowest condition is two Pounds.

145. This word Heriot, or as the true Saxon word is, Heregeate, signifies Furniture for War, given by the Vassal to his Lord, probably at first de

Ab Depe & geote a Saxon geotan fundere & Metaphoricè reddere vel erogare, unde Scoti Britannis Heregæld,
 g. d. Heregæld, g in z, (u illi sape) transmutat.

signed

C. 58. Sax. c. 87. Apud Jorhal.

C. 59. Sax. c. 88. Apud Jorhal.

C. 60. Sax. c. 89. Apud Jorhal.

C. 61. Sax. þurþþec. 7 þærþnet 7 open 8ypp. 7 æþeþemoph. 7 hlafopþþec. æþeþe þeowulo laga is beolcar. c. 90. Apud Jorhal.

C. 62. Sax. c. 91. Apud Jorhal.

C. 63. Sax. c. 92. Apud Jorhal.

C. 64. Saxonice. c. c. 93, 94. Apud Jorhal.

C. 65. Sax. c. 94.
 Apud Jorhal.C. 66. Sax. c. 95.
 Apud Jorhal.C. 67. Sax. c. 96.
 Apud Jorhal.C. 68. Sax. c. 97.
 Apud Jorhal.C. 69. Sax. c. 97.
 Apud Jorhal.

SECT. 12.

signed for the driving away Thieves and Robbers, which abounded when the Danish or Northern Nations so frequently invaded the Land; for though the word Here do in the Saxon Language signifie an Army, yet is it in our Saxon Authours (when without composition) generally taken in the worst sense, for Invaders and Spoilers, a lawfull Army collected by the King for the Defence of the Nation, being called by the Name of Fyrd. Sir Henry Spelman fetches the Original of Fyrd, the thing from Clodone King of the Franks, who having about the Year of Our Lord DXI. given the Alamans a very great overthrow, and deprived them of all Honour and Liberty, assigned them as Vassals, some to his Treasury, and some to the Church, the former being termed Servi Fiscalmi and Fiscales, and these Servi Ecclesiastici. He ordained, that when any Master of a Family Died, the Officer of the King, or Bishop should seize upon the best Horse he had, or the Cloths of most value. Some are of opinion, that to this Heriot succeeded what was afterward called Relief; but that these were several is manifest in this, that sometimes both an Heriot and Relief were paid from the same Lands, and an Heriot had place where an Heir did not succeed in the Patrimony, which Relief never had. Mr. Lambard thought that the Normans when they Conquered the Land, and spoiled the inhabitants of all their Arms and furniture for War, remitted the Heriot, and took Money in its stead. Most probable it is, that Heriot and Relief were different, and that Vassals in the English Saxon times contributed those Habilitments of War to their Lords, towards the Expulsion of those Northern Thieves and Invaders, as we said. Their Land they held on that condition with that burthen and service, and therefore they held them as Feudatories. Heriots were in use in the Infancy of Fees, when Fees were held in a more general and Law sense, as we have already demonstrated. Relief succeeded when they were grown up to more regulation and certainty, clothed with new circumstances, of Succession, and the like. The giving of Horses and Arms by Vassals to their Lord, was a thing also practised by the Germans and Italians.

146. To make an end of King Cnute his Laws, The seventieth "Confirms to a Woman and her Children the Seat and Habitation which her Husband enjoyed. But if there were any Suits commenced against the Man when living, his Heir must answer them. The seventy first Requires Widows to continue in Widowhood twelve months, and then permits them to marry. If a Woman marry before her twelve months be out, she is to loose her Dower, with all that her Husband left her, which is to come, in such case, to the next akin; and he that Marries her shall pay the value of his Head to the King, or whomsoever he assigns it. Nay, although she was taken by force she shall loose all she had, except she depart and return no more to this Husband. Widows are not suddenly to enter into Religion; Widows shall not be compelled to pay their Heriots till twelve months be over, especially if not able to pay before. A Woman, by the seventy second Law, is not to be compelled to marry against her will, nor sold, except the Man voluntarily will give something. The next confirms what had been formerly enacted, Concerning a Man's leaving his Weapon at another Man's Door, and another's making ill use of it. That which follows in like manner confirms what was Law before, Concerning a Woman's not being accessory to the Theft of her Husband. First, If a Man be convicted to have brought stolen Goods into his House, it's the same thing as if he stole them; but his Wife shall not be accounted guilty of Theft, except the kept it under Lock and Key. Now the Wife ought to keep the Keys of these things, viz. of the Store-house, of the Chest of Cloths, and her Coffer; in any of which if she lock up any thing, she is to be accounted guilty of Theft. Otherwise the Wife cannot hinder her Husband from bringing any thing into his House. It was the custom (such is the avarice of Men) for the Child which lay in the Cradle, and never yet had eaten Meat, yet though it was asleep, to be accounted as guilty of this Crime as if it had had understanding. But I (saith the King) absolutely forbid that, with some other things that are odious to God Almighty. Here Mr. Selden demandeth if from any other Fountain than this can be derived what Henry de Bracton and other English Lawyers deliver, concerning a Man's Wife being accessory to his Theft.

147. The seventy fifth Law "Deprives him of Life and Estate, who either in an Expedition by Land or Sea deserts his Lord, or his Fellow Souldier; and in such case the Lord is to have back the Land he gave him; or if it was

Temp. Coura-di primi vide Sigismund de Reg. Italiae.
lib. 8.C. 70. Sax.
c. 98. apud
Jorhal.C. 71. Sax.
c. 99. apud
Jorhal.C. 72. Sax.
c. 101. apud
Jorhal.C. 73. Sax.
c. 102. apud
Jorhal.C. 74. Sax.
c. 103. apud
Jorhal.In Jen. An-glorum.C. 75. Sax.
c. 104. apud
Jorhal. 1105.

was

Sect. 12.

"was Bocland it goes to the King. But in case any one dye in a Fight in the presence of his Lord, either at home or abroad, his Heriot shall be remitted, and his Children shall succeed both to his Goods and Lands, and rightly divide them. The seventy sixth Gives him liberty that hath defended his Land, and cleared it from all doubts and incumbrances in the Sciregemote or County Court, to possess it quietly while he lives, and to leave it to whom he pleaseth when he dies. The seventy seventh Gives liberty to every Man to Hunt in his own Grounds, but forbids all under penalty to meddle with the King's Game, especially in those places which he had Fenced by privilege.

C. 76. Sax. c. 106. apud Jornal.

C. 77. Sax. c. 106.

By those places thus privileged, he means those which afterwards the Normans called (a) Forests, being Ground defart and woody, most commonly exposed to the King's Wild Beasts or Deer, not fenced about with any Hedge or Wall, but circumscribed and privileged, as here he words it, Fenced with certain Bounds, Laws, Immunities, Magistrates, Judges, Officers and Servants. Concerning these Forests, he published Constitutions thirty four in (b) Number, which because he mentions them not in this nor in any other of his Laws, seem to have been made afterwards. But the thirtieth Article is almost the very same with this Law, forbidding all to meddle with his Game, but permitting them to Hunt in their own Grounds, (c) yet without Chase. Afterwards the Norman Kings made strange improvement of what he began, turning many Towns and Churches into Dens of Wild Beasts, with what success it's neither pleasing nor seasonable for us here to relate. The seventy eighth Law requires, that Drinclean and other Offices of Service due to Lords, be inviolably observed. Mr. Lambard interprets this Drinclean, Honorary Gifts of Drink. It seems the same with Scotale, which was Ale wherewith Fellow-Vassals joyning together were wont to entertain their Lords or their Stewards when they came to their Manors. The seventy ninth Law revives the Law before, which will have C. 79. Sax.

"All enjoy perfect peace, and be free from all molestation which go to, or return, from Gemotes or Publick Meetings; as now they that are Members of Parliament. The eightieth and last, in Confirmation of all these Laws made by the King to be observed by all his Subjects, upon any that shall break them, for the first offence imposeth the value of his own head whether he be English or Dane; for the second offence it doubles the punishment; and for the third, deprives him of all his Fortunes. The King closeth all with a very Religious Exhortation to Piety, and a Prayer.

148. There are onely now remaining the Laws of King Edward the Confessor. These we have not published in the Saxon Tongue, nor as he fet them forth, but as they were afterwards confirmed by William the Conquerour, and as Transcribed by one who had lived in the Days of Henry the Second, or after, who has interlaced them with things very much, sometimes Foreign to the purpose, and with tales of King Arthur, and other matters. At best they are a Rhapsody of things, rather telling and explaining things what they anciently were, than expressed in Legislative manner; but of such of them as make for our purpose, (as several of them do) and give us light in the Discovery of the ancient Polity or frame of Government of our English Saxon Ancestours, if we have not already made use of them, we shall give the Reader an Account. To pass those which are merely of Ecclesiastical Concernment. The eleventh Law or Article tells us what was the Original of Danegeld, declaring that The payment of it was appointed for Pirates, which infesting the Countrey, wasted it to their utmost power. Now for repressing their Insolence, Danegeld was appointed to be yearly paid, viz. twelve pence out of every Hide of Land throughout the Kingdom, to hire those that should resist the Irruption of Pirates. Here the Reader is to remember what we said before concerning King Ethelred's raising of this Money called Danegeld, that two sorts of Payments are called by that Name, viz. that which upon occasion was raised to give the Danes wherewith to buy off their Hostilities now and then as the case required, and that other which was imposed for procuring Danish Ships and Men to restrain the

(a) A Latin. foris, hinc extris Forestiere pro peregrino, Saltus autem bujusmodi Saxonibus nostris & Danis dicuntur. Bucbolt, i. e. Saltus Cervinus; aliter tepepalus vel scopulo, q. d. ferarum stabulum.

(b) Vide eas sic placet apud Spehnam. in Glossar. voc. Foresta.

(c) Sine Chace tamen quid hoc sibi velit venatores viderint.

C. 78. Sax. c. 109. apud Jornal. Drinclean a Sax. drinc & lean pendium, tributum, unde nostratius Loane.

Scotale a Sax. scot (petus) reccat symbolum & ale cerevisia.

C. 80. Sax. c. 110. apud Jornal.

11. De Danegeld, Danegeldum redditio propter piratas primus statuta est, &c.

Danegeld laid upon Hides.

Sect. 12

the Irruptions and Insolencies of the Northern Rovers, the former (as we said) was upon occasion, but this was Annual. As for the payment of the latter, the Custom was, according to the Laws of that Age, that the Richer sort should be taxed according to the number of Hides, as is evident from Doomsday Book, written in the time of King William the first. Now as to the Rate, Marianus Scotus, Hoveden, and Florentius Wigorniensis, all tell us that at that time whosoever possessed three hundred and ten Cassats or Hides of Land, was charged with the building of one Ship, and a Coat of Armour and an Helmet was imposed upon nine, or as Huntingdon and others upon eight; all being rated proportionably after this manner, who were owners of more or fewer Hides, or of part of an Hide. Huntingdon saith an Hide was so much Land as could be Tilled with one Plough in one year. But others of the quantity of Hides determine otherwise. And indeed it was various according to the different Customs of several Countries.

149. Some there are who write, that two Shillings were yearly laid upon every Hide of Land for suppression of those Pirates, so that they make the payment double to what is said by this Law ascribed to King Edward. But as they differ herein without any reason; so do they with as little discretion set the yearly Tax at the rate of thirty eight thousand Pounds; as others do at thirty thousand. For at what Rate soever that Tribute was paid to the King according to the alteration of times, it appears from certain from our several Histories that the Stipends usually allowed to the Danish Fleet were so uncertain, that they were sometimes higher, sometimes lower, as it could scarcely otherwise happen, according to the number of Ships and Forces, that were necessary for defence of the Realm. This payment being higher or lower as occasion served, was to be sure paid till the year MLI, or the tenth of this King Edward the Confessor. "But then as Ingalphus himself tells us, in regard that the Earth did not bring forth its fruits in such plenty as it was wont, but devoured many People by Famine, thousands dying through scarcity of Corn and want of Bread, the Pious King being moved with Compassion towards the People, released that most grievous Tribute called Danegeld to all England for ever. It is reported (saith he) by some, that this most Religious King being brought by his Officers into the Treasury to see the Danegeld that was collected, and to take a view of so vast an heap of Treasure, stood amazed at the first sight, protesting that he beheld the Devil dancing upon the heap of Money, and extremely rejoicing, whereupon he immediately commanded it should be restored to its former Owners, and would not keep any of so cruel an Exaction, but remitted it for ever, viz. In the thirty eighth year after Swane King of Denmark commanded it to be paid every year to his Navy, in the time of his Father Ethelred. So Ingalphus, with whom agree both Hoveden and Matthew of Westminster, that King Edward remitted it for ever. Yet whatever this good King might resolve or order, the Dialogue belonging to the Exchequer makes it to have been paid for fourteen years longer, till the time of the Conquerour; nay, during his Reign, and the Reigns of his Successours, when they either had or suspected a War with Foreigners. From Hoveden it appears, as well as from the Interpolatour of St. Edward's Laws, that it was paid to William Rufus and King Stephen, and from the Accounts of the Exchequer, sometimes to Henry the second, after which it grew out of date, other Courtes being taken to fower the Seas and defend the Kingdom, of which we are not here to take notice.

150. The twelfth Article of St. Edward's Laws declares, That the Peace of the King is manyfold. As sometimes it's given by his own hand, which the English call Cyninges home reabbe gnyf. This was given to places and Persons by way of Privilege as to Churches or Churchmen within their own Walls, as appears by the League betwixt King Edward and Guthrum the Dane, in which it is termed Cyninges hand gnyf. Another sort of Peace is on that day he is Crowned, which lasts eight days. That at Christmas, which holds also eight days, as also at the Feasts of Easter and Whitsonide. Another sort is given by his Brief or Letters. And another there is belonging to the four great High-ways, viz. Wallingstreet, Foss, Hickenildstreet, and Ermingstreet, whereof two are extended to the length, and two to the breadth of the Kingdom. Another yet there is of the Rivers of note, which convey Provisions to Cities or Towns. Then doth this Writer declare the Forfeitures incurred for breach of these several sorts of the King's Peace, as to which we refer the Reader to the Laws and Customs already mentioned, as well as to what he here writes thereof; onely here mentioning this, that the Breach of the King's Peace in those great High-ways and Rivers was punishable in the greater Assemblies or Courts

Dialogus Scaccarii M. S. Item Math. Westm. & Math. Peris. Vide Sidenam in Marti clauso, lib. 2 c. 11.

Sec. 12. Courts of Judicature, but that in the lesser Ways and Waters was subject to the Law of the County. The fourteenth declares, That Treasure found in the Earth is the King's, except found in a Church or Church-yard; in this case if it be Gold it's all the King's; if Silver one half goes to him and another to the Church.

151. The fifteenth treateth of Murder, and declares, That if any one was murdered, the Murderer was wont to be enquired for in the Village or Town where the Body was found. If he was discovered, he was delivered up to the King's Justice within eight days after the Fact committed. In case he could not be found, a Month and a day was allowed for search after him, within which term, if he could not be found, forty six Marks were gathered out of the Town, and if it was not able to pay so much, what it could not the Hundred was liable to. But so far as this payment could not be made in the Towns, and Inconveniences arose, the Barons took care that six and forty Marks should be paid out of the Hundred, and being sealed up with the Seal of some one Baron of the County, they were sent to the Treasurer, and by him kept so sealed up for a Year and a Day, within which time if the Murderer was found out, upon his delivery to the King's Justice they were to be repayed; but in case within that time he could not be discovered, then were the Kindred of the Murdered Party to have six of the Marks, and the King the other forty. If he had no Kindred his Lord was to receive it; and if no Lord his sworn and devoted Friend and Companion. If none of these there were, the King should have the whole Sum, all men living under his Peace and Protection. Now the sixteenth Article tells us, that Murders were found out and appointed (that is this way of discovery and punishing the Hundred if the Party could not be found) in the days of Cnut the Danish King, who after he had gotten England and settled it in Peace, at the request of the English Barons sent back his Army into Denmark. These Barons became Sureties to the King, that all that staid behind with him should in all things enjoy perfect Peace. But in case an Englishman killed any of them, if he could not clear himself by the Judgment of God, that is, by Water or Iron (meaning Ordeal) Justice was to be executed upon him, And in case he escaped, Payment was to be made as is aforesaid.

152. That which made King Cnut so fearful and cautious, was the memory of the Massacre committed upon the Danes, during the Reign, and by the Command of King Ethelred. The sense of this made him keep an Army on foot along time, which forely oppressing the People gave occasion to the Request of the Nobility, (the Norman Interpolator calls them Barons) and to the making of this Law. And when the Normans had conquered the Countrey, they conscious to themselves that from their usage of the Natives, they could expect no better entertainment than what the Danes had received, made use of it for their own safety. If a Norman was found slain, his death was more grievously by far punished than that of an Englishman; the onely mitigation of it was if the Englescheria of him that was killed could be made out, that is, that he was an Englishman, and neither Dane nor Norman, nor any Stranger.

Hence came this word Englescheria, Englescheria, or Englescheria to be used as the name of this Law. For, as Bracton writes, when any one was killed it was presumed he was a Frenchman, Nisi Englescheria, i.e. quod Anglicus sit probetur per parentes & coram Justitiariis presentetur, Except his Englescheria, that is, that he was an Englishman could be proved by his Relations and presented before the Justices. But this Law was abrogated by the Statute of the Fourteenth of Edward the Third as Stanford writes, who delivers also that this Englescheria was an Institution of the Common Law, whereby you may take notice, saith Sir Henry Spelman, that our Modern Lawyers attribute that to the Common Law, whereof they can find neither beginning in their Annals nor in their Book of Statutes. But according to this History, and the Original of it, well enough doth Bracton define Murder to be the killing of a Man privately, none either being present, knowing, hearing, or seeing. But Fleta seems beside the matter, saying, that it was not Murder except it was proved that the Party slain was English and no Stranger, as Dr. Cowell understands him, who rightly observes, that at this day Murder is otherwise to be defined, viz. by premeditated malice, whether secretly or openly, be the man what he will.

*Flitium Substantivum a Saxonic.
Englyc. Anglicus. Quasi Anglicus vel natiuitas Anglica.*

*Vide Bracton. L. 3. Tra. 1.
c. 15.*

Pl. Cor. l. 1. c. 2.

*Ex quo animadvertas hodierni Jurisconsultos id legi Communi erubere, cuius initium nec in Annalibus suis nec in Statu-torum Volumine deprehenderint. In Glossar.
voo. Englescheria.*

153. The seventeenth Article concerning the Duty of the King, and the Right and Appendices of the Kingdom of Britain, as also the Epistle of Eleutherius to Lucius King of Britain, favour so much of the Interpolator, that to him we leave them. The eighteenth Declares the King's Power by virtue of his Royal Dignity, to pardon loss of Life and Member, yet so as the Malefactor make satisfaction so such as be hath injured, according to his power, and find sureties for his good behaviour, which if he do not, he is to be banished. The nineteenth in like manner, Declares his Royal Prerogative to be such, that he may set at liberty a Captive or Prisoner, wherever he comes in any City, Borough, Castle or Village, or if he meet him in the way, by his mere Word or Command. Yet shall be that is so set at liberty, make satisfaction to the injured Party. But a Murderer, Traytor, or one Guilty of like Crimes, although the King pardon him as to Life and Member, according to the Law, shall in no wise stay in the Countrey, but shall swear that he will depart to the Sea Coast within a Term set him by the Justice, and pass over as soon as he can get the opportunity of a Ship and Wind. And in case any such be perjured and stay in the Land, any one as he meets them, may doe Justice upon them. And if any one entertain such a Malefactor for one single night, he shall be fined in the highest degree, according to the Laws of the English or Danes; for the second night he shall pay double, and for the third be punished as an Associate and Abettor of Malefactors. If such leave any Wives behind them, which by the Kindred of the murdered Party, are accused as confensors to, and partakers with their Husbands in the Crimes committed, they shall by Ordeal purge themselves, by which if they make their Innocence appear, they shall continue free with their Dowers and Emoluments they have by Marriage. As for their Children born or begotten, before the Commission of the Fact, they shall neither be Outlawed, nor lose their Inheritance.

154. The twenty seventh Article, gives leave to harbour a Stranger or Foreigner, whom in English they termed Cūp 7 uncūp. that is, known or unknown, as a Guest for two nights together: If within this space he transgress, he that harbour'd him shall not be answerable for him. But if any one be injured, and complaint is made, that it was by the Counsel and Advice of him that lodged him, he shall with two of his honest Neighbours by Oath purge himself as to the Advice and Fact, or otherwise make satisfaction. But in case any one lodge a Stranger three nights, and he commit any offence, he shall be answerable for him, as for one of his own Family, according to the English saying; two nights a Guest, and the third night one of the House. If he cannot produce the Malefactor, he shall have allowed him a month and a day to purge himself, within which time, if the Malefactor be taken he shall make satisfaction if he can, and with corporal punishment, if it be so adjudged. If he cannot find him within that time, he shall make compensation for the loss sustained, and undergoe the forfeiture, and if the Justice have him suspected, shall purge himself by the Tryal of the Hundred or Shire. The twenty eighth, wills that if any one bring any Cattel or Money into a Town, and say he found them, before he bring them to his own or any other man's House, he carry them to the Church, and before the Priest, the chief Officer of the Town, and the better sort of Men declare all be found, whatever it be. Then shall the Officer of the Town send to the four next Towns adjoining, for the Priests and the Officers, who shall bring with them three or four of the Inhabitants of the best note of each Town, before whom all that is found shall be produced and shewn. They being Witnesses, the Officer of the Town where the finder dwells, shall keep the thing by him till the morrow, and then goe to the Governour of that Hundred, of which his Town is a Member, and to him he shall shew all. If it was found in the Ground belonging to a Lord who hath not his Customers or Privileges, viz. Sake and Soke, the Finder shall deliver all up to the Governour of the Hundred if he will receive it, with good witness. But if the Lord have such Privileges, he shall be answerable to him in his Court.

155. The twenty ninth Article, will have all Men know, that all Jews, where-soever they are in the Kingdom, ought to be under the King's Liege Protection, and Safeguard, neither without his License can any of them put themselves under any Rich Man. For the Jews and all theirs are the King's. And in case any one detain them or their money, the King shall make enquiry if he please of his own. The thirtieth; gives warning to such as have the King's Peace, either by his Hand or his Letters, that they be faithfull to him; as also that they must necessarily observe, and keep it inviolably towards all others, neither because of this Protection, detain other Mens Rights, whether of their Lords or Neighbours; so far as he is not worthy of this Peace, that will not himself strictly observe it. In case out of too much con-

Sec<sup>t</sup>. 12. fidence therein, he proudly injure any man, he shall make double compensation for the loss which the English call Arymhitcher. The thirty first requires, that the King's Peace, granted by his own Hand, that of the eight days of his Coronation, of the Feasts lately mentioned, and the others granted by his Breve or Letters, if broken, have the same way of punishment or forfeiture, and that by the greatest way of trial, had in the County where it was broken; as thus. In Danelaga, or after the Law of the Danes; by eighteen hundreds, which number makes up seven times twenty pounds and four: because the Danes had the forfeiture of the hundred; those of Norway had eight pounds, Therefore eight being multiplied by eighteen, make up an hundred and forty four. And this was not done without cause: For of these eight pounds, the King had an hundred Shillings, and the Consul (Earl he means) of the County fifty, he having the third penny of forfeitures: But the Dean of the Bishop in whose Deanry the Peace was broken, the other ten remaining, the Peace of the King, viz. granted with his own Hand, that of his Coronation, and the Feasts aforesaid of Christmas, Easter and Whitsonide.

C. 31.
De Emenda-tione Pacis.

156. The thirty sixth Article directs that, if after a Man be slain as a Thief or Robber, any complaint be made to the Justice, that the man was wrongfully put to death, and lyes buried amongst Thieves, and such like Malefactours, and offers to make it good, that he first give security for so doing. "Then shall a month and a day be allowed him to bring together the Kindred of the dead man, of both sorts, twelve by his Fathers side, and six by his Mothers. In case these eighteen will take the matter upon them, together with him who first complained and hath given security, let every one of them give also security with a Sword, and afterward find sureties, who shall be able to pay his Were, in case they cannot make good what they have undertaken. Then must he that killed the man give security, and find sureties to engage that he was justly slain, and as a Thief justly lyes, according to the Law amongst such Malefactours. And first, he must shew in what Theft or Robbery, and how he was slain. If it appear that he was taken alive, let him name the Justice and Judge, and produce his lawful Witnesses out of the Neighbourhood, which Persons, if they warrantize that Justice was rightly done upon the man as a Thief, he that killed him shall be acquitted: and those that made their complaint shall forfeit their engagement as to the Judges and Witnesses. But if they make it out that he was unjustly slain, he that killed him shall forfeit his obligation to the Justice of the Bishop, and find sureties for doing what is right: then shall the Justice of the Bishop (his Officer he means) cause a Procession to be made with a Priest, habited in an Albe Maniple, and Stole, and Clerks in their Surplices, with Holy-water and a Cross, the Candlesticks and Incense-pot, with Fire and Incense going before, and the Friends of the dead having taken his Body up, shall put it on a Bier, and carry it to the Church, where Mass being said for him, and other Rites performed, they shall Inter him as becomes a Christian. Then within sixteen days, shall he that killed him pay to the Bishop gli dicunt three forfeits. One for killing an honest Man instead of a Thief, another because he buried his (Christian) Brother as a Thief; and the third, because Cjurençy he gave security to acquit himself but could not.

C. 36.
De Luitonib.

157. The thirty seventh Article or Chapter, tells us that King Edward defended or prohibited Usurers, forbidding them to remain in any part of his Kingdom. And if any was convicted to have exacted Usury, he was to forfeit all his Estate, and be outlawed. And you must know that he heard it said in the Court of the French King, while he there sojourned, that Usury was the root of all Vices. The next Article acquaints us, that in the same Law also was prohibited the buying of quick Cattel, or used Cloth without sureties or good witnesses. If it was a thing of Gold or Silver, or seemed such to be, it should not be bought without the testimony of Goldsmiths or Minters, who if they saw it belonged to the Church or Treasury, should take care it were not done without security. In case the seller could find no sureties, the thing with what belonged to it, should be kept till his Lord came or some other that would warrantize him. If any one bought any thing without these circumstances, he should forfeit it, and otherwise be punished. Afterward the Justice was to enquire by the lawful men and those of best account in the Town, Village, or Hundred where the buyer dwelt, of what manner of life he was, and whether ever he was charged with any other misdemeanour. If it was affirmed that he was a Man of good

C. 37. De Usurariis, Usurarios quosq; defendit Rex Edwardus. Normanni hic scripser utitur voce defensio ut hodierni Franci pro vestare, prohibere. Nos trates etiam aliquibus in locis adhibe dicunt, God defend, pro Deo vestare, God forbid.

C. 38. De emptionibus sive fideiussuribus, quod Anglice dicitur sasterman-net.

repute,

repute, he should purge himself by the Judgment or Sentence of the County, that he knew not the seller to be guilty as to the sale, neither of any other crime, and if he could, should tell who, and where he was: whereupon the Justice should enquire after him to bring him to Trial; and if he could not be found he should be outlawed. Now the thirty ninth and last, farther acquaints us, that whereas it is said that no man should buy any quick Cattel without sureties; The Butchers of the Cities and Towns, whom the English called Fleishmongers, made complaint that they every day ought to buy such Cattel, to kill and sell them; forasmuch as in the death of Cattel, their life consisted. Moreover, the Citizens, Townsmen, and the multitude, cried out for their Customs, that about Marrimmas, they were wont to buy Cattel in the Market, to kill against Christmas. Great murmuring was there amongst the People, by reason of this Law. Wherefore I am of opinion, faith our Writer, that as in other Assemblies, if the question had been put yea or no, they would have answered the latter, and if you had been present, you should have heard private murmurings, as well as clamours and noise of the tumultuous People. Therefore the King thought fit not to take away from them these Customs that were just and prudent; witnesses and consideration of the sellers, being of force in bargaining in the King's Market.

Sec<sup>t</sup>. 12.
C. 39.
De Emptio-nibus Cattel.
et C. 40.
et C. 41.

158. These are they which bear the Name of the Laws of King Edward the Confessor, together with such as we formerly mentioned in describing the Polity of our English Saxons. But such as (what we hinted before) are rather to be called Rhapsodies than Laws, being Notes or Comments made upon his Laws by some Sciolus, some pretender in the time of the Norman Kings. So that when the Reader hears the Laws of St. Edward so much talked of, so much contended for, both by word and sword, after the Conquest, he must not understand these to have been the Laws, which are only some scraps taken up and commented on in this manner. For indeed these Laws were said to be the Laws of the Confessor after the Norman Revolution, not because he made or enacted, but observed them, as the Monk of Malmesbury tells us. One of those that King Canute enacted, or rather revived with some other circumstance, being in substance formerly ordained by King Alfred, commanding every one above twelve years old, to be entered into some Century and Tithing, Bracton ascribes to this King, writing that this was enjoyed by the Law of Edward the Confessor. So this Interpolator or Noter himself tells you, that those Laws of St. Edward so much desired, and at length obtained from the Conquerour, were invented and constituted in the time of King Edgar, his Grandfather; but after his death they were laid aside for sixty eight years, during the Reigns of the succeeding Princes. But after that King Edward came to the Crown by the Counsel of his Barons, he revived, repaired, adorned and confirmed this Law, and being confirmed, it was called the Law of King Edward, not that he first invented it, but when it had been laid aside and quite forgot, from the time of his Grandfather Edgar; for the said space of sixty eight years, because it was just and honest, he drew it out of the deep pit of oblivion, renewed and delivered it to be observed as his own. By these and other circumstances, we may gather that the whole Body of these Laws we have recited, or all such of them as were approved by this King Edward, who was a Prince of great mildness and indulgence to his People, such written Laws as were in force in his time, and such Customs as had been all along observed in the Saxon times, and still were kept on foot in his days, were after the Norman Conquest, when the People so earnestly contended for their Liberties, called by the Name of the Laws of St. Edward, thereby being indeed meant the English Saxon Laws, which received denomination from him, being in effect the last King of that Race, and one whose memory the People revered and preserved in an especial manner, for the great Reputation he had got of Sanctity, and the gentleness of his Disposition.

Lib. 3.
Tract. 2.

159. Now after the Norman Conquest what alteration was made in those ancient Laws and Customs, by introducing the Norman way of Fees, and other matters out of that Country, as also after the struggling of the Barons, how far Magna Charta and the Common Law were the issue and product of these English Saxon Laws and Customs is not our work, especially now to enquire, lest we should exceed the Bounds of our present Period, and seem to thrust our sickle into the Corn of other Men. But this would better be done, by digesting these Saxon Laws into a Methodical Body under certain Heads, which seems not very hard to be accomplished. For these Laws it's more than time we dismiss them, having already committed an Extravagance, being carried farther than the general Nature of our

Defigri

Sect. 12. Design permits, and not to be practised as to other Nations, but that the desire of giving the Reader the most ample Knowledge of his own Country, that we could, hath transported us. So scant are our Histories of those times, that had it not been for these Laws, very little of the Polity of our Ancestours could have been discovered, and thence it is no wonder, if sometimes we meet in them several things that are obscure, or at this distance not perfectly to be understood. For the main they do very much contribute to the Knowledge of the Saxon Antiquity, the Nature of the Government with the State of those times, and the humour and temper of the People, matters of the greatest consequence in things Historical. By the Nature and Force of the Medicine, a skillfull man will know both the kind and violence of the Disease, Punishments, Censures and Cautions are the Medicines which are prescribed in the Laws. By the general Current of these Laws, which run against Theft for prevention both by Suretyship and Punishments, as we hinted before, the general Inclination of the People to that vice may be discovered. But whereas the Theft most aimed at by the Laws is that of Cattel, and such care is taken for pursuing them when stolen, this thereby is hinted to us, that the Wealth of our Saxon Ancestours, as of the Ancients chiefly and principally consisted in Cattel, Gold and Silver with other Goods or Household stuff of price and value, being not so ordinary in these days, nor some Ages after as in succeeding times. Therefore were Rents formerly paid in kind, and our Kings themselves were so paid till the time of Henry the Second, who changed the Custome. And in the writings of those Saxon and later times by the word Pecunia, quick Goods or Cattel are often meant, which are for explication expressed, sometimes by Viva Pecunia. And from their Heads or Capita, was framed the word Capital, Capitale, Capite, Capitalia, which signified Goods moveable or immovable, sometimes Pledges and the Price and Value of things, and what we English now term Catalla and Chattels; but originally Beats or quick Goods. But of the Saxon Laws so much, from the Knowledge of which as we said very much benefit may be reaped, though we go no farther than to those published by Mr. Lambard, those being sufficient if not more than sufficient to our Design.

The usual Subsidies, Revenues and Profits of the Kings.
Danegeld.
Heregeld.
Contribution money.

160. We have seen the Polity or Government of the English Saxons much by their Laws and otherwise, for the maintenance and support whereof, we must admonish the Reader to take notice what Revenues and Profits the Kings enjoyed. Besides their own Demefn-Lands, he may observe how much came to them by the way of Mulcts, so frequently occurring in the Laws. Then for Danegeld that much money they received yearly from the People. And for military Expeditions both by Sea and Land, they levied much money of the People, which they called Heregeld. By Doomsday Book, (which Book besides the knowledge and valuation of the Provinces, contains very many Customs in use amongst the English Saxons) it appears that several Towns contributed by prescription toward Naval Preparations. As to instance in some. It was a Custome at Warwick, if the King went by Sea against his Enemies; to send him either four Boat-svanes (Sea Souldiers or Mariners) or else four pounds in money. And the City of Exeter, when he made any expedition by Land or Sea, served after the Rate of five Hides of Land. The three Towns of Barnesable, Lydeford and Torres, paid as much as Exeter alone. The City of Gloucester paid six and thirty Dieres of Iron, and an Hundred Iron Rods fitted to make Nails for the King's Ships. Leicester, if the King went against his Enemies by Sea, sent him four Horses to London for conveyance of Arms or other Necessaries. At Lewes in Sussex, King Edward the Confessor had an hundred and twenty seven Burgbers at his service, who if the King went not himself in Person, but sent others to guard the Sea, collected twenty shillings of every man of what Country soever he were, and provided men who were to look to the Arms on shipboard. Moreover Colchester paid out of every Houle that was able six pence a year for maintenance of the King's Souldiers, upon an expedition by Sea or Land.

161. Some places held many Privileges by way of service, as Torksey, a Town of Lincolnshire upon the Trent, wherein before the Conquest were numbered two Hundred Burgheffes, enjoyed many on this condition, that they should transport the King's Ambassadors, whenever they came this way in their own Barges along that River, and conduct them as far as Tork. From this same survey of England, sufficiently is evident that most eminent Towns paid money to the King upon several accounts, and sometimes to the Earl or Alderman of the Shire. As for the later way of Subsidies, we must say with a Learned man that we cannot find find that the Saxon Kings had any collected after the modern manner. But they had many Customs whereby they levied money of the People, or personal service as we have already said, and toward the Building and repairing of Cities, Cattles and Bridges (as we have seen in their Laws) which they called Burghbote and Brigbote. The Danegeld being imposed upon Hides of Land, it was afterwards called Hidagium, and this Name remained afterward upon all Taxes and Subsidies imposed upon Lands, for money was also imposed upon Cattel, but then it was called Hornegeld. When the Normans came in they called both these foris, sometimes according to the Latin and Greek word Taxes; and sometimes according to their own word Tallagium from tallier to cut or divide, and sometimes according to the word usual beyond the Seas, Auxilia and Subsidia. The Conquerour had these kinds of Taxes, and made a Law for the manner of levying them.

Hornegeld and other Taxes.

Their Customs.

Dispositions.

Experience and Courage.

The trial of it in their lawsuits.

Their computation of time.

Their years.

162. Of their Polity and Laws we have said enough. Their Customs as of all other Nations, partly proceeded from their Laws and Polity, or were adjuncts of them, and partly from their natural Dispositions and Tempers. Their Disposition, as we formerly shewed, was very fierce and warlike before Prosperity and Idleness betrayed them to effeminate Courses. By the constitution of their Government, they were to appear all once a year in Arms, which gave occasion to the Massacre of the Danes in the time of Ethelred, which custom rendered them expert and valiant by way of use and exercise. But a natural Courage they required in their Children while yet but Infants, and as the Eagle is said to try her young ones by setting their Eyes and Faces against the Sun, so those of East England tried the Magnanimity and Courage of their Babes by another Experiment though of a more ordinary and homely Nature. "They were wont to set them upon the thatch sides of their Houses, and such of them as were afraid and hung timorously or cried for fear of falling, they pronounced would be pusillanimous and Cowards; but such as laid fast hold of the Straw, clung fast to the Thatch, and fearless would endeavour to secure themselves, with great Acclamation they predicted, that they would be Stoutherers, as their term was, or valiant, magnanimous or courageous Lords.

163. The ordinary way of their Reckoning or Supputation of times was by Winters, possibly for this reason at first in barbarous times, because the memory of sharp and severe weather, as of all other things which smart, make a stronger impression in the memory. And as they preferred Winter before Summer in their Reckoning, so also Night before Day, which custome we still retain using these words, a Sennight and Fortnight for Seven Nights, and Fourteen Nights more usually than seven days, or fourteen days, even as Tacitus writes of the old Germans, their way of Computation. Their year was two fold, natural and civil. Their natural year they measured not as other Nations by the Sun, but the Moon, beginning it when she was at the full after the Autumnal Equinoctial, when the greatest Tides usually fall out, and hence this Month they called by the Name of Winter fillet. For the Reader must know, that their twelve Months they equally denominated; six from Summer and six from Winter, but began the year with the first winter Month, which they accounted October to be, for in the days of Beda, the Autumnal Full-moon fell in this Month, and thereupon the beginning of the Saxon year was fetcht from thence, although Posterity to fix it at some certain and remarkable time, settled themselves upon Michaelmas Day, a Day still observed as the beginning of the year, both as to Officers, and the letting and hiring of Grounds (the Fruits of the foregoing Year being now gathered in, and seed time arrived for the following) in many if not most places of the Land. The Civil year they derived from the five and twentieth of December or Christmas Day, the Night whereof they termed Modraneft or the Night of Mothers, from some Ceremonies by Matrons then used, and whereas they thus began the year before their conversion to Christianity, we may imagine it was out of respect to the winter Solstice or the Full-moon thereof, for in the Days of Julius Caesar, the Solstice fell on that Day.

Their Months and the Names of them.

164. As their Years so their Months were either Civil or Lunary. The latter were thirteen in Number, for every year. The former were twelve for three ordinary years together, and in the fourth a thirteenth was added by way of Embolism, and placed at the end of Summer; but by these must also, whatever Beda and others write, be meant Lunary Months; for had either a solar or lunar Month been added to a civil or solar Year, the year would thereby have swollen to three hundred ninety five, or three hundred ninety three days, which would

SECT. 12 would wonderfully have perplexed the series of times. Now to come to the Names of their Months, and begin with the first Circle, or those of Winter; we are told by Verfegan, that their Month answering to September, they called Gerst monat from Barley, which by that Month commonly yielded was anciently called Gerst, the later Name of Barley, being given unto it by reason of the drink therewith made, called Beer, and from Beerleyb it came to be Beerleyb, and fo Barley. But notwithstanding what this Authour writes, yet in our ancient Saxon Monuments ordinarily, this Grain is called Bere, and thence several Names of Places derived, and so indeed from the Grain the Name came to be transferred to the Liqueur, as from the place of growth to the grain it self, for Barley or Beerleyb, signifies the Ley or Ground where the grain of Bere did grow. September was otherwise called also Haligemonat. That which answered to October had the Name of Wynmonat, for albeit they had not anciently Wines made in Germany, yet at this season they received them from the Countries adjoining. But, as we said before, this Month they also called Winter felleth. That we call November, they termed Wintmonat or Windmonth, it being then the Custome of Mariners to shrowd themselves at home till blustering March was over, but wherefoever Verfegan picked this up we have it from better Testimony, that this Month was called Blatmonath or the Month of Immolations, because such Cattel as were to be sacrificed they now devoted to their Gods. He tells us farther, that December had his due appellation given him in the Name of Winter monat, or Winter month, but that after the Saxons received Christianity they then out of devotion to the birth-time of Christ termed it by the Name of Heligmonat or Holy month. But Beda writes that our Saxons called December by the Name of Firft Ginli, as January by that of Later Ginli, for these Names were taken from the turning of the Sun, in respect to which December precedes & hoc à ge- January, though ordinarily accounted the last of all. Hence came the Feast of olden redd- the Nativity or Christmas, happening at this time to be called Geol, as it is by King Alfred, and in the Northern parts of England, as well as in Scotland, the G being turned into I as is usual, it is yet known by the Name of Teol or Toul, sic idem f. as by the Danes it is termed Jul.

Hinc Beretun hodie Barton vicus Hor-dei. Berenickvel Barwick Beretam alias Barbam, pro quibus hodie utimur Grange.

Geola æppa geola æpcepa a geol & hoc à ge-January, though ordinarily accounted the last of all. Hence came the Feast of olden redd-the Nativity or Christmas, happening at this time to be called Geol, as it is by King Alfred, and in the Northern parts of England, as well as in Scotland, the G being turned into I as is usual, it is yet known by the Name of Teol or Toul, sic idem f.
as by the Danes it is termed Jul.

165. But to take along with us what Verfegan, writes of each Month, he tells us that January was called Wolfe monat or Wolfe month, because People are wont always in that Month to be in more danger to be devoured of Wolves than in any season else of the year; for that through the extremity of Cold and Snow, those Ravenous Creatures could not find of other Beasts sufficient to feed upon. Concerning February he adds, that they called it Sprout Kele, by Kele meaning the Kelewart, which we now call Colewart, the greatest Pot-wurt in time long past that our Ancestours used, and the Broth made therewith was thereof also called Kele. For before we borrowed from the French the Name of Potage, and that of Herb, the one in our own Language was called Kele, and the other Wurt: and as this Kele-wurt, or Potage-herb, was the chief Winter Wurt for the sustenance of the Husbandman, so was it the first Herb that in this Month began to yield out wholesome young Sprouts, and consequently gave there-to the Name of Sprout-kele. But from Beda we are assured that the Old Saxons called February by the Name of Solmonath, as the Month of Cakes, which in it they offered to their Gods. The word Saoul indeed of Old to the Teutonic Nations signified Meat, and still it is used in the French Language for one who is filled with Meat, or especially Drink. But here Beda interprets it of Cakes, which the Idolatrous Jews are said to have Offered to the Queen of Heaven, probably the Sun, which in the Hebrew is of the Feminine Gender. And the Germans (as Tacitus witnesseth) Worshipped also the Sun, and still use the same Gender.

166. These were the Months belonging to the Winter Course. Of those of the Summer Semicycle the first was that answering to March, which (as Verfegan says) they called Lent-monat, or according to our present Orthography Lentib-month, because at this Season the Days first begin in length to exceed the Nights. This Month being by our Ancestours so called when they received Christianity, and consequently therewith the Ancient Custome of Fasting, they called this Chief time of Fasting the Fast of Lent, because of the Lent monat, whereon the greatest part of the Duration of this Fasting always fell, and hereof it cometh that we now call it Lent, it being rather the Fast of Lent, though though the former Name of Lent monat be long since lost, and the Name of March borrowed instead thereof. But though (as he writes) this Name be lost long since, yet there's another mentioned by Beda, which having a more ancient Original, seems also to have ceased long before it. For the Saxons (as he witnesseth) termed this Month by the Name of Read monat, from their Goddes Rheda, to which they Sacrificed at this time of the year. What Goddes this was, neither Tacitus, nor Cæsar, nor Diodorus do tell us; but the Saxon word Read signifying Council, probable it is she thence received the Name, that as (Tacitus writes) the Germans were wont to Consult at the beginning or Full of the Moon, and consequently at the Full Moon of this Month, held their great Consultations for the year ensuing. For (as Sir Henry Spelman well observes) Pliny demonstrates the Moon to be most potent at the Æquinoctials, and therefore March and September have been esteemed as most fit for such Consultations.

167. To the Month of April answered that which they called by the Name of Offer or Eoster monat, from their Goddes Eostre, as most write, whose Festival they now observed. Some call her Gosler, and yet she was supposed to cause the Winds (which by ancient Observations were found in this Month) most commonly to blow from the East. Now East in the Teutonic is Of; as Ofend, which rightly in Engliß is Eastend, hath that Name for the Eastern situation of it, as to the Ships it appears which through the narrow Seas come from the West; so that Offer seems the true writing, and Gosler to have crept in by way of mistake. But by a prophane Custome hath this Heathenish Name been applied to the most sacred Festival of Christianity, so hard is it to obliterate old Manners and Habits; though some there have been who interpret the word concerning the Resurrection, and thence in the Teutonic call it Costern, which some ancient Copies of Beda do favour, calling it Costur, and not Eoster. But in Saxony the Feast is called Oftern at this present, which hath near affinity with ours and their Offer Monat. The pleasant Month of May they termed by the Name of Trimilki, because in that Month they began to milk their Kine three times a day, such being it seems of old the fertility of Britain, or of Germany, out of which this Nation came into the Island, though no such fruitfulness now appears in either Country that we know of. However on the eighth day of this Month Beda placeth the beginning of Summer. To June (as Verfegan will have it) they gave the Name of Weyd Monat, because their Beasts did then Weyd in the Meadows, that is to say, go to feed there. For a Meadow in the Teutonic is called a Weyd, and of Weyd we yet retain our word Wade, which we understand of going through watery places, such as Meadows are wont to be. But Beda writes, that June in Saxon was called Erralida, Lida signifying fair or navigable, as the Season is pleasant and fit for Navigation both in June and July, whereupon June they termed Lida Era or Lida the first, and July Lida after or Lida the second. Verfegan writes, that July was called Hen Monat or Hay Monat, that is to say, Hay Month, because therein they usually Mowed and made their Hay-harvest. And August they termed Arn Monat, or more rightly Barn Monat, intending thereby the then filling of their Barns with Corn. But from Beda it appears, that August in Saxon was called Weod, or Wend Monat (not Wenden Month, as some Copies corruptly have it) from Cockle, which then doth most abound. He uses Cockle as a species to express the genus, for which the Latin Tongue hath no proper word; but the Saxon fully expref- feth it by that of Weod, as we still at this day by Weeds, thereby signifying all sorts of harmful or unprofitable Herbs.

168. To this Account of the Saxon Months and Year, we shall only add some Customs which we cannot but observe out of Ingulphus, and so dismiss this almost tedious Subject. First he tells us it was the Custome of the Engliß, that when any one was to be Consecrated to Warfare, the Evening preceding the day of his Consecration he should confess his Sins with Contrition and Compunction, to a Bishop, Abbat, or some Monk or Priest; by whom being Absolved, he should continue in the Church all night, giving himself to Prayer, Devotion and Affliction. On the Morrow, being about to hear Mass, he should Offer his Sword upon the Altar, which being Blessed, after the Gospel, the Priest should put about the Neck of the Souldier with his Benediction: then having communicated, he should be accounted and remain a lawfull Souldier. This custome of Consecrating a Souldier (Miles he terms him) the Normans afterward

Hinc consecrandi militis consuetudinem Normanni abstinuerunt non militem legitimum, &c. p. 901.
abomi-

abominated, not accounting such an one a lawfull Soldier, but a dull and heavy Knight, a degenerate Citizen. But saith Ingulphus, not only this, but other customs they changed. For the English way of making Writings of Contracts, which till the time of King Edward were wont to be confirmed by the Subscriptions of credible Persons, together with the shape of Golden Crosses, and other sacred Manners of Signature, the Normans condemning, gave to these Chirographa the Name of Charts, and confirmed these Charts by impressions of Wax made by each one's particular Seal, and the Attestation of three or four Witnesses present at the Action. At first many Possessions were passed over by word of Mouth alone without Scrip or Scroll, onely with the Sword, the Helmet, the Horn or Cup of the Owner: many Tenements with a Spur, or Bow, and some with an Arrow. This was the Custom at the first coming in of the Conquerour, which shortly after was absolutely changed. After this, he writes, how the Normans abominated English Men, and drove them from all Dignities. He adds, that they so abominated their Language, that the Laws of the Land, and the Ordinances of the English Kings were handled in the French Tongue, and to Children at School were the Rudiments of Grammar explained not in English, but in French, and the English manner of Writing being laid aside, the French mode was introduced in all Charts and Books.

169. What Ingulphus, as to the Custom of the English Saxons calls Chirographa, and after the coming of the Normans, Charts or Charters; after the Decay of the Roman Empire, under the Emperours themselves, and the Kings of the Goths and Lombards, went under the Name of Epistles, and by this Name all matters of Conveyance and Contract were transacted. Their style is turgid, affected and not becoming Majesty, as sufficiently appears from those of Cassiodorus. Some of our present Charts or Deeds still retain the Form of an Epistle, as thus, To All Christian People to whom these Presents shall come greeting. Know ye, &c. And the King in conferring honours, and other matters, still follows this Form. To All Archbishops, Dukes, Earls, Bishops, Barons, &c. The Ancients had as many sorts of Epistles as we have of Charters, or more; as for Adoption, Donation, Concession, Confirmation, and many other, as may be seen sufficiently in Marculfus. As to the manner of the English Writing, though our Author says it was new laid aside, and the French brought in at the time of the Conquest, yet toward the end of his History he tells us, that the Saxon Hand was used by all Saxons and Mercians till the time of King Alfred, but he being very well instructed in Learning by French Teachers, though before his time it was used in all Writings, by degrees grew out of Esteem, and the French Hand as more legible and pleasant, began to be practised by the English. Therefore he assures us, that the Charters granted to his Monastery by King Ethelbald, and all the ancient Kings were written in the Saxon Hand alone; but those of Edred and Edgar were written double, both with Saxon and French Characters.

170. It appears therefore from all that Ingulphus says upon this Subject laid together, that from King Alfred's time the Saxon Characters were not so much used as formerly, but not abolished, as appears from very many Monuments yet extant aswell of Civil as Ecclesiastical concernment (whereof some in the Latin Tongue it self) all written after the time of King Alfred, and to be seen both in the publick Library of the University of Cambridge, and the private or inner Library of Corpus Christi College. Nay, notwithstanding what the Conquerour and the other Norman Kings could doe, both Language and Character continued in use, those things being carried by the Multitude notwithstanding all opposition. Therefore as this same Ingulphus writes in another place (at the very end of his History) as to the Language William the Conquerour was forced to commend to his Julices the Laws of Edward the Confessor in the Idiom they were written, lest any one by ignorance should offend against them. And as for the Character, it so long continued, that our Antique Hands of Court and Chancery owe to it their Original; however now altered by continuance of time. Publick Inscriptions also were made in these Characters as appears by the Names of Kings and Noblemen in golden Letters written about the Wall of the Abby Church of Westminster. The Inscriptions also of Coins, whatever the Conquerour and his Norman Successors did, continued ordinarily in these Characters, even till the time of Queen Mary, although some of King Edward I have also beheld, with the Roman Characters. And this is observable that those Saxon Characters were borrowed by the Frisks, several most ancient Books of whose Nation are found written therewith, though in their own Language as I have seen. And not long since if not at present, although they retained the sense of their own words and their own way of pronunciation, yet in writing they used the Saxon Letters. That this Communication first happened, when in the Infancy of the English Saxon Church there was great intercourse betwixt the Religious and Learned Persons of both the Scotch and English Nations, is most probable. But it seems more confirm'd after that in the days of Henry the Second the English sent their Colonies into that Island.

Hic omnino distinguendum inter ascriptionem in militiam honorariam & vulgarem. Hæc gregarii militi, illa insigniis. Ad gregarii sufficit post evocationem vel conditionem munda solummodo in tabulas militares conscripsi. Ad alterius solennitas adhibenda.

Manus ætenuum Saxonica ab omnibus Saxonibus & Mercis usque ad tempora Regis Alfredi, &c. p. 912.

Artuli eadum vice mecum de Londonis in meum monasterium leges æquissimas Regis Edwardi, quas Dominus meus in christum Rex Willielmus authenticas esse & perpernas, per totum Regnum Anglie in volubilibus recitandas, sub penis gravissimis proclamavit, & suis iusticiariis commendavit, eodem idiomate quo editæ sunt; ne peritus nostrum contritus nos vel nostrum aliquemque & offenderet assuetudinem Regium Manu scriptam, ac in eis consulas rigidissimas improvidum pedem forte tentaret: sepit in eis, in eis, hoc modo. Ita claudis Historiam suam & videtur hic leges Edwardi inseruisse que desunt.

171. Of the Original, Nature and Progress of the English Saxon Tongue, now it remains in the last place that we should speak, if we did not daily expect an entire Treatise upon this Subject, which we cannot but promise to our selves to be very exquisite if we may judge from that very learned Preface to it already published. This Language is of the same Antiquity with the whole Teutonic; being a Language carried by the Colony into Asia, and brought back again by Woden, not ferri'd and derived from the Greek, as some by reason of some Correspondence do imagine, though the nearness of the People brought back by Woden to the Greeks in Asia and Thrace, might procure some Communication of Words, a Language which looks as old as any that arose from the confusion of Babel, that we may not with others carry the Original higher up. A Dialect of the Teutonic it is, to which the most ancient German Records bear most resemblance, which hath suffered most impairment from Brethren, who having first lost their own Native Language, another Branch of the same stock, could not be satisfied without endeavouring to abolish this also where they found it unmixt with their affectations. For the greatest alteration made in it hath been by Normans and French, both which People were Teutonic, and before they lost them in Gall spake but different Dialects of the same Tongue. Take but away French and Latin Mixtures, and what thou speakest, Reader, is still a part of this Saxon Language, especially the shortest Words and Monosyllables. By these Mixtures thou hast lost Multitudes of such Words, and now speakest by Circumlocution, what thou mightest have expressed with much more brevity; but it's well if still thou pursuest not this humour of Innovation in thy Speech, and thinkest every Feather very gay onely because it is not thine own. If Latin and French should each take their own, how naked wouldst thou appear where thou hast stript thy self of thine own Plumes. As this Language whereof we speak was Copious, so not harsh in its pronunciation, not so harsh as other Dialects of the Teutonic, as the Low Dutch, which bears great affinity to it, but in pronunciation is more rough and full. Where the Dutch both high and low use the d, we use the th, as for dat that, dunder thunder, dicke think, dicke thicke, and many more; a motion of our Tongue not ealie by them to be attained. So where they write the v Consonant we make use of the f, as to instance in a word which hits both Particulars, for their Vader we say and write Father, for their vor we say for; and Instances of this nature might be infinite.

172. In comparing our ancient English Saxon with that remainder of it we now speak. I cannot yet but take notice of one thing, wherein Time hath done some service, in lopping off some Superfluities with which the Dutch Tongues do still abound. In the Saxon, Be sometimes, but most commonly Ge prefixed before Verbs, Verbals, the Preterperfecttense of Verbs, and the Participles of the Preterperfecttense is superfluous, being that we call inceptum augmentum, or Syllabicum, or merely Expletive, as y and i have more lately been, especially with our Poets, for the increasing of Syllables, as in ycleped, ywritten, ybroken, and the like. The Low Dutch according to their usual manner of pronouncing with Aspiration, use to put an b to it and so make it ghe. Instances in this kind were also infinite; but for a few Becapen they used for Capan or to sell, Beclamed for cleamed or glowed, Beclafed for cleafed, Beclaped for called; Gebod Prayer, Geblet blessed, Gebode bidden, Gecind kindred, Gedon done, Gesecht fight, Gebird heard, Gernote to meet, Geplant planted, Gewrit writing, Gewitnes witness, and Their manner of putting Lands.

Their manner of Writing.

The Antiquity of their Language.

Copious and smooth.

Compared with the ancient Teutonic.

Sect. 12. the like. We have now quite left off the Ge, and where we retain this Augment we use it in Be, as still we say for Gelsea belief, Gecomen become, so we still say, bespeak betought, and several others. It were tedious here to make Observations of other Alterations introduced by time and foreign Commerce, and not hard to trace them down by degrees to such as understand the Saxon Tongue, and are conversant in the Writings of Chaucer, Lidgate and others that wrote nearer to the Conquest. An entire Volume of this might be made, and the Reader in a business of his own Country may himself take some pains or expect an account from the Learned Author of the Original of the English Nation. I shall now only farther observe that the Conquerour took not to much care to destroy this Language (which his own Ancestours spake for the substance before they came into France) Quoniam in finem super-ribus seculi à majoribus nostris monasteria quadam Collegia instituta sunt, in quibus essent lingue scientia imbueretur, & ceterum cum ali- but the English our Ancestours however Conquered were as carefull to preserve it, to which end in several Monasteries, particularly in that of Tarvisstoke in Devonshire Lectures were read of it, and certain Persons were appointed to profess it, even as long, or well nigh as long as these Monasteries continued. Had this course still been observed the Antiquities of our Nation with many things which now lie hidden and abstruse, might have been much more known, and some stop might have been put to this giddy humour of despising all words, as well as Fashions and other things, without consideration, merely because they are not foreign or new.

is Communicando) ad posterum transmitterent. Quod quidem in Canobio monialium Tarvisstokenfi in Comitatu Devonie, & multis aliis conventibus (nostri memoria) receptum fuit, credo ne ejus sermonis peritiss, ob lingue insolentiam penitus obsoleceret. Math. Parker in Pref. ad Hist. Alfredi.

AN

AN INSTITUTION
OF General History: OR
The History of the World.

The Fourth Part.

BOOK II.
Of the Constantinopolitan Roman Empire.

CHAP. I.

From the promotion of Nicephorus, to the Death of Leo the Philosopher.

The Space of one Hundred Years.

Nicephorus Emperour of the East.

IRENE being deposed as we have said, Nicephorus the Patriarch, and General Logotheta, was Proclaimed, and Crowned Emperour in the great Church at Constantinople, on Tuesday, being the first of November, in the tenth Indiction, the seventh year of Pope Leo the Third, the Second of Charles the Great, Emperour of the West, A. D.

DCCCII.

2. The day after his Promotion, knowing Irene to be possessed of great Treasures, he went to her, and with flattering words and fair promises, obtained a discovery of them; after which he neglected her, and whereas she had surrendered them on this condition, that she might be suffered to live peaceably and honourably in the Palace of Eleutherius, which she herself had built; having obtained his ends, he banished her to the Prince's Island, to a Monastery there also of her own building, and afterwards, perceiving himself hated of the People, lest they should restore her to her former dignity, without all mercy he removed her to Mitylene in very ill weather, and there in the Isle of Lesbos he died of grief, the ninth of August after. Her Body he caused to be buried in her own Monastery; for several such places of Religion she had built, together with many Hospitals for

Whereas Irene out of the Treasure.

Then banished her, where she dyed with grief.

*Theophanes Codex Hist.
compend. in Nicephoro Zo-nar. Annal.
Tom. 2. in eodem.*

for Relief of the Poor and Aged, and done many other Acts of Piety, as our Historians deliver— who much admire her, and as much detest Nicephorus, upon what ground it's easie enough to conjecture. She being gone, he betook himself in the same manner of Address to her blind Son, pretending great kindness to him, and receiving him into his own House, out of hope to flatter him into a betraying alfo of more Treasure; and his flattery had such influence upon Constantine, being a Man of a light and heedless temper, that he discovered to him Treasure that was hid in the Stigma, a place so called from its semicircular Figure. This obtained, he neglected him, as he had done his Mother. And before this, on the last day of April, Nicetas Triphyllus, by whose stout endeavours he had obtained the Diademe, he so far rewarded for his good deeds, as to take him out of this miserable world by poison.

3. All Writers now extant generally affirm him a cruel, griping and covetous Man. Glycas calls him a Man greedy of slaughters, the slave of gold, and absolutely another Midai; writes farther, that he set to sale places of Magistracy, and ever shewed a sour and angry countenance to the People, except any brought him Gold; then would he appear very gentle and gracious. Upon the City of Constantinople he laid an heavy Tribute, under pretence of repairing their old decayed Walls called Diceratum, from two Ceratia, which were paid. The dissatisfactions raised amongst the People, ode Bardanes or Bardanus, surnamed Tark, a certain Duke of the East, imagined to give sufficient encouragement to his Ambition, which so far carried him as to affect the Empire, and living at Philomelium, he made known his purpose to a certain Monk, who was esteemed to have the gift of Prophecy, Leo the Armenian being privy to the matter. The Monk told him, that if he went about to make himself Emperour, he should loose both his Estate and Life, with which answer as he was going away sorrowfull, and ready to take Horfe, the Monk calling his eyes upon his Attendants, called him back, who expecting now he would say something that would better please him, readily returned. He told him the same tale over again he had formerly heard, affirming that if he were Emperour, either by his own seeking, or by having it put upon him, he should loose both his Eyes and Fortunes. But he added, that of those his Attendants, the first and second should obtain the Diademe, and the third should be declared Emperour, but should presently perish without ever attaining to his Aims. But for all this, when in some places seditions were raised by reason of the exactions of Nicephorus, they chose him Emperour at Chrysopolis, and either willingly or unwillingly he accepted of it on the nineteenth day of July. Now did Leo and Michael forsake him, and went over to Nicephorus, who preferred the one to the Command of the Confederate Forces, and the other to be Captain of the Counts Troop; onely Thomas remained with him, and for his sake shunned no Enterprize, how dangerous soever. But Bardanus, either terrified by the predictions of the Monk, or, as our Writers say, abhorring that a Civil War should rise upon his account, sent to Nicephorus to beg pardon, upon promise of which he departed to Catabolium, and in the Monastery of Heraclius, received the Tonsure. The Emperour sent after him to come to Constantinople, under shew of kindness, but in the way, in the Island Prote (or the First Island) where he had built a Monastery, by Order of the Emperour, his Eyes were put out by certain Lycaonians. The Emperour pretended he was very sorry for the thing, which by Oath he affirmed done without his knowledge or command. But if we may believe Cedrenus, he never swore truly in his Life.

4. Nicephorus, having thus secured himself from Bardanus, resolved farther to establish his House, by crowning Emperour his Son Stauracius, a Man neither in Body or Mind qualified for such a Dignity, as our Authors write. Being thus settled at home, he made War upon the Arabians, but with such bad success, that he narrowly escaped taking, being hardly rescued out of the Enemies hands by some of his stoutest followers, and with loss and disgrace was constrained to return. The next year, or the third of his Reign, being at leisure, he applied himself to the building of Towns, as Ancyra in Galatia, together with two others, Theba and Andrasus. But the following Summer he had diversion enough given him, and his mind was sufficiently startled, by News that Aaron, the Captain of the Arabians, had invaded the Roman Territories, with no fewer than three hundred thousand Men, and having marched as far as Tyana, there erected a Moiche or House to his superstition. Many fortified places he took, and a Body of sixty thousand sent toward Ancyra, which wasted all the Countrey as far as that City. Nicephorus gathering together his Forces, took also the Field, but finding the "Arabian too strong for him wrote to him a Letter; whereby he taxed him with injustice for invading another Man's Territories, not contenting himself with what was left him by his Father. He demanded by whose command he did it. "Mahomet his Prophet he said commanded him to love all Christians as his Brethren, Almighty God took care for both, and was not delighted with the blood of Man unjustly shed. He could not come to hurt those that did him no injury, for any want he had of Gold, Silver or other matters, having abundance of precious things and Rarities of his own; but in case any thing he had would supply him he would lovingly send it. He concluded his Letter by putting him in mind that they were both Mortal, and being to die e'er long, should be called before an higher Judge, by whose award each was to receive according to what he had deserved whether good or bad.

5. To this Letter he added considerable Presents, by which the Arabian was so charmed that he condescended to a Peace on these terms, That the Romans should pay the Arabians a yearly Tribute of thirty thousand Nomismata, besides three thousand as Tribute for his own Head, and as many for that of his Son, and such Forts as the Arabians had taken and dismantled should in no wise be repaired. But Aaron being retreated, Nicephorus rebuilt and reinforced all these places which so irritated the Arabian, that this very year he sent an Army which took Theba, and another by Sea to Cyprus, where it overthrew the Churches, and either killing or driving away the Inhabitants, plundered and wasted the Island. The year following he invaded the Isle of Rhodes, where was taken a great Number of Prisoners, but the Castle was stoutly defended by the Garrison, and the Fleet in its return suffered much damage by an hideous Tempest, which our Writers attribute to the violence they purposed to offer to the Relicks of St. Nicholas at Myra a City of Lycia in their return. Nicephorus in the mean time was employed in the Marriage of his Son Stauracius, for whom when he looked for a Wife he made choice of Theophania the Kinswoman of the late Empress Irene, though the was contracted to another man. To this unjust act he added the deflowering of two most beautiful Virgins, which so incensed the People, that several Conspiracies were hatched against him, but he suppressed them e'er they could produce any thing considerable, and raged cruelly against such as were detected. Many of the Nobility made choice of Arfatus a Questour and Patritian for their Prince, but he having smelt out the design caused the Man to be shaven, and enter into Religion, which done, he banished him into Bithynia. Of the Conspirators some he put to death, others he banished, and of some he confiscated the Estates, sparing none of what condition soever, whether Bishops, Monks, or the Officers of the Great Church, in those times held in great Veneration by the People.

6. The year following being the seventh of his Reign the Bulgarians gave him farther trouble, intercepting eleven hundred pounds of Gold wherewith the Army was to be paid at Stragmon, and killing the Convoy with its Captain. At the same time Crumus their Prince took Sardica, and therein put to the Sword six thousand Souldiers, besides Townsmen a little before the Feast of Easter. Nicephorus went with an Army against him, but performed nothing worth the mentioning, onely such Officers as had escaped the hands of Crumus he handled so roughly, that he constrained them to revolt to him. Being returned to Constantinople he imposed upon the City a new Tribute for the repairing of Sardica, which vehemently incensed the People, so as to cast the Multitude into great Tumults, but he still had the better of them, and revenged himself by Executions and Banishments, as he had done before; and laid upon all the People most grievous, heavy, and unheard-of Impositions. Some of this Wealth obtained by violence, was as violently taken away by the Saracens, who making an Inroad into the Roman Territories as far as Euchaita, fell upon Leo the Captain of the Armenians as he was going to pay the Army, and took from him Sixteen Talents, a thousand and three hundred Pounds, besides the slaughter of a great Multitude of his Souldiers. This happened in February, and in July following Nicephorus undertook an Expedition against the Bulgarians, with Stauracius his Son, at parting giving order to Nicetas the Patritian and general Logotheta to lay Taxes upon Churches and Monasteries, with an Imposition of eight years upon the Houses of Noblemen, which caused great Lamentations in the City. Hereof when he was admonished by Theodosius Salibarn a Patritian and the Manager of his Affairs, who told him how the People murmured and would be glad he came by any mischief. If God hath hardened mine heart as he hardened Pharaoh's, what good may my Subjects

Choles Constantine for the discovery of more.

Poisons Nicetas Triphyllus, his promoter to the Diademe.

Is very covetous.

Exacts the Diceratum.

Upon which Bardanus utters.

But afterwards is shaven.

And his Eyes put out by the Emperour's order.

He crowns Stauracius his Son. Makes War upon the Arabians.

Who returning his wife.

The Emperour excommunicates.

Anca. part. 4.

Ceratum decem follet five nummulo continet.

Cedrenus.

Theoph.

Cedrenus ad Ann. 3. Nicephori. Idem ad An. 4.

And by Presents obtains a Peace.

Which being broken, the Arabian makes another Invasion into the Roman Territories.

Nicephorus Marries his Son to another Man's Wife.

The Bulgarians take Sardica.

Which causes a new Tribute to be imposed on the People.

The Saracens make an Inroad into the Roman Pale.

Nicephorus makes an Expedition against the Bulgarians.

Zonaras. Theoph.

jects

Se<sup>c</sup>t. 12. jeels expect from Nicephorus? And he bade him expect no alteration of what he saw at present. This Theophanes protests he had from Theodosius his own Mouth.

Refusing Peace. 7. Having gathered together the Forces both of the East and the West, and constrained many poor men to serve at their own Charges armed with Stings and Staves, with their Curfies and the Curfies of the whole Army he marched into Bulgaria. Crumus having notice of his coming sent to him while he yet lay at Marcella to desire Peace, fearing such a Multitude as he brought along with him; but overcome by his own Inclinations, as well as by the Flatteries of those about him, he rejected his Proposals, and on the twentieth day of July about the rising of the Dog-star invaded the Country, himself predicting his own ruine, for he had these words often in his Mouth. Who shall go and deceive Ahab? Whether God or the Devil draw me, I am drawn unwilling. And this was accounted an ill Omen, that before he entred Bulgaria, a much beloved Servant he had, called Byzantium, fled to Crumus from Marcella, carrying away with him the Imperial Robe and an hundred Pounds of Gold. At first he seemed to have the better, yet ascribed the success not to God, but cried up the Conduct and good fortune of Stauracius. Such Commanders as withstood his Progress, he exceedingly threatened and commanded all living Creatures to be put to the Sword, and neglecting to bury the Bodies of the slain, was only intent upon Plunder and Booty. The Court or Palace of Crumus he took and sealed up the Doors thereof as his own, and such of his Followers as imbezelled any of the Booty he punished by cutting off their Ears and other Members. Crumus now again being much out of heart offered him good terms, on condition he would quit his Country. But he puffed up with his success and acted by covetous desires, was impatient of the very name of Peace.

8. Crumus therefore acted by the more prevalent passion of desperation, like a desperate man indeed, instead of opening a way to the Enemy, blocked up all egress and regress by Palisado's, which so affrighted the Emperor that he prefigured his ruine, saying, That if they had Wings they could not escape imminent destruction. Two days after Crumus set upon his Camp, and stormed it, wherein Nicephorus himself was slain, together with all his Officers, and a vast number of Soldiers. Here fell Aetius, Peter Sifimius, Theodosius Sabbaras, and Tripbites, all Patritians, as also Eparchus a Patritian and Governour of the East; with many Protospatharii, the Excubitus Domestici, the Captains of the several Troops, the Drungarius of the Imperial Watch, the Governour of Thracia, with the other Governours of the Provinces. All the Arms and Baggage were also taken, and so miserable was the Estate of the Empire at this day, that the Writer thinks it not fit to be understood by Christians, as exceeding all height of lamentation. The Head of Nicephorus he put upon a Pole, and when he thought he had sufficiently exposed it, inclosed the Skull in Silver and caused his Nobles in an insulting manner to drink out of it. Although this day were made many Widows and Fatherless Children, yet many love it the better, and were something comforted with this only thought that he was dead. For as Theophanes affirms, never did Christians feel any thing more inopportune than his Government, exceeding all that Reigned before him in Ambition, Luxury, and barbarous Cruelties, so as to declare all in particular to posterity would seem incredible, and to him laborious.

9. But Cedrenus gives us the main of his Accusation in ten Particulars. "The first is, That he constrained his Subjects out of all Quarters to remove into Slavonia, and afterward sold their former Possessions, which thing nothing differed from an Hostile Captivity, all of them being put to the utmost extremity. The next was, That he caused poor men to serve in the Wars, and their Neighbours to supply them with Arms and Money, eighteen Numismata for each, and besides pay for them their publick Taxes, which they called in Greek Allelungium, because for Tribute they were Sponsors or Sureties one for another. The third Crime was, That he commanded an account to be taken of every Man's Estate, and the Owner accordingly to be taxed; moreover, for the Auditour or Accomptant every man to pay (for every Numisma, saith Zonaras) two Ceratia. In the fourth place all Easements and Relaxations formerly granted he took away. In the fifth, from all Religious places, publick Houses, destined to the Educations of Orphans, and all sorts of Hospitals, he caused to be exacted Smoke or Hearth money, even from the beginning of his Reign. The best of what belonged to these Places he seized to his own use, yet made them pay

"pay for what was left, and some double, though he had so emptied those Houses that they were constrained to remove out of them. His sixth Tyrannical Practice was to cause his Officers to take an account of such as were grown suddenly Rich, and to exact money from them in such manner, as if they had found Treasure. Nay, in the seventh place from such as had found but a Barrel or Vessel twenty years before, he would squeeze money. His eighth Crime was, that those who received any Inheritances from their Grandfathers or Great Grandfathers, he would force to pay something to the Treasury, though the Inheritance had been divided twenty years before; and such as bought any Slaves beyond Abidus, he constrained to pay for each two Numismata, especially the Inhabitants of Dodecanesum or the City of twelve Islands. His ninth that he made the Mariners and Seamen, especially those inhabiting the Maritime parts of Asia the less, such as never were practised in Husbandry, to buy such grounds as he had taken from other Men, and pay him Rent. In the tenth place he summoned all the eminent Seamen of Constantinople together, and to each delivered twelve Pounds of Gold, with this burthen, that for every Numisma they should pay four Ceratia for use, when at the same time they paid all the other Duties for their Vessels.

10. Thus much Cedrenus tells us, he delivers by way of Compendium, having omitted the manifold Injuries he did both to Persons of high and low condition in the City, being more than can be written, but such as these. The Slaves of Rich men he suborned falsely to accuse their Masters, rewarding the Accusers and fleeing their Masters of their Wealth. So rapacious he grew, that a certain man who living in the Forum sold Honey and Wax by Retail, and by his own labour and industry had acquired competent Wealth, being sent for he commanded to lay his hand under the Emperor's Head, and by Oath assure him how much Gold he had. He confessed he had an hundred Pounds of Gold, which he caused him speedily to bring to him. This being done, to what purpose (saith he) shouldst thou be at all this trouble? Dine with me, and taking home with thee an hundred Numisma's, therewith be contented. He adds, that being much addicted to the Manichees, and rejoicing at the difference of Churchmen, he scoffed at all Christians that loved their Neighbours. His Captains he commanded to use Bishops and Clerks no otherwise than like Slaves, to make use of their Houses and all their Goods at their pleasure, deriding those that dedicated anything to Holy uses. All Emperours that were before him, he taxed as ignorant in the Art of Government, took away Providence, and affirmed that none was greater than the Emperor if he had but the Craft of Government. Such is the Character Cedrenus gives us of this Emperor, with whom agrees Zonaras as to the substance of the Charge. He Reigned eight years and nine days, as some have it, or as others more truly eight Years, eight Months, and six and twenty days.

11. Nicephorus being slain, Stauracius his Son escaped but with a deadly wound received in his Neck, and in his Litter came to Adrianople, where by the endeavours of some Magistrates he was saluted Emperor, but could not appear in publick by reason of his Wound. Sensible of his condition he resolved to devolve the Empire upon Theophania his Wife, so great affection he bore unto her, and upon that account endeavoured to deprive of his sight Michael, surnamed Rangabes, or Rancabes, the Cyropalata, who had Married his Sister Procopia, because he stood most in the opinion of the Nobility for the Dignity. But Michael having timely notice of it so wrought with the Senators, that calling together the Soldiers by break of day they named him Emperor in the Cirque, which when Stauracius knew he quitted the Palace, and with his Wife betook himself to a Monastery, where having taken upon him the Habit, he shortly after died, having been Emperor but two Months and ten Days. Michael at first seemed free of the preferment, professing himself unable to undergo such a burthen, and made mention of Leo the Armenian, a Patritian, and Captain of the Forces of the East, as a courageous and valiant man; but Leo strained Courtsey, professing himself unworthy of the Throne, which he affirmed to belong to Michael, whom he exhorted to undertake the Government, promising him by Oath his utmost assistance; and that he would be his ready and faithfull Servant to his lives end. Thus whether at first he endeavoured to be Emperor merely to preserve his Life, or dissembled his Ambition in the offer made to Leo (which for what end soever proved of dangerous consequence, as we shall see anon) he obtained the Diademe, wherewith he was Crowned in the great Church by Nicephorus the Patriarch, after he had by an instrument written on purpose declared, that he would neither Stauracius succeeds.

But turning Monk.

Michael Rangabes obtained the Diademe.

Τὸ κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν αὐτοῦ, ἡ δὲ ἐκδήλωση, ἡ δὲ ἐκδήλωση, ἡ δὲ ἐκδήλωση.

Zonaras.

violate the Privileges of the Church, nor defile his Hands with Christian Blood, in the Eleventh year of Charles the Great, Emperour of the West, the sixteenth of Pope Leo the Third, the fourth Indiction. A.D. DCCCXI.

12. He hath the Commendation of a Pious and good natur'd Person, such as had been injured by Nicephorus, he relieved and provided for the Widows of Soldiers. Theophania the Wife of Stauracius, he courteously treated, giving her a good Summ of Money together with an Houſe which ſhe turned into a Monastery, and from the Burial of her Husband in it bore his Name. A few days after his Coronation he cauſed Procopia his Wife to be adorned alſo with the Diademe, having given her the Title of Empreſs; and after ſome time commanded the Patriarch to perform the ſame Ceremony to Theophylaſt his Son, whom he alſo dignified with that of Emperour, and propounded a Marriage for him, Theophanes writes to Charles King of the Franks. This Charles muſt be no other than Charles the Great, as we read in the Annals of the Franks, ſent an Embaſſie to Nicephorus, for Confirmation of the Peace betwixt the two Empires. The Ambaſſadors were Hatto Biſhop of Baſil, Hugh a Count, Aio a Lombard of Forumjulii, Leo the Spatharius, a Sicilian by birth, and Wilharius Duke of Venice. Coming to Conſtantinople they found Nicephorus dead, and therefore tranſacted their matters with Michael, who was ſo ready to entertain their overtures, that he ſent his Ambaſſadors with them at their return to Charles, whom finding at Aquiſgranum, they complemented in behalf of their Maſter. Their Names were Michael a Biſhop, and Theognofus, both Protopatharii, from whom Charles having received their meſſage, the Spring following ſent other Ambaſſadors to their Maſter for farther Eſtabliſhment of the Peace, viz. Amalharius Biſhop of Triers and Peter Abbat of Nonantula in Italy, both of them men famous for Learning in that Age; but coming to Conſtantinople, they found not him then in the Throne, but Leo who ſucceeded him, by whom they were heard, and diſmiſſed together with Ambaſſadors from him to Charles upon the ſame errand.

13. But to return to Michael, not long after his Promotion he was engaged in War on ſeveral Hands. The Agarens or Saracens made Inrodes into the Eaſtern Provinces, but were repelled by Leo the Armenian who governed thoſe parts, who in one battle ſlew of them two thouſand men, and got many Horſes with other booty. Crumus Prince of the Bulgarians took up Arms with more ſucceſs, having received a repulſe in a matter which he demanded. Some of that Nation leaving their former Habitations, had with this Emperour's leave ſetled themſelves within the Roman Territories. Hereby ſome better underſtanding than formerly there had been between the Subjects of both; but it happened that ſome Romans, who in the former Wars had been taken by the Bulgarians, broke Priſon and returned home. Theſe Crumus demanded to be ſent back, and ſome were for gratifying him in this particular, amongſt whom the Emperour and ſeveral Religious Perſons of great account, believing this would prevent the uſual hoſtile Incurſions of the Bulgarians. But many others were of the contrary opinion, and of them the chiefſt were Nicephorus the Patriarch, with Theodifiſus the Maſter, as Cedrenus calls him, a Man of mighty eſteem for his Vertue and Wiſedom, who urged that they were to truſt to God's Affiſtence, and not by giving up the Fugitives to gratify the pride and infolence of the Barbarians. Crumus alſo required, that the Articles made formerly by Mediation of Theodoſius of Adrynium, and Germanus the Patriarch might be obſerved, elſe he threatned to fall upon Meſymbria. But Michael by advice of thoſe about him, denying to gratify him in all, he accordingly fell upon Meſymbria, uſing in the Battery of the City the Skill and Induſtry of a certain Arabian, excellently ſkilled in the framing of Engines, who having formerly betaken himſelf to the ſervice of Nicephorus, was ſo ill treated by him that he fled over to the Bulgarians, and inſtructed them in all ſorts of Machines. Zonaras writes, that Nicephorus the Patriarch and the Churchmen, were for the delivering up of the Fugitives, alledging that a few were to be ſacrificed to the publick ſafety; but the Senators, Courtiers, and Theodoros Studites vehemently oppoſed their Delivery, by whom the Emperour was governed, being a Perſon by nature mild, and Orthodox, but ſlow in buſineſs, and eaſie to be led to any thing which his Officers deſigned.

14. Now is a Comet ſaid to appear in divers ſhapes, and amongſt the reſt of a Man without an Head; this probably having little other Foundation than in the Fancies of Men, who in ſeeing the ſhapes of Clouds as in ringing of Bells, may work their imaginations to any poſture or ſound they pleaſe. But Crumus takes Meſymbria, and waſtes the Weſtern Parts of the Empire with Fire and Sword. Here-

Makes his Son Theophylaſt Emperour with him.

Repells the invading Sara-cens.

The Bulgarians fall upon Meſymbria.

Zonaras.

Cedrenus.

Kia i mēyros Θαυρις καὶ ἀγέρη αὐτοῦ ἀπο-τίειν τὴν πόλιν.

Zonaras.

upon the Emperour ſends out his Orders for raiſing of Men, and haſtes into Thrace, his Wife accompanying him as far as Cedolim, at which his Souldiers murmured and reviled him, that he was forc'd to ſend her back. Crumus having notice of his coming drew back his Men from their Depredations, and Michael coming into Thrace, ſuffered his Men to behave themſelves ſo diſorderly, that they were as offenſive to the Inhabitants as the Enemy himſelf, which procured the Emperour no ſmall prejudice. Crumus fortified himſelf againſt his coming not far from Adrianople, and after his fitting down near to his Camp began to ſkirmiſh; but in theſe the Romans ſtill had the better, and therewith were ſo elevated, that with great earneſtneſs and impatience they required a Battle, which the Emperour either out of fear or for good reaſon deſerring till he could have a good advantage, differing they grew mutinous, and upbraided him with ſawcy and impotune Clamours, threatning that except they were led forth, they would break out, and of their own accord attack the Enemy. Michael being thus conſtrained to doe it led them forth, and put them into a Poſture for a Fight, which Crumus perceiving ordered his men alſo according to the Cuſtoms of his Nation, and to blows they came. The Bulgarians had plainly the worſt of it, and were ſo overpowered by the Valour of their Enemies, that they were about to run, Crumus their Captain having even ſpent himſelf with riding to and fro, and by his preſence and ſpeech labouring to reinforce the Battle, when Leo the Captain of the Eaſt, whoſe Ambition was now come to maturity, cauſed his Squadron to leave the reſt and depart the Field, no hardſhip or neceſſity at all urging him to it. This fight utterly diſmayed thoſe that were ſo hotly engaged, and as much encouraged the Bulgarians, whom at firſt Crumus reſtrained from purſuit, believing it was ſome Stratagem, and done of purpoſe to draw them into ſome greater danger. But ſeeing the Romans flye without all order, or any ſtop, he then enforced the purſuit, and made great ſlaughter of them. The Emperour with much difficulty eſcaped to Adrianople, and thence got to Conſtantinople, with a ſlender Equipage, leaving Leo behind him in Thrace, to protect the Countrey and reſtrefs the Incurſions of the Barbarians.

15. He being gone, Leo, who had already prepared the minds of his Souldiers by declaiming againſt him as an effeminate, unſkillfull and cowardly man, now more openly diſcovered his Deſign. Conſulting with his Officers, and concluding he had now a good opportunity, he ſent abroad his Emiſſaries to tell through the whole Army, how ſilly and unexperienced the Emperour was, and that by his ignorance in warlike matters the Roman Forces had been defeated, and their ancient glory and fame eclipsed, or rather quite extinguiſhed. By this means the minds of the Souldiers were corrupted, and ſuch as he could pick up he joynd to his own Troops, and perſwaded them to revolt from Michael. On the other ſide theſe Agitators cried up the Ability and Integrity of Leo, as a man born to preſerve the Roman Name and Empire, and they cauſed the Souldiers to compaſs about his Tent, and having reviled and renounced the other to ſalute him Emperour. He pretended great unwillingneſs, nay, ſo pertinacious ſeemed he to be in the reſuſal, that Michael Traulus or Balbus the Stammerer one of his Principal Officers drawing his Sword, and cauſing thoſe with him that were of the conſpiracy to doe the like, threatned to kill him, except he would accept of the Empire. When the Report of his having aſſumed the Title came to Michael, ſome would have perſwaded him to buckle himſelf to a vigorous reſiſtence, and ſuppreſs the Uſurper; but being of a quiet diſpoſition, he reſuſed to caſt himſelf into ſo great danger, and reprehended thoſe ſharply that inſigated him on to a Civil War, to the deſtruction of many innocent Perſons. By ſome of his intimate Friends, he ſent to Leo the Diademe, Purple and Scarlet ſhoes (Enſigns of the Empire) whereby he might ſee that he quitted the Dignity, as one ready alſo to part with his life, rather than that upon his account one drop of Chriſtian blood ſhould be ſhed, and he bad him without all fear or doubt to come and take Poſſeſſion of the Palace. Procopia his Wife being a Woman of an high Spirit, vehemently endeavourd to perſwade him to the contrary, nay, rather to dye than ſo quit the Imperial Throne, but to no purpoſe.

16. So write our Hiſtorians generally concerning this change and promotion of Leo, that it was accompliſh'd by his own Arts, through his Inſinuations, his crafty and fraudulent Suggeſtions againſt Michael. Yet the Hiſtory of Theophanes attributes the fall of Michael to his own Imprudence, alſigning the contempt and hatred of his Perſon, to his oppreſſing his Subjects by the Army he had raiſed againſt Crumus. It ſaith nothing of Leo's tampering with the Souldiers,

Y y 2

but

And in a Bat-tel through the Treachery of Leo routs the Emperour.

Leo ſaluted Emperour by the Souldiers.

Hath the Diademe and other En-ſigns ſent him by Michael.

but on the contrary, that when Michael after the Defeat would have resigned to him, he refused it. But Michael being firm in his resolution to lay down, notwithstanding for some time he was hindered by his Wife and Sons, and quitting the City, the Magistrates and People earnestly implored his assistance, for the saving of both Church and State from Ruine. He as earnestly refused, considering the difficulty of the times, the continual Incursions and Violence of the Barbarians, and being unshaken in his Fidelity to the Emperour. But perceiving the Enemy to draw nigh the City, he sent to Nicephorus the Patriarch who was much for his advancement, and desiring his Prayers, with the Magistrates and Souldiers went to the Tribunal raised without the City, and there was declared lawfull Emperour of the Romans. Michael having notice hereof, went with Procopia his Wife and his Children to the Oratory of Pharus, where being shaven he put on the Monastical Habit on the Eleventh of July in the sixth Indiction, and on the second day of the week. Thus relates the matter the History of Theophanes, who lived at this time, and was an Eye-witness of all these passages. But some say he brought down his History but to the end of Nicephorus, so that this must not be his but the addition of some other who favoured Leo, and concealed his ambitious practices in obtaining the Empire. However it came to pass, Michael laid down the Purple after he had reigned one Year, nine Months, and as many Days.

Who turns Monk.

Leo begins his reign.

Banishing Michael, And Gelding his Son.

Beats the Bulgarians.

His Character.

17. Leo the Armenian began his Reign on the seventh day of July, in the thirteenth year of the Reign of Charles the Great, the eighteenth of Pope Leo the Third, the sixth Indiction, A. D. DCCCXIII. However he first obtained the Government; having once obtained it, he took care for the securing of it to himself. Michael he parted from his Wife and Children, sending him away to the Island Prota to the Monastery there, where he spent the remainder of his Days; and Theophylact his Eldest Son, they say he Gelded, and then Banished him with his Mother and Brothers. Michael Balbus, or the Stammerer, he promoted to the Degree of a Patritian and Count of the Schola Excubitorum, and to Thomas his other Fellow-servant he gave the Command of the Confederate Forces. The Bulgarians at this time were puffed up with their late Victory, and made Incursions afresh in Thrace, where without controll they wasted all things. Leo not well settled in his Seat, thought it best at present to restrain their Hostilities by good words, and sent Ambassadors to Crumus, who thinking he had much the advantage of the Romans, refused to entertain any reasonable Propositions, and sent the Ambassadors back without having any thing obtained. The Emperour hereby forced to take Arms, omitted nothing to strengthen himself, and Marched against the Enemy. Engaging in a great and bloody Battel, the Bulgarians had much the better, and having routed the Romans, gave the Chase in great disorder, which Leo perceiving, who stood upon an Hill, with a Reserve fell down with great violence upon them, renewed the Battel, and got a notable Victory. Many were slain, and more taken Prisoners. Crumus himself hardly escaped, for having received a Wound by an Arrow, and beaten from his Horse, he had quickly fallen into the Hands of his Enemies but that he was rescued, and set upon another Horse by the more than ordinary Valour and Industry of his Guard. This Victory very much repressed the Insolence of the Bulgarians, and kept them within their Bounds some time after; and on the other side raised up the drooping Spirits of the Romans, whom the Valour of their Ancestors had in a manner forsaken. Leo in Triumph with great Spoils and many Captives returned to Constantinople.

18. After this our Historians very much revile him as Heretical and Cruel, because he opposed vigorously the Worshipping of Images. Otherwise they confess he was a most Vigilant and Industrious Prince in Reforming what was amiss in the State, omitting nothing that might tend to the benefit and advantage of it; so that Nicephorus the Patriarch whom he had Banished from his See, and out of respect to matters of Religion was his utter Enemy, yet when he heard he was Dead, confessed that the Common-wealth had lost an ungodly, but however a Great and considerable Governour. As he was very exact in ordering his matters of State, so very severe against flagitious Persons. On a time as he passed out of his Court a certain Man met him, and complained that his Wife was taken away from him by a Senator, of which he had complained to the Governour of the City, but could have no redress of the Injury. Leo commanded that at his return should appear before him both the Complainant, the Criminal, and the Judge. By Evidence the Senator was so pressed, that he confessed

Zonaras. Cedrenus.

ὁ δὲ πατριάρχης Ρωμανὸς δὲ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν υἱὸν
αὐτοῦ ἀνέβη
ἐπὶ τὸν θρόνον.

essed the Fact; and the Judge being asked why he had not punished so heinous a Crime, was silent, as having no excuse. The Judge therefore the Emperour discharged of his Place, and ordered the Adulterer to be punished according to the Laws. Most commonly Leo heard Causes himself. The Officers of his Army, his Souldiers, and all sorts of Magistrates he chose merely for their Worth and Abilities, no Place being purchased for Money or any other Consideration than that of Merit, in his time, for he was a great contemner of Money. He endeavoured also after several Accomplishments, as that of the Voice, though not naturally fitted for Musical Exercises, and he himself was wont to begin the Psalms in the Church, especially at Christmas. In conclusion, he was one of the best, if not the very best Prince of this Age in this declining state of the Empire; and had he not been against the Worshipping of Images, in many words and much flourish by our Writers who were of the contrary opinion, for such an one would have been acknowledged.

Ἐπειδὴ οὐκ ἔχοντος αὐτοῦ
ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν υἱὸν
αὐτοῦ ἀνέβη
ἐπὶ τὸν θρόνον.

19. That Jealousie, and consequently Cruelty was not his fault appears from this, that want of sufficient caution procured his Ruine. Michael of Amorium the Stammerer (as we said) he had preferred, and as it proved to that height, that he grew proud and insolent; and as it often happens to such as have done eminent Service to Princes in obtaining their Crowns, imagining that he could never be sufficiently requited, nor commit any offence which the reputation of his former Services would not expiate. Being amongst other vices very lavish of his Tongue, and not able to conceal any part of his mind, he first began to talk against the Emperour, and at length threatened to deprive him, and Marry the Empress. The Emperour being informed of his Discourses, at first resolved to dissemble the matter, and take no notice, knowing him to be very lavish of his Tongue. But afterwards he let him know that he was sensible of his opprobrious language, which he would deny, and then fall into the same fault again. Leo therefore resolving not to be wanting to his own safety, set some Spies upon him to observe him more strictly, that they might give Evidence against him, and amongst the rest there was one Enabulus very familiar with them both, who would often reprehend him, and admonish him of the danger into which those intemperate Discourses would bring him; but seeing he was not to be reclaimed, he made the Emperour acquainted with all his Designs, which in his drink he easily discovered. Leo then not thinking fit to delay any longer, on Christmas-Eve late himself in Judgment and heard his Accusers, by whom he was evidently convicted of Treason; and having not been able to deny the same, had Judgment to be Burnt alive. The Prisoner is bound, and on his way to the place of Execution, when the Empress Theodora having notice of it, runs out of her Apartment in the Palace like a Distracted Woman, lays hold upon her Husband, and calls him wicked, and an Enemy to God, in that he would have no respect to that Holy Wound, wherein he was also to partake of the Blessed Sacrament. Leo was moved with her words and passion, and fearing to offend Almighty God, respited the Execution, and commanded him to be kept by one Papia, with Shackles on his Legs, whereof he himself would keep the Key. But turning to his Wife, he told her he had done what she had desired, being overcome with her Frantick passions; but she and her Children would find at length what would be the Issue of it.

Ὁ γὰρ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀπεκρίθη οὐκ ἀδύνατον.

But is still mistrusted by the Emperour Leo.

20. So intent was he upon this matter, and as our Writers affirm, so terrified by several signs portending his Destruction, that the following Night he could not sleep, but to secure himself of the Traitor, broke into the House of Papia, where, to his great wonder, he saw him bestow in a very fair and costly Bed, Papia lying by on the bare Floor, and so fast asleep, that with no joggling or stirring could he awake him, a thing not incident to those that expect nothing but death. With this sight he was so vexed, that he resolved on the Destruction both of the Prisoner and his Keeper. But Papia got knowledge of his coming by one of the Watch, who knew him by his purple Buskins, and observed narrowly his behaviour, and having told to Michael the extreme danger they were now jointly in, as desperate Men they consulted how to extricate themselves. Michael pretended by the means of one Theotistus to come to conference with certain Religious Persons about the estate of his Soul, to which the Emperour being not averse, when Theotistus had liberty to come to him, instead of providing for his Soul he took care for his Body, causing him to go to his fellow Conspirators and to threaten them, that except they would enter into some sudden den and effectual course for his deliverance he would discover them all to Leo.

21. These Men being very much startled, ventured upon this course to rescue him, and preserve themselves. It was the Custom then, that such Clerks as Sung in the Emperour's Chapel did not (as afterward) lye in the Court, but each at his own House, whence about the third Watch of the Night they all met at the Ivory Gate, and by that entering the Palace, so went to perform the Morning Service. With these the Conspiratours mixed themselves, and carrying their weapons hid under their Cloths, entered the place, and in an obscure part of the Church hid themselves till the sign was given. One part of the Service being done, in comes the Emperour according to his Custom, and with a loud Voice begins his usual * Anthem, when they take the advantage, but by mistake fell upon the Dean of the Chapel, or he that † Presided over the Clerks, either because his Head was covered as the Emperour's was, for it being then a great Frost they all wore warmer Hoods, but he quickly uncovered himself, and by shewing to them his bald Pate saved his Life. The Emperour perceiving the matter, conveyed himself to the Altar, and there with the chain of the Incense Pot, or as some said, with the Crofs, defended himself as well as he could: but they all rushing upon him together, some wounded him in the Head, others in the Belly, and others in other Parts, till overpowered by the Number, though he demeaned himself most stoutly, like an Hart at a Bay, he was at length knock'd down: Perceiving one of a vast stature to fetch a blow at him, he conjured him by that Grace which inhabited the Sacred place to spare him, but he answering that this was a time for killing and not conjuring, cut off his Hand, together with the Horn of the Crofs. At length, speet with wounds, and falling to the ground, one of them struck off his Head; and to such an end came Leo, after he had Reigned seven years five months and fourteen days. In a Book of Predictions belonging to the Emperours Library, is said to have been an Oracle of Sibylla, expressed in an Hieroglyphical way, by a Lion, from the Back of which, as low as the Belly, was drawn the Greek Letter X and a Man, who standing behind the Lion, thrust a Spear into his Body through the Letter. This obscure Oracle the Questour of old time could alone Interpret, affirming it to signifie an Emperour, that being called Leo, should be slain on the day of Christ's Nativity.

22. The Body of the slain Prince the Conspiratours cruelly dragged into the Cirque, being void of all manner of fear, for that they set a guard about the Court, out of which they presently cast the Emperess, together with her four Sons, Sabbatius, to whom, being designed Emperour, was given the Name of Constantine, Basil, Gregory, and Theodosius, all which, putting into a Boat for the present, they sent packing into the Island Prota, and there caused them to be gelded, after which Theodosius speedily died it seems of the wound, and was buried with his Father, and Constantine thereupon grew dumb; as for their Mother, she was shut up in the Monastery of the Lords. But Michael, freed now from his Gaoler Papia, with the Shackles on the Feet (for Leo had got the key) fate down upon the Imperial Throne, and was saluted as Emperour, and worshipped by all in the Palace. About noon the noise was all spread abroad, and then, as time it was, were his Bolts knocked off with an Hammer, and without either walking his Hands, thinking on God, or doing any thing fitting such an occasion, he halted to the Great Church of St. Sophia, desirous to be Crowned by the Hand of the Patriarch, and received for Emperour by all the People, trusting only to his fellow Conspiratours, and the Murderers of Leo. Here Cedrenus makes a wonder, first, that Leo of such and so many flatterers should have none to stand up in behalf of his cause, but like so many creeping Animals, each of them betake himself to his lurking hole; and at the impudence of Michael, that he should enter the Church, not like some Murderer or Hangman, whose Hands were polluted with Bloud, but as some Conquerour, who had deserved the Palm of Victory, and justly prized himself for some notable Achievement. Whereas he had not shed hostile but civil Bloud, and that not in an ordinary place, but at the Holy Altar, where the Lord's Bloud was offered for expiation of sins. This Michael was born at Amorium, a City of the upper Phrygia, and in this manner became Emperour, in the seventh year of Ludovick the Son of Charles the Great, Emperour of the Franks in the West, the fourth of Paschal Bishop of Rome, in the thirteenth Indiction. A. D. DCCCCXX.

23. As he came to his Preferment by Treason and Cruelty, as safely and ignominiously he Reigned, shewing himself to be Emperour, by no other thing than the Diademe and the Purple. All Discipline, Order, and rational ways of Administration, he with great scorn rejected, as formal fopperies, but indeed because he knew they would discover his folly, and render ridiculous those courses, his own Inclinations and silliness put him upon. Such as in his mean Estate had been his Trade or Exercise, now in the highest degree of Eminency and Power he esteemed his best qualifications. As (if you will have it in down right terms from Cedrenus) to guess and divine, whether * Pigs newly pigged would prove well, if brought up; to be skillful enough to stand near to a kicking Horse or Ais, to have skill in Mules, whether they would prove better for riding or carrying other burthens. In like manner by the mere look, to be able to tell what Horses would be good for the Race, and what for the War; the like concerning the fruitfulness of Sheep and Cows, the quantity of Milk they were like to give, and the quality of their young newly brought forth. Most ingratull he had been to his first Master and Benefactor Bardanius, and worse did he behave himself to Leo, whose Wife and Children he used as we have said, only allowing them a small pittance to live on out of their great Estate he had seized, with some of his own Servants to attend them. Learning so much he abominated, that he would not suffer Children therein to be instructed, lest they should be able to understand and resist his madness, or be able to write more readily than he could, for therein he was so slow, that another might as soon read a Book as he go over the Letters of his own Name. Such Ignorants as he, have left an evil example to the world; for before the decay of the Roman Empire, and Hogherds and Neatherds came to Arrive at the Sovereign Power, who in their younger years by reason of the Poverty of their Parents, had no opportunity to learn, Princes were the best instructed in Learning, the greatest care was had to breed them in Philosophy, and they thought it behoved them to excell others, as well in knowledge as in birth and Dignity; but these upstarts, these base and illiterate Persons coming to be Emperours, began first to decry as mean, useless, and formal, that to which their slender education could never reach, and what they did not understand.

24. But as seldom it happens, but that some notable mischief happens in the Reigns of such fordid Princes, a Civil War fell out in the Eastern Parts, which brought all sorts of inconveniences upon the World, and consumed so many mortals, that it caused a great scarcity of Men throughout the Empire. The Author of it was one Thomas, concerning whose birth and condition, there is a difference amongst Writers. Some have reported him born of obscure Parents, Barbarians, and very poor, and that according to his Original he led his Life in his own Country; in continual drudgery and hard labour, the onely means of his preservation. After this he came to Constantinople, where he got into the Service of a Senator, and there plaid several pranks, being so impudent as to defile his Master's Bed, which being discovered, to shun the disgrace and punishment of his crime, he fled to the Agarens (or Saracens) and with them having continued the space of five and twenty years, and approved himself by his Actions much unto them, he abjured the Christian Religion, and turning Mahometan, procured the Command of a good Party of Men, and to be sent against the Christians, promising to subdue the whole Roman Empire to their Authority. And left the Romans should be averse to him as a stranger and a man of another Religion, he affirmed himself to be Constantine their Lawfull Prince, the Son of Irene, whom his Mother had deprived both of his Eyes and Empire, and who before this time had left the World. Others there were that affirmed this Thomas, the same with him that served Bardanius, and concerning whom the Monk of Philomelium prophesied, as we said, before, and whom Leo had made Captain of the Confederates; that this Thomas understanding Leo to be Murdered by Michael, partly to be revenged on him for the death of his Patron, and partly to satisfy his own malice (for from his youth he had ever born ill will to Michael) and out of fear of the Monk's prediction, he now took Arms. First of all he raised a great Army in the East, the place of his abode, lifting all that were able to fight, whereof some followed him out of hatred of Michael, who had incurred the contempt of all men, others followed him out of good will, some for hope of booty, and those whom none of these motives urged, he compelled to give their Names to the enterprize. His advantages were, that in respect of the gravity of his aspect, he was revered by all, besides he was very familiar and fair spoken; qualities

Who is Murthered by the Conspiratours.

His Emperess cast out.
And his Sons Gelded.

Michael in his Shackles saluted Em-perour.

A Civil War occasioned by one Thomas.

Τὸ πρῶτον, πρὸς
τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγο-ράσαν ἐπορεύθησαν ὁμοῦ ἐκείνην ἐν τῇ
πόλει, &c.

* Τὸ πρῶτον ἐκείνην ἐν τῇ
πόλει, &c.
† Τὸν αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ πόλει, &c.

Sperevere summi cuncta amore Principi.

very acceptable to Souldiers, and inferiour to no man in strength and courage.

25. Having seized on the East, and made sure of the publick Revenue there, as he began to he proceeded, whom he could not allure to his Party, by force bringing them over to side with him. Asia he miserably waisted, and dealt severely with those Cities, which out of respect to the Emperour, stood out against him; the whole Region he took, except the Countreies of the Opficiant and Armeniaci, which through the valour of their Commanders, Olbianus and Catacelas, stood it out, and for that were rewarded by the Emperour, with the gift of the Smoak-money or Hearth-money, which was wont to be paid into the publick Treasury. But the Saracens now taking notice how the Romans were imbroiled in a Civil War, took the advantage, and made incursions into all places, Islands as well as others. Thomas was hereat concerned, fearing lest his Men affrighted hereat, would desert him, and betake themselves to the defence of their own possessions. He resolved therefore by a sudden onset to repress them, which he did, together with a promise that he would put into their Hands the Territories of the Empire, and subdue it wholly to their Command. By this means being rid of them, he put the Diademe on his own Head, and assumed the Title of Emperour, being declared such by the Patriarch of Antioch. Now did he increase his Forces by new Levies, not only out of the Neighbouring, but remoter Nations, as the Egyptians, Indians, Persians, Assyrians, Armenians, Chaldeans, Iberians, Zichii and Cabiri, and changing his Name to that of Constantine, adopted one whom he thought would be a support to his usurped Dignity. Michael all this while was not wholly idle, but made preparations for resistance, but so unequal, that Thomas engaging with them, easily defeated them, killing many, and forcing the rest for to shift for themselves. Having by this success very much established his affairs, he pursued his good Fortune with great industry, setting out a Fleet to Sea of Ships, both fit for Fight and Burthen, which had such success, that he became thereby Master of the Emperour's Navy, and appointing the Rendezvous at Lesbus, with eighty thousand men, came to Abydus, waisting all places in the way. Not only such as were easie to come at; but such as made resistance he took by force, and set on fire.

26. One Castle there was which made stout resistance, and this Thomas sent his adopted Son to Attacque. He proceeding without care or good order, fell into an Ambush laid for him by Olbianus, who sent his Head to the Emperour, and he dispatcch it back again to Thomas, as he was proudly pursuing his Victories. But little affected with his loss, which the world was wide enough to supply, Adoption being easier than natural Generation, he remitted nothing of his former vigour, but passed over into Thrace just upon the changing of the Moon, when the Night was darkest, that he might not be discovered. Michael was aware of it, and to prevent his Design, had reinforced all his Garrisons, and by both good words and deeds confirmed the resolutions of his Souldiers as much as he could, although to very little purpose. For as soon as he was returned to Constantinople, and Thomas was arrived in Thrace, they all revolted to him, and followed him to the Siege of that City. The Emperour hereupon as he could, raised other Forces, which committing to the Conduct of Catacelas and Olbianus, he sent to meet the Tyrant, and put a stop to his proceedings, and he neglected not his Sea affairs, putting matters there into as good a posture as his present condition would suffer. But Thomas like a Torrent, with his vast Armies, both by Sea and Land, bore down all before him, easily routing and dissipating all the Emperour's Forces, wherever they appeared, and struck him with so much Terror, that he caused a chain to be drawn cross the Haven, from the Castle to the opposite Village, to stop his Progress into the inward Parts of the adjoining Sea.

27. At this time there lived in the Island Scirus, one of the Cyclades, a certain Captain called Gregory, whom being a near Kinsman of Leo the late Emperour, Michael had thither banished for boldly upbraiding him with his death. Thomas thought fit to draw him to his Party, and for that purpose, gave him the Command of twelve thousand Men, and sent him to Attacque Constantinople, being assisted by a strong Squadron of Ships, that the Defendants thus set on both by Sea and Land, might have the greater diversion and less ability to defend themselves. He himself intended to follow with the gros of the Army. The chain was without much difficulty broken, and Siege laid to the City on all sides, after which Thomas himself coming up, many furious Assaults were made, but the Inhabitants made such vigorous and resolute opposition, that nothing they produced, and Thomas found himself deceived in his expectation, that the Citizens upon his Approach would have opened their Gates and received him in, which caused him to send Gregory before, as it were to prepare for his entrance, resolving to follow in State with the Body of his Army, and his newly adopted Son Anastafius, who for this Honour had lately forsaken the Monastical Life. Finding himself treated with opprobrious Language, and threatened with Death instead of a kind Reception, he incamped himself as strongly as he could, and sent a strong Party to the Euxine Sea, and Hieras to take in all the Fortified Towns, that he might not have an Enemy at his back. As he made preparations to Attacque the City afresh, he was much discouraged by the union and resolution of them all within, and much distracted in his mind what course to take; but at length, trusting to his multitudes, resolved to try his Fortune again by Storm.

habitants

28. By break of day commanding the Signal to be given, he draws his Men out of their Trenches. To his Son he commits the Scaling of the Wall by Land; by Water, he orders his Fleet with Fire and all sorts of things that would annoy, to attempt the Town on that side, and he himself resolves to fall upon the Towers of Blacherna, wherein he conceived the chief strength of the Besieged to consist. No fort of Engine for Battery or Ladders wanting, nothing omitted to strike Terror into the Defendants, and to force them to yield. But on a sudden arose a violent Tempest which both dissipated the Ships by Sea, and by Land so disordered the Engines and Instruments of Battery, that they were rendered useless and unmanageable, so that he was constrained to give over, and found a retreat. This so encouraged the Citizens, that now they took more resolution, and began to make Sallies, which so vexed and wearied him, that Winter also being sharp in those Quarters, he resolved to raise the Siege, and leaving Thrace, Quarter his Army in some warmer place, with firm purpose to return in Spring as soon as the Season would permit. This he performed, but found Michael now better provided for his Reception, being furnished both with a Fleet and a Land Army. At the same Quarter he gave the Assault as before, and with as much violence, which while it continued, Michael found a convenience to talk with some of his Souldiers, to whom he promised not only pardon for what was past, but good rewards in case they would desert his Service, and abstain from the shedding of Blood in so bad a quarrel. But they were deaf to all his charming Language, and rather more animated against him, measuring their fidelity to their own Captain by his strength, which in their apprehensions made every way desperate the cause of Michael.

29. Michael perceiving his good Language had no operation upon the Enemy resolved, with greater hopes to apply it to his own Men, and that he did with such success, that making a rally upon the Enemy he did great Execution, and killing very many of them obtained a notable Victory. Thomas having received this defeat at Land had no better success at Sea, where his Navy miscarried through the Cowardise of his men, who terrified with the approach of the Emperour's Triremes fled back to Land, and some of them revolted, the rest retired unto their Camp. His success was better against Gregory the Kinsman of Leo, who perceiving his Affairs go down the wind, and believing he would in a short time dwindle to nothing, resolved to make his Peace with Michael, and the rather because the Emperour had gotten his Wife and Children into his Hands. But Thomas had timely notice of his intended flight with that party which he commanded, and as he was marching away, before the Emperour could receive the News of his revolt fell upon him, and easily mastering his Party took him alive, and presently put him to death, having left a convenient Number of men, all this while to keep the siege, lest the Enemy should take the Advantage, and fall in upon his back. The exploit performed, he returned to the siege, and sent Letters up and down which falsely proclaimed a mighty Victory, and sent for such Ships as lay in Greece, as purposing to pursue his good Fortune by Sea also, and the Fleet came as far as Beridus, consisting of fifty Vessels in all, as well those of burthen as the other for fighting. The Emperour's Fleet had notice of their coming, and secretly by Night set upon them. Many were taken with the men, others were burnt; and those that escaped came up to Blacherna, which they joined with the Land Forces.

Endeavouring to storm it, is diverted by a sudden Tempest.

And much weakened by a City from the Town.

30. In the mean time several skirmishes happened at the siege, sometimes Michael himself, otherwhiles Theophilus his Son, or Catacelas and Olbianus issuing out upon the Besiegers, for he durst not adventure upon a set Battel, because Thomas far exceeded him in Numbers. But by this time the Report of the Roman Emperours being blocked up in a Town, had flown far and wide, and was come to the Ears of Mortagon the King of the Bulgarians, who was therewith so affected, as pitying the Dignity rather than the Man he sent privately, to encourage him with a promise, that he would come speedily to his assistance. Michael either for that he suspected what this stranger in conclusion might do, or was unwilling the Countrey should be wasted by another Army, or rather to save his Money in getting and keeping, whereof none of his Predecessours had been more sordid, thanked the Bulgarians for his kindness, and excused his not accepting of his Relief. But for all this Mortagon who was accustomed to War and Depredations, and desirous to confirm the League for thirty years, which he had made to the Armenians, undertook the expedition against Thomas, and coming into the Roman Territories as far as Cedolus, there incamped himself. Thomas, as he had reason, was very much disturbed, finding himself too weak to continue the Siege, and fight the Bulgarians too, great Numbers of his men being slaughtered, the News whereof coming to his Fleet before Constantinople, it presently revolted to the Emperour. Yet such was his Ambition and Hopes of attaining his ends, at last, that encouraged by the retreat of Mortagon into his own Countrey, he still continued his siege.

31. But finding all his Attempts frustrate, at length he marched to a place called Diabasis, some furlongs distant from the City, and very convenient for Excursions where he incamped himself, and thence wasted all near the Walls, without any formal siege or drawing out his Forces. The Emperour encouraged by this his Recede raised a considerable Army, which he committed to the Conduct of Catacelas and Olbianus, and thereto joyning his Guards and the ordinary Militia, he led them all against him who received them courageously, and by way of stratagem ordered his men to counterfeit flight, and suddenly again to retreat, and so terrifie the Enemy. But his Design would not take at this time. His men were quite tired out with expectation. Such of them as had Wives and Families at Home, now began to think of returning to them; how lavishly they had shed civil and innocent Blood, and to gratify the madness and ambition of one man spent three years in prosecution of that, which now there was no probability of attaining. The sign being therefore given they fled not in jeft, but in good earnest, and dispersing themselves, most of them went over to the Emperour. Thomas himself with a few got to Adrianople, and Anastatius his fictitious Son seized upon the Castle of Birya, Michael resolved to make sure of them e'er they could recruit, and in the first place pursued Thomas, whom besieging, he resolved not to use any Engines or Instruments of Battery in attacking the Town, but to starve him out, partly because he would not deface the Walls and Houses, and that he might not teach the Scythians, bordering upon the place, the manner of taking Cities by storm. A line he drew about the place, and blocked it up every where. Thomas put forth all such as were not fit for War, but necessities at length failing those that remained, most of them made their escapes as they could, at a little Gate, and over the Walls by Ropes, part of them going to the Emperour, and part to Anastatius still lying at Birga.

32. Those that remained with Thomas being reduced to such extremity, that they were forced to eat rotten Leather and other things which naturally Man abhors, at last entertained Correspondence with Michael, and having obtained pardon for what was past, delivered him up in Fetters to him. Michael observing the Custome received in those times by the Emperours, upon such occasions, first caused him to lie all along on the ground, and then set his Feet upon his Neck, after which his Hands and Feet being cut off, he was put upon an Ass and shewed about the Camp, saying only thus much, Thou who art the true King (or Έκείνος ος Δαδεις Βασίλειον) have mercy upon me. The Emperour went about to examine him if any of his Courtiers were of the Conspiracy, and he had doubtless accused many had not John Exabulus the Patritian advised Michael to forbear and not to trust an Enemy that accuses his Friends; by which saying he saved many miserable Citizens and the very Friends of the Emperour from great impending mischiefs. Thomas at length spent by lingering Torments, breathed out his last in the middle middle of October, a Man who at the beginning enterprized great things, and with great Alacrity and Vigour prosecuted his Designs, but fell less and less as he went on, and his last attempts answered not expectation. Those at Briga understanding what their Friends at Adrianople had done, treated Anastatius in the same manner; for they delivered him up bound Hand and Foot, and he perished after the same manner as did his Father, succeeding him in his punishment, though not in his Imperial Dignity. The two Usurpers were thus dispatched, but some Remnants of the Rebellion remained. Pavium and Heraclea two Maritime Towns of Thrace, still held out, not so much out of respect to them as hatred to the Emperour, because he refused to restore Images. But e'er long Pavium was taken, the Walls being overwhelmed by an Earthquake, and Heraclea was stormed on the side lying toward the Sea.

33. There yet remained two Castles, Cabala and Saxiana, whereof the one was held by Choreas, the other by Gazaremus, who thence exercised Robberies and Depredations. The Emperour offered them their pardon, and more than that to make them Masters (such was the Name of the Dignity) but they rejected his offer, which he knowing, corrupted some of the garrison Souldiers, so that going out to rob another time, the Gates were shut against them at their return, and flying into Syria, they were there apprehended by some of the Governours, and nailed to Crosses. By this means the whole Rebellion was now extinguish. Upon such as were taken in the War Michael no otherwise animadverted, than by setting them first on Asses, and so carrying them about to be seen at the Circensian Games, after which they were banished. But, as Cedrenus writes, all mischiefs ceased not with the War; but as well Europe, as Asia, the Head, as the Tail, (so he terms it) were chastized from Heaven, by Slaughters, Fires, Earthquakes, Robberies, Civil Broils, sudden and unexpected destruction of Cities, signs in the Heaven and Air; and the like mischiefs invaded also the Islands, as well as the Continent; all which he ascribes to this, that they would not worship Images. But (to come to the matter) at such time as Thomas began to raise Commotions, when the rumour thereof spread abroad, the Saracens that inhabited Spain, thinking a fit opportunity to be presented them, desired of their Prince, that they might send out a Colony; for that they were too numerous for the Countrey they inhabited. Their Prince Apocharpus by Name (their Armenians Cedrenus rather than they themselves called him) very glad of the opportunity, and concealing his design went with some long ships furnished with them to waste the Eastern Islands which belonged to the Empire, both to gratify the People, and to discover whether there was any fruitful Isle, into which it would be worth his labour to send a Colony. Sailing away at the beginning of the Spring, and coming to several Islands he found no resistance, all Ships and Garrisons being gone to the assistance of Thomas; great booty he got, and so returned, bringing home especially Intelligence concerning the fertility and pleasantness of Crete, as a place abounding with Milk and Honey; for so he termed it.

34. When therefore Winter was over, and the season permitted, with another Fleet consisting of forty Ships and furnished with Souldiers, he set sail, and arriving at Crete, there landed his Men. He incamped upon the Promontory Charax, and sent Spies to discover the Countrey, who returned without having met any to oppose them, when in the mean time, he caused all the Ships to be set on fire. The Army being much affrighted at the sight, and returning to the Camp to know the cause of the misfortune, their Captain told them that they themselves were the cause thereof, who had been earnest for planting a Colony in some fruitful place: but no fruitfuller, nor fitter every way to plant in did he know than this, now he had both satisfied their desires, and had eased himself of their Importunities. But they objected to him the want of their Wives and Children, to which he answered that they should speedily have captive Women which they might use as Wives, and on them beget Children: and satisfied with this answer they intrenched themselves. Photinus the Protospatharian and Presept of the East, having speedy notice hereof gave Intelligence also to the Emperour, desiring he might have sufficient Forces to withstand so impending a mischief, who accordingly with great supplies dispatched to him Damianus another Protospatharian, and they, joyning their Powers together, prepared for an expedition. But it happened that coming to engage the Saracens, at the very first onset Damianus was slain, which so affrighted the whole Army that it ran away, and amongst others Photinus to the Emperour as fast as a swift Pinnace could carry him with the News of the Overthrow, who yet rewarded him with the Government of

And forced to raise the siege upon the arrival of the Bulgarians to the Emperour's aid.

'n a Battel is driven to Adrianople.

But at last Thomas is delivered up to the Emperour.

The Inhabitants of Heraclea and Pavium reduced to obedience.

Choreas and Gazaremus subdued.

And the Civil War finished.

The Eastern Isles wasted by the Saracens.

They invade Crete.

Thereof Photinus adverteth the Emperour. They defeat him and Damianus.

And fix at Chandace.

Sicily instead of that of Crete, whereof the unmannerly Agarens had now deprived him. They could not for some time, agree amongst themselves where to plant, being solicitous for a place of safety, till a certain Monk coming down from the Mountains directed them to Chandace, which finding very convenient for their Designs, they there built a City to command the whole Island, and thence they made Excursions, and took all the Towns within the Island in a short space, one onely excepted. After this manner became the Isle of Crete, subject to the Saracens, who straight began to persecute such as professed the Christian Religion.

Michael marries a veiled Virgin.

35. But, Michael, freed from the civil Wars, ascribed the Issue not to the Goodness of Almighty God, but to his own Prudence and Sagacity. His Wife being dead and having a great desire to be married again, he deals with some of the leading men in the Senate, by their complaints to constrain him as it were to take another; nay to threaten him in case he did it not, using this worthy pretext, that their Wives must by no means want a Sovereign Lady and Mistress. To satisfy them therefore he will take a Wife, but not without this Caution neither, that in case she overlive him, they will ingage to esteem and honour her as their Empress, and make Emperour one of the Sons he should have by her. After all this stir, he takes out of a Monastery a Virgin called Euphrosyna, one that from her Childhood had ever professed the Monastical life, and was reported to be the Daughter of Constantine, whose Eyes were put out by his Mother Irene. Being married, he began to think of the Isle of Crete, and what a disgrace it was, for him to suffer the Saracens in it to nest themselves; therefore he sent away Craterus the Governour of the Cibyroots with seventy Vessels, to which joining all the rest that belonged to the Islands, he made up a considerable Fleet, and therewith landed his men, and very fiercely fell upon them, who with as much resolution received him. From break of the day they fought till noon, without any appearance to which side the Victory inclined, but, towards Evening the Saracens were worsted and put to flight, many of them being slain and many taken, and their new City might have easily run the same fortune had day and light sufficed. But the Conquerours were, neither, willing to take too much pains, and not valuing those that had escaped whom they doubted not, but they could easily master when they pleased, they gave themselves to Drunkenness all the Night, as if they had been at home, and not in an Enemies Country; not so much as setting any Watch, or taking the least care of their own Security. The Saracens now, how weary and wounded soever, perceiving the condition they were in, when they were all drowned in drink and sleep fell in upon them, and cut them all off, hardly one escaping with the News from the Island except Craterus himself, who got away in a Merchants ship, but the Captain of the Saracens seeking for him, and missing him among the dead sent those after him who took him also napping in the Island Cos, and there nailed him to a Cross. This expedition so ill succeeding, one Oriphas, a man considerable both for Courage and Skill in military Affairs, raised by the Emperour's order an Army which got the Name of Tessaracontarius or Portieth, because to every man were assigned four many Aurei. Herewith visiting the Isles partly by Ambushes, and partly by open Engagements, he repressed the Insolence of these Cretian Saracens.

Craterus and all his Souldiers slain by the Saracens.

Euphemius usurps and brings the Saracens into Sicily which they seize on.

36. At this time it happened that one Euphemius an Officer in the Army, falling in love with a veiled Virgin in a Monastery, and encouraged by what he knew the Emperour to have done in the like case, took her thence by force and lay with her. Her Brothers hereupon make loud complaints to the Emperour, who gives order to the Governour of Sicily, if upon examination he found the matter objected to be true, to cut off his Nose. Euphemius having notice of his doom draws into conspiracy his Fellow Officers, and makes so strong a Party, that when the Governour comes to execute his Orders he easily repels him, and flying over to the Ameras or Governour of Africk, promises him to betray Sicily into his Hands, and pay him a large Tribute if he would declare him Emperour of the Romans. This the Ameras thought was no great matter to do, and therefore furnishes him with Forces, and sends him away with the glorious, but empty Title of Emperour. He accordingly brought the Saracens into Sicily, but as he went about the Island to persuade the People to own and receive him for Emperour indeed, and coming to Syracuse went so near the Walls, that he was drawn about a bow shot off from his Company, as he endeavoured to make his way by a flattering Speech, two of the Citizens being Brothers agree together to take the opportunity and kill him. They made him great Reverence, and both Michael dies.

Dalmatia revolts from the Empire.

Theophilus his Son succeeds him.

Puts to death the Murderers of Leo his Predecessour.

Is a strict observer of justice, and against worshipping of Images.

by words and gestures flattered him into a belief of their kindness and fidelity, inasmuch that he to requite their Civility called them to him, and went to salute one of them, who caught him by the Hair of the Head, and so fast held him till the other cut off his Head. But the Saracens fell not short of what they designed and he promised, for introduced by him they got possession of the Island, and not onely that, but upon Calabria and several other parts, by reason of this Vicinity they seized, waiting all where e'er they came with Fire and Sword. But though Cedrenus and others relate this story of Euphemius all together, yet two years seem to have been taken up in transacting the whole Affair, the Death of the Emperour Michael, being related just after the Conclusion. He died after he had reigned nine years of a Dysentery, and was buried in Justinian's great Chapel. Dalmatia also revolted from the Empire in his time, which was very full of Calamities, which credulous People believed was foretold by an Oracle. They also concluded, that the Empire should at length be devolved upon him, from some Circumstances which fell out at the Promotion of Leo his Predecessour. As Leo being about to pray for happy success put off the Robe he then had on, he gave it to hold to this Michael, being then the Master of his Horse, who without any more to do put it on. And when the said Leo invested in another Robe, went into the Chapel belonging to the Palace, this Michael following him negligently trod on his Train, which it's said Leo accounted an ill Omen, and thence guessed that he would in time raise Commotions. From these passages, and what has been said of the Monk, we may see how they were addicted to Prophecies and Ominous conceits in those days.

37. Michael Balbus being dead, Theophilus his Son now arrived at Man's Estate succeeded him in the Month of October, and the seventh Indiction in the sixteenth year of Ludovicus Emperour of the West, the second of Gregory the Fourth of that Name Bishop of Rome. A.D. DCCCXXIX. This Theophilus shewed himself a marvellous observer of Justice, and a severe Assertour of the Laws of the Empire, though as his Adversaries, upon account of Religion take upon them to censure him, he was herein hypocritical, pretending this Zeal merely thereby to secure himself from Conspiracies, to cut off all Pretences and Advantages, that any who had a mind to usurp, might catch at, and improve against him. To this purpose he put in Execution such a Design, as could not but to the understanding fort evince his Father to have been both a Traitor and a Tyrant, and himself an Usurper if he came to the Dignity by the way of Succession, and upon his account. He resolved to put to death all those that had any Hand in the Murder of Leo and his Father's Advancement, and for that end published an Edict whereby he summoned all such as had had any Favours, Dignities or Preferments conferred on them by him, to the House called Magnaura, and from the Five Towers Pentapyrgium. When they were all assembled he mildly told them, that his Father had in his Life-time resolved to reward such highly, as had procured his preferment, and done him eminent service, but forasmuch as being prevented by death, he could not effect what he purposed, he had left him as his Executour to pay that Debt. Therefore he desired them that were his Father's Friends to separate themselves from the rest, into a peculiar place, where they might receive the Reward intended them. Such as had assisted in the Murder of Leo, in expectation of some great matter gladly and readily discovered themselves, whom having incamped as Fish in a Net, he commanded the Officer thereto appointed to put the Laws in execution, telling him that Seeing both God and he committed the Power to him, he should give these men their full hire, who had not onely defiled their Hands with Man's blood, but had killed the Anointed of the Lord within his Temple. Having said this he dismissed the Assembly, and the Officer going to work took the Malefactors, and punished them as those that had committed Murder. This performed, Theophilus sent back his Mother-in-Law, and shut her up in the Monastery, where first she had been professed. And the Engagement wherewith her Husband had bound the Senate in her behalf, could not stand her in any stead.

38. Such was Theophilus his beginning. He was so exact a Follower of Justice, that he was feared by bad, and admired by all good Men, this onely blot our Authors find in his Eiscocheon, that he was against the worshipping of Images, and as severely as any of his Predecessours. Every week he rode to our Ladies Church in Blacherna, and heard all Complaints of oppressed People, without any partiality. Riding also about the Markets, he himself would view what was to be sold, and take notice of the Prices of Commodities, wherein he went 829.

Joan. Europa-zeta, ex eo Ce-drenus, Zena-rus, alii.

below

below himself, but he would not trust any to do it, especially in Meats and Drinks, where the Poor were most concerned. In all other matters relating to Government he was very exact, having an especial regard to Courts of Justice. And although he confederated thus in these things yet was he not of any Mean, Covetous or Sordid Spirit, as appears by this following Passage. Looking on a time over the Wall of the Palace towards the Sea, he beheld coming into the Haven a Ship of burthen goodly to behold under sail, and very well fraught with Merchandise. Being much taken with the sight, and asking to whom the Vessel belonged, and what was her Lading, it was answered, to the Emperess, with which answer at present he seem'd satisfied, and replied nothing. But staying till the time came he was to go to the Church in Blachernis, in his way he took the Haven, where he called to the Mariners, and demanded of them if they wanted any thing, when after often asking, at length they replied, that by the care of the Emperour they had all things that were convenient for them; he demanded if they did not know that God Almighty had made him Emperour, but the Emperess his Wife had made him a Merchant or Mariner; and he added with Indignation, was there ever any Emperess before that saw her Husband a Merchant? This said, he caused the Men to come ashore, and to bring their own Goods along with them, then fire to be set to the Ship, which consumed it with all its Merchandize and Tackling. He rebuked his Wife with great earnestness, and threatened her with destruction if ever she attempted any such thing again; telling her that Traffick was ordained for private men wherewith to sustain themselves, and that if Princes should besides their publick Incomes apply themselves to Trade, their Subjects should not have wherewith to live. Her Name was Theodora, by Birth a Paphlagonian, the Daughter of one Maximus a Man of Noble Parentage, and Theodistia Floriana his Wife.

39. Another Story is told, which as much shews his Justice, and both of them declare his generous Disposition. There was a certain Souldier in the Army that had an excellent Horse, of so good Heels that he had often saved his Master's life in Battel. The Officer under whom he served taking notice of him, indeavoured by all means, both by Threats and Promises to get him from him, and when he could no ways prevail, accused him to the Emperour for a Coward and Calhied him. Not long after it happened that the Emperour wanted an excellent Horse, which bringing to the mind of this Officer the repulse he had received from the Souldier, he takes away his Horse by mere force, and presents him to Theophilus as of his own free gift. After this there being a necessity of raising more Forces, this man is prest to the service afresh and engaging in Battel, for want of his Horse is overtaken and slain, leaving a Wife and Children behind him. The Widow left in low condition, and hearing much of the Emperour's Justice, comes to Constantinople, and as he rode to the Church in Blachernis, according to his custom, upon her Husband's Horse, caught him by the Bridle, crying out that he was hers, and that the Emperour had been the cause of her Husband's death. Theophilus amazed desires her to have patience till he returned to Court, and then to come to him, which she did, and having told him all the Story, he sent immediately for the Officer, and caused the Woman to step aside. He being examined would confess nothing, till she being produced, and confronting, he could no more deny the Fact, but first standing mute, acknowledged what she said to be true as to all Circumstances, and then he fell at the Emperour's feet with Tears imploring his mercy. Theophilus took away all his Estate and gave it to the Widow and her Children, put him out of Command, and sent him into Banishment.

40. Besides these good qualities he was very magnificent in building, amongst other things he rebuilt the Walls of the City, pulling down the old and mean ones, and rearing others in their room, so lofty that they could not be scaled by the Art of Enemies. To all dissolute living he was so averse, that he turned Whores out of the Stews, and converted the place to the better use of harbouring Strangers, giving it his own Name, and afterward it became a Nunnery or Receptacle of the better sort of single Women. He himself is reported never to have been overtaken with Women but once, being then inflamed by the extraordinary beauty of one of the Emperess's Attendants, but seeing his Wife to be much concerned about it, he confessed his fault, asked her forgiveness, and with hands lifted up to Heaven, vowed that he had never been faulty in that kind before. He much affected Musick, and composed several Anthems. He had very short Hair, and therefore published an Edict, that no Roman should wear Locks longer than than his Neck; but otherwise also by Laws he indeavoured to retain the ancient Roman temperance and moderation. Having five Daughters and never a Son, his best beloved, Mary by Name, he resolved to Marry to some Person of Principal note and merit, and pitched upon one Alexius Moseles, an Armenian by Birth, descended of the Genitas, one beautiful in Person, and in the flower of his Age. He first conferred on him the Dignity of Patritian, then of Pro-consul, afterward of Master, and at last created him Cesar, and with a numerous Army, matters then requiring it, sent him into Lombardy. There he managed his matters to the satisfaction of his Father-in-Law, but what satisfied him, dissatisfied his Emulatours, who accused him as Ambitious, and affecting the Empire, and they urged a Prophecy as if A should justify our Th, which as soon as he understood he desired leave of Theophilus to retire to the Monastical life. The Emperour unwilling to do so much injury to his Daughter, denied his Request, and compelled him to keep his Rank and Power; but she dying not long after, and Theophilus having a Son born to him by Name Michael, when he again importuned him to dismiss him, he assented, though with much regret, and assigned him such places as he thought most commodious for his retirement.

41. Besides this Alexius he was otherwise well furnished with eminent Captains, two especially, Manuel and Theophobus. Manuel had formerly been General to Leo, and Master of the Horse to Michael Rangabes. Theophobus was the base Son of a certain Persian Ambassadour, defended of the Royal blood, who after his birth presently died, and left him at Constantinople. It happening that all those of the Royal House in Persia being either destroyed or driven away by the Saracens, the Persians hearing of him sent to Theophilus to desire they might have him to be their King; but he refused it, chusing rather to make him a Patritian, and to give him his own Sister in Marriage, and he made a Law which gave leave to his Subjects to Marry with Persians. By this means many of that Nation came over to him, and gave their Names to the expedition he was now undertaking against the Saracens, out of whom he raised a Legion, which was called the Persian, and joyned in the Army with the Roman Legions. The Saracens having invaded the Roman Territories, Theophilus with these two Captains marcheth against them. When they came near the Enemy, and began to consider whether they should give Battel, Manuel was against the Emperour's engaging in Person, affirming it a thing below him to grapple with a Man so inferior as the Amermumnes was, and that some of his Captains with part of his Forces was to do it. But Theophobus contended that the Prince himself ought to fight, and advised him by Night to fall on with the Foot, and to leave the Horse for a Reserve. The Emperour approved not of his Advice as to falling on by Night, but resolving to do it by day light, Imprael the Amermumma or General of the Saracens, whether out of fear, or to let the Romans see how much he despised them, went away with part of his Army, and left eighty thousand men with Abuzachar one of his Captains to fight them. Battel being joyned many fell on both sides, and at length the Cohorts or Schools, as they called them, with their Captain or Domesticus gave ground and turned their backs. The Emperour with his Guard, two thousand Persians, and Theophobus got to an Hill, where they were incompanied by the Saracens, who sought to take him Prisoner, and his own men strove as hard to defend him, and in this Contention they spent all the day; when night was come Theophobus commanded the Souldiers to shout and make a noise with their Trumpets and Instruments of Musick as if they rejoiced for some Relief that was arrived, which Stratageme took so well that the Saracens concluding they had Succours come indeed, left they should be surrounded by their Enemies, retreated to seven Miles distance, and by this means the Emperour escaped to the rest of his Army which had run away. Yet did he onely chide, and in no severer manner animadverted upon them. Theophobus, as reason was, he very much honoured, which made his Countrey men the more fond of him, inasmuch that they Petitioned Theophilus, that under his Conduct they might by themselves make War against the Saracens. And he so far gratified them, that he suffered none else to command them.

42. The following year he marched against the Saracens with very good success, which encouraged him to make another attempt the next Spring, but this did not answer expectation. For he had far the worst, and was very near being taken in Battel, when Manuel his General considering what a disgrace it would be to the Roman Name and Empire, propounded it to the Army as an Argument to animate them to fetch him off, and when he had broken through to him and found him

Not at all given to Covetousness.

Very just.

Endued with several other good Qualities.

Engaging with the Saracens and Thinks he is worsted.

him wearied and in despair, he intreated him to follow him as he made him way through the throng of the Enemies. But Theophilus still loitered, pretending he must not discourage his men by flying, which Manuel perceiving came back when he had already passed to him the third time, and drawing his Sword threatened to kill him except he would follow him, (telling him it much more behoved the State that he should die than be taken) by which means he brought him off. For this service he deserved a reward, and the Emperor was not slow to give it, and the thing being so evident, to confess he had been his Deliverer. But as Princes do not care too much to be beholden to their Subjects, he envied him for his Reputation, and there wanted not those who gratified him by accusing the General of Designs to Usurp, so that it was resolved he should loose his fight. This was discovered to him by one that formerly had been his Servant, and now was Cup-bearer to the Emperor, whereupon he fled to the Saracens, and upon condition that he should not be constrained to change his Religion, revolted to them and was joyfully received. He was speedily advanced to the highest Honour and Command he was capable of, and with an Army the Saracens sent him against their Neighbours called Cermata. But he refused to fight with any other than such Romans as there were in Captivity, whom gathering into a Body he therewith did very notable Service, and took a Castle called Chorofan, striking greater terror into the Besieged, not only by his valour, but the difference of Language and Habit, and an unexpected change of the manner of fighting. But not only was he very acceptable to the Saracens, for fighting with Men, but making War also upon Wild Beasts, which did very much at this time infect their Country, and afforded him this opportunity of keeping his Souldiers in Action.

43. These things being made known to Theophilus, vexed him much, as taxing himself with Ingratitude and high Imprudence, in disobliging so serviceable a man, therefore he resolved to get him Back by any means. At that time Monks being wont to travel and wander up and down in all Places, he employed one of that sort whom he knew fit for his purpose, as least liable to suspicion, sending by him Letters strengthened by a Seal of Gold and a Cross, which gave Manuel such satisfaction, as concealing the Message he studied how to return, and after some time effected it in this manner. He desired leave of Ismael Prince of the Saracens to make an Expedition against the Romans into Cappadocia, to be revenged chiefly on those who had accused him to the Emperor, and easily obtained it, together with the Son of the Prince to accompany him, as having already given sufficient Testimony of his Fidelity. The Governour of Cappadocia he prepared beforehand to receive him, and being arrived at the place he desired, and going out from the Army with the Prince his Son and a few Followers as to Hunt, he bid the Young man get him back to the Saracens, and let them know his Resolution of returning into his own Country. Getting safe to Constantinople he was gladly received by the Emperor in the Church of Blacherna, there had conferred on him the Place of Magister, and was shortly after Godfather to his Son Michael, whom afterwards he adorned with the Imperial Title and Ensigns of Majesty. After this in the Spring Theophilus and the Saracens on each side made preparations for War, but coming near together were struck with such mutual fear, that both Armies returned home without having any thing performed. At his return came Ambassadors from Chagan the petty Prince of Chazaria, desiring leave to build up a Castle called Marcel on the Borders, as very convenient for restraining the Incursions of the Petzinacæ toward the River Tanaïs, which they obtained, and one Petronas was sent to see the thing performed. Petronas when he came back acquainted the Emperor that he could not continue Master of Cherson, except he sent thither a Governour of his own, the manner having been to put some of the Natives into the command. The Emperor being satisfied with his Reasons sent him to execute the office, with orders to the Townsmen to put him into possession, which they obeyed.

44. The year following Theophilus made an Incursion into Syria against the Saracens, which waiting all in his way he took two Cities, and carrying away the Inhabitants made himself Master also of Sozopetra the Native place of the Amermumes, though he sent to him and earnestly begged of him that he would spare it. This done the Emperor returned to Constantinople, leaving behind him Theophilus to settle some matters relating to the Army, which past, he was to follow after. But the Reverence which the Mercenary Perfians had for Theophilus, being removed they fell into a Mutiny, and laying hold of Theophilus at Sinope, would would needs make him Emperor, though he used all the Protections and Intreaties he could; but when he could not divert them, he sent private notice of it to Theophilus to signify his Averseness to the Thing, and as soon as he could made his escape and got to Court, where he was kindly received and enjoyed his former Honours. And for this time no farther trouble happened, the Perfians being also pardoned, and received to favour, yet it was thought fit that being thirty thousand in Number they should not continue together, but be dispersed by two thousands into several Provinces under their distinct Officers. But the Prince of the Saracens or Amermumes, as these Greek Historians call him, was wonderfully incensed for the destruction of his Native City, and breathing nothing but revenge, hired men out of Babylonia, Phœnicia, Palestine, Cæloxyria, and the farther Africk, (that lying next Spain Cedrenus means) giving Orders to every Souldier to engrave upon his Target the word Amorium which being the Birth-place of Theophilus he was resolved to destroy. At Tarsus all his Forces met; and Theophilus aware of the danger marched to Dorylæum with such an Army as he could raise, distant three days journey from Amorium. Now there were several that persuaded to decline rather than withstand the fury of the Saracen Prince whose Numbers far exceeded his, and to remove the Inhabitants of Amorium to some other place. But he thought it would much reflect upon him, and resolving to protect the place, sent thither Aetius a Patritian the Captain of the East with a strong Party, which he also committed to the Conduct of Theodorus Craterus, (whom Zonaras will have to have commanded at Amorium) Theophilus Basiliarius and others, men very eminent in their time.

45. The Prince of the Saracens lying at Tarsus, deliberated with those about him what to do; for he was of opinion that he should not pass on directly for Amorium, but send his Son with part of the Army to make an Attempt upon the Emperor, whom if he should beat he should share in the Victory, and if it happened otherwise, it would be best for him to be quiet. His Son therefore he sent together with Ameras, who then commanded Merylene; ten thousand Turks, all the Armenian Forces, and his Commander in chief, and they came and incamped themselves at a place called Dazymenum. Theophilus with his Army, consisting especially of Perfians both Eastern and Western, marching to a Town called Anzin, resolved before he would engage to view the Numbers of the Enemy, which finding to exceed his, it was to be considered with what Stratagem and advantage they should fall upon them. Manuel the Domestick of the Schools, as Cedrenus calls him, and Theophilus thought it best to be done by Night; but all the rest were for day light, with whom the Emperor agreed. And by day light a most fierce Battel was fought, wherein first the Romans had the better, the Saracens turning their backs. But the Turks so exceedingly galled the Pursuers with their Arrows, that they quite turned the course of the fight, and made those to run and forsake their Emperor, who but now seemed to have the Victory. Yet did the Captains manfully behave themselves, and so did the Perfians, who compassed him about, and earnestly laboured for his Preservation: yet he had been slain had not Night come on and some Rain fall, which wet the Bowstrings of the Turks so as they could not so conveniently use them, and the Romans had thereby opportunity to retreat. In the Night Manuel who commanded the Watch, observed the Perfians to entertain Discourse with the Saracens in their Language, about betraying the Roman Army and returning into their own Country, which revealing with all speed to the Emperor, he advised him by all means, with some choice Followers to provide for his own safety by flight, now while he had time, and not fall into the hands of the Saracens. He answered, that this he could hardly do, especially to leave those to perish whom he had brought into the danger, but Manuel replied, that if God would but preserve him, they would look to themselves, whereupon Theophilus took his Advice and fled away to a place called Chiliocnum. Hither such as we said ran away from the Battel being fled, it's said they met him, and confessing themselves unworthy of life, who had so deserted their Emperor, drew their Swords and would have killed themselves, but that he restrained them, by affirming he was preserved by God, and that therefore they should not perish.

46. But the Saracenian Prince understanding how matters had prospered under his Son, resolved without delay to fall on Amorium, which joyning Forces with him, he did, drawing first a deep Trench about it. The Turks plied it with Arrows, and the Saracens with Batteries, yet the Romans within valiantly defended themselves and it, though the storm continued without Intermission. Theophilus

And with difficulty brought off by his General in the next.

Who being accused to the Emperour flies to the Saracens.

But is sent for to the Emperour.

And received into favour.

Theophilus enters Syria waiting the Dominion of the Saracens.

Is required by a Visit from them.

Who rout the Emperour's Army.

philus with much ado having escaped at Dorylaeum expected the event, whence he resolved to try the temper of the Saracens by Messengers sent with rich Presents, and to desire of him to desist. But he being implacably incensed by the Destruction of his Sozopetra, upbraided him with Cowardize, and scoffing at the Message, commanded those that brought it to be secured till they might see the Issue. Then did he more vigorously than ever attack the Town, dividing his Forces into many Parties, so as when one was spent or beaten off, another fresh one might succeed, with which pertinacious course he hoped that the Besieged would be tired out and surrender. Yet the Defendants were so resolute, that the Town was not to be taken but by Treachery, to which one Badatius a Townsman was Bribed, who upon some discontent had abjured the Christian Religion. He gave them notice where the Walls might most easily be mounted, and an Assault being made, which so succeeded as the Saracens by storm took the Place, and made unspeakable Slaughter of the Garrison and Inhabitants, being enraged at their Resolution, and for the Death of so many eminent Men as on their side had perished in the Siege. And with the Citizens so perfired this most Beautiful of Eastern Cities, nothing remaining of it but Rubbish. The Women and Children were led away into Captivity, the Men generally being put to the Sword. But Callistus, Constantinus, Theodorus Craterus, all Patritians, and others who were eminent for their Employments in the Army or the State were taken, and the Prince now in an insulting manner caused the Ambassadors to take a view of the estate of Amorium, and then sent them with an Account thereof to their Master.

47. He sent them back again to desire that such eminent Persons as were taken, being his Kinsmen and Allies, and the rest of the Prisoners might be set at liberty for their Ransome, offering four and twenty Centenaries; but he rejected them and their Message ignominiously, saying he should be unjustly accounted a Fool indeed, if he should accept of but so many Centenaries, when it had cost him no less than a thousand Centenaries in his Preparations. Theophilus hereupon as overwhelmed with insupportable Calamity fell into excessive Melancholy, so as to abstain from all sustenance, receiving nothing but some Snow-water, which cast him into a Dysentery. The only Thought or Discourse he would admit, was how to be revenged for Amorium. To this end he sent away Theodosius a Patritian toward the King of France, to desire his Assistance, and to procure him to invade those Parts of Africk which belonged to the Amermunes; but this Design came to nothing, Theodosius Dying upon the way e'er he could deliver his Message. His Melancholy and Disease both encreasing upon this Disappointment, in his Litter he would be carried to Magnaure, where calling together the Senate, with the Chief Men of the City, he most sadly lamented the posture of his Affairs, and earnestly moved them, that being mindfull of their kindness to him, they would continue faithfull to his Wife and Son, and secure them from all Treachery. His lamentable Speech they Answered with as lamentable a Cry, and praying for his Life and Health, promised him that in case so unacceptable a thing as his Death should happen, they would stand by his Wife their Lady and Mistres with their Lives and Fortunes to the utmost. After this he lived not long, yielding to the Distempers of his Mind and Body when he had Reigned twelve years, three months and twenty days. His care for his Posterity it seems was so great, that he would not dye without having Theophilus bear him company, whose Enemies took advantage at the Revolt of the Perfians in the Battel we mentioned, and encreased the Jealousie conceived of him by the Emperor, from their giving to him the Title of Emperor, urging that the Revolt was not without his Deceit and Procurement. Having before caused him to be Imprisoned, when he was at the point of Death he commanded his Head to be cut off and brought to him, which touching with his Hand he breathed out these words, together with his Soul: Henceforth I am neither Theophilus, nor thou Theophilus. But some reported that Oriphas the Drungarius of Bigla slew him without having received any orders.

48. Theophilus being Dead, Michael his Son succeeded him, the third of that Name, surnamed the Drunken: in the second year of Lotharius, Emperor of the West; the fiftenth of Gregory the Fourth, Bishop of Rome; the Fifth Indiction, A.D. DCCCXLII. His Father by his Will left Manuel the Magister and Domestick of the Schools, and Theodistus the Patritian and Logotheta Dromi his Tutors or Governours, but the Regency was committed to Theodora his Mother, who by their Directions ordered all Affairs of State. Presently after the

Old

Old Emperor's Death, the two Great Ministers lately mentioned went into the Circus, where calling the People together they rehearsed to them his last words and Will, insisted upon his Love and good Inclinations to them, and with many fair and alluring words endeavoured to gain their Affections toward his Young Son and Successor, who promised, if need should so require, to shed their Blood in his behalf, and their Promise instantly confirmed by Oath. Theodora thus settled in the Government was drawn wholly to matters relating to the Church, binding all her endeavours for the restoring of Images, which for a considerable time by the late Emperours had been forbidden: and she raised a great Persecution against the Manichees, which became an occasion of unspeakable Calamities in the East. For those she employed in the Inquisition, using no moderation but great cruelty in their Office, Nailed some of those they Condemned to Crosses, and others put to Death by many and unheard-of sorts of punishment. An hundred thousand by this course they made away, and confiscated their Estates, which drove the rest into Desperation and Rebellion, which was began by one Carbeas of that Sect, who served Theodorus Melissenus, Commander of the East, in quality of Pratemandator. He understanding that his Father was Crucified, enraged by so ignominious an Affront, fled with five thousand of his Persuasion to the Ameras of Mitylene, and from him to the Amermunes himself, by whom being graciously received he presently after invades the Roman Territories, and therein builds two Cities, which he called Argannum and Amera. Then great numbers of the Manichees flying to him for shelter, to these two he added another for their Reception, by the Name of Tephrica. From these three places joyning with some Saracen Officers, they made Inroads without intermission into the Emperor's Dominions, with such success generally as pleased them, onely Alimus the Governour of Tarjus making an Inroad into Armenia, was cut off with his Party, and Amer the Ameras of Melitena for some time was diverted by the Revolt of one of his Fellow-officers. But having Conquered his Adversary, and being a Man impatient of Rest, he joyined himself with Carbeas, and renewed his Hostilities. Against them at length was sent Petrouas, Brother to the Emperess, and Domestick of the Schools (which Office he executed, though it properly belonged to his Brother Bardas, who otherwise employed in State Affairs could not attend it) who led down an Army of Thracians against them, as we shall see hereafter.

49. In the mean time Michael the Emperor growing up towards a Man, was mightily inflamed with a desire to Govern by the procurement of this Bardas his Uncle, who thereby and by all other ways fought to screw up himself into Power. The great obstacles to his Rise were Manuel and Theodistus, who being the Emperor's Governours, and constantly attending in Court, were by one means or other first to be removed. It luckily happened for him that there fell some misunderstanding betwixt them, which he so encreased that thereupon Manuel quitted the Palace, and retired to his own House. Having thus removed him, he attempted the same upon his Instrument Theodistus, whom he more hated, because he had taxed him for having incestuously to doe with his Daughter-in-Law. The Engine he used was the Emperor's School-master, a wicked and intractable Man, whom the Scholar (commendable yet in this, that he was his Master) willing to Prefer to some considerable Office, Theodistus had opposed it, telling him such Preferments were to be bestowed according to Merit, and not upon undeserving Persons. The School-master acted by Revenge, and the constant encouragements of Bardas, never left whispering into the Ears of the Youth, that all things went ill through the bad management of Theodistus; that he had a Design to make a Marriage for the Emperess or one of her Daughters, and put out the Emperor's Eyes; otherwise terrifying him, and telling him he must be quick, and very crafty in providing for his own safety. They having often met and deliberated about this matter, resolved to have Theodistus made away, and that after this manner. As he went to Lanfacum for the Recording of some Transactions, the Emperor following after at some distance should give the sign by these words, Take him away. Theodistus apprehending the sign, endeavoured to save himself by flight towards the Court in the Circus, where the Secretaries then had their Office, but was stoped as he ran, and Bardas drawing his Sword threatened to kill any that should make any opposition or defend him. He was then committed to Prison till order should be taken about him, which was not long in taking nor executing; for left the Emperess should in the inter-

A a a z

F I T T

A Perfection against the Manichees.

Which causes a Rebellion,

And the Destruction of the East by the Inroads of the Saracens.

Manuel one of the Emperor's Guardians leaves the Court.

Theodistus the other; Murdered by the procurement of Bardas, Uncle to the Emperor.

ἡγεῖται ὁ βασις σεργίους, sic
imp. Occid. communiter vocant Cedre-nus, alii.

Joannes Curopalata.
Adriana.
Zenarus.
Cycas.

And Race the City Amorium.

Which makes the Emperor melancholy.

After which he Dies.

Michael his Son succeeds.

rim attempt any thing, they sent one to dispatch him, with whom he strugled some time, but Died of a wound received in his Belly.

50. He being dead, Bardas took upon him the Office of Caniceus; but Theodora understanding what was done, ran with her hair all about her shoulders up and down the Court, which she filled with her shrieks and cries, cursing her Son and Brother, and willing to them the like end. Bardas could not bear her Reproaches, but resolved that she, as the next obstacle to his Designs, was to be removed. She being an understanding Woman, was aware hereof, and resolved not to put all into blood by making resistance, but to call together the Senate, and give them an Account what Treasure was now in the Palace, both to obviate the extravagant expences of her Son, and to make manifest how careful and frugal she had been, during her administration of Affairs. She told them, that of Gold there was one thousand and ninety Centenaries, and three thousand of Silver, partly gathered together by her Husband, and partly by her self; besides very great Wealth in other kinds, of which she thought fit to let them know, lest her Son should hereafter make them believe that he had left him an empty Purse; and she caused the Officers of the Treasury to be present, who bore witness to what she had said. Having thus delivered her self, she resigned her Power and Government, and departed from Court; of which her Son was not at all displeased. For all this Wealth the foolish Young Prince in a small time consumed. Being above all things delighted in Riding, and Driving of Chariots, he refused not the Office of a Driver himself in the Cirque, and such as would accompany him and play with him at this or other idle and Rascally Sports, he profusely enriched, bestowing upon each an hundred, eighty, or at least fifty Pounds at the Christening of their Children. Having thus made away all his Mother had left him, when the solemn time came that he was to make Presents, having no other means left him of making Money, he caused to be melted and stamped those famous Trees of Gold, which (as Gliscas relates) being made in the late Emperour's time by Leo the Philosopher a Bishop, the greatest Scholar of his time, held in the Boughs a number of Golden Birds, which by virtue of an Engine sung melodiously, together with Golden Lions which roared also by the same Device, besides as many Vultures, and other stuff of the same metal, with other things, for which the Imperial Palace was famous, and gratified the curiosity of Strangers. In the same manner he had dealt with the Imperial Robes, but that Death prevented him, and Basilius his Successour recovered them out of the Hands of his Instruments, who found in the House only three Centenaries of Gold, and nine Bags of Miliarisfa, which he presented to the Senate, and deploring the Poverty of the Empire, Commanded them to Consult by what means it might best be supplied.

51. But Bardas and his Nephew proceeding in their evil courses, and still jealous of the Empress, caused Petronas her own Brother, when on a time she came to the Church in Blackernis, to lay hands on her and her Daughters that accompanied her, to shave them, and make them all Nuns, which Indignity she not long survived. Now the whole Power was in Bardas his Hands, whom his Nephew Honoured with the Dignity of Curopolata, as a Reward for thus dealing with his Mother. After this he raised an Army, and undertook with him an Expedition against the Saracens, and the Ameras of Melitena, and laid Siege to a City of theirs, situate upon the River Euphrates. Herein they contained themselves, as willing to have it believed that they durst not adventure out, and their Design prospered so well, that the Emperour's Army thereupon grew secure, and took no care how they ordered their matters. The Saracens then took the advantage when they were at Prayer, and going to Communicate on the Lord's Day, and issuing out fell upon them, put them easily to the Rout, the Emperour escaping by the swiftness of his Horse. All the Baggage of the Army was taken, and Charbeas Captain of the Manichees so notably behaved himself, that besides many of the Inferiour fort which fell by his Hands, he took no fewer than an hundred of the most eminent Commanders alive, who were all put to Ranfome, only one Seon died in Restraint. Two years after, Amer with an Army consisting of thirty thousand Men invaded the Roman Territories, whom Michael opposed with no fewer than five and forty thousand Thracians and Macedonians; but Amer making his Passage through bye-ways, fell upon him unexpectedly, and with as much ease as formerly, put his Army to flight. And he himself had been taken, but that Manuel the Domestick of the Schools in good time came in to his Rescue with a strong Party. The rest shifted for themselves, every Man as he could.

52. Two

52. Two years more having passed after this Engagement, Amer marches with another Army of forty thousand Men into the Roman Provinces and wastes Armenia, with the Maritime Parts; at which time it's reported that he imitated the mad frolic of Xerxes, in lashing the Sea, because it flopped his farther pleasant progress. The Emperour upon the News, sent Orders to his Uncle Petronas, with all the force he could make to march against him, who then lying at Ephesus, and much disturbed upon Receipt of the Letters, consulted one John a Monk, who had the opinion of a Prophet, and by him was promised victory against the Saracens. Encouraged hereby, he hastes toward the Enemy, whom in an advantageous place he compasses about, and after some vain attempts of getting loose, cuts him off, and his whole Army. The Son of Amer being abroad on Foraging, and hearing of the disaster, made with all speed he could toward Melitena, but the Officer that commanded the Charfian Straits, took him and his Party and presented him to Petronas. Now returned Petronas to Constantinople, carrying along with him this Monk, whom he commended as a wonderful Man to the Emperour and his Brother Bardas, and for his good Service was made Domestick of the Schools, Manuel being lately dead. Bardas being now left without a Competitor, ordered all things as he listed, putting in and out all Officers, and now procured to himself the Dignity of Cesar, Michael in the mean time, as he was well pleased he should, by his ridiculous Actions making himself despicable in the eyes of all Men. Bardas hoping one day to be sole Master of all, that he might by something commend himself to the publick, endeavoured to bring into fashion again Philosophy and other Parts of Learning, which by reason of the ignorance of the later Emperours, had for many years lain buried in oblivion, appointing to each Science it's several School in the Palace of Magnaure. He was frequently present also in the Courts of Justice at the Cirque, and procured the Laws again to flourish, which in these times had been also much neglected.

53. In the mean time, all the Coasts lying upon the Euxine Sea, were grievously wasted by a sort of Pirates called Rossi, a Scythian People, fierce and cruel, inhabiting some of the Northern Parts of the Mountain Taurus. They brought the City of Constantinople also into great danger. About the same time another Fleet of Pirates from Crete infested those Parts, lying about Proconessus and the Cyclades, and most horrible Earthquakes happened, whereof the greatest on Ascension day, wherewith Walls, Churches, and other Buildings and Works were overturned. Besides Rivers and Fountains failed of their Waters, and many other Prodigious happened in divers places; of all which when the Emperour had notice, he regarded them not, so intent he was upon his Races. One fortith Act of his must not be past over in silence. His Predecessours, that they might have certain notice of the Incurfions of the Saracens, and to give warning to the Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Countries, that they might not be surprized, caused to be Built as near Tarsus, in the Border of theirs and the Saracenic Dominions, a strong Fort or Tower called Luluni, on a very high Rock, wherein were placed certain Men, who as soon as ever they perceived these People to be about an Invasion, by firekindled, were to give notice thereof to others that kept their station in another Hill called Argens. Those in Argens gave a sign in the same manner to others that watched in Aegialus, those to others at Mamas. From Mamas the sign was given to the Cirque, from the Cirque to Mocillum, and from Mocillum to those that watched in the Mount of St. Auxentius, who in the last place gave the sign to the great Palace. By these Beacons were the Emperours, in a moment as it were, certified of the Enemies motion, and the Countreymen had timely warning to secure themselves and goods, in the strong holds adjoining. Now it happened that on a time, near the Church of St. Mamas, this Michael beginning his Races, the Beacon was set a fire, which exceedingly afflicted him, lest the People should not view well, and consider his Dexterity in Riding. And left by any such sight; the attention of the Spectatours should be diverted for the time to come, he forbade the fires to be made in the places that were near to the City.

54. Another time as he sate in his Chariot, and the Horses were just ready to be let goe, word was brought, that the Ameras of Melitena, did grievously harass the Province of Asia, and being come already as far as Malagina, threatened the rest with Desolation, which being told him by the first Notary, in a forrowfull manner, who also presented him with the Letters of the Domestick of the Schools, matters of Importance as he imagined, he looked upon him with a grim and angry Countenance, asking him how he durst, Villain as he was, disturb him, buffed

Theodore the Emperour's Mother gives an account of the Treasure,

Which Michael lavishly consumes.

Theodora shaven.

An Expedition against the Saracens.

But with ill success.

They invade the Roman Territories, and rout the Emperours Army.

The firing of Beacons forbidden by the Emperour.

Who is wholly addicted to Racing and Villany.

busied in so important an Affair, with such trifling matters, especially now onely intent upon this, to turn off him that should Encounter him, to the left Hand, which was the wager laid. He would debase himself with all sorts of mean Actions, blaming his Predecessours for insisting upon State. He had ever in his company a crew of most impure and profligate wretches, whom to abuse all things Sacred, he would cause to put on Copes, and other Vestments wherein Churchmen were wont to Officiate, and thus Habited, to imitate the most Sacred Functions and Holy Mysteries. One Gryllus a Rogue, he called Patriarch; others he named Metropolitans, and took to himself the Title of one of the chief Bishops and President of the Colony. With this crew he would meet the Patriarch in Procession, and once sent for his Mother, as to meet Ignatius, who then held that Place, and as the good Woman on her knees begged a blessing, the Villain Gryllus appeared, having all the while hid his Beard, and with filthy gestures derided the poor Lady, who with such Anger as upon such an occasion became her, denounced vengeance unto her Son. Such were the manners and company of this dissolute Prince, whom vengeance at last overtook according to his Mother's Prediction, but first all his Governours, and such as should have better principled and advised him, were to receive their Punishment. How Theocritus came to his end we have already seen, and Bardas his Tragedy is now to follow, which was ushered in by a terrible Dream, and several other presages, as our Authors observe.

55. He had persuaded the Emperour to Arm against the Saracens of Crete, who infected his Subjects upon all occasions, and were now come in their Expedition into Thrace, as far as a place called Chorus. There the Servants of Bardas, whether out of Design or unadvisedly, for they were in an hurry, pitched their Masters Tent upon an Hill, the Pavilion of the Emperour being placed below in the Plain. This advantage was taken by his Enemies, who ceased not to render Michael jealous of him, and to inflame him against him to procure his sudden Destruction. Yet the Interest of Cæsar was such at Court, that they had much difficulty to bring about what they desired. For, his Son Anigonus bore the Office of Domestick of the Schools, and had the other Officers of the Army much at his Devotion; and Symbattus the Logotheta Dromi, being his Son-in-Law, was concluded of his Party, although the Emperour himself privately had taken him off, and no Man so much watched an opportunity to destroy him, and to him alone was committed the trust of giving the privy sign when it should be done. Now Symbattus making a Relation of what had happened, signed his Face with the Cross, which was the sign agreed of among the Conspirators. Yet were they very slow, being awed by the Relations and Dependents of Bardas, there present, though Michael fearfull lest the Plot, if not now executed, might be turned upon himself, by one he could trust, sent and animated them all he could. The Fact had not now been committed, but Basilus the Emperour's Chamberlain, (who for especial reasons, as we shall see at large, was more concerned than any other to have him made away) stirred up his courage, and exhorting those present to stand to him courageously, resolved upon it. Bardas seeing them come upon him with drawn Swords, fell down at the Emperour's feet, and was cut all in pieces, after which they exposed his Genitals ignominiously fixed upon a Pole. So great a Tumult hereupon ensued, that brought the Emperour into extreme danger; and he might have easily miscarried in it, had not Constantine the Drungarius of Bigla come in in good time with a strong Party of Men and quieted those concerned, affirming that Bardas was justly put to Death. He being after this sort dispatched, Michael cast off all thoughts of the Expedition to Crete, and returned to Constantinople.

56. Here it's obvious to remark the Custome of Courtiers and great Ministers to raise themselves upon the Ruine of others, and that usually they themselves are served in the like sort; the Interests of times or humours of Princes easily changing, although their hopes so beguile their wits that they do not consider it. Bardas had cast down others, as steps to mount to his great Preferment, and more than probable it is, that the Emperour himself must at length have fallen for a greater advantage, had he not been prevented; but now his Removal makes way for another Favourite, who executes at last what he had but designed. This was Basilus but lately mentioned, by Birth a Macedonian, but as some reported, of Armenian Descent, and that from the stock of the Arfacides, out of which alone of old time the Kings of the Parthians, Medes and Armenians could be chosen, out of respect to Arfaces the First, who recovered the Kingdom to the the Parthians from those of Perfia. And long did this Race continue, Artabanus and Clieus being the two last of the Kings, who being driven from their Inheritance, came in the time of Leo the Great to Constantinople, and he entertained them honourably, assigning them the convenient abode in the City. Afterward the King of Perfia invited them to return, about which while they were Consulting, Leo removed them to Nice, a Town in Macedonia, whence in process of time, when the Saracens had Conquered the Perfian Kingdom, the Amermannes also invited their Posterity to return. This being understood by the Emperour Heraclius, who perceived that he recalled them not out of any affection, but that by their means he might the better master the Armenians and Parthians, he removed them first to Philippi a City in Macedonia, and thence to Adrianople, where they multiplied, yet kept their race unmixt with other People. Sometime after when Constantine and his Mother Sene reigned, one of them by Name Mailtes came to Constantinople, where lighting upon Leo one of his own stock he contracted such Friendship with him, that coming to Adrianople he gave him his Daughter in Marriage. Of this Conjunction was born the Father of Basilus, so gracefull a Person, that a certain eminent Matron, said to be descended from Constantine the Great, married to him her Daughter. This is the Pedigree Cedrenus gives us of Basilus, but by others generally it's accounted but a fiction, who affirm him born of very ignoble and obscure Parents.

Some account of him.

57. It's granted on all Hands, that when Crumus the Bulgarian took Adrianople his Parents were led away Captive, and carried him with them being a young Infant hanging on the Breast. The Succesour of Crumus, being fore distressed by several Defeats received from the Romans, made peace with the Emperour, and by virtue of that Agreement restored all Prisoners formerly taken, amongst whom Basilus returned. Many Prodiges are said to have portended to him the Empire. An Eagle, when being a Child he was laid in the Field, as his Parents were at work, covered him with her Wings, and being beaten off once or twice still returned to her former Posture. When he was grown up to be a youth, his Father died, and his Mother being left a poor Widow, and notable to maintain him, he went to Constantinople to seek a service, where he got into the Family of one Theophilus (so called from his small stature) who was of kin to the Emperour and to Bardas, being recommended it's said by him that kept the Church of St. Diomedes, to whom they will have it that the Martyr revealed it that he should be Emperour, and commanded him to take him in as he lay at the Gate for want of a better Lodging. Theophilus being much taken with him, for he was tall, beautiful of Body, and wore long curled Hair, being besides very active, and of a very good wit, made him Gentleman of his Horse, which they in those days and places called Protofrator. The Emperour at this time having an unruly Horse, none could tame him, till at length it was effected by Basilus, who when he was got loose rode after, and leaping into the Emperour's saddle made him quiet and tractable, which was accounted another Omen, the Imperial trappings and purple Bridle, Ensigns of Majesty, being considered. For this Service and Contemplation of his Dexterity, he was taken amongst the Officers of the Emperour's Stable, and shortly after Bardas having out of jealousy caused the former to be turned out, was made a Protofrator or Master of the Horse a place both very honourable, and which gave him occasion often to be near and converse with him. So much he grew into favour, that Bardas began to cast a jealous Eye upon him; as also the Empress Theodora her self, by reason of I wot not what secret marks the espied in his Face, which had been formerly described to her by her Husband, as appropriate to him that should put a Period to his Family.

58. But neither her swooning at the sight of these marks, nor all the Caution she could give her Son could in the least diminish his Reputation with him, who after some time preferred him to be Chamberlain, which so enraged Bardas, and augmented his jealousy that he fought his destruction; and this being known to the other, impossible it was that both of them could long subsist. But the expedition towards Crete gave Basilus the Advantage, who as Cæsar stood and talked with the Emperour, lift up his Hand in a threatening manner at his back, which the other by chance looking behind him having espied, fell down at the Feet of Michael, where thereto the Conspirators cut him in pieces, but not till the first stroke was given by Basilus. Returning then back with the Emperour to Constantinople, he received from him in Marriage Eudocia the Daughter of Juceres, a Lady much extolled for her Chastity as well as Beauty, and other Qualifications by thered.

Bardas Mur-

Basilus put into his Place.

Basilus made Emperour.

by Cedrenus, that Zonaras writes, that she was Concubine to Michael, and that she was then believ'd with Child by him of Leo, who afterward succeeded Basilus as his Son. After this the Emperour made him his Colleague, or Emperour causing him to be Crowned by the Patriarch in the Great Church of St. Sophia. For after the Death of Bardas, the Administration of Affairs having fallen upon Michael alone, his Weakness and Debauchery came to be made more publick than ever, no business being dispatched, but all things going to Ruine, which constrained him as stupid as he was to think, of some one who should bear the Burthen. Being eas'd something in his mind by this he returned to his Drunkenness, his driving of Chariots and other loose Courses rather more than ever, and on a time when he had won the prize entertained Basilus and Eudocia at Supper, being grievously incens'd against him for rebuking and admonishing him; for in his mad and drunken fits he would command the Ears of some, the Hands others, and sometimes the Heads to be cut off. But there one Basilus, of late Master of his Barge, but whom for his comely Person he had made something familiar with him, standing by the Table fell into a great Harangue, wherein he wonderfully extolled him for his skill, and his management of his late exercise in the Cirque. Michael being even drunk and much elevated with Commendation, delivers him his Purple shoes, bids him put them on, and salutes him Emperour; at which when he was abashed and looked upon Basilus, the Emperour growing angry, Basilus beckoned to him to doe as he was bidden. The shoes being on, Michael enraged at Basilus told him, that these Ensigns of Empire did much more become Basilus than him, and asked him whether as he made him Emperour, by the same Authority he might not create another. To this relation of Zonaras Cedrenus and Glycas add, that as Emperour and more fit than the other he recommended Basilus to the Senate. However, Basilus saw plainly there was no way but one, he must either strike or be stricken, and therefore making a Party, as Michael was drunk another time in the Palace of St. Mamas, being led into his Chamber, when he was fast asleep he made sure the Doors, and then came with his Conspirators who being resisted by those that waited without, a noise was made, and the Emperour therewith awaked. One going in to him with a drawn Sword, cut off both his Hands as he held them up, and therewith returned to his Companions. Not able to go he stumbled, lay roaring on the ground, till another of them thrust his Sword through his Breast, and so opened his Body that his Entrails came out. To such an end came Michael firnamed the Drunken, after he had reigned twenty five years and three Months, whereof fourteen years together with his Mother.

Basilus sole Emperour.Furnishes his Treasury.Takes care that Justice be richly administred.Prevents chieft-ing.

59. Michael being dead, Basilus became sole Emperour by consent of Nobility and People, in the twelfth year of Ludovicus the second Emperour of the West, the tenth of Nicholas Bishop of Rome, the fifteenth Indiction. A. D. 867. The first thing he did was to call together the Senators and Magistrates, and to open the Treasury wherein were onely found as we said before three Centenaries. But to know how these vast Sums of Money had been spent, he procured the Accounts of an old Eunuch belonging to the Revenue, and shewed them to the Magistrates and Senate, by whom it was unanimously resolved, that those who had received them for such dishonest or frivolous services should refund to the Treasury, which sentence he so far mitigated as to make them pay half, by which means three Hundred Centenaries of Gold were recovered. By this and other Courses very acceptable and honest he so furnished himself, that he made great largesses to the People. Hereby he got great Reputation and Love, which he augmented by bestowing Offices upon fit Persons alone, by taking great care for equal and indifferent distribution of Justice, to which end he appointed upright Judges to whom he assigned convenient Salaries, and dividing them into three Courts which he appointed to sit dayly in Magnaure, the Cirque and Chalce or the Brasen Gate, which for this purpose he repaired. To such as were poor and unable to be at the expence, he allowed Money for their suits. As his publick Affairs permitted, he himself would attend these matters, and going down to Genicum where his Custome-House was, took care that no Man should be oppressed. It's reported that once being at the Place he was wont to hear Causes, and finding none that exhibited any complaint, he suspected that some of his Officers hundred such as had recourse to Justice, and therefore he sent certain Officers about the City to make inquiry, if there were any that desired to prefer their Petitions, who returning with this answer that they could find none, he wept for joy, and gave God Thanks. Taking notice that the weights and Measures of the City were stamped onely onely with Figures, which wearing out, or ignorant Persons not understanding them, gave opportunity to many Tradefmen to cheat, he caused instead of Figures the quantity to be exprest in words at length, that any Countryman might read them, and this at his own charge. To these commendations is added by some, that he altered and new modelled the Civil Laws themselves, of which we shall inquire in another place.

A Conspiracy against him, but discovered and punished.He settles his Family.He wailes the Country near Tephrica.Enters the Territories of Melitena.Thence to the Manichees destroying all things in his return to Constantinople.The Manichees invade the Empe-rour's Dominions.

But are met.

60. But though he gave content to the generality, all were not satisfied; for in his first year one George and Symbatius, both Patritians, made a Conspiracy against him, which being revealed by one of the Party, their Eyes were put out, and the rest being shewn up and down in disgrace were sent into Banishment. The better to obviate all Designs, to gain Diadems to his two Eldest Sons Constantine and Leo, and in his third year to his third Son Alexander. His fourth, Stephen by Name, he caused to take orders with intention to prefer him to be Patriarch, as some have written, and his four Daughters he made Nuns in the Monastery of Euphemia the Martyr. Having settled his Domestick affairs as to him seemed most prudential, he then resolved upon War, and finding the usual Number of Souldiers much diminished, by reason that Michael had otherwise spent their Pay, he took care for making up the several Companies by new Levies. Then went he against Tephrica, the Governour of which was one Chrysoschir a Man of approved Valour and Skill, who had done much mischief by his Inroads made into the Roman Territories. Upon notice of the Emperour's approach he shut himself up within the Walls, to which Basilus purposed to lay Siege, but understanding that the Place was strong and well furnished, he waited the Country adjacent, and taking three Neighbouring Castles Abara, Coptus and Spatha, he departed thence with much booty. This expedition so terrified Taurus, a City not far distant from Tephrica, that it made peace with the Emperour, and Curterius an Armenian, who held a City called Locana, and had done great harm in the Roman borders, gave it up into his Hands. In the mean time, a select Party took in Zapetra and Samsafata, where a great Number of Christian Captives were set at liberty, and then passing over Euphrates waited the Countrey, and with many Captives and rich Spoils returned to the Emperour, then lying upon the River Artaxaucus. He encouraged by this Success marched to Euphrates, and laying a Bridge over it besides other Acts of Hostility, took a Castle called Rapsacium, as a Party he sent to harass the Countrey, lying betwixt Arfenes and Euphrates, destroyed five other Forts. Entering the Territories of Melitena, he killed and took many of those that made opposition, and at first thought of attacking the City, but finding it very strong, and so furnished with Provisions as to hold out a very long Siege, he departed into the Countrey of the Manichees, where destroying all things as he passed with Fire and Sword he took four Castles, and then returned to Constantinople, which entering at the Golden Gate from the Flebbdomus, he went in triumph accompanied with the Acclamations of the People to the Church of St. Sophia, where having given thanks, the Patriarch, according to the Custome, set a Crown upon his Head. This done having diverted himself a little with his Wife and Children in the Palace, he returned to the Cares of the Commonwealth.

61. The year that followed, the Manichees, under Command of Chrysoschir, again made an Inroad and waited the Emperour's Dominions, against whom; according to the Custome, he sent the Domestick of the Schools. He with all the Forces that could be made restrained their Incursions as he could; but not daring to hazard all in a Battel, as the Enemy retired, sent two Commanders with Orders to follow him at some convenient distance to watch his motions; if he returned to let him know, but if he went directly home then to return back to the Camp. It happened that those two Officers being upon their Duty, and watching the Enemy as he had late done at the Foot of a certain Hill, their two several Parties they commanded; fell into a sharp Contention about their Valour; and which had most deserved for their Service in the Field. The Contention continuing, a cunning Fellow amongst them, told them it was vain to contend in words, seeing that so notable an opportunity presented it self by their Actions, as to declare their Superiority in Courage. The thing took so well, that their Officers resolved to make use of this their present Heat, which would receive much advantage from the convenience of the Place, they being upon the higher Ground. The half of their Men fix Hundred and no more, they led down against the Manichees, and the other ordered to stand upon the Hill, and by making a great Noise to amuse them with apprehension of greater Numbers. By Another Invasion from Crete with like success.

66. But this being over, another storm came from Crete, the Lord whereof, Sael the Son of Apocaphe, sent one Photius a stout and skillful Souldier, with seven and twenty Cumpania, called also Gallies, against the Romans. Such Islands as lye in the Aegean Sea and all the Maritime Coasts they wasted as far as Proconnesus and the Hellepont. But Nicetas the Admiral, met with them at Cardia, in the mouth of the Aegean Sea, and in a sharp Engagement burnt twenty of their Ships, the rest shifting for themselves by flight. Notwithstanding this great defeat, yet they of Crete under command of Photius, again Rigged out a Navy, and therewith much distressed the Western parts of Peloponnesus. Nicetas going against them, found he should loose much time, and perhaps the expedition if he should Coast round about that Peninsula, and therefore with admirable industry and expedition, conveyed his Ships over the Isthmus or Neck of Land of Corinth, and fell upon the Pirates e'er they heard of his coming, of which he killed and took great Numbers, flew their Commander, sunk, burnt, or took many of their Vessels, and forced the rest to run, and hide themselves amongst the Islands where he hunted them out, and such as he could come by, put them to death, by various and exquisite torments. This course had such effect upon the Saracens of these Parts, that it made them more backward afterward to invade the Roman Countries, but could not so much operate upon those of Africk, who with hopes of better success set forth a Fleet consisting of sixty Ships, of unusual bigness, wherewith they did very much mischief, roving as far as the Island Cephallenia and Zacynthus. Against them was sent Nasar, or (as Zonaras calls him Narfan) the successeur of Nicetas, who had with a very strong Fleet to Methona, but thence so many of his men ran away, that he durst not venture to engage, his Ships were so unmanned. This he signified to the Emperour, who presently thought of this device. Thirty Saracens then Prisoners at Constantinople, having their Faces befmeared so as they could not be known, he caused to be led into the Cirque, and there whipped, thence to be sent into Peloponnesus, as if they had been the Authours of the Defection, and there to be nailed to Croffes, in the place whence it must be imagined that they fled. This struck such fear into all the Seamen and Souldiers, that it did the work, and they earnestly desired to be led against the Enemy, to which he readily assented, as soon as he had from Peloponnesus sufficiently furnished himself, and given order to the Governour to meet and assist him.

But are beaten by Nasar, General to the Emperour.

67. The Saracens were much elevated at this delay of the Romans, and as fully secure left their Ships, and were intent upon Rifling and Pillage at Land, when Nasar by night, and unexpectedly fell upon their Fleet, and sunk, burnt or took all their Vessels; such as remained he offered to God at the Church of Methona. The Emperour much commending his Conduct, ordered him to proceed in the hunting of these Pirates; whereupon he sailed to Sicily, where he destroyed such Ships as the Saracens had hired, and took many Vessels full fraught with Merchandize, especially with Oil, of which by this means he caused such plenty, that a pound thereof was sold for no more than an obolus. From Sicily he proceeded to the Coasts of Italy, where joining with the Emperour's Land Forces, commanded by Procopius his Protovestiarius or Gentleman of his Wardrobe, and Leo a Patritian, the Governour of Thrace and Macedonia, did very commendable Service. For another African Fleet was defeated at the Island Stele, and most of the Forts in Calabria and Lumardy, were taken from the Saracens, which done, Nasar returned Victoriously to Constantinople. After his departure, things went not so well in Italy, where the two Commanders, Procopius and Leo falling out, and an Engagement happening with the Enemy, Leo was so far transported with Anger and Revenge, as to suster the other to perish in the Battel for want of help, when he might easily have relieved him, having the better of the Saracens in that Wing where he fought. He endeavoured to make amends by his good Service in taking the Castle of Tarentum, and sending the Plunder to Bafilus, but he understanding the manner of Procopius his Death, would not so let it pass, but Banished Leo, some of whose Servants presently accused him of Treason, and for that were killed by Bardas, and David his Sons. Fearing punishment, they fled with their Father towards Syria, but were overtaken in Cappadocia by some the Emperour sent to pursue them. Refusing to yield, the two Sons were slain in the place. The Father was brought back to Constantinople, and Sentenced by the Judges to loose one Eye and one Hand, which being executed, he was Banished to Mesembria, and there spent his days.

Who returns to Constantinople in triumph.

Memoria dei sinori Kuyunluoglu, di che nel 1454 fu ucciso dal suo figlio. C. C. C.

Syracuse Besieged and taken by the Saracens, through the neglect of Adrian the Roman General.

Stephen, another General banished for the like fault.

Crimes laid to Bafilus his charge.

68. While the Emperour's Officers were thus employed in the West, the Saracens of Africk thinking him careless, and unprovided at home, from Egypt, Phoenicia, and Syria, got Ships together, and made up a considerable Navy, yet resolving to elude out the condition of Bafilus, before they would attempt any thing, but the Spy returning, acquainted them how he kept many Men in readidels for any occasion, and employed them in Building of Churches and other Works to keep them in Action, which understood they defitted from their Enterprize. They of Carthage, had prepared a Fleet to defend themselves, imagining Bafilus would make War upon them, but when they found no such thing, concluding that he was diverted by some other Enemies, they sailed over to Sicily, and Besieged Syracuse, to assistance whereof, one Adrian a Patritian was sent, but he either wanted Wind, or loitered so by the way, that at Peloponnesus he heard that the City was taken (the story went as first told by Spirits) which the Infidels destroyed, together with all the Churches. Adrian having certain Intelligence by some that had escaped, how he should come too late, and was prevented, returned with the Fleet to Constantinople, and took Sanctuary in the Great Church, but was thence taken and sent into Banishment. Much after the same manner miscarried one Stephen a Cappadocian, who with a select number of Thracians, Macedonians and Cappadocians, was sent into Lombardy, but minding nothing but his ease and luxury, he was turned out of Command, and one Nicephorus Phocas sent in his Room, (a valiant and worthy Person) with a new supply, and a Party of Manichees, formerly belonging to Chrysostomus. Joining these with the Forces of Stephen, he obtained many Victories over the Saracens, taking several Towns, as Amantia, Tropae and St. Severina. These were the Wars managed by Bafilus, in the several Quarters of the World.

69. Otherwise he most employed himself in the Building or Repairing of Churches, of which Cedrenus reckons up a great number, besides other expenses upon the Imperial Palaces, much admiring him for his Prudence and Goodness, whereas Zonaras rather taxeth him for his toiling of his Subjects in such works, and insists most upon the Churches, built to St. Michael, as provoked to so much expence upon them by the stings of his Conscience, to expiate as it were the Murther of the Emperour Michael, his Master and Benefactor. Two things besides that there are upon Record against him, which cannot be excused, whereof the one was his being in a manner bewitched by the cheating tricks of a certain Monk called Theodorus Sandabarennus, who after he had lost one Son, had almost procured him to make away the other. His Eldest Son Constantine being dead, his thoughts and hopes were fixed upon Leo the second Brother, yet so he could not cease from mourning for Constantine, and was so fond as to desire he might have his shape, as alive, represented to him. This it's said, this Sandabarennus being a Conjurer, undertook, causing a Spettrum in his shape to meet him on Horieback, which he embraced and killed. However it was, this Monk got very much into his favour, and often deluded him by his cheating tricks, which Leo his Son could not but take notice of, often exclaiming against him as a Mountebank and Impostour; The Monk for this bore him a Mortal grudge, resolving to be revenged of him, but concealed his Malice, and carried it fair towards him, the better to bring about his Design. He perswaded him when he went abroad with his Father, to carry a knife along with him, therewith to serve his Father in hunting, if need were, or if any Treason should be committed against him, that he might be in a capacity the better to assist him.

70. The young man not knowing his drift, and thinking it no imprudent advice, the next time he went abroad put a knife into his Boot, which the Monk understanding, and how his device took, then betook himself to the Father, telling him that his Son Leo had resolved to kill him, and for that purpose that he might not doubt thereof, came prepared with a knife into the Field. The old man's jealousy is easily kindled, the young man is searched and the knife found, whereupon he is committed to close Prison, in an apartment of the Palace, where his Eyes had been put out at the Infatigation of the Monk, had not the Patriarch and the Senators made vigorous opposition. But for a long time in Prison he continued, notwithstanding all intercession used in his behalf, so powerfull was the suspicion of Bafilus, till on a solemn day, entertaining some of the Nobility at dinner, there was a Parrat hung up in a Cage, which, in imitation of some one he had heard, lamented the young Prince his condition, saying often, Alas, my Lord Leo: This occasion the Senators took to renew their solicitation to the Emperour in behalf of his Son, for whom they undertook to answer, as if the Basilides says.

Bird it self did reprehend them for their neglect, and the good nature of Basilus was now so much wrought upon, that he set him at liberty, and restored him to his former place and favour. Basilus not long after died, when he had Reigned eighteen years ten months and seven days, by himself, and about one year with Michael. About the cause of his death there is some difference; Cedrenus writes, that he died of a Diarrhoea, but Zonaras tells us another story of his going to hunt, and how a certain Deer, more stout than ordinary, making resistance, thrust his horn under his girdle, and lift him up from the ground, bringing him into danger of his Life, which was saved by one of his Followers, who drew his Sword and cut the girdle. He adds, that instead of rewarding the man, he caused his Head to be cut off, as having drawn his Sword against the Emperor. Of this, Cedrenus is silent, and so John Curopalates, who mentions also the Flux he died of, though Zonaras attributes his death to an hurt received from the Deer. Least of all is that story to be believed of him that he should make a vow, that if he could conquer and reduce the Bulgarians, he would turn Monk, and having conquered them in effect, performed it, abstaining from all flesh (both of Woman and Beast) ever after, though he still used the Imperial Ensigns. Take it all together, his Government was successful and easy to his People, which we may believe, though we gave no credit to what Cedrenus farther hath in his commendation, that when the Senators advised him to send some Officers down into the Provinces, who should be severe in exacting the publick Revenue, he would not permit any such strict inquisition to be made.

Leo succeeds.

71. Basilus being dead, Leo the Sixth of that Name, succeeded him in the sixth year of Charles the third Emperor of the West, the second of Stephen the sixth Bishop of Rome, the fourth Indiction. A.D. DCCCLXXXVI. He succeeded him as his Son, though as to his Birth, Glycas bids us observe that the Writers of Antichae differed amongst themselves. For Scylitzes wrote, that the Emperor Michael left no Natural Issue, such as are much given to Drink seldom being able to get Children, as he tells us that Men skillful in those matters affirm. But others delivered it for a truth, that Leo was the Son of Michael, particularly Zonaras, that he was indeed the Son of Michael, and in the opinion of the world the Son of Basilus. His severity to him so long in restraint, may a little increase the suspicion that he thought him not his own, and yet scarcely would he have left him the Empire, having other Sons, except he did it to make amends for the death of Michael. However, as to his Son, he left him very good Instructions, whereof some had Relation to his Faith and to the Church, and others to his universal good behaviour. And as a great means for his Information and Direction of his Life, he charged him to be constant in reading ancient Histories, wherein with little labour he should find what others with great pains had laid together. There be should have a view of the virtues of good, and the vices of bad Men, with the several changes incident to humane Life, the vicissitude of Affairs, and Instability of all worldly things, as also how prone Empire and Sovereignty it self is to decay and perish. In short, he should therein read the rewards of good Actions, and the punishment of Wickedness, to learn to obtain the one and avoid the other. Leo, so far observed these Precepts, as by his Study, at least to obtain so much Theory, that for his extraordinary knowledge he got the Surname of Philosopher. How he observed them as to practice the History of his Actions, will best declare, though by Curopalates, and the rest of the Writers, who have taken in a manner all from him, though it be most obscurely and confusedly delivered.

Obtains the Surname of Philosopher.Animadvertens upon Sandabarens.Removes the Body of Addicted the Em-perour to Constantinople.

72. The first thing that Leo did, was to be revenged of Sandabarens, in order to which he removed Photius from the Patriarchal See, as one that bore him good will, and had consulted with him for the promotion of a Kinsman of his own to the Empire; Sandabarens he caused after Judgment to be ignominiously and grievously Whipped, though a Bishop, and thence Banished to Athens, where having his Eyes put out, he was sent into the East, though long after he recalled him, and ordered him maintenance from the New Church; he outlived Leo, dying in the Reign of Constantine his Son. While he was intent upon this course of Revenge, he sought to get Reputation, and make amends for his Father's fault by taking up the Body of Michael the Emperor out of the Monastery at Chrysolis, and conveying it to Constantinople, attended by a number of Priests, Torches and Candles, perfumed with sweet Odours, placed in a Coffin of Cyprus wood, and graced with all Rites and Ceremonies suiting the Place and Dignity which he bore. Being at the City received by the Emperor's Brothers, viz. Alexander and Stephen (whom he had made Patr. arch in the room of Photius) with Singing and

Historia Ac-quiescentis, apud Pithium fragmenum.Evolvere ne inquant cessis Historia vici-tiam, ubi enim reperies sine labore, &c.
Apud Baron.
ad An. 886.
n. 13.The Saracens make an Inroad into the Empire.

other Solemnities it was intombd in the Church of the Apostles in a Marble Monument. While he thus employed himself, the Saracens the Enemies of the Empire were not idle, but took the uppermost City, lying upon the River Charfianus, making Prisoners all the Inhabitants. And at the same time happened a Fire in the Southern Part of Constantinople, which with other Buildings, consumed the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle, repaired afterward by the Emperour with very great charge.

A War with the Bulgarians.

73. In the second year of Leo, the Greek Historians to whom those of Italy herein bear no Testimony, tell us, that Angaus Son-in-Law of the King of France, and Captain or Governour of Lombardy, having notice of the Death of Basilus, fell off from the Romans, and subjected all the Countrey to the obedience of himself. Against him was sent Constantine, a Patritian and Overseer of the Emperor's Table, with the Western Forces, but he received a total Defeat, losing all his Army, and escaping himself with much difficulty. About the same time the Sun suffered so great an Eclipse, that the Stars were seen at Noon, and terrible Thunder and Lightning followed, with the force of which seven Men were killed in the Forum upon the Stairs of Constantine. Then was Saxius Besieged by the Saracens, and the Emperor being exceedingly enamoured of a certain Lady called Zoe, gave a new and unheard-of Title to her Father Zantzas, of Father to the Emperor, having formerly made him Magister, and Logotheta Dromi. This Zoe was esteemed the most Beautiful Woman of her time, and had been Married to a Patritian called Theodorus Guniazitas, but he being removed it's said by Poison, Leo used her as his Concubine in the lifetime of his Wife Theophania. The year that followed happened a Quarrel and War with the Bulgarians upon this occasion. There was an Eunuch, Musicus by Name, belonging to Zantzas, who being very intimate with the Chief Merchants of the City, by his Interest with his Master procured the Mart of the Bulgarians to be removed from Constantinople to Thessalonica on a sudden, and these Merchants by whom the Design was contrived to be made Officers and Receivers of the Customs, who imposed grievous and unusual burthens upon those of that Nation, and quitted them out of their Traffic. Simeon their Prince, who fought all ways possible of picking a Quarrel with the Romans, made complaint hereof to the Emperor, who by the suggestions of Zantzas, having his ears stopped to all that could be urged, he gladly laid hold of the opportunity, and took Arms against him.

The Romans are beaten.Upon which Leo desires the Turks to invade Bulgaria.Who Defeat the Bulgarians, and force Simeon to declare Peace of the Emperour.

74. Leo having Intelligence hereof, prepared also for War, and sent an Army against him, under Command of Procopius Crenites, with whom he joined one Curricus an Armenian. In Macedonia the Armies met, but the Romans were overthrown, and their Generals slain; such Prisoners as Simeon took he cut off their Noses, and so sent them in scorn to Constantinople. Leo most grievously nettled with this Affront, sent one Nicephorus a Patritian to the Turks, or Ungri (Hungarians) to persuade them to pass the River, and invade the Bulgarians, which they readily undertaking, he resolved also to fall upon them on the other side. His Fleet he committed to the care and Conduct of Eustathius, a Patritian and Drangarius; and his Land Army to Nicephorus Phocas a Patritian, whom after the Death of Andreas he had made Domestick of the Schools; yet having a mind still more desirous of Peace, he sent to Simeon one Constantinacius about that Affair, whom he imagining to be sent onely to put a trick upon him, for Nicephorus was now at hand, committed to Prison Simeon, preparing himself to meet and engage Nicephorus: the Turks (so they call them) pass the River, and waste all Bulgaria; which he understanding, omits his Design of meeting him, and marches directly against them. They readily engaging with him, defeat his Army, he with much ado escaping to Dorostolum, otherwise called Drifta. The Turks being Conquerors, desired of the Emperor that he would buy of them their Bulgarian Prisoners, which he did, sending some on purpose to drive the Bargain. Simeon his matters going so ill, desired Peace of the Emperor, to which he being sufficiently inclined, sent one Leo Chortophantes with sufficient Instructions for concluding of it, and ordered Phocas, with Eustathius the Drungarius to return Home with the Forces. But now the cunning Bulgarian seeing himself freed from great Danger, cast the Ambassadors into Prison, and with a great Army suddenly fell upon the Turks or Ungrians and defeated them, which done, he waited their Countrey, the Emperor not being in a capacity to send them Relief, by reason of the shortness of the warning. Now pulled up at his success, he writes to the Emperor, that he would not in any case admit of Peace, except first the Bulgarian Captives were set at liberty, to which he yielded, receiving

Kaisergrasmus Occisorem porta significat.

ceiving back his Ambassadors, with whom came one Theodorus to receive the Prisoners.

Which afterwards he fled.

Provoking the Emperor to engage in another Battle.

But with ill success.

A Conspiracy is discovered, and Punished.

Another.

The Saracens make an Invasion.

Leo like to be Brained.

Another Invasion by the Saracens.

75. The Prisoners returned, and yet Simeon would not accept of Peace, which enraged Leo to that height, that he was resolved with all the Power he could make to chastise, and if possible, utterly to destroy him. This Army he committed to Catacalon (a man lately preferred to be Domestick of the Schools, in the room of Nicephorus Phocas, whom Zantzas, because out of fear of the Emperor, he refused to become his Son-in-law, had procured to be discharged of that Office) and Theodosius a Patritian, and the Potrovelianus, who giving Battle to Simeon, were defeated by him, with great slaughter of their men, with whom fell also Theodosius. This Disaster abroad was followed by an imminent Danger at home from a Conspiracy, while he used the company of Zoe the Daughter of Zantzas in the Country. She happened to overhear the Conspirators Discourse, and awaking the Emperor, caused him to shift for himself, which he did by returning to his Palace by water. John the Drungarius of Bizla, who then Commanded the Guards, he put out of his Place, for having Watched no better; and it seems he had Zantzas himself suspected, for he was sorely displeased with him, we are told, and was at length brought to a Reconciliation by the means and solicitation of Leo Theodosius the Magister, and an intimate Friend to them both. Yet that excellent Lady Theophano his Empress being Dead, he Married Zoe his Daughter, who was formerly his Concubine, and set the Diademe on her Head, in which he joyed not long, dying after a year and eight months. She being Dead, another Conspiracy was hatched by a Kinsman of her, by Name Basilus, the Pelles, as Zonaras calls him, or Epeides of the Emperor, as Cedrenus hath it, who communicated his Design to Samonas the Chamberlain, under an Oath of secrecy. But he, though a Saracen by Birth, revealed the matter; whereupon Basilus was sent into Macedonia, as there to celebrate the obsequies of Zoe, and at his return subjected to Examination and Tryal, together with his Complices, by which being found Guilty, he was led ignominiously through the City, and Banished to Athens. The good service of Samonas was so far applauded by the Senate, that they gave him thanks, and judged him fit for the greatest preferment: and the Emperor who had made a Relation of it to the Fathers, so far approved their judgment, that he made him presently Protospatharius, and began to use him very familiarly. Now about this time did Leo Marry a third Wife, a Woman of extraordinary Beauty, by Name Eudocia; but she died not very long after in Childbed, together with her Infant. To the memory of his first Wife Theophano he now Built and Dedicated a Church, in which and other Buildings while he employed his Seamen, a Fleet of Saracens took Taurominium in Sicily, with great slaughter of the Romans, and made themselves Masters of Lemnus, whence they led away a great multitude of Captives.

76. To Leo it ordinarily happened that one mischief did not come alone; for at the same time that his Subjects suffered these things in other Parts, he himself escaped narrowly with his Life at Constantinople. It was the Custom on Whitsunday to make a solemn Procession to the Church of St. Mocius. He being present thereat, just as he entered the Church, a certain Fellow assaulted him with a great Club, and striking him on the Head had killed him outright, but that a Candlestick hanging in the way kept off part of the Blow; but as it was it fetched blood in abundance. Alexander his Brother being not at the Solemnity, was suspected by many as guilty of the Contrivance; but the Man, though grievously tortured, accused no Man, and therefore no farther inquisition was made, he having his Hands and Feet chopped off, and so burnt alive in the Cirque. The Emperor no sooner recovered, but being now a Widower, and having himself much dabled in Astrology, as well as hunted after the Opinions of others, who affirmed he should have a Son to succeed him, applied his mind to new loves, and shortly after Married another Zoe, called Carbonophna, from the place of her Nativity or abode, who lived with him a good space before he set the Diademe on her Head, not till he had brought him a Son, which he called Constantine. But his Nuptial Joys were presently allayed by ill News he received from Sea, where now the Saracens having taken Encouragement from the Hostility which the Bulgarians exercised, tyrannized exceedingly, and under Conduct of one Leo Attaleus a Renegade of Tripolis did great mischief upon the Coasts, who threatened Constantinople it self with speedy Destruction; the Emperor upon the News dispatched away Eustathius his Drungarius of the Fleet, who finding himself too weak for Leo, returned, but with him at his back, for he followed him into the mouth of the Helespont, and proceeded on as far as Parium.

27. This

77. This much disturbed the Emperor, he sent away Himerius his Principal Secretary with the Fleet, who found out the Renegade, but finding him superior to him in Numbers and his Men more courageous, he durst not venture upon an Engagement, but suffered the Saracens quietly to return and lay Siege to Thessalonica which they took, shed much blood and made many Prisoners. A little before it fell out, that one Rhodophyllus one of the Bedchamber, travelling upon publick business for Sicily, with an Hundred Pounds of Gold fell sick by the way, and for his ease and recovery was forced to take in at Thessalonica, where Leo the Renegade finding him tortured him to death, to force him to betray this Treasure into his Hands. But indeed the Money he had left by the way, which was taken up by Simeon one of the Secretaries, who had other occasion to travel on that Road. He perceiving Leo resolved to destroy that City, perswaded him to accept of the Money as a Ransom of it, which the Emperor took so well from him, that he rewarded him with the Dignity of a Patritian, and of Principal Secretary. The Saracens having left Thessalonica, Himerius prepared to pursue them, but they failed to the Isle of Crete, and there having left part of their booty, departed home unmolested leaving him idle at Lemnos. The Emperor not able to grapple with them at Sea, sent two of the greatest Captains he had by Land into the East, Eustathius Argyrus, and Andronicus Ducas who so managed their Affairs, that they got many Victories. In the mean time Gamonas, who, as we said, had discovered the Treason intended against the Emperor's Person, and for that was with him in great esteem, veiled a Saracen's mind under the habit and shew of a Christian and a Roman, and pretending a Journey to his Monastery (of his own founding it seems) endeavoured with much Money and Horse to escape into his own Country, and left he should be pursued, hamstring'd, the publick Post-Horses in the way. Leo sent several after, but at the River Halys he was taken and stopt by Nicephorus Caminas the Drungarius, though he used many Intreaties, and offered a great reward to be let pass. When he saw he could not escape, he then pretended that he was on his way towards the Cross of Siracha, there to discharge himself of a Vow he had made, but for all that Constantinus Ducas brought him to Constantinople. There Leo ordered him to be kept in the House of Bardas Caesar, and caused Constantine to tell another Tale in the Senate, how indeed he was going to theafore-said Cross to pay his Vow. The next day calling the Senate together, he caused Constantine to swear by God and the Emperor's Life, and then asked him the question whether Samonas was going into Syria. He resolving not to forswear himself, openly protested that he fled toward Melitena his own Country. Hereat the Emperor was angry, and having kept Samonas for some space in custody, set him afterwards at Liberty, and restored him to his former Dignity and Place. Zonaras adds, that he made him a Patritian, and designed him to the Office of Chamberlain.

78. Not long after, at the Birth of his Son Constantine a Comet appeared, casting its Tail toward the East for forty Days. Zoe his Wife he now declared Empress, for which the Patriarch excommunicated him, or forbade him as they term it entrance into the Church, so as he was forced to go on the right side to the Mitatorium. Hereat grievously offended, he yet earnestly begged of him that he might be restored to Christian Communion, and when all this was to no purpose, resolved to exercise his Authority over the Priest, so as to correct him for his Arrogance, and sent him as a banished Man into a Monastery. In his Room he made Patriarch one Euthimius Synellus, who it seems took off the Ecclesiastical Censure, but whereas by the Advice of his Nobility, he was about to publish an Edict, to make it lawful to marry three or four Wives, he vehemently withstood, and prevented it, so nice and severe was this Age in the Point of Marriage. For, Reader, neither the Practice nor Design of Leo, was to have or allow more than one Wife at a time, but successively after the death of the former. Yet must not this be allowed to him, though some of his Wives lived not long with him after Marriage. But the truth is, he led aside by the Humour of the Ecclesiasticks, who all along by a great Fatality had been from the time of Constantine the Great, inclined to the Commendation of Celibate and Averion to Marriage, he made formerly an Edict (a) against the Multiplicity of Marriage, (b) subjecting such as were thrice married to the Penalties (b) imposed by the Ca-

Upon which Leo sends a Land Army into the East who perform great Execution.

Leo excommunicated for marrying thrice.

(a) Leomis constit. 9. que sic incipit opor-teat nos.

(b) Tempus aliquod permitendi Bigamis & Trigemis imponatur, insuper octavianus Presbyteri interesse nuptiis ejus que secundo nubuit, privantur enim nonnulli benedictione secundas nuptias. Vide Aug. serm. 243. Ambros. in Cap. 7. 1. ad Corinth. & in 3. Cap. 1. ad Corinth. Concil. Lateranense sub Alexandro 3. Tit. de secunda nuptiis. c. 1. Gebroder. in locum.

The Saracens again renew their Incurſions, but are beaten by one of the Generals to the Emperour.

nons, of which now he late enough repented. This same year the Saracens, set out a Fleet against the Emperour's Subjects, against whom he sent Himerius the Logotheta Dromi, and with him joined Andronicus Ducas, the Father of Constantine formerly mentioned. Samonas bearing implacable hatred to this Family, for his being intercepted by Constantine on his way homeward, bribed a familiar Friend of Andronicus to write to him, that he should by no means adventure to join in the Enterprize with Himerius, who had order from the Emperour to put out his Eyes, altho as he could have an Advantage to doc it. Andronicus believing this story, refused to accompany Himerius in the Expedition, who engaged without any Collegue with the Enemy, and gave him a very notable Defeat.

79. Andronicus awakened with this his Success, and sensible of his Error, out of desperation, seized upon a Cattle situate about Iconium called Cabala, and considered how to revolt. His Enemy now incessantly plied the Emperor with complaints against him, urging his Treachery and Designed rebellion, upbraided him for not having secured him before he escaped his Hands, and importuning him at least to obviate, and lessen this growing Mischief. Overcome with his Suggestions, he sent against Andronicus, Iberitzas Gregoras, the Domestick of the Schools, and one allied to him, with a strong Army, which he understanding, and how Nicholas the Patriarch, his principal Friend was cast out of the Church, he fled with all he had to the Saracens, and was kindly received by the Amermunes. This much disturbed Leo, when he considered both what a Subject he had lost, and an Enemy he had created to himself, and if possible he resolved to get him back. He wrote Letters to him, wherein he promised both oblivion of what was past, restitution to his former Dignity and Estate, and much more Encouragement, and more kindness than he had ever yet received. But the Messenger, a Captive Saracen, was perwaded by Samonas not to deliver the Letters to Andronicus, but discover the Contents of them to the Amermunes, who thereupon cast Andronicus and his Followers into Prison, where they endured much and long misery; and of them some abjured their Religion to be rid of their Chains, he himself perished without Redemption. But his Son Constantine, with divers of the other Prisoners made his escape, and though pursued sometimes by fighting, and otherwhiles by casting Gold in the way, and thereby diverting the greedy Soldiers, got safe to Constantinople, where the Emperor conferred great Gifts upon him, and feasted him in the Golden Room. It's said, that as he was departing out at the Gate, Leo called him back again, and advised him, that by reason of his Name he should never take the Confidence to aim at the Sovereignty, for he was very well assured by such as could foretell things of this Nature, that Constantine his young Son was destined of God to the Empire. But if not content with his former Condition, he should make any Attempt that way, his Head for certain should be cut off, and brought thorough that Gate in its Gore, which the Event confirmed.

80. Much about this time, out of some jealousy he had conceived Leo put Eustathius the Magister, and Drungarius Bigla out of his Place, whereupon he retired and died by poison, being much regretted by the Soldiers, both by Sea and Land. For he was an extraordinary Man, who brought the surname of Agryus or Silverd to his Family, either by reason of the Purity of his Life, the beauty of his Body, or the lustre of his valiant Actions, wherein he so far exceeded all others of his time, and during the Reign of Michael, that with Slaves and Dependants alone, he kept in awe the Manichees of Tephrica, and the Saracens of Melitena. Leo was not so fervere to him, as indulgent in the other extreme to Samonas the Saracen, whose Father together with one Abelbaces, sent from Melitena and Tarfus, he entertained in the Palace of Magnaura, with all Magnificence imaginable. And what was thought not suitable to Men of their Religion, shewed them all the Treasure and Furniture of the great Church. The old Man was so much taken with the splendid condition of his Son, that he would have staid at Constantinople, and been partaker of his good Fortune; but Samonas would not permit it, desiring him to go into his own Countrey, and persevere in his own Religion, assuring him that he would follow him with the first opportunity. Now on Whituesday, Leo caused his Son Constantine to be Crowned by the Hands of Eutymius the Patriarch. And the Confidence of Samonas was by his immoderate Favour grown to that height, as being jealous of a new Favourite named Constantine a Paplaglonian by birth, which he himself had given to the Empress, he both accused her as being too familiar with him, and made a scurrilous Libel against ilpon which the other revoit to the Saracens.

Where he dies miserably.

{ Leo the Philosopher.

The Saracens
infest the Sea Coasts and beat the Emperour's Admiral.

Leo dies.

against the Emperour, who upon Inquisition finding him to be Authour of it, caused him to be hoven for a Monk, and made Constantine whom at his Suggestions being shaven, he had retaken out of the Monastery, Chamberlain in his stead. About this time the Saracens sent out three Hundred Ships under conduct of one Damias a Tyrian, and Leo of Tripolis, which committing the usual Hostilities, Himerius the Admiral was sent against them, and engaged with them at Samus, but was beaten, put to flight, and hardly escaped to Metilene. The Emperour not long after was seized with the Colick, and brought so low with it, that he could not make his usual Speech in the time of Lent, but calling together the Senate recommended their gratitude and care his Wife and Son, telling them he should hardly hold out so long as Eafer. Yet he lived till the Eleventh of May, and thenceing left the Empire to his Brother Alexander, whom with all Earnestness, he desired carefully to educate his Son Constantine, to use him as became his Quality, and to leave him his Successour. He reigned two and twenty Years, three Months and four Days.

81. We have brought Leo to his end, yet have not done with him, as neither with Basilius his Father, and that upon account of a remarkable Alteration made by them in the Laws of the Empire, of which we must necessarily give the Reader an Account. He is then to know, that the Civil Law with so great Care and Industry modelled anew by Justinian was in great danger, not long to survive the Author. For besides that came not into Italy, and the Western European Nations for the space of five Hundred years after his death; being found out, &c. kept out by the particular Laws and Customs Vide Fabros. in Edit. B. in prol. ad Instit. Ducium de iura & authoris, lib. 1. cap. 5.

*Vide Fabrot. in Edit. Basilic. Baldwin. in proleg. ad Instit.
Duckium de usu & authorit. Juris Civilis. Lib. 1. cap. 5.*

suppressed or kept out by the particular Laws and Customs of the Barbarous Nations which had lately possessed these Parts, as the Goths, Lombards, Vandals, Franks, and others, in the City and Empire of Constantinople
 it self, either through the neglect or envy of the Emperours, scarcely for forty years did it continue in any considerable Authority. Indeed through the Reigns of Justin Tiberius and Mauricius, his Books were received both in the Schools and Courts of Justice, and in Latin as they were written, and in the same Language was Justice administrated, the Decrees of Magistrates and the Resolutions of Judges published, such honour and respect being as yet given to the Tongue of the Romans, to the Valour and Conduct of whom so great Dominion was to be ascribed. But Mauricius being murdered, Phocas and his Successors had little care either for Preservation of the Language or the Laws, and though the Empire was still called the Roman Empire, and their Writers are very careful to give the Name of Romans all along to the Emperor's Subjects, even so far that if they and the Italians be mentioned together, yet by Romans they ever mean such as were subject to the Constantinopolitan Empire wherever they lived, yet however, Latin grew out of use, the Greek Tongue being native to the Place (though exceedingly mixed with Latin words) drove the practice of it out by Degrees; Generally in other Countries the Emperours were known by the Name of Greek Emperours; and some of them vaunted themselves, as the Successours of Alexander the Great.

Great. By these means the Books of Justinian, written first in Latin, because little regarded, yet of some use they were for two hundred years, till the time of Basilus Macedo, the Father of Leo. For they had been either in the lifetime of Justinian himself, or shortly after translated into Greek; as the Code and the Pandects by Thalelaus an Antecessour, and the Institutions by Theophilus, and besides these, many other Books of the Ancient Lawyers, out of which the Pandects had been Composed. Our of these Translations then and the Constitutions of such Emperours as succeeded Justinian, was Justice administered, so as it was, till the time of Basilus; though the knowledge and practice of the Law were both very small, for the Reasons now mentioned, and the continual Irruptions and Desolations made by the Saracens, during which like disturbances, Laws are wont to make but little noise. But Basilus being a Man of Spirit far above his Birth and Breeding, and having good success against the Infidels, as our Historians write, set upon the work of making and reforming Laws. He was moved by this reason, as they tell us; because he perceived the Civil Laws to be very confused and obscure; therefore he resolved to purge them by abrogating the unprofitable ones, by making shorter such as were tedious, and otherwise, of which Defign Death preventing the accomplishment, it was perfected by Leo his Son. Later writers ascribe

Basilus and Leo new model the Civil Law.

Ἄλλὰ καὶ οὗς πολιτικῶς νόμιμα, πολ-λὴν ἀσφάλειαν, καὶ σύγχυσιν ἔχοντι ἰδῶν, καὶ τὰς ἐπὶ τὸ πρῶτον πρὸς φρίδες ἐπαυαμένους ἴσπειρος, &c.
Cedrenus in Basilis.

ascribe to his envy at the glory of Justinian, what the other attribute to a kind of necessity, and they impute it to his desire, that his Name with his Books should be obliterated and quite forgotten. Out of what principle soever it was, he with his Sons, Constantine and Leo, first published an Epitome of Justinian's Code, which he called Procheiron, and afterward sixty Books called Basilica, composed out of the Books of the said Emperor, his thirteen Edicts after the publication of his Novels, with the Novel Constitutions of Justin and the following Emperours. These alone had the Force of Laws so long as the Eastern Empire it self lasted, and Justinian his Books were quite laid aside, both in the Schools and the Courts of Justice.

83. Now these Books of the Basilica, (a) some attribute to Leo, and others (b) to Basilus himself, to whom Leo also ascribes them, and indeed this controversy may easily be decided by what we have lately said from the Greek Historians, that Basilus began, and Leo perfected the work; so that both Father and Son had an hand in them, and twenty years after their publication, the Grandchild, not another Son, as one of our Lawyers mistakes, * Constantine Porphyrogenitus purged and amended them. But Leo after the Basilica, published an hundred and thirteen Novel Constitutions which still are extant, and at present since the Recovery of Justinian's Law, in the West are made use of only in matters wherein Justinian's Books are silent. Nay, in the Age of Leo himself, they seem to have had no greater Authority, and that from the testimony of Greek Lawyers themselves, who cited them only when nothing had formerly been Constituted concerning such or such a Point, or for explication of the Old Law. Of these several works the Greeks seem most to have esteemed the Epitome or Synopsis; and chiefly to have been delighted with Breviaries. For from that of Basilus first published, and the Constitutions of Emperours as far as Emanuel Comnenus did Constantinus Harmenopolis, a Judge of Thessalonica, frame an Epitome of universal Law: And before him Michael Attaliates by command of Michael Ducas, the last Emperor mentioned in this work published a shorter Synopsis, which he called the Compendium of a Compendium. Michael Psellus, at the same time composed another Synopsis; and long after John Leunclavius published an Epitome of the Basilica, out of the Library of Sambucus, afterward Chancellor of Poland, who found it at Tarentum in Calabria, which part of Italy, as we see, was longest subject to the Emperours of the East. The Basilica themselves lay hid a long time, till Genticius Hervetus first published seven Books of the sixty; afterwards Cujacius three more, though he had the whole Number by him, as appears in his admirable works, especially his observations, and at length they were all set forth out of the French Kings Library, together with the Scholia and Glosses of the Greek Commentatours, by the care and industry of Fabrotius, that excellent Lawyer, who by this means has procured much assistance for explication of such matters as are obscure in Justinian's Laws. Yet are not the Glosses of these Greek Lawyers comparable for Number to those made by the Western Europeans, upon the Books of Justinian. Those now extant are only those of Stephanus, Nicaeus, Thaddaeus, Eudoxus, Istodorus, Basilus, and some others, which as the Glosses of Accursius, are set in the Margent of the Basilica. But thus much concerning these new Models of Basilus and Leo, which with small alteration contained the only Law in use and practice till the dissolution of the Empire. Hereby we may perceive that in the Reigns of these two last Princes, Learning and Ingenuity were much revived, by the convenience whereof, and his own Industry, Leo arrived to so high a Pitch as to obtain the Surname of Philosophus and Sapiens. For his meriting these Titles, there is more produced than his indeavours about the Law. In the Vatican Library are still extant, many Orationes of his, as well about sacred as other matters, some precepts of Morality, with a Treatise concerning the Military Art; and a Catalogue of many of them, the Reader if he think it his may see in Baronius his Annals.

Πρόχειρον τῶν νόμων βασιλικῶν, quia Principum leges continebant, idem opus ἑκατομβιββιον quia ex 60. libris constituitur.

(a) Harmenopol. Lib. 1. Tit. 1. Cujac. observat. l. 17. alii.
(b) Gotofred. ad Novell. Leonis. dii.

* Constantinus hic fuit Constantinus Leonis filius cognomento Porphyrogeneta quia libris βασιλικῶν purgatus et castigatus. Autor ἀναγινώσκων id est Basilium reposita praefationis. Non Basilii filius qui ante patrem diem suum obiit ut ex Historia nostra constat utq; Gotofredus ad Leonis Novellas notat; lapsus itaq; est in lucem patre Ducijus nostras.

Cujac. 17. Observ. 31. Gotofred. ubi suprad.

Ad An. 511. num. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

From the Death of Leo the Philosopher, to the Death of Constantine Ducas, the twelfth of that Name. A. D. MCXVII.

The Space of One Hundred and Fifty Six Years.

Alexander Emperor.

I. LEO being dead, his Brother Alexander succeeded him in the second year of Anastasius the Second Bishop of Rome, the fourteenth Indiction. A. D. DCCCXI. About his Age when he came to the Empire, our Greek Historians are strangely overseen, writing that he was now a young man, about twenty years old, whereas they themselves had formerly told us, that in the third year of his Reign, Basilus made his third Son Alexander Caesar, so that by this time he must have past above forty years, from his very promotion to this Title; and if Leo Reigned above twenty five, how could Alexander be but twenty at his Death, and be his Brother, the Father being dead above five and twenty years before? He had Constantine his Brother's Son his Partner in the Empire, yet within a little time purposed to deprive him of all hopes of Succession, by gelding him, and leave the Dignity to one Basilizas, an obscure fellow, but his Companion in his libidinous and extravagant courses. For to such alone he addicted himself; neither thinking nor acting any thing becoming the place he bore, and as hitherto he had lived, so still did he only intend, a voluptuous life and matters of intemperance, putting small value upon any but such as could accompany and assist him in such like practices. From putting in practice what he intended against his Nephew, he was diverted merely by such as bore good will to the Child for his Father's sake, who still alledged he was young and sickly, and so persuaded him, not thinking of his own Death, that he had time enough farther to consider and resolve. Desirous to be ascertained of his long life, he consulted with such cheaters as pretended skill in those matters, who answered that his Reign should be long, if to a Boar of Brags which stood in the Cirque, he would add Genitals and Teeth which were wanting to it; for that Boar was his Element, as the Greeks phrased it, that is, by it he himself was magically signified in opposition to his Brother Leo. He giving heed to them, who for his manners compared him to that creature, added those Members to the Boar, as securing his life thereby for a long season. Now elevated by this and other hopes, he banished Himerius the Logotheta, as one who had practised something against him in the days of his Brother. The Ambassadors of Simoon Prince of the Bulgarians, who were come about the renewing of the League and Friendship formerly made with his Predecessours, he uncivily treated and dismissed, whereupon that Prince to be beforehand with him, and prevent the effects of his Threats, broke the Peace, and made War upon the Romans. But following on his course of intemperance, after a great fit of gormandizing and drunkenness, too violently exercising himself at Tennis, he broke some Veissels, and died of Bleeding the day following, having to much time and confidence (now in extremity) as to declare Constantine his Successour, after a Reign of one year and about a month.

The Bulgarians make War upon the Romans.

Alexander Dies.

Ex Europalaia Cedrenus officians errorem haurire inquit. Αλεξάνδρου δὲ τῷ ἡλικίῳ ἄλλοις ἀπολογίαις ἡδη περὶ τὸν αἰῶνα τῆς ἀνάστασης αὐτοῦ ἀναγγέλλεται ὅτι, &c.

Ζενώνας σὺ, ὡς δὲ ἡλικίῳ, ἔτι, συγγενὸς ἔσται, ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκείνου ἀπορίας ἡλικίας αὐτοῦ, &c.

Cedrenus verò, συγγενὸς δὲ αὐτῷ εἶναι λέγει, ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτοῦ ἀπορίας ἡλικίας αὐτοῦ, &c. Hic συγγενὸς, seu elementum vocant rem quae magicarum artium vi alicujus hominis fortunam gubernet. Qualis (verbi gratia) in Romano Lacapeno, Simooni Bulgaro statua in xrolopho fuit, qua truncata is periret; vide alia exempla apud Zylindrum in dno. Etiam autem magi συγγενεῖα diceb, qui in res creas moris & benedictionibus eam quandam ad aliquid proficiendum putabant consiliare, & συγγενὸς verbum magicae artis aliquid moliri.

Oath taken they were led againt the enemy. The Cohort of the Waller
5. The Army was good, and as well commanded. The Cohort of those Vall ers or Excubitors, as they were called, was led by John Graplon, a Man whose Vall mans hour and Conduct had appeared in many Battels. The Regiment of thoe, called Hicanati, was commanded by Olbianus Marula, a very eminent Man also; th rest by Romanus and Leo, the Sons of Argyrius and Barbas Phocas. Besides the was present at the Expedition Melias the Magister with his Armenians, and man of the other Provincial Officers: And Constantinus Africanus the Patriar of joyned as Councillour with Leo the General or Domestick of the Schools. C the sixth day of August was a fierce Battel fought at the Castle Achelous with th Bulgarians, who were beaten, and after great loss put to flight. But the Gener of the Romans in a great Sweat and fainting by the extraordinary pains he se ken, lighting at a Fountain to refresh himself so neglected his Horse, that he f sible he had no Rider he broke loose and ran amongst the Army, where being known by the Souldiers, they concluded that Leo was kill'd, and thereupon left the Pursuit; and some betook them to their Heels. This was quickly perc ved by Simeon, who did not make his Retreat in a loose or confus'd manner, b

3. While these Disorders were within the City, no less a danger threatened the Government from without. Simeon the Bulgarian disoblged, as we said, by Alexander, had with a great Army invaded the Roman Territories, and was comeever as far as Constantople it self, before which he incamped himself from Blacherna, as far as the Golden Gate, with no small hope of becoming Master of it in a short time. But such was the good fortune of the Inhabitants, that though thus surprized, by their stout opposition and the strength of the Walls, by degrees they defeated his hopes, and he retired to Heldboud, where he signified he would accept of a Treaty. This Overture was most gladly entertained by the Governours, and Hostages being given and received, Simeon was admitted to dine with the Emperour in the Palace of Blacherna, and received the Patriarch's Blessing, after which he departed home richly presented, though as Zonaras writes, without any Peace concluded, the Conditions whereof he would not accept, which yet Cedrenus signifies to have been accorded. But, the Governours giving no content, by reason of their extravagant Actions and Disagreement, were soon after suffered to rake so as he could easily face about and pursue the Pursuers, which he did with such execution, the Romans hindring one another, that not onely a great Slaughter was made of the ordinary Souldiers, but very many of the Officers themselves were lost, amongst whom Constantinus Africanus and John Grapson, e'er now mentioned. All this while Romanus Lacapenus the Drungarius of Naval Affairs, according to order hovered about the Sea Coasts with the Fleet to relieve Leo if need were, and give passage to the Patzinacas, whom Bogas had brought to the assistance of the Empire. But he and Bogas fell into a difference and thereupon they departed home. As for Leo he hardly escaped to Mesembria.

6. These are the ordinary Reasons given for this overthrow, though another Report was very current, as that when Leo was hot in the Pursuit of the Enemy, News was brought him that Romanus the Admiral was returned back to Constantinople with a design to make himself Emperor while all the great Ones were absent, which so affected him, who had himself the same ambitious purpose, that he retired into the Camp to know the truth, at which his men were discouraged, as imagining it was out of fear, and so changed the course of the Battel. However it happened, a great loss was received, and after the return of the remainders of the Army to Constantinople, the business betwixt Romanus and Bogas was scanned, the issue of which was, that the former was sentenced by the Judges to loose his Eyes, for not having according to his duty passed over the Patzinacas, and received such as fled from the Battel, which some attributed to carelessness, but others to Malice and Design; and the Sentence had been executed but that Stephen the Magister, one of the Emperours Tutors, and Constantinus Gongyles a Patritian, men very powerfull with the Emperess had not prevailed for the remission of it. Now was Simeon the Bulgarian so puffed up with his late success, that again he resolved to attack Constantinople, and was on his way, when Leo the Domestick, John the Commander of the Associates, and Nicholas the Son of Constantinus Ducas were sent out against him. In a place called Catasyrtes they light upon a Party that was foraging, and defeated it with little trouble. Then a fresh one came on which put the men now wearied and wounded much to it, but they were so resolved and courageous that after a sharp Conflict they had the same success, though not without loss of several worthy men, amongst whom none more eminent than Nicholas now mentioned, to whose Valour especially the success of the day was ascribed.

7. So went matters in the Field, and against the Enemy, at home they carried a sadder Aspect, whilst in the Minority of the Emperour several of the Nobility wanted but opportunity and power to divest him of his Dignity, and to reign themselves. Of all others Leo Phocas with most confidence hatched and carried on his design, trusting much to the power and interest of Constantine the Chamberlain, his Wives Brother, for his private Reputation at Court was very great, besides that Eunuchs in general at this time were much respected. He made himself so sure of his projected greatness, that he would not stick openly to own it, and affirm that the Sovereignty of right belonged to him by descent. This Theodorus the Emperour's School-master taking strict notice of it left any mischief should thence happen to his Scholar, perswaded him to take Romanus Lacapenus, the Drungarius of the Fleet to be his Keeper, and if need were his Protectour, who had been a dutifull Servant to his Father, and no less faithfull to him. But Romanus often, and with some pertinacity refused to accept of the Charge, till at length seeing the Emperour's Letters written with his own hand and signed, as the manner was, with Purple Letters, he consented, and promised to frustrate as much as in him lay the Designs of the Chamberlain and his Allies. This could not be so much concealed but that it took air, and began to be talked of openly in the Streets, and all places of Resort, but yet Constantine was therewith little moved, contemning all Reports out of a vain confidence, that no man durst attempt any thing against him, till going to the Fleet to distribute the Rogae, or pay the Seamen, he was by Romanus, who at their first meeting disguised his Purpose, till he got him into the Snare, seized and secured. Great noise hereof being made in the City, and no less than a Revolt expected, Zoe called together the Patriarch and some Senatours, and by their Advice sent to Romanus to know his meaning, and to require that the Chamberlain should be dismissed; but the Messengers were hindered from delivering their Message by a number of Mariners, who threw Stones and denied them Access. Early in the Morning he went and inquired of her Son and those about him, what their Intentions were, to which, when none else would answer, Theodore affirmed this change to have happened by reason of his ill management of the Army, and Constantine's ill administration of matters relating to the Court.

Leo

8. Now did the Emperour take the power from his Mother upon himself, and presently sent for to Court the Patriarch and Stephen the Master, and thence commanded the day following his Mother to be removed; but the weeping and wailing and clinging close to him, wrought so upon his good nature as to permit her to stay. Then fearing Leo Phocas, he removed him from his Office, and made John the Magister Domestick of the Schools. Yet did Phocas prevail, as a way of recompence, to have his Son Simeon and Theodorus his Wives Brother made Commanders of the Associates, and then taking an Oath of Fidelity to the Emperour retired to his House. But shortly after hearing that his Kindred were again dismissed from Court, he resolved to see how he could work upon Romanus, to whom posting, he laid open his condition, and bewailed the straits to which he was reduced. Romanus fearing, it seems, his great Interest and Alliance, was so wrought upon, as secretly to contract Friendship and an Union with him, which was confirmed by Oath, and the designed Inter-Marriage of their Children. After this Romanus went to Court to purge himself to the Councillours of any Conspiracy against the Government, affirming his Design, merely to protect the Emperour from any ambitious attempts of Phocas, for which purpose his Resolution was to come to Court, with a sufficient Guard. This the Patriarch would not believe, nor accept his Purgation, whereupon Theodore the School-master importuned him to come up with his Fleet into the Dock of Bucoleon near to the Palace, which he earnestly refused to do, till vehemently urged by those privy to the Design, who prevailed with him in an Hostile manner to fail up to the place, which happened upon the Feast of the Annunciation. Presently hereupon Stephen the Magister departed from Court, and Nicetas the Patritian, a great Intimate of Romanus went in and thence removed the Patriarch, which done, after an Oath taken from Romanus, with most bitter and heavy Curses that he would never entertain any thought against the Emperour's Dignity or Person, he received him into the Palace, and going along with him to Prayers to the Church in Pharus, after Faith given and received on both sides, made him Great Commander of the Associates. Shortly after to sweeten and take off Phocas, Letters were written to him, to bid him be of good courage, and continue in his Allegiance, for he should speedily be considered. To this purpose also Constantine the Chamberlain was commanded to write to him. And upon receipt of these Letters he kept himself quiet for some time at his own home in Cappadocia.

9. But in the fifth Week of Lent the Emperour Married Helena the Daughter of Romanus Lacapenus, and caused her to be Crowned together with himself by Nicholas the Patriarch. To Romanus himself he gave the Title and Dignity of his Father, with which no Man ever had been honoured before, as Glycas observes, and conferred his former Office upon his Son Christopher. These things quite turned the Stomach of Leo Phocas, who had almost digested former Misfortunes in daily expectation of what was promised him. Now by the advice of his Friends, as well as his own Inclinations, he resolved to rise, and for that purpose got to him Constantine the Chamberlain, the two Brothers, Gongylii, and others, endeavouring to perswade all that he took Arms in behalf of the Emperour Constantine. But Romanus so bestirred himself, that by Letters conveyed to the Camp signed by the Emperour and sealed with his Seal, he convinced many of his Souldiers of their mistake, of whom several great Officers presently revolted from him. And herewith encouraged, he sent Simeon the Overler of the Canicleus, to the Army, who by reading to them another Declaration, whereby he owned Romanus for his Father, and declared Leo to be a Traytour to him and his Family, wholly brought them all off, and Leo shifted for himself by flight to a certain Castle Atcas, whence he removed to another, which bore the Name of Goleon, as much as to say the Lamentation of Leo, which was esteemed an ill Omen; for here he was taken. Upon notice thereof were sent to fetch him up to the City John Tubaces and Leo Pagtelas, who in the passage pulled out his Eyes by private order from Romanus, or of their own Accord without his knowledge, as he affirmed, pretending to take the matter much to heart. Thus was suppressed the Insurrection made by Leo, but all danger not thereby removed from the Head of Romanus, against whom conspired one Constantinus Crematenus, David Cumulianus, and Michael the Curator Manganorum, (that is, Overseer of the Engines) who armed certain young men to kill him as he went out to hunt. But the Plot was timely discovered, and the Conspirators having their Eyes put out were in an ignominious manner led about

D d d

the

Simeon proceeds towards Constantinople

But two of his Parties are met and worried.

Leo designs to assume the Purple.

So doth Romanus.

Who seizes upon the Emperour.

Zoe the Emperess forced to quit her Government.

Leo and Romanus combine together.

Constantine Marries the Daughter of Romanus. Styling him Father of the Emperour.

Upon which he Rebels.

But is taken and punished.

Mixeas executed by Macarius. Curator Manganorum id est balistarum & altorum id genus tormentorum.

the Em-perors shaven.

the Forum, and among them Leo Phocas upon a Mule. Zoe also the Empress accused of a design against his life was shaven and thrust into a Monastery. Moreover for attempting something against him were banished the City Theophylact, the Patriarch, and even he who had been the Author of his preferment Theodore the Schoolmaster, with his Brother Simoon, he perceiving, it seems, and repenting that he had gone too far. They were confined to a place called Opficium, and thither conveyed by the diligence of Curcias the Drugarius Bisla, who seizing suddenly on them conveyed them by Boats into the opposite Continent.

Romanus Crowned Em-perour, by the allowance of Constantine.
Christopher Emperour.

10. Now the way being fully cleared by removal of all Competition, on the four and twentieth day of September, and the eighth year of the Emperor's Reign, the Title of Cæsar was conferred on Romanus; and in December following he was by allowance of Constantine Crowned Emperour by the Hands of Nicobolus the Patriarch. Thus possessed of the Imperial Dignity on Candlemas day following he caused to be Crowned his Wife Theodora, and in May on Whitsunday his Son Christopher, Constantine openly yielding his consent and approving, but inwardly repining and deploring the condition into which he was brought. Romanus for the security of his Estate banished several Persons upon suspicion; but could not thereby hinder the effects of envy which his high and sudden Advancement had procured. For another Conspiracy was hatched against him by Arsenius a Patritian, and one Paulus Mangalyra, which yet was discovered, and they lost both their Estates and Eyes. To obviate these Practices and strengthen himself by Alliance he Married his Daughter Agatha to Leo the Son of Argyrus, a man very Noble and of excellent Qualifications both of Body and Mind. But by this time several began to commiserate the condition of Constantine, who was thus overpowered by the Uplart, and one Anastasi, called Sacellarius, framed new Designs to take him off. But this Plot was also discovered, and Anastasi for his pains was shaven and made a Monk. Now did Romanus publicly command, that he himself having the first, Constantine should be only called and esteemed Emperour in the second place, and under this pretence that this was the only means to prevent Conspiracies; thus for uncertain things and a fading Empire, making himself perjured and an Enemy to Almighty God, as our Writers observe. About this time it happening that Adralesfus the Domestick of the Schools dying, he conferred his place, as a farther means to strengthen his Alliance on Pothus Argyrus.

Punishes several Conspirators against himself.

Insults over Constantine.

11. Now were the Bulgarians again very troublesome, making their Inroads as far as Catafyrtes; and Pothus, as his place required, led out an Army against them, with little effect on either side, save that Michael one of his Officers being out to scout, did some little hurt to a Party of the Enemy, and received a wound of which he died shortly after. But Simoon sent more Forces commanded by Chaganus one of his Noblemen, and Mimicus the Master of his Horse, with Orders to march to Constantinople if self without any stop. Romanus hearing of it left they should burn and waste the Suburbs and adjoining Palaces, dispatched away the two Argyri, Leo and Pothus, John Reitor, and others to meet and oppose them, who accordingly gave them Battle in the Plain of Pega, but John the Reitor affrighted at their noise and sudden Onset ran away and gave occasion to a Defeat, wherein many were slain. He hardly escaping got to a Pinnace, which Alexius the Drugarius of the Navy endeavouring to doe, fell down from the side of the Vessel, and was drowned, together with his Protomandator. Leo and Pothus recovered a Castle in their flight; the rest of the Multitude was either drowned as they endeavourd to escape, were slain by the Enemies hand, or taken Prisoners: And the Bulgarians without any opposition burnt the Palace of Pega, and wasted all the Countrey. The year following being the eleventh of Constantine, in the Tenth Indiction, died on the twentieth of February, Theodora the Wife of Romanus, and after her decease Sophia the Wife of Christopher bore the Title of Augusta or Empress. Now made the Bulgarians another Inroad as far as the Palace of Theodora, which they burnt without any resistance. Romanus standing now in need of his Officers, made them a great Feast, and by good words, as well as the Entertainment, made them ingate to doe their utmost endeavour in defence of their Countrey, so much disgraced as well as harassed by the so frequent Invasions of that People.

The Bulgarians renew their Incursions against the Romans.

12. The day following, Salsitius the Leader of the Excubitores to make good his word, as soon as it was light set upon the Enemy's Camp, and killed all he found therein, the rest being employed abroad in pillaging the Countrey. But understanding by some that had escaped of his Enterprize, they returned thither, and overpowered the Romans already wearied by the former Fight; Salsitius having

A Rebellion
in Chaldia, but suppressed.

Simoon lays Siege to Adrinople.

The Saracens
invade the Sea Coasts, but are foundly beaten.

Simoon undertakes another Expedition, pitches his Tent near Blacherna.

Whence an Interview and Peace ensued.

Stephen and Constantine, Sons of Romanus Crowned Emperours.

having with his few made opposition a considerable time, and killed many, put spurs to his Horse and fled, but being laid fast in passing of a Ditch, was wounded mortally by those that pursued him; and though by the Assistance of his Attendants he was got out of the Ditch, and came to Blacherna, yet he died there the night following in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, to the great affliction of the Emperour, the Army, and all the People. At this time a Rebellion happened in Chaldia (a Region of Syria, near to Iberia) against the Emperour, which was happily suppressed by the diligence of Curcias, Domestick of the Schools, then lying at Cæsarea, who on a sudden and unexpectedly fell upon the Conspirators. In the mean while Simoon the Bulgarian laid Siege to Adrianople, about which he drew a line, and with violence attacked it. The Governour at this time was Leo a Patritian, whom for his too unadvised haste and vehemence against the Enemy, they called Moroleon, or Leo the Fool. But he defended the City very Gallantly, both by opposition made from the Walls, and several successful Sallies, till the Inhabitants, pinched with Famine, gave up themselves, Governour and Town into Simoon's Hands, who remembering of how many Bulgarians Leo had been the Destruction, safely caused him to be tortured to Death. Then left he a Garrison in Adrianople, which upon its being seized by some Roman Forces, delivered it up again into their Hands. At the same time, Leo of Trapolis with a great Fleet of Saracens invaded the Sea Coasts and Islands. Him John Radenus the Patritian and Drugarius of the Navy, as he lay at Lemnus, suddenly Attacked with such Execution, that scarcely any but himself escaped alive from the place.

13. In the Month of September, and the second Indiction, being the seventeenth year from the beginning of the Reign of Constantine, Simoon the Bulgarian Prince, with all the Force he could make, undertook another Expedition against Constantinople; having with Fire and Sword wasted Macedonia and Thrace, he pitched his Camp near to Blacherna. Hence he sent to require that the Patriarch and some of the Nobility might be brought to him to Treat, who accordingly, upon the Reception of Hostages, were dispatched to him; but when they were about to Treat, he dismissed them, signifying his desire to come to an Interview with the Emperour himself, whom he knew both to be a Man of Prudence and Veracity. Romanus was well enough pleased with the offer, and commanded a place to be prepared not far from the Walls, upon the Sea shore, whither he might conveniently come with his Gally; when in the mean time, Simoon not able or willing to restrain his Hostility, sent a Party to burn the Church of our Lady of the Fountain, built by Justinian, and all things thereabout, giving thereby vehement occasion to suspect that he was no-way inclining to Peace. But on the ninth day of December, all things being prepared, they met on the place; first came the Emperour, and expected the other, who made all the shew of Bravery he could by his several Ranks, distinguished by their Gilded and Brazen Targets and Spurs. Romanus expostulated with him, that "Being a Christian, he should be so Bloudy, and rejoice in the slaughter of those that Professed the same Religion; and putting him in mind that he must dye, and according to that Faith, give an Account of all his Cruelties to an Higher Judge; offered him what Wealth he would ask, if it was that he fought after, by which and other motives he so wrought upon him, that he promised to conclude the Peace, and so departed richly prefented by the Emperour.

14. On Christmas Day following, Romanus caused his two Sons, Stephen and Constantine to be Crowned in the Great Church, reserving the other, Theophylact by Name, for the Patriarchal Dignity. John Mysticus his prime Minister he honoured with Patritian and Proconsular Dignity, who shortly after was convicted of aiming at the Imperial Power, and for that was shaven a Monk; his fellow Conspirator, Cosmas the Patritian and Logotheta Dromi being foundly beaten, and turned out of his Place, who had had a Design of Marrying his Daughter to Mysticus. About the same time most horrible Earthquakes happened in Thrace, by which many Churches, Houses and Men were swallowed up: Simoon the Bulgarian making an Expedition against the Chrobati, was in the straits of the Mountains overthrown by them in Battle, and lost all his Army. Now the Story goes, that one John an Altronomer came to the Emperour, and desired him to send some to cut off the Head of a Pillar which stood over the Arch of Xerolophus, toward the West; for by that means Simoon should perish instantly, that Pillar being fatal to him, or Magically signifying him; which being done, * Αὐτὸς ὁ ὁμοιωθεὶς τῷ μαγικῷ ἐλεμέντῳ, ἐπὶ ἐκείνῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐπε-σάνθη.

philus his Brother, Grandfather to that John who afterward was Emperor, the Governour of Mesopotamia, overpowering the Saracens wherever he came. The Turks after this made another Invasion, but were the second time bought off by Theophanes. To complete these Felicities by a more honourable Alliance, Romanus sends Paschalis, a Protospatharian and Governour of Lombardy, to Hugh the King of France (of Italy our Greek Writers mean) to desire his Daughter in Marriage, for Romanus his Nephew the Son of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, which was granted, and the Lady Berta by Name, his Daughter by a Concubine, being sent with great Pomp lived with Romanus five years, and then died. But these serene and prosperous Days were succeeded by tempestuous weather, both in the natural and civil Sense. A Violent wind in December did much mischief, and the State and Dignity of Romanus was shortly after not shaken only, but quite overturned. Conscious, as our Authours believe, of his Wickedness and Perjury, in that he swore to be a Protector only to Constantine, and never to affect the Sovereignty (though he not only did this, but placed himself and Sons before the Right owner) he endeavoured to expiate this Guilt by certain good Actions, and to appease Almighty God. Besides other charitable Deeds, he paid the Debts of such as owed money, to the Value of nineteen Centenaries, and caused the Bonds to be burnt in the middle of the Forum: Moreover he paid the Rents of such as hired Houses in the City. "And truly, faith Zonaras, herein he gratified such as were in Debt, but thereby he himself received little or no benefit. For what he gave was not his own, it being publick money, and belonging to the Sovereign Power, of which he had seized by force, and defrauded the Right owner. Enjoying all the Imperial wealth and substance, out of it he spared a small Pittance, just as if a man having killed his Neighbour's Ox, gives the Feet only to the Poor, and he himself devours the whole Body; or as if one that lies with another Man's Wife, gives some of her Husband's money to those that are in want, to purchase excuse for his Crime.

19. But as Providence (so he farther observes) is usually slow in Revenge to give time and space for Repentance, so is it sure at last to take vengeance of those that will not amend their ways. Romanus was now passing the twenty sixth year of his Usurpation, wherein he had made no reckoning of Constantine the true Heir of the Empire, who all this while had concealed his Indignation as well as he could, but notwithstanding was so careful as to watch a fit opportunity to cast off the Usurper, and recover his former Place and Dignity, having so much Spirit as to be sensible, that nothing was left him but the Name and Habit. He found at length, that the only means to do his work was to set the Father and Sons at variance. Christopher was already dead, Constantine was a Man too solid and wife for him to deal withall; but Stephen being of the quite contrary disposition was most fit for his purpose, and he got one Basilus Volucer, a very crafty man to inveigle him, and bring about his Design. Basilus having wound himself into his Acquaintance by Degrees instilled into him such thoughts as these: that he was imprudent, a Man of his Age, Strength and Understanding, to suffer all to hang by a rotten Thread, as he termed the old Man's Life, and not rather take the Government upon himself being so admirably qualified for it, for which he might be assured of the assistance of Constantine his Sifters Husband, who could not take it well to be so lessened, and eclipsed as he was by Romanus. With these and the like Flatteries he was so tickled, that he resolved to depose his Father, and having felt a little the Pulse of his Brother Constantine, and found him averse to any such Attempt, to go through it, with the Help of Constantine Porphyrogenitus and Marianus the Monk, the Son of Leo Argyrus, who gladly joined in the Enterprize, though he was very much beloved by Romanus.

Taking then his opportunity he seized on his Father, on the sixteenth of December, and conveying him into the Island Pruta, forced him to be shaven and made a Monk; which done, he with his Brother and Brother-in-Law managed all things. But long could they not live without suspicions and jealousies, and especially Stephen feared the Interest and claim of Porphyrogenitus, and therefore resolved to depose him. This Constantine was aware of, and having the same Design upon him was more quick, and that through the instigation of his Wife especially. Having communicated his purpose to Basilus, we now mentioned, Marianus and others whom he made his own, as the two Brothers dined with him; on the twenty seventh of January he caused them to be secured and conveyed away, viz. Stephen into the Island Panormus, and Constantine into Terebinthus, where they were shaven and made Clerks, Stephen was afterwards removed into Proconnesus, thence thence to Rhodes, and at last to Mitylene; and Constantine into Samothracia. Stephen bore his Fortune courageously, and lived many years in Lesbus; but Constantine grew fullen and impatient, and having often endeavoured to escape, in the second year after his deposing killed one of his Keepers, at which the rest were so enraged, that they flew him. As for Romanus their Father he outlived the disgrace some three years.

Becomes sole Emperour.

His management of Affairs.

20. Thus Constantine Porphyrogenitus, having in his thirty third year recovered his former Estate, in his Government answered not the expectation and hope, that had been conceived of him. For he gave himself up to Wine and Sloth, leaving the management of affairs to others, and yet took no care whom he intrusted, promiscuously and without any consideration conferring Offices both military and Civil. He would punish Offenders without any Mercy, though he looked not at home where Helena his Wife, and Basilus made merchandize of all Preferments, by which means base and unworthy Persons got into the greatest Places of Trust and Revenue. Yet is he much commended for restoring the Sciences and Advancement of Learning, which now had lain much neglected. He encouraged also Artificers, and very much increased Trade. Moreover he was very grateful to such as had assisted him in the Recovery of his Power. On Bardas Phocas he conferred the Dignity of Magister, and the Office of Domestick of the Schools of the East; and his Sons he preferred to good Commands in the East, Cappadocia and Seleucia. To Basilus Volucer he gave the Command of the Associates, made Marianus Argyrus his Comes Stabuli, and one Manuel Curtices the Drungarius Bigle. But to establish his Power which he had now recovered, in the first Place on Easter-Day he gave a Diademe to his Son Romanus: then caused he to be gelded Romanus the Son of Stephen, as also Basilus begotten by Romanus the Elder on a Slave, and Michael the Son of Christopher to enter into Orders. Now he seemed to himself so fixed as nothing could shake him, all Dangers being removed and prevented, when more ways than one he was in peril to loose all again. For Theophanes the Chamberlain, was plotting how to reduce Romanus out of the Island Pruta, and to restore him, many joining with him in the Design: and at the same time several others of great Quality and Interest consulted how they might fetch back Stephen, and re-establish him in the Government. The Plots were timely discovered by some of the Parties, and Theophanes with his Companions were banished. Those that were for Stephen were ignominiously beaten, and looting both their Estates and Noses were then driven into exile.

21. The Daughter of Hugh dying as we said after five years, having some time consulted to whom he should marry his Son Romanus, at length he bestowed on him a Maid of very sordid Parentage, her Parents it's said keeping a Victualling House, but of admirable beauty and a miracle of Nature, and her Name being Anastasia, he changed it into Theophano. As for matters of War, Bardas Phocas was as we said made Domestick of the Schools, but did nothing worthy of his Title himself, but managed all by his Deputies, incurring such hatred of the Souldiers by his extreme covetousness, that in an Engagement he was deserted by them, and had been taken or killed but for the pertinacious Valour of his own Attendants, who brought him off alive, but with a great and deep wound he received in his Forehead. But his two Sons Nicephorus and Leo behaved themselves to Admiration, both in respect of their Valour and Conduct against the Enemy, and the Kindness and Providence for those that were under their Charge. Leo took in Battel one Apollasemus a very eminent Man, and Kinsman of Chabdanus the Ameras of Chalepus, who with a great multitude had invaded the Roman Pale, and after a great slaughter of his Men sent him up Prisoner to Constantinople, where the Emperor led him in Triumph, and trode upon his Neck. But Constantine, the third Son of Phocas, Chabdanus took, and carried him away to Chalepe, where he essayed by all means to make him abjure his Religion, and when all would not do poisoned him, which so enraged his Father, that all the Kinsmen he took of Chabdanus he put to death. This so irritated Chabdanus on the other side, that Paul a Magister surnamed Monomachus, being sent to treat of Peace could do no good with him; and he, with a great Force invaded the Empire, leading with him Nicetas Chalcintas a Patritian, and several other Persons he had taken Prisoners. But Nicetas betrayed all his Councils to Phocas, who laid an Ambush for him in a very strait place he was to pass, and cut off most of his Men, he himself with a very few escaping. Before his flight, he killed those Prisoners he had in Custody. But Nicetas had corrupted his Keepers, and was got away with all such as belonged to him.

Romanus endeavours to expiate his unjust Usurpation and Dealings with Constantine Porphyrogen-itus.

Who sets the Father and Sons at variance.

Thereby deposing Romanus.

And shaving Stephen and Constantine.

The Saracens
make an Invasion into the Empire.

22. Bardas to prevent any more Inrodes invaded the Territories of the Saracens, where he waited all in his way, took many strong Holds, and amongst other Places Adapa that Noble City as they term it. The Emperour's Success was no way suitable to his undertaking, who, as became him, did constantly regret the great Losses his Subjects ever and anon sustained from those Agarens that inhabited Crete, to strike therefore a Terror into them, he prepared a strong Army, and rigged a very considerable Fleet to transport it. And had his choice of a Person to conduct them been as good as his Design was laudable, it could not have miscarried. But General of this whole expedition he made one Constantine Gongylas a Patritian one of his Bedchamber, a mere Courtier, an effeminate Man not fit at all for a Camp, of which he never had any Experience. He passed over into Crete, but there did nothing worthy of the Place he bore; neither took care for fortifying himself by any Works, nor sending out any Scouts to give him notice of the motion of the Enemy. The Saracens then perceiving what a careless and silly Enemy they had to deal with, took their opportunity, and falling upon the Romans easily defeated them; some they took, others they killed, and made themselves Masters of the Camp, and the worthy General himself had ran the same Fortune as he deserved, had not his Domesticks notably defended him, and conveyed him into the Admiral Gally. Yet was it not out of disdain for this miscarriage or for his misgovernment, that Romanus the Son of the Emperour now plotted against his Father's Life. But so it was, that impatient to dominiere himself he could not stay his time, but conspiring with his Wife the Victualler's Daughter, they persuaded Nicetas, one of the Attendants at his Table, to give him Poison, instead of a purging Potion he was to take. It either happened by chance or was designed, that as he was about to drink it he stumbled, and spilt the greater part of it, so that what remained did not work the effect they wished, though he fell very sick and hardly escaped. In the Month of September, he would needs travel to the Mountain Olympus, as he pretended to beg the Prayers of the Monks, for a successful expedition he purposed to undertake into Syria, but as was thought to confer with Theodoros Bishop of Cyzicus, how he might out Polyeuctus of the Office of Patriarch, which he had obtained after the Death of Theophylact Son of Romanus the late Emperour. There, either by the farther practice of his Son upon his Body, or otherwise he fell sick, and being brought back to Constantinople in his Litter, died on the ninth of November, having lived fifty four years and two Months, whereof thirteen he reigned with his Father, Uncle and Mother, and twenty five more (he should have reigned) with Romanus Lacapenus, and fifteen after that by himself. Zonaras gives him Commendation for his Piety to God, and his Love to Learning which he shewed by many good Deeds, his Writings and Epistles, composed though not according to exact Rules of Oratory, yet so as they wanted not strains of Rhetoric. And there in Baronius, * a Fragment still remaining of an * Ad An. 96. Advice to his Son not to marry with any of the Barbarous Northern Nations, a great Reason of which is fetcht from a Precept left by Constantine the Great. He adds that he was much addicted to all sorts of Verses as was to be seen in these Writings, wherein he deplored the Death of his Wife, and he subjoins what's suitable to what we said before concerning his reviving of Philosophy, and the Liberal Arts. But the most memorable thing of these things is, the Collection which he caused to be made out of all Historians.

23. Constantine Porphyrogenitus being dead, Romanus the Boy (so he was called, not that he was a Boy as to years, but to distinguish him from the Elder Romanus his Grandfather) succeeds him in the third Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLX. And as to his manners and carriage he might well enough be termed a Boy. For neglecting wholly matters of Government, which he left to the Management of one Joseph Bring, as the chief of his Chamber, he himself attended no other weighty Affairs but those of Mirth and Filthiness, his chief Companions being either Whores, or those of the other Sex that could pimp for him and gratify him in such nasty Delights, or tickle his Ears with Ribaldry. One John a Clerk, and an Eunuch, whom for his many Villanies Constantine had thrust into a Monastery, now he received amongst those of his Bedchamber, the monastical Habit being thrown off, and notwithstanding the earnest Complaints of Polyeuctus the Patriarch, yet he excused the matter, and kept him with him as long as he lived; indeed after the Emperour's Death he returned to his Monastery, and changed again his Habit though not his Mind. Yet that it should not be said, but that Romanus was careful to keep the Succession in his own Family, on Easter Day he caused an Imperial Imperial Crown to be set on the Head of his young Son Basilus, and shortly after he had another Son born whom he called Constantine after his Grandfather, by which Issue he seemed now so confirmed in what at present he enjoyed, that he needed to take no farther care, especially having so good a Commander as Nicephorus Phocas to manage his Wars, whom the late Emperour for his great services, had preferred to be Domestick of the Schools of the East. This Nicephorus indeed had done things very extraordinary against the Saracens, having at several times engaged and beaten the several Ameras of Tarfus, Chalepus and Trisopolis, by which having so much testified his Abilities, Romanus now made choice of him to go against those of Crete. Arriving at the Island with the Fleet, he put such of them to flight as would have hindered his Landing, and then having strongly incamped himself, and his Ships riding safely in Harbour he fell upon the several Towns, and in the space of seven Months took many of them. On the seventh of March, he took Chandace the most fortified of all others, after which Curupes the Ameras of the Isle, and Arcemas who was his Lieutenant, or next to him in Power fell into his Hands. He had now in a manner brought all Crete into obedience, for the settlement whereof when some time required, he was suddenly recalled at the Suggestions of Joseph because of an old saying, That he that conquered that Island, should become Master of the whole Roman Empire. While he yet staid in Crete, his Brother Leo Phocas was sent into the East to restrain the Saracens, from making Inrodes, which at this time they might be prone to do, on purpose to divert the Romans from Crete. He engaged with Chabdanus at a Place called Andraffus, and gave him such an Overthrow, that an innumerable Multitude of the Agarens being slain, the rest were brought away Prisoners to Constantinople in such Drove, that all the Houses both in City and Country were filled with Slaves. Chabdanus with a very few hardly escaped. Leo was graced with a Triumph, and otherwise honoured and rewarded as were all the rest, that had well deserved in the Expedition.

24. But Romanus had not passed the second year of his Reign, when a grievous Conspiracy was hatched against him by the Principal of the Nobility. The Head of them was Basilus Pulcher, with whom joyned Paschalis and Bardas the Son of Libis both Patritians, and Nicholas Chalcutzas, who resolved to kill the Emperour on the Day appointed to the Horse-races, as he should come down to see the Sport, and proclaim Basilus his Successor. E'er the Day came, one Joannicius a Saracen and Conspirator discovered the Plot, and they were apprehended by Joseph, who put them all to Torture except Basilus, and on the Day of the Solemnity were led up and down in Derision, then banished and shaven for Monks, yet the Emperour was so merciful, that after some small time he recalled them, but Basilus fell distracted and died in Proconnesus, so paying for his several Treasons. Romanus Saronita, who was Son-in-Law of Romanus the Elder, was so frightened with what had happened to him, and the rest, that left his Eminent Condition should bring him into danger, he distributed his Estate to his Children, and giving largely to the Poor went into a Monastery, where he lived a Monk many years in great esteem with the succeeding Emperours. At this time raised a great Murmur of Cattel, which having begun in the Days of Romanus Senior, continued a long time after. The Emperour at the Instigation of his Wife, now resolved to remove his Mother and Sister from Court, to the Palace of Antiochus. The Mother understanding of it, so wrought upon her Son with her Complaints and Curses, that she was permitted to continue; but the Sisters were taken away and made Nuns, though afterwards when there was none left to awe them, they threw off the Habit and fell to Flesh again. But she took their removal so ill, that she shortly after sickened and died on the twentieth of September, and was royally interred by her Father.

25. We said e'er while, that Nicephorus Phocas was called out of Crete, to which we must now add, that it was without any Permission to return to Constantinople; for he received Orders to pass with all his Forces into the East, where * Chabdanus * Glyce Apostolochanda. after his defeat had recruited himself, and having now got together a considerable Army was expected every day by the Subjects of the Empire, to renew his wonted Hostilities. Nicephorus e'er he could do any harm, got up to him as he came into Syria, overthrew him in Battle, and drove him farther up into the Countryside, which done he took Berrhwa all but the Castle, therein much Wealth, many Prisoners, and let at Liberty many Christian Captives. This was good News to those of Constantinople, though Romanus the Emperour scarcely lived to receive it, dying on the fifteenth Day of March, after he had lived twenty four years,

Ere and

The Territories of the Saracens invaded but with ill Success.

Constantine like to be Poisoned.

A Little after dies.

Romanus The Boy succeeds.

Why to term.

The Island of Crete subdued.

The Saracens on all sides beaten by the Romans.

A Conspiracy against him, but discovered and punished.

A great Murmur among Cattel.

Berrhwa taken from the Saracens. Romanus the Emperour dies.

and thereof Reigned thirteen years four Months and five days, as writes Cuoplates and from him Cedrenus, (that is with his Father and by himself, for he Reigned about three alone) some thought he died of Poison, and others through his intemperance as to Wine and Women. He was large of stature though less than his Father, very good natur'd and easily reconciled; and is thought to have been able and fit enough for Government, had not those about him intangled him in pleasures and lascivious courses, that they managing his affairs, might have the better opportunity to enrich themselves. The Empire by his death was devolved upon his two young Sons Basilus and Constantine, and their Mother Theophano, who two days before was brought to Bed of a Daughter they called Anne. By the command of the Emperors now Regent, though forely against the mind of Joseph, Nicephorus Phocas came to Constantinople in April, and there Triumphed in the Circus, shewing the Rich spoils taken both in Crete and Berbergia, Joseph very jealous that he affected the imperial Dignity, of which he being aware and knowing how much it concerned him to avoid the suspicion of him, who at present was chief Minister, came to his House privately, and desiring to speak with him alone, professed he had had for a long time a desire and purpose to retire out of the vanities of the World, to a Monastical Life, but had been hindered from his purpose by the kindness of his Princes, who had forced employment upon him: and he shewed him a Shirt of hair he had next his Skin. Joseph surprized at his carriage, and at the sight of the Shirt, fell down at his Feet, and begged his pardon, professing he would give no Credit to such as accused him for the time to come. And so he was permitted to depart to his own House.

26. They were also jealous of Stephen the Son of Romanus the Elder, who still lived in confinement, and after much endeavour by stricter Custody, he was made sure of by Poison, at the procurement of Theophano. At the same time, Peter Prince of the Bulgarians, his Wife being dead, renewed the League with the Empire, and giving up his two Sons Borices and Romanus, shortly after died. Upon report hereof they were sent home to possess themselves of their Father's power, after which the four Sons of a potent Count of that Country, gaped and made a great faction amongst the People. But in the mean time Joseph sorely repented that he had let Nicephorus Phocas escape out of his Hands, and resolved to recover the prey if possible. He wrote Letters to Tzimisches, and Carcas Commanders in the East, and Men of great interest and abilities, promising to procure to the one the Office of Domestick of the Schools of the East, and the other that of the West, if they would either get him shaven and made a Monk, or by any other means remove him out of the way. They when they had received the Letters out of their good will to Phocas gave him notice of it, and advised him to take good Courage, and put those at Constantinople out of all doubt by a sudden taking upon him the Dignity of Emperour, and when he excused himself, and either heartily or cunningly shewed himself averse, they drew their Swords and threatened him with death upon refusal. To save then his Life, as some gave out, he consented, and on the second day of July, by procurement of Tzimisches, the Towns of the East saluted him Emperour. Others more probably reported that he had for a good while been ambitious this way, but not so much out of love to the Empire as to the Emperess Theophano, with whom he was exceedingly in love, having sent his trusty Servant several times to her on Messages, had private conference with her himself, and as some gave out, Communication of closer importance. This Joseph Bringas its thought had smelt out, and thereupon increased his jealousy of him.

27. And when the report of his Designment came to Constantinople, he was then at his Wits end, the Citizens bearing him no good will, he had born himself to highly, and been difficult for Access. But when he understood that with the Shouts and Acclamations of the Army, he was brought to Chrysopolis, he then considered what other he might set up for Emperour, and avoid the Indignation of the Souldiers. Upon the report of Phocas his promotion, his Father Bardas had taken Sanctuary in the great Church, but his Brother Leo, though narrowly watched yet escaped, and got to him safe. This farther perplexed Joseph, who was not of an humour to ingratiate himself with the People, but if he went about it was wont the more to displease and provoke them. And now he could not refrain his Inclination, but as he saw them all flock to the Church, and to be tickled with the Change they apprehended, with haughty and severe words he rebuked them, and threatened to raise Corn to an high rate, than which he could not do nor say any thing more to irage the multitude. This was on Sunday the ninth of August, Basilus Constantine and their Mother Theophano were crowned at Constantinople.

The League with the Bulgarians renewed.

Nicephorus Phocas saluted Emperour by the Army.

A Tumult at Constantinople.

when on the Evening of the same Day, Basilus the Favourite of Constantine the Emperour bearing mortal hate to him, got a Company of his Acquaintance and Servants together, and set them on Work to pull down the Houses of those of his party in several quarters of the City. They level'd Joseph's House with the Ground, and not only his, and divers others of the Nobility, but under this pretence, if any of the Company bore a grudge to another Man, down went his House as well as the rest, and not a few were killed in the Tumult. In the mean time all the Streets rebounded with the Noise of Nicephorus Callinicus or the brave Conquerour, and Bardas was now so encouraged as to leave the Shelter he had taken up in the Church, and Joseph very prudently took his place. Basilus took with him the Emperours Pinnace, and with the rest of the Fleet, sailed down to Chrysopolis, whence he brought up Nicephorus to the Hebdomus. Hence all the People of the City accompanying him in a solemn Pomp, with Shouts and Musick, he entered the City at the Golden Gate, and going to the great Church was there Crowned on a Scaffold by Polieutius the Patriarch, it being the Lord's day, and the sixteenth of August.

Nicephorus Crowned there.

28. Nicephorus Phocas thus became Emperour in the sixth Indiction, from A. D. 963. The first thing he did, was to remove the Emperess Theophano from Court into another Palace. Then did he banish Joseph into Paphlagonia, who after two years ended his Life in a Monastery. He gave to his Father Bardas the Title of Cesar, and on the twentieth of September throwing off the Vizard, he married Theophano, and now fell to Flesh again, of which he had not eaten since the death of his Son, who was killed by his Cousin German Pelasus as they were riding and sporting together. The Marriage being solemnized in the new Chapel of the Palace, as they were to pass into the Chancel, Polieutius having him by the Hand, and being entred himself stooped him at the Door, and refused to admit him, till he had made satisfaction for Marrying the second time. At the same time a report flew about the Church, and made no little disturbance, which was, you must know, that Nicephorus had been Godfather to one of Theophano's Children, by which spiritual Alliance being her Brother could not Marry her, and therefore the Patriarch required him either to quit his Wife, or he must stand Excommunicated, Nicephorus chose the latter of the two, and propounded the matter to be debated by such Bishops of the Country as were in Town, and certain select Senators, who gave sentence that the constitution which pressed him, was made by Copronymus, that it did not bind him, and they all subscribed an Instrument of his Absolution. But the Patriarch for all this persisted in his former opinion, and refused to communicate with him, though Cesar affirmed that the Emperour was not Godfather, as was alleged: and Stilianus chief of the Court Chaplains, whom they termed Protopapa, who was reported first to have raised the Story, before the Council and Senate, swore that he never either saw or said any such thing. Hereupon though Polieutius knew he forswore himself, yet he relinquished the objection of Compaternity, and quitting also his obliquity as to the Crime of second Marriage, after all this stir recovered to Communion Nicephorus. But he was sensible of, and never pardoned the affront as long as he lived.

Marries Theophano the Emperess.

He makes War upon the Saracens of Sicily.

29. In the first year of his Reign, Nicephorus undertook a War against the Saracens of Sicily, because he judged it an ignominious thing to pay Tribute to the People, which how it came first to be granted, we must discover by fetching matters a little higher. That People having in the Reign of Basilus Macedo Conquered Sicily, all but Panormus, and thence Invaded Italy, and all the Islands of the Mediterranean as far, as Peloponnesus, were then repelled and beaten into quiet by Nicephorus Phocas, then Domestick of the Schools, and Grandfather to this Emperour, who thereby got exceeding much Honour. From that time Italy continued in repose till the Reign of Constantine Porphyrogenitus and his Mother, when these Barbarians taking advantage, fell upon the Country, and the Governours finding themselves unable to grapple with both the Western and Eastern Infidels, especially now that the Bulgarians had violated the League, thought fit to conclude a Peace with them of Sicily, and the accord was made by Eustathius, then Governor of Calabria, one of the Emperours Chamber, that a yearly Pension or Tribute, oftwo and twenty Thousand Aurei should be paid to the Saracens. The Peace concluded, John Muzalo a Patrician was preferred to the Government of Calabria, a Man so imperious that he was killed by the People, who gave up themselves to Dandalphus King of Lombardy, (here probably is meant Radulphus King of Burgundy and Italy against Berengarius) much about the time that Romanus the Elder seized on the Government. Romanus resolved if need were, to send a Fleet serve on Land, and if before as Foot, now as Horsemen at their own Charge.

33. War was his onely Element, neither could he think or say any thing but what had relation to it. Therein he placed the Measures of good and evil, inasmuch, that he laboured to introduce a Law which should give to them that lost their Lives in Fight, equal Honours and Veneration with the Martyrs, and but for the vigorous opposition of the Patriarch and Bishops he had published the Edict, they contending, that on the other hand the Canon of Basil the Great did bar such of the Communion as had killed, though but an Enemy in Battle, for three years. But what did more provoke the Multitude he debased the Coin, causing some of less intrinsic value to be made, which done, all Payments to himself he exacted in that of the greater, and caused all Issues out of the Treasury to be made of the lesser sort. And whereas all Money stamped with the Images of Emperours, if of the same weight and goodness went at the same Rates, he enhanced the value of his own Coins above those of his Predecessours. This caused extraordinary difficulty and damage in Commerce, which added to the dearth of all Commodities, made very great disturbance. But that which enraged most, was the fortifying of the Court or Palace, because it was told him, that in it he should die. He pulled down very fair Houses of private Persons adjoining to it, and close to it erected a Cittadell, wherein were built Granaries, Store-houses, Ovens, and Bakehouses, filled with all sorts of Provisions. To these publick Grievances there were other particular Accidents, which being ill taken, however designed, farther increased the general hate against him. A great Tumult happening betwixt the Seamen and Armenians, wherein many were killed, and Sisinnius the Prefect of the City hardly escaped, he to be revenged on the Citizens, whom he concluded to have been Authors of the disorder, was thought to have drawn them into a Snaie in this manner. He appointed some Exercises on Horseback, and eicher to let the People see the manner of fighting or to terrifie them, caused the Riders to draw their Swords and skirmish together, which cast the Multitude into such a fright, that all ran headlong down from the Theatre, over the Precipices and Ditches, and treading one upon another many were pressed to Death, many more hurt, and greater had been the mischief but that they observed him to sit on his seat not at all concerned, which made them change their Opinion of him, and to stop their Flight. But the Relations of such as were killed, not long after, as he returned into the City, reviled him, and cast at him Dirt and Stones, and had not some of the more sober sort become his Guard, he had easily miscarried.

34. In the fourth year of his Reign, the tenth Indiction, in June going to visit the Cities of Thrace, when he came to Great Suda, he wrote to Peter Prince of Bulgaria, not to suffer the Turks, as they called them, to pass the River Ister. Thus he objected for several Reasons that he could not doe, but especially he insisted on this, that when that People had invaded his Dominions, then the Emperour had refused to give him any assistance: That therefore he was forced by necessity to make a Peace with them, which his Interest would not permit him now to break. To be revenged of him, for this repulse he procured Spheondylabus King of the Russians the following year to invade Bulgaria, where committing all sorts of Hostility, they destroyed many Towns, and returned with much Booty, acting the same part over again the next year after. In the mean time happened a terrible Earthquake in Paphlagonia, and elsewhere. And in May following the Corn was so blasted by scorching Winds, that a great Famine followed, at which Nicephorus took advantage to fill his own Cofters, and made a Jest of the Calamity of his People, boasting that he had sold his Wheat at a double Rate. Both he and his Brother Rejoiced in the Miseries of the Poor, or their Actions were such, as they could not afford a better Interpretation, and drew some Expressions from the Oppressed, which taxed him with mis-government to his Face. "On a time as he was Mustering his Soldiers, an ancient man with a gray head desired to be lifted amongst them, of whom when he demanded why he that was now old and feeble, would desire to go to the Wars, he told him that he found he was much stronger than when he was young; for now, since he was Emperour, he could carry Corn of that value on his own Back, with which then he was wont to load two Asses. So much was he hated abroad, and at home, and in his own House he was as little beloved. Theophano his Wife did now loath him, either because he was no good Womans man, or he was jealous that he designed to geld her Sons, and leave the Empire to his Brother. Glycas writes expressly that it was because he lived chalv, abstained from her Bed, and was wont to sleep on the ground, being much delighted in taking his rest in that manner. Following her intemperate humour she had cast her affections upon Zimisces, whom as a suspected Person, the Emperour had confined to his own House.

35. She procured him to be discharged of his Confinement, and when Nicephorus refused to let him come presently to Constantinople, she not only got him secretly conveyed thither, but by Night to be drawn up into the Palace in a Basket, with five of his Friends, viz. Michael, Burtzas, the Patriitian, whom Nicephorus had disbilled, Leo Abalanus, an Officer in the Army, and one Atzyphtheodorus (so named from the swarthinness of his Complexion) more intimate with him than all others. Being got in, they went directly to seek the Emperour, and not finding him in his Chamber in the Bed wherein he ordinarily slept, they were going down the way they came, concluding that their Design was discovered. But by a Fellow that belonged to the Womens Apartment, they were brought where he lay asleep on the ground in a Bears skin, as his Custom was, which Skin he much valued because given him by his Uncle Michael a Monk. Zimisces first gave him a kick with his Foot and awakened him, then as he leaned on his Elbow endeavouring to rise, Leo Abalanus with his drawn Sword mortally wounded him in the Head, the Skull being pierced. Then they dragged him before Zimisces, who had placed himself in the Emperours Seat, and used him with all sorts of Indignities, while he onely said, Lord have mercy upon me, and the Mother of God help me. By this time the Alarm was given to those of the Guard that then watched, and they were hastening to his Relief, which the Conspirators perceiving, dispatched him, and cutting off his Head shewed it to them out of the Window, which sight quieted them; the Tragedy being already over and not to be prevented. Some reported that ten days before his death, by a Writing left in his Chamber, warning was given him to beware of Zimisces: Nay, that by a certain Clerk that very Night the Conspiracy was revealed the same way. But some reported, that he imagining the Paper to contain onely some Petition, never opened it; others said he did open and read it, but made no reckoning of it, his Fate so vehemently pressing upon him: And there wanted not who affirmed, that he both took notice of the thing, and committed the Inquiry thereof, and the Defence of his own Person to the Protovestiarius, and also wrote to his Brother Leo, then at his own House, to come to him sufficiently armed and accompanied with all speed; but he being busie at Chesh, with which Game he was wonderfully delighted, neglected to open the Letter till it was too late, which perceiving, with his Son Nicephorus he took Sanctuary in the Great Church. However to such an end came this Emperour, who by his Example abundantly shewed the truth of that old Saying, That Magistracy, especially in Sovereign Power, discovers the Disposition of a man. Formerly he had taxed that Vice in his own Father, to which he himself, when he had most ample opportunity of getting Wealth, was inflamed. In how sad and uncertain a condition those that wore the Diadem in those days perpetually were, and how much of that liberty which the old Roman Legions took of disposing of the Empire according to their own Lust and Ambition, was still usurped, the Reader from more than this one Instance cannot but take notice. Nicephorus lived fifty seven years, and thereof Reigned six, with as many Months.

36. The Murder committed, John Zimisces seized on the Empire in the twelfth Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLXIX. Basilus and Constantine, the Sons of Romanus, he made his Collegues, he being in the seventh and this in the fifth year of his Age, as Cedrenus writes, which could not be, considering how long it was since the death of their Father; so that herein greater credit is to be given to Parvinius, who reckons Basilus to have been fourteen, and Constantine about twelve, at this Alteration. For his prime Minister he made choice of Basilus of the Bedchamber, to whom Nicephorus, having been advanced in a great measure by his endeavours, had given a new Title of President, being a man of great experience, which he gained under Romanus his Father, and his Brother-in-Law Constantine Porphyrogenitus, by his Wars against the Saracens, and other Negotiations of greatest Concernment. He as soon as intrusted, to discharge his Duty, first removed all such as he knew to have been addicted to Nicephorus, from all Commands both Military and Civil, and substituted others in their Rooms, whom he knew to be faithfull to him in present power. Such as Nicephorus had banished, he recalled, and especially the Ecclesiasticks, whom for opposing him in Matters relating to the Church, he had driven from their places. These things premised

He engages the Russians to invade Bulgaria.

In time of Famine he raises the price of Corn, which adds to his hatred and oppression.

Zimisces seizes on the Empire, making Basilus and Constantine his Collegues.

for the establishing of his Power, Zimisces thought he might take the Ensigns of the Dignity, and to the great Church he went to receive the Diadem from the hands of the Patriarch. But here he was stopped at the Door, Polyeuthus affirming that it was not lawfull for him to enter that Place, whose hands still smok'd with the Bloud they had so lately shed, for which he must make satisfaction before he could be admitted. He received the Reprehension in good part, promising to perform all things that could be reasonably injoyned him; but alledged he had laid no violent hands on the late Emperour, who was slain by Abalantius and Atzeptheodrus by Command of the Emper's. The Patriarch then required that the should be banished from Court into some Island, as also the Murtherers of Nicephorus, and that the Edict made by him concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs should be rescinded. The Murtherers by Zimisces his command were precatly removed, and Theophano Banished into Proconessus, whence afterward escaping and betaking her self to the great Church, she was thrust out by Basilus, and carried into the Province of Armenia, and there close shut up in a Monastery, after many bitter and reproachfull Speeches uttered against the present Emperour and against Basilus, to whom she had given a Cuff on the Ear, and loaded him with the Names of Scythian and Barbarian. Her Mother also was removed from the City, and the Edict of Nicephorus against the Privileges of Church-men openly produced and torn in pieces.

Banishes Theophano the Emper's.

Zimisces Crowned at Constantinople

The Saracens, &c. in the East endeavour to revolt.

But are reduced to obedience.

37. These things performed, and the Emperour having promised for expiation of his Crime, to give all the Estate he had been Master of when a Private Man to the use of the Poor, he was admitted by Polyeuthus into the Church, and on Christmas day was there Crowned by his hands. While there was this changing and shifting at Court, Affairs of the Empire both in the Eastern and Western Parts, were but in a ticklish condition. For the Cities taken from the Saracens in Cilicia, Phœnicia, and Cæloſyria, were inclining to revolt. And Nicephorus his procuring of the Russians to invade Bulgaria, as it happened, had brought the Territories of the Romans into much greater danger. Zimisces thought he should provide in some measure for the security of the East, by preferring to the Bishoprick of Antioch upon the River Orontes, or that near Daphne, one Theodorus a Monk, a man of very good Desert, who always told him that he should come to be Emperour, but always advised him not to be hasty in his Attempts that way. He had also persuaded him that as soon as he should get the opportunity by his preferment to remove the Manichees out of the East, which he performed afterward, causing them to be transported to Philippopolis. All this while the Saracens intermitted no thoughts nor means for recovery of their Cities, especially of Antioch, in which their Reputation was most concerned. By the Agitation of those most principally concerned, a strict League and Alliance was entred into, not only by that People in what parts soever they lived, but by all other Nations, professing their Religion, particularly, as Cedrenus reckons them, the Egyptians, Persians, Elamites, both the sorts of Arabians, (inhabiting the Desert and Happy Arabia) and Sabeans, vast Forces they gathered together, the Command of which was given to those of Carthage, as the most experienc'd in War both by Sea and Land, who transferred it upon Zochares a man very fit for the place of General. They laid Siege to that Antioch near to Daphne, as our Authours call it, to distinguish it from all others of that Name, and omitted nothing proper to take it, but the strength of the place and the Courage of the Besieged held them to it till such time as the Emperour had sent orders to the Governour of Mesopotamia, to raise what power he could and relieve them, and dispatched away Nicholas an Eunuch most intimate with him to be General of the Expedition. He mustering all the Forces he could possibly get together, though not once to be named with their Multitudes, set upon them, gave them Battel, raised the Siege, forced them to disperse, and betake themselves to their own Countries, such of them as escaped the Slaughter; and confirmed the Cities of these Quarters in their Obedience.

Syria Metropolis Antiochia
Sic ad eam vocat.
Daphne erat suburbium ob arbores umbriferas & equorum capias amantissimum. Quod enim in Italia Bais, ad Alexandriam Canopus, id erat in Syria Suburbium, Antiochia Daphne.

38. Thus matters in the East very well succeeded; but in Bulgaria, which the Ross had overrun, things went not according to expectation; for this People having made themselves Masters of the Countrey, and got into their hands Boris and Romanus the two Sons of Peter, finding it much more pleasant and fertile than their own, resolved to fix in it, and brake the Covenants they had made with Nicephorus. In this their Resolution they were confirmed by one Calocyrcus, who ingaged that if by their means he could come to be Emperour of the Romans, he would freely quit to them Bulgaria, make a perpetual League with them, and double

He orders his Forces to march Westward.

Who ingaging with the Barbarians rout them.

Bardas Phocas usurps, seizing on Cæsarea.

double the Tribute or Pension, which had been promised them. Puffed up with these his Offers, but especially with present possession, they challenged Bulgaria as their own acquired by War, and the Ambassadors of the Emperour, who offered to confirm and make good whatever Nicephorus had granted, they rejected with scornfull Language and Deportment. Zimisces then finding himself obliged by force of Arms to obtain what by good words he could not compass, sent Orders for all his Forces to march Westward, over which he made General, one Bardas surnamed Sclernus or Hard his Wives Brother, resolving in the Spring in Person to be at the Head of the Army. The Russians hearing of these preparations, to prevent him, raised to themselves as many of the lately conquered Bulgarians as they thought convenient, and drawing into their Assistance the Patzinacæ, and those our Writers call Turks, inhabiting the Western Parts of Pannonia (the Hunnes or Hungarians) made up an Army of three Hundred and eight thousand Men, with which passing Æmus, they laid waste all Thrace, and fate down before the Walls of Adrianople. Bardas could scarcely muster above twelve thousand Men, and therefore so very much over-matched in Numbers, resolved to try if he could be superiour in skill and stratageme. He contained himself within the Walls of that City, and however challenged and provoked by the Enemy would not fight, making a shew of great fear and diffidence. This made them secure, so as they kept no order, observed no rules, were negligent in their watches, as not doubting but with convenience enough to seize upon the Prey.

39. He watcht his opportunities, and when he saw his time sent out John Alacensis a Patritian, with a Party to skirmish with the Enemy, and by little and little retreating to bring them into an Ambush he had conveniently placed for them. The Barbarians were divided into three Bodies, whereof the Russians and Bulgarians composed one, the other two consisted singly of the several Nations of Patzinacæ and Turks. It happened, that John light upon the Patzinacæ, with whom skirmishing and gently retiring till he came to the Place of the Ambush, he then fled as fast as his Horse could carry him, and they breaking all Order, and pursuing fell into the Army of Bardas, which compassing them in, cut them all off, or very few escaped. This discouraged him to complete his Victory by falling upon the rest, who though discouraged by what had happened to their Friends, yet made stout resistance, and the success continued doubtful a long time, till a Scythian taller and bolder than the rest singled out Bardas, as he rode up and down encouraging his Men. He gave him a blow on the Head, but his Helmet was of such tried Metal, that his Sword could not enter, though that of Bardas was so much better temper'd, that with one stroke he both clave his Head-piece and Head in sunder. And Constantine a Patritian, the Brother of Bardas, coming in to his Relief had as good Success. For they write, that grappling with another Scythian who assisted his Countryman, and fetching a stroke at his Head as he declined the blow, he cut off the Head of his Horse, and then cut the Throat of the Master as he lay grovelling on the Ground. These Achievements of the Roman General, and his Brother so discouraged the Barbarians, that they would no more abide it, but shifted for themselves as well as they could, but had not Night prevented farther pursuit, none had escaped, most being killed, and the rest in a manner all taken Prisoners, of whom there were very few to be seen, that were not wounded. Yet if we may believe some Writers, of the Romans were killed but five and twenty Men. But none escaped without having received the marks of their Valour upon their Skins.

40. Scarcely was this Scythian War brought to an end, when one Intestine which threatned more danger if not to the Empire, yet to the Emperour; recalled Bardas to Constantinople. Bardas Phocas who had been banished into Amasia had fled from thence, and having held secret Intelligence, with his Kindred and Acquaintance, was up in Arms, having seized on Cæsarea the City of Cappadocia, where he had got together considerable Forces, and several Eminent men being come to him had assumed the Imperial Title and Ornaments. Leo Curopolates his Father had drawn in many, some by Gifts, and others by large Promises, by the means of the Bishop of Abydus especially, and had purposed with his Son Nicephorus, to steal out of the Island Lesbus, whither he had been confined, into Thrace. But the Bishop being apprehended and examined revealed all the Plot, and both the Father and Son were condemned to death. This Sentence of the Judges, was by the Emperour mitigated to the loosing of their Eyes. Yet was he so farther mercifull, as it's said, he gave order to the Executioners to make them only of blinding them, and to spare their sight, and give out that it was not by his Command, but proceeded merely from their pity towards them. In the mean time Bardas the General was come into Asia, as far as Dorylaus, having given him in charge from Zimisces to shed no more blood than was necessary. By large Offers therefore he first endeavoured to draw Phocas and his Complices from what they had undertaken. But finding them so confident, that with corn and heat they rejected his Proposals, he marched to Cæsarea, where he was scarcely arrived, when these Promoters and Followers of the New-made Emperor, upon farther consideration, and weighing of what had been offered, with what their utmost hopes might amount to, found their best Game would be to undoe what they had done, and accordingly one Diogenes Adralestus and Ampelas, with Theodorus and Nicephorus the Sons of Theodulus, who had been the Authours of the Revolt first came over, whom all the rest followed, so that Phocas was left attended onely by his own Servants.

But is de-fected by those that set him up.

Flying to the Castle Tyrope-um, capitulates

41. Much discontented at the Falseness of those, who had perswaded him to these ambitious Courses, and, as they say, farther discouraged by a Dream, he fled toward a Castle called Tyropæum. The General sent a Party if possible to overtake him, and it reached him as he came to the Foot of the Hill, on which the Castle stood. There one Constantinus Charon, bolder and more forward than any of the rest came soonest up with him, and giving him other contemptuous Language called him Coward, bidding him stay if he durst, and receive the Reward of his Treasons from his Hands. Phocas perceiving who it was, stopped his Horse, and turning towards him, put him in mind how idle a thing it was without consideration of the Instability of Humane Affairs, to insult over a man that was merely oppressed by the Inconstancy of Fortune, and that he ought rather to commiserate the Condition of one, whose Father was Curopalates, Grandfather Cæsar, and Unclean Emperor himself. Charon to this returned more outrageous words, calling him Villain, and telling him that he should soon see Boys with such idle Stories, and not think therewith to delude him; and very fiercely made up to close him. But Phocas being aware of him up with a Club, or Poll-axe, which hung concealed, and his Helmet not being strong enough to keep off the blow knocked him on the Head, whom thus having dispatched, he put Spurs to his Horse again, and recovered the Castle, the Pursuers when they came where Charon lay dead, were so astonished at the sight, that they followed him no farther. But not long it was e'er Bardas came up, and by Messages urged him to yield, professing his kindness to him as an Allie (for to Sophia the Sister of Phocas, was married his Brother Constantine) and undertook to procure his Pardon from the Emperor. Phocas then receiving from him an Oath, that he should not be rigorously proceeded against, yielded himself. And the Emperor made good what Bardas had engaged, being satisfied with his entering into Orders, and Confinement to the Island Chios. This danger thus happily over, Bardas received Command to return into the West. To which our Writers of the Byzantine History mean Constantinople, and those Parts of Europe still subject to it, as by the East the Provinces of Asia.

Is shaven and confined to the Island Chios.

Zimisces marries Theodora
Sister to his Colleague.

Undertakes an expedition into Bulgaria.

42. These things happened at the beginning of the Reign of Zimisces, who much about the same time his former Wife being lately dead, married Theodora the Sister of Romanus the Third, and Daughter of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, as our Greek Historians write, though Parvinius whomsoever he follows, makes her the Daughter of Romanus by Theophano, and the Sister of Basilus and Constantine, the Colleagues of the present Emperor. In the second year of his Reign, resolving in Person to make War against the Rossians, he used all endeavours possible to make his Designs effectual. By his bounty he made his Souldiers chearfull and courageous. He set over them prudent and valiant Officers, took care that no Ammunition or Provisions should be wanting; and not onely set all things in good order at Land, but provided as well for the Sea, setting forth a very considerable Fleet under the Command of Leo, the Drungarius thereof at present, but afterward preferred to be Protoprovarius. Having finished his Devotions for good Success, and settled all matters at home, in the beginning of Spring he set forward, and in his Journey at Rædus met with two Persons, who under shew of an Embassy were sent from the Enemy to spy how matters stood with him, making great complaints of great Injuries offered to the Nation of the Scythians. He knowing well enough on what errand they were sent, caused them to take a view of all his Forces, and therewith bid them be gone, and tell their Masters with how great and well disciplin'd an Army he was coming against them. With five thousand Foot, and four thousand Horse fit for expedition, he marched away ordering

Dorylaus, que etiam Dory-laus, Magnæ Phrygiæ Civitas, juxta quam etiam Hiermus an-nit.

Laying siege to Peristhlaba.

dering the rest to follow under Conduct of Basilus the President, and passing over Hæmus, laid siegeto Peristhlaba the principal City of Bulgaria. This struck a great terror into the People, and Calocyrrus being in the Town without any opposition made, secretly withdrew himself into the Camp of the Rossians, who upon sight of him, and hearing the Emperor himself was in the Field, were not a little dismayed. But Spendocephalus their General comforted them, as well as he could by words fit for the present exigence, and caused them to remove nearer the City, where they incamped. A Party of Eight thousand, exercising themselves near the City-Walls Zimisces fell upon and did great Execution, whom others issuing out to succour in confusion ran the same Fortune, the ways being intercepted at their Retreat, so that multitudes were slain and as many taken, amongst whom Sphagellus, the next in Authority to their General. Animated with this Success the Romans fell upon the City, and were forced off more by the Darkeness of Night, than the Valour of the Defendants.

Which he takes by storm with Borises their King.

Changing the Name to Jo-annopolis.

43. Early in the Morning appeared Basilus, with the rest of the Army to the great Joy of the Emperor, and shewed himself upon an Hill to strike greater Terror into those that kept the Town. Now did Zimisces endeavour to perswade them to save themselves by yielding, to which finding them averse, he gave order for the Forces jointly to begirt and attacke the Place. So violent an Onset the Romans made, by their showers of Arrows driving the Defendants from the Walls, and then scaling them with their Ladders, encouraged by one of their Fellows who first mounted, and was more pertinacious than the rest, that a sufficient Number got in and opened the Gates, and then the Army entering filled all Places with slaughters. The Women and Children were made Prisoners, and Borises King of the Bulgarians was taken with his Wife and Children, who in his Royal Robes was brought to the Emperor. He used him very courteously, gave him the Title of King, and set at liberty all the Bulgarians, professing himself their Friend, and an Enemy onely of the Rossi. But all this while, when he thought his work was done at Peristhlaba, Eight thousand of the stoutest Scythians had seized upon the Castle, and were first discovered by the Mischief they did, making several Sallies and Slaughter of many they surprized. He caused his men to attacke the Place, but they were very faint in the Service, not so much for the Valour of the Defendants, as the natural strength of its Situation, which he perceiving armed himself, and with Sword in his Hand led them on, which fight wrought so much shame upon them, that striving who should put himself forwardst betwix his Prince and Danger, they broke through all opposition by Fire and Sword, and Master'd the hold; those that resisted, being either killed or driven headlong down the Rocks and Precipices, or intercepted by the Fire and burnt. Thus was this City fully conquered, in the space but of two Days. The Emperor took order for repairing of it, and called it after his own Name Joannopolis. He left a strong Garrison in it, and furnished it with all sorts of Provisions. Having therein attended the Devotions of Easter-Day, the Day following he departed for Dorostolus, which also had the Name of Distræ.

44. All this while Spendocephalus, was incamped in expectation of the coming of the Romans, till surpriz'd with the News of the taking of the City. He concealed his grief and exhorted his Men to shew themselves the more courageous, the more opposition they met with, and no longer to expect but to march and find out the Enemy. The Emperor in the mean time ranged about, and took and wasted many Towns and Castles, the plunder whereof he gave to the Souldiers for their Incouragement. But having notice of the approach of some Rossians, he ordered one Theodorus of Misheia, with a select Party of three hundred to go before to view them, and give him an account of their Condition, and if occasion were to skirmish with them till he should come up to the main Body. It proved onely a Party of some seven thousand men, sent out as it seems upon the same errand with which yet he engaged, and they imagining because of his small Number some Stratageme to be in the case, fled again to the adjoining Woods and Mountains, and so took their way for Distræ, not far from which, all but such as fell in the engagement and pursuit, joynted themselves with Spendocephalus, and his Army. There it was now resolved, that twelve Miles from that Town they should incamp, and stay for the coming of the Emperor; being in all three Hundred and thirty thousand Men, and those unanimous, for three Hundred Bulgarians, whom they had suspected, they had put to death. The Romans animated to a great height by their Victories were presently with them, and then both Armies prepared for a Battel, at the beginning whereof, though the late Victours

Then meeting did great Execution, yet the Numbers of their Enemies were equivalent to their Alacrity, and thereby encouraged, they made such resistences, that the success was very doubtfull. Twelve times Fortune seemed to change her Face the distressed side still reinforcing it self, till at length Night now coming on, the left Wing of the Rossians gave more ground, which as they endeavoured to recruit the Emperour in person led on a Reserve, and with Spear in Hand so bestirred himself, that his Example put new life into all his Souldiers, whereby he carried the day. The Rossians fled to Dorostolus, very much lessened in their Numbers, and thither followed the Emperour after he had done his Devoirs to St. George, on whose Day this Victory was obtained.

45. He fate down before the Town, but would make no attempt upon it, till his Fleet arrived, because the Defendants might easily escape by the River. In the mean time Sphendofhlabus commits to safe Custody in Fetters no fewer than twenty thousand Bulgarians, lest they should revolt or make any disturbance in the Garrison, and prepared for a Siege. The Fleet being arrived the Emperour buckled himself to his business, and the Enemy making several Sallies, he still repelled with good Success. Now the Rossians horrid several Companies contrary to their former Custome, and in an Evening when the Roman Soldiers were dispersed, at their Supper, made a very brisk Sally out of two several Gates, the one toward the East, where Peter the chief Commander of the Camp lay with the Thracians and Macedonians, and the other to the West, which Post was assigned to Bardas Sclerus, with the Eastern Forces. A very sharp Conflict there was, and the Success for some time inclined to neither side, but the Romans had the better at last, and killing many, forced the rest back into the City without so much as one of their own Men either killed or hurt as our Authours affirm; only three Horses perished in the Engagement. The Barbarians much discouraged at this repulse, with great Howlings and hideous Cries, bewailed the Death of their Fellows lately slain, and for the greater security of the place, sent for all their Countrey men that lay in the Garrisons round about. Zimifces hereupon drew out his Army into the adjoining plain, and offered them Battel, which they refusing he had time to give Audience to Messengers that came from Constantia, and other Forts beyond the River Ister, to beg pardon and yield themselves, whom he graciously received and sent Garrisons into the Places so given up. But the besieged, though they refused a pitch Battel, yet their Number being increased issued out in the Night at all their Gates at once, and furiously assailed the Besiegers when they little expected it. And at the first, as was to be expected, they had the better, till Sphagellus was slain, which so discouraged them, that they remitted much of their former Alacrity. Yet they kept the field all the Night, and till Noon the next Day, when perceiving that a Party was sent to get betwixt them and home, they then began to shift for themselves, and finding the ways leading to the Town beset, they stragled through the Countrey, and many of them were slain. The Night following Sphendofhlabus began to draw a Trench about the Walls, with which having more strongly fortified the Place, he resolved to hold out till the last.

46. But Provisions failing, and all ways by Land being blocked up, he took along with him two thousand Men, and in a dark and rainy Night passed down the River in Boats, and fetched in Corn and other Necessaries, without the least apprehension of the Besiegers, till at his Return he killed many of their Foragers, and the rest escaped with the News, which arrived not till he was got out of danger. At this the Emperour was very much disturb'd, and threatened the Officers of the Fleet with death, if any such thing happened for the time to come; for having spent now forty Days to no purpose in Hostility, he was resolved to starve them out, and having taken care for stopping up of all Avenues, took his ease and expected the Event. In the mean time while he sought after new Conquests, what he had formerly possessed was in great danger, for Leo Curopalates, and his Son Nicephorus no way obliged by his Clemency, who had caused their Eyes to be spared, when they had been sentenced for their former Treasons to loose their sight, again broke out into Rebellion, and having corrupted many Officers in several Places, left the Island, to which they were confined, and by Night came to Constantinople, where they imagined they could doe great matters, in the Absence of the Emperour. But Leo the Drungarius of the Fleet, to whom with Basilus the Redour, the care of the Palace and City was committed, timely before they could get their Complices together, sent a Party of Souldiers to secure them, of which having notice they betook themselves to the great Church; but were thence drawn out and sent into the Island Prota, where the former Judgement was now executed with effect upon them. To return to the Siege, the Defendants were both sorely pinched with Famine, and distressed by Engines of the Enemy, with which among so many stout and young Warriors, some would ever be trying their skill, and attempting something. One John a Magister the Son of Romanus Curcuas with a Machine he had, did them most mischief, so that they resolved to make a Sally by some of their stoutest men, to break or disabie it. Curcuas to rescue his Engine rushed in amongst them, was knocked down from his Horse and slain, but his Souldiers though they could not save his Life yet preserved the Ram, and drove back the Rossians into the Town.

were

47. On the twentieth day of July, they resolved to make an universal Sally, by the Advice of one Jernor, a man who for his desert was the second in Repute amongst them. A fierce contest there happened, till Anemas one of the Emperour's Guard singled out Jernor and slew him, at which sight in Confusion they retired, and many by reason of the straitness of the Ways, were either killed by the Pursuers, or trampled down by their own Fellows, Sphendofhlabus himself with difficulty escaping. When the Romans came to strip the slain, they found many Women in Mens Clothes had accompanied their Husbands, and fought stoutly. And courageous enough they were of both Sexes and all Conditions, but what prospect of any hope there was to succeed, the most prudent amongst them could not see. For on all sides, were they surrounded with insuperable Difficulties. Of any relief there was no probability, their Friends and Countrey men being so far off. The Neighbouring Nations refused to meddle, being awed by the Power of the Emperour; who by his Fleet and Army being now Master both at Land and Sea, barred them of all Access, while he and his Souldiers abounded, not only with all things necessary but delightfull, and was recruited with perpetual Supplies of Men. Great deliberation being had about their matters, some were for flying away by Night, others moved that they should yield, others propounded other ways and Methods, but all concluded that a Period was to be put to this War. But Sphendofhlabus affirmed, this was not to be done in any cowardly manner, lest they should be derided by all their Neighbours, and Eternal Infamy should stick to their Nation, and therefore he perswaded them once more to try it with the Besiegers, and prefer a glorious Death before an ignominious Life.

48. Unanimously the next day they quit the City, and make fast the Gates that no hope of retreating thither might any more remain. Such a Fight followed as is usual with a resolved and desperate Enemy. The Romans less accustomed to hardship were most distressed by the heat of the Weather, whom their Emperour carefully relieved by bottles of Wine and Water mixed, and then caused them thus refreshed to renew the Fight. The narrowness also of the ways was a great hinderance to them, of which he being sensible, commanded that his Officers should by degrees retire, and when they were come into the open plain, then to fall on again with their former violence. The Rossians imagining they fled, made after them with great earnestness, till the Romans being arrived at the appointed place, furiously charged them a-fresh. Now the service being hot on both sides, Theodorus of Misheia his Horse was killed under him, and a sharp contention followed, while the Enemy endeavoured to kill, and his Friends laboured as hard to preserve him. He clearing himself of his Horse as well as he could, caught one of the Rossians fast by the Girdle, and bestirring himself, thrust the Man on this side and that side of him, where he saw the danger was, and used him as a Target to receive the Strokes or Darts that were designed against him, and this he did till he was rescued and brought off. But Zimifces seeing the Enemy fight rather more courageously than ever, the success doubtfull, and pitying the dangerous condition his Men were in, to prevent greater effusion of blood sent to Sphendofhlabus, and challenged him to decide the quarrel by the single Combat of them two. The Barbarian refused it, proudly answering that he understood himself better than did the Roman Emperour, who if he was weary of his Life, might find ways enough to be rid of it, while he should mind what he had to doe. The Emperour resolving with all his force and dexterity, to drive the Affair in that manner, which alone remained and by this one days action, to finish both this War, and Siege, sent Bardas Sclerus, with his Troops to hinder them all Access to the Town, Romanus the Patriarch, the Son of Constantine Caesar, and Grandson of Romanus the Elder, together with Peter, another great Commander in the Army, he ordered with their forces to give a fresh charge, which was so warmly both given and received, that still the success remained absolutely uncertain: but Anemas lately mentioned, Son of the

Anemas

In which Sphendolthla-bus is difmounted and the Roffian overthrown.

Ameras of Crete, with a blow given upon the side on the Head, beat Sphendolthlabus from his Horse, and while he endeavour'd in vain to kill him, by reason of the strength of his Armour, was himself cut in pieces. At length the faint and starved Roffians gave way to the stout and vigorous Romans, who put them to flight, and in the Pursuit through the Plains killed an innumerable Multitude of them, all the rest being also said to be wounded. The Victors not ascribing the Victory all to themselves, took notice that Heaven fought for them, by a Storm of Rain which blew so violently upon the Faces of their Enemies, that they could not with their wonted Alacrity and Conduct manage the Fight. And much was ascribed to Theodorus the Martyr, on whose day the Battle happened, whom some said they saw fighting at the Head of the Army. And the Emperor's Faith was herein so strong and operative, that he repaired a Church dedicated to him, and the Name of the Town wherein it stood he changed from Euchancia, to Theodoropolis.

Which obliges them to send to the Emperour.

Who accepts of their Terms.

And returns to Constantinople in Triumph.

49. "Now Sphendolthlabus having herein satisfied himself, that he had done all things becoming a prudent Man, for the maintenance of his cause and Country, and that nothing succeeded, betook himself to the last refuge, of sending to the Emperour. But greater things he required, than one would judge to have been suitable to his condition; as that on the publick Faith he might be received as a Friend and Ally of the Empire, that safe Conduct should be granted to him and his Countreymen, to their own Homes, and that free Commerce should be established betwixt the Nations. These things he thought it prudence to ask, though not to stand by them, but govern himself according to the humour and answer of Zimisces, who either weary of the War, or afraid farther to provoke a desperate Enemy, of whose courage he had had sufficient experience, granted what he ask'd, excusing it with this old saying, that It was the Custom of Romans, to overcome more by kindness than force of Arms. The Accord being made, he desired to come to an interview and discourse with the Emperour, which was also granted. It was covenanted that the Patzinacæ should be comprized in the League, and for that purpose the Emperour should send to them, to signify that he would accept of them as Friends and Allies, and to desire free passage for the Roffi, through their Territories to their own Country. The Patzinacæ agreed to all except the free Passage, but the Roffi in the case they were in, must needs put them to the Trial. After their departure Zimisces fortified all the Towns and Castles upon the River, and then returned to Constantinople, where the Patriarch with his Clergy, the Senate and People received him with all expressions of Joy imaginable. They met him with Crowns, and a Chariot drawn with four Horses splendidly furnished, in which they would have him enter in solemn Triumph. But he would not admit of any of this, but bore himself very modestly entering upon a white Horse, and putting into the Chariot the Vestments of the Bulgarian Princes, and over them the Livery of our Lady, as the Protectress of the City, which he ordered should go before him. Having in the Forum received the Acclamations of the Multitude, and finished his Devotions, in the sight of them all, he desisted Borises of the Ensigns of Majesty which were a Golden Crown, a Silken Vestment and Purple Shoes, and then going to the Great Church offered the Crown, and there left it. Which done, he promoted Borises to the Dignity of a Magister, and so departed to the Palace. In the mean time Sphendolthlabus, in his Return, passing through the Country of the Patzinacæ fell into the Ambushes, laid by them for him, and was cut off with all his men; they objecting it as a Crime, that he had entered into League with the Romans.

Where he receives his Subjects from Heath-money.

A dreadful Comet appears.

50. But the Emperour farther to testify his Gratitude for his late Success, re-edified the Church which stood upon the Arch of Chalce, sparing no Cost in the Workmanship. He eased all his Subjects of the Smoke or Chimney-money, and gave order, that as well in the Golden Coins, as in the Obolus, the Image of our Saviour should be stamped (which formerly had not been done) with this Inscription, Jesus Christ the King of Kings, and this was afterward observed by his Successors. But to put him as well as other Mortals in mind, what Accidents and Inconstancy threaten humane Life, in the Month of August, and the third Indiction appeared a Comet, which because of its shape of a Beard, they were wont to call Pogonia, and it continued till the Eighth Month of the fourth Indiction, foreboding as was afterward believed, the Death of the Emperour, and those Disasters never to be cured, wherein the State by reason of Civil Wars was thenceforth involved. After this, Zimisces undertook an expedition against

Zimisces makes an expedition as far as Damascus.

But in his return is Poisoned by the procurement of Basilus the President.

Basilus and Constantine
10. succeed.

Bardas Solerus breaks out into Rebellion and usurps.

Joining with the Saracens proceeds towards Constantinople.

against those Cities which having been Conquered by Nicephorus, had afterward revolted, and Travelling as far as Damascus, some by fair words, others by rough deeds he recovered, and having settled all things according to his will, returned home. In his Journey as he passed by Anazarbabe, Podandus, and other places, seeing there most pleasant and fruitfull grounds, he asked to whom they belonged. It was answered that they all belonged to Basilus, the President, who had obtained the possession of them all, though part got by Nicephorus, other portions by this or that Domestick of the Schools, and some share by the Arms of Zimisces himself. Hereat he grew very sad, and perceiving the publick had got little by the Acceffion of those Territories, broke out into this expression; "My Companions, it's a very odd thing that the publick Treasure must be wasted, and the Roman Armies undergo such difficulties, and yet whatsoever has been gained by so much labour and expence, must be ingrossed by one Eunuch. This was not so well meant as ill taken by Basilus, from whom considering his place, it could not be hid, and thenceforth he resolved by some means or other to make away the Emperour. This he effected by procuring his Cup-bearer for some reward in present, and more in promise to give him Poison, not such as should speedily kill, but by degrees in a Languishing manner dispatch him, which carried him off yet ere he reached Constantinople, with the Symptoms of Carbuncles upon his Shoulders, and avoidance of much Bloud by his Eyes, after he had Reigned six years six Months and something more. An excellent Prince, who is only guilty upon Record, for the Murder of his Predecessour (however the Patriarch absolved him) although as we may see by frequent examples, such ambitious seeking after Sovereignty and Dominion, was scarcely counted a Crime in those days.

51. Basilus and Constantine the Sons of Romanus, according to his own Designment, succeeded him in the month of December, the fourth Indiction, A. D. DCCCCLXXVI. Now our Authours speak more probably of their Age than formerly, that the one was about twenty, and the other three years younger. They bore the Name, but all the Power still resided in Basilus the President, who presently to ingratiate himself with them and their Mother, sent a Pinnace and fetcht her out of Banishment. To provide against the Usurpations of others, he had greatest cause to suspect Bardas Solerus, who had already been guilty that way, and had narrowly escaped the losing of his eyes, but at present Commanded all the Forces of the East, by which advantage he might easily perfwade the Souldiers to any thing he pleased. The Command of the East therefore he took from him, and gave him the Government of Mesopotamia, with orders to restrain the Incursions of the Saracens. In like manner he dealt with Michael Burtzas for the same reason; and to draw him from the company and Neighbourhood of Bardas, made him Governour of Antioch upon O-rontes; and the Command of all the Forces in the East was given to one Peter, formerly the Servant of Phocas, an Eunuch, but a Man of much valour and experience. Hereat Bardas was exceedingly enraged, so as he could not refrain himself, but fell into grievous invectives and reproachfull words against Basilus, who for all that was not moved, but admonished him to quiet himself, and settle to the business enjoined, or else expect to be deprived of all Command whatsoever, and confined to his House. Hereupon he departed into his Province, and having broken his Design to some Officers of the Army, resolved to break into Rebellion, knowing all the Souldiers to be at his Devotion. But his Son Romanus was at Constantinople, and therefore he durst not attempt any thing till he had got him thence, which he effected by the Industry and Dissimulation of one Anthes, who coming to the City, spake all bitter things against him, and so passing for his Enemy, had opportunity to steal away the Youth. Then did he openly assume the Title and Habit, and was saluted Emperour by his whole Army, the Armenians herein giving example to the rest.

52. For maintaining what he had now done, and going through with his Enterprize, he seized upon all Collectours of the publick Revenue he could, and constrained them to pay it to his Officers. Such as were rich he forced to contribute, and many there were who in hope of receiving it back with good Advantage, voluntarily sent him in large sums of Money, all which he laid up for a Reserve in a certain Castle of Mesopotamia, called Charpote, where he placed as strong a Garrison as the concern required. With his Neighbours the Saracens he contracted Friendship, which was strengthened by closer Alliances and Marriage, by virtue of which he received from the two Ameras of * Amida and

* Saraceni Emes.

and * Mityropolis much money, besides three hundred Arabian Horsemen for a supply. Thus furnished in the beginning of Spring, and farther encouraged by a Dream of a certain Monk, he set forward for Constantinople, whither the Report flying disturbed both the Emperours and all men that were not delighted with change, and loved to sit in troubled waters. Orders are dispatched to Peter to have the Army in a readiness, to Rendezvous at Cæsarea, and Stephen Syncellus the Bishop of Nicomedia is sent to Bardas, by his Eloquence, if possible, to persuade him to desist. But all he could say not in the least shook the Determination of the Usurper, who to make a short Answer to his long Oration, thrust out his right Foot, and shewing him his Purple shoe, told him, that "He that had once worn that colour abroad, and in the sight of People, could not be easily induced to put it off, and bid him tell those that sent him, that if they would not freely admit him for Emperour, he would endeavour to establish himself as such whether they would or no. This Answer returned, command was sent to Peter, that he should not begin the War, but watch and observe Bardas, secure the Passages, and make resistance if Attacked. Accordingly he stopped up the ways, and after some bickering of small Parties, they came to Encamp one against the other. Bardas now shewed himself backward to Fight, till some convinced him that he injured himself by delays, which would most certainly bring him into contempt, and cause his Friends to fall off from him.

53. Convinced by this Reason he dislodged, and in the space of three days marched into Lapara, called afterwards Lycandus, a Part of Cappadocia; and Peter, left he should be prevented, followed after, night and day, and thither came up close to him. Yet neither of them had any mind to Fight, but endeavoured by wiles to circumvent each other, in which craft, Bardas was superior after this manner. He caused meat to be prepared as if all the Army was to take Refreshment, but yet commanded every Man to be ready to Fight. This perceived by the Enemies they also fell to Eating, as concluding that for that day they might take their ease, and there would not be any Engagement. In this posture he fell upon them, and though they flew to their Arms and made stout resistance yet perceiving they should be compassed about by his two Wings, and the Mercenaries he had ordered to fall on their Backs, they ran away, and with the first Burtzas the Governour of Antioch, whether for fear or out of design is uncertain. Many were killed, and Bardas took their Baggage wherein was much treasure found. Thence he removed, and took in a City called Tsamandus, and by this success got such reputation that many came over to him, and took his part, as Burtzas we now mentioned, Andronicus a Patritian, Lydus an Officer in the Army, and the inhabitants of Attala laid hands on Michael Curticus, the Commander of the Emperour's Fleet, which they carried all to Bardas, and from him received orders under his command, to make War against the Cibyrræotæ. These things being reported at Court, it was there resolved, that some of the Emperour's Friends should be invested with absolute or imperial power to give, grant and act whatsoever he should think convenient for the suppression of this Usurper. Against him then was created, Dilator (as we may Term him) Leo the Protosvestiarius and one John a Patritian a very eloquent and eminent man was sent with him as an assisient or Counsellour. Joining with Peter at Cotyacius a place of Phrygia he first essayed secretly by great promises to draw the most considerable Persons from Bardas, but all his Art this way was so far from doing any good, that it confirmed them in an Opinion of his weakness and of his Inability to proceed any other way.

54. Finding this project to fail him, by the night time he gave Bardas the go-by, and held on his course toward the East, which marvellously perplexed those about the Usurper, both in that they feared their Treasure, and also were solicitous for their Relations, left behind them in those parts. And this consideration wrought with them, that many departed and fled to Leo; Bardas his affairs were brought into that posture, that he had just cause to fear that all his Forces would speedily fall away and disperse themselves. There was no way therefore but one; to send Burtzas and Romanus Taronita a Patritian, two that he could trust to stop the course of Leo, by continual Allarms, sudden on-sets and intercepting his Provisions, yet so as to venture a set Battel. But they were forced to break their orders. For News was brought that betwixt the two Armies were shortly to pass some Saracens who were carrying the Annual

Tribute,

Tribute, due from the Eastern Berræa to Constantinople, which would fall as a certain Prize to those that could compass it, and therefore the Soldiers were not to be restrained. It occasion'd an Engagement, wherein Burtzas was beaten, and many of his Men were slain, especially the Armenians, to whom no Quarter would be given, because they first revolted to Bardas. He having notice how matters went, hastened with the Body of his Army, and incamped, as conveniently as he could against Leo, expecting a fit opportunity to engage. But Leo was wary and drew out the time in length, which he was encouraged to do, finding that his strength increased by the daily coming over of some or other to him. And the opinion of the Elder and Wife about him was, that by delay he should still manage his Matters; but those of the younger and hotter sort were all for fighting, and as we are apt to yield to the worst, he suffered himself to be overruled, and to give Battel. Bardas divided his Forces into three Parts, whereof he himself led the middle Battel, to his Brother Constantine he assigned the right, and to Constantine the Son of Gabras the left Wing. They had not long engaged when Leo's Soldiers, not able to sustain the violence of his Horse, placed at each Wing, gave ground and occasion to a total Defeat, which immediately followed. John the Patritian was killed, and Peter the Master of the Camp, with many other persons of great Quality. Leo, with several other men of Office and Dignity was taken Prisoner. He was committed to Custody; but the Eyes of Theodorus and Nicetas Hagiozacharita, two Brothers, at the Head of the Army were digged out, because they had broken their Oaths and fallen off to Leo.

55. This Victory so exceedingly advanced the Interest of Bardas, that the whole Empire seemed now at his Devotion. But Basilus the President, was all this while very intent upon his business, and though he neglected no means for increasing the Land Forces, yet his especial care was for setting out a strong Fleet; for Michael Curticus the General of Bardas, had wasted almost all the Islands, and was shortly expected at Abydus in the Hellepont, which must needs cause Constantinople itself to tremble. Having made all preparations the time would give him leave, he sent out the Navy under Command of Theodorus Carentemus, a Patritian, who finding out Curticus at Phocæa, fought with and defeated him, by which means the Seas were all cleared. Then Basilus applying himself wholly to the War by Land, sent away Manuel Eroticus to command the City of Nice, the Metropolis of Bithynia, against which in a short time after Bardas shewed himself and fell upon it with all violence. But not able to Master it, so vigorous and successful was the resistance which Manuel made, he resolved to starve him out, and from his hands forced him to betake himself to his Wits, so much were the Inhabitants pressed with want. He caused the Granaries therefore of the City to be filled with Sand, and Corn to be strowed so thick upon it, that the Sand could not be discovered by the Eye. Then did he shew to some Prisoners he had the said Granaries, and bragged how able he was by that means to hold out; but withal signified, that if he and those with him might have leave honourably to depart, he would quit the place. This was not unwelcome News to Bardas, who upon report of the full Granaries, granted them such Conditions as they desired, and so with Bag and Baggage they marched out, and went to Constantinople. Thus Bardas became Master of Nice, but in such a way, and by such means, as he was ashamed to own. However, he put a strong Garrison into the Town, under Command of one Pegadius, and then attended his other Affairs.

56. Basilus the President perceiving his matters now desperate, Bardas being shortly expected at Constantinople, betook himself to his last refuge in making use of a Person to which Necessity alone could oblige him. This was Bardas Phocas whom for this purpose he speedily recalled out of Exile, and judging him the only Person he could oppose to his Namesake, received of him an Oath of Fidelity to the Emperours, and conferring on him the Dignity of a Magister, made him Domestick of the Schools, and committed the War to his management. Phocas having received Power and Instructions, endeavoured to pass over to Abydus; but finding Romanus the Son of Sclerus to command the Hellepont, returned to Constantinople, and there light of a Vessel which waited him over to the opposite Shore, whence travelling by Night, he came to Cæsarea, and there joining himself with Eustathius Maleinus and Michael Burtzas, who had again turned to the Emperour's side, and gathering what Forces he could together, went on to Amorium. Sclerus having notice of his Arrival, now concluded, that he was to deal with his Match, not with Eunuchs and Effeminate Persons, and to Amorium he marched,

G g g

But in a Battel is also overthrown.

The Seas cleared of the Usurper's force.

But by Land he obtains the City of Nice.

Which causes Bardas Phocas to be recalled and made General.

Meeting the Emperour's Army by Stratagem he overcomes them.

Upon which Leo as Dilator is appointed to suppress him.

Who is twice worshiped by Sclerus.

marched, where coming to an Engagement, the Forces of Phocas being disheartened by the Defeats they had lately received, failed of Courage and of Success, and were driven out of the Field, yet so as the Retreat was very fair and leisurely, Phocas himself bringing up the Rere and facing about and charging the Pursuers as he had advantage. He got away to the Castle of Charfanus, and there refreshed his men, and received many that came to him upon the Emperour's Account, whom he promoted according to their Qualifications. Sclerus was not long behind him, but coming and incamping not far off provoked him to fight, who as readily consenting, they joined Battel again, wherein Phocas had the worst, not being able to make his men stand their ground, though with his Poll-axe in his Hand he rode about to the several Ranks, and killed many of the Enemies, discharging all Offices both of an expert Commander and valiant Souldier.

But in the third Engagement obtains the Victory.

57. After this Defeat he went into Iberia, where he desired and obtained a supply from David the Prince of that Countrey, with whom he had contracted a particular Friendship when formerly he commanded Chaldia. Joyning these Forces with the remainders of his own, which he had rallied, he marched to Pancalea, a large Plain lying upon the River Italy, to seek out his Enemy, who there lay incamped. Another bloody Contention followed, wherein Phocas perceiving his men again to give ground resolved to endure no longer the ignominy of being beaten, but elysing Sclerus, ran violently at him with purpose to kill or be killed. But Sclerus was so aware of him that he fetch'd the first stroke, some say with his Poll-axe, and others with his Sword, which miffing him, cut off one of the Ears of his Horse, and his Bridle in sunder. Phocas his hand was more steady, who gave the other such a blow upon his Helmet as struck him down upon the Neck of his Horse, which done he galloped up to an Hill and restrained the flight of his Souldiers. Sclerus dazed with the stroke, and fainting, was by his Followers carried to a Fountain to have his wound cleansed, who concluded that Phocas and his Cause were both now lost, and therefore were the more careless. Not taking heed to their Matter's Horse when they had taken him off, he got loose and with his Main all bloody ran amongst the Souldiers, who thereupon concluding that the Rider their General was slain, instead of pursuing, ran away themselves, and that with such fear and haste, that some tumbled down Precipices, and others took the River and therein were drowned, while Phocas to his great amazement beholding what happened and looking upon it as an extraordinary mercy from Heaven, took the Advantage offered him of giving the Chace and obtaining an unexpected Victory. Sclerus with a few escaped and got to Martyropolis, whence he sent his Brother Constantine to Chosroes the Prince of Babylon, to desire his Friendship and Assistance. Chosroes making delay, and neither granting his Request nor returning a denial, when his Brother came not back with any answer, he himself went thither with all his men. The Emperour Basilus being informed by Phocas of his late success, and how Sclerus was gone to Babylon, sent an Ambassador to Chosroes the Amermunes, desiring him to consider, as he was a Prince, of what ill example and consequence it might prove to harbour and protect Rebels, and Letters were written also to Sclerus and those about him, offering them free pardon for what was past, if they would return to obedience, and every man to his own Home, which when Chosroes understood, not thinking himself fairly dealt with, he committed both the Ambassador and Sclerus to Custody. Such of his Party as did not accompany Sclerus to Babylon, seized upon one or two strong Castles in the Province of Thrace, whence for some considerable time they made excursions into the neighbouring Territories, and did much mischief, till by Nicephorus Parfascutinus a Patritian, upon promise of Indemnity from the Emperour, they were persuaded to desist, and were brought in.

Is there committed into Custody.

The Bulgarians invade the Western parts of the Empire.

58. Such was the Issue hitherto of the Rebellion of Bardas Sclerus; how matters went in the mean time in the Western Parts of the Empire, we must now discover. The Bulgarians, notwithstanding all the pains of Zimisces, in that Countrey continued no longer in obedience than he in life. Not long after his Death, resolving to be governed by those of their own blood, they committed the supreme Power to four Brothers, David, Moses, Aaron and Samuel, called commonly Cometopoli, because they were the Sons of an eminent Count amongst them. For of the stock of Peter none was left whom they could prefer. His two Sons Borises and Romanus, that were, as we said, brought to Constantinople, had thence upon the death of Zimisces made their escape back into Bulgaria. But Borises passing through a Wood in a Roman Habit, was killed by a certain Bulgarian, who took him for one of that Nation: Romanus indeed was alive, and returned some time

Upon which Basilus the Emperour enters Bulgaria.

But in his return looses his Baggage, &c.

A great Earthquake.

Bardas Phocas
sated Emperour.

time after to Constantinople, but he was an Eunuch, having been gelt by Joseph, that eminent Bedchamber man, formerly mentioned. Now of all these four Brothers David died presently after. Moses in the Siege of a place called Serre was killed by a blow given with a Stone, and Aaron being suspected to favour the Romans, was by Samuel murdered with all his Children, one Blackophlabus excepted, called also John, who was preserved by Kadomer (otherwise also named Romanus) the Son of Samuel. This Samuel was a man of a restless disposition, a very good Souldier, and while the Empire was sufficiently intangled with the War against Sclerus, plagued all the West with his Incurfions, not onely Thrace and Macedonia, with the Parts near to Thessalonica, but Thessaly also, Greece, and Peloponnesus, and took many strong Holds, the chief whereof was Larissa, the Inhabitants of which with their whole Families he transported into Bulgaria, inrolled them amongst his Souldiers, and used them against the Romans.

59. Matters thus standing with the Bulgarians, the Emperour Basilus, as soon as the business with Sclerus was over, began to reflect upon his own Power, and resolved now he was of years sufficient to undertake the War against them upon his own score, to shew he was in a condition to be out of Pupillage. Without acquainting Phocas, though the Domestick of the Schools, or any other of the Captains of the East, he invaded Bulgaria, through the Countries, lying near Rhodope and the River Euras, leaving Leo Melissenus behind him to secure the Straits, whilst he coming about by the difficult Passages and Woods, lying near to Triaditza, or as it was in old time called Sardica, came into a place known by the Name of Stoponium, resolving to lay Siege immediately to Sardica, being the more encouraged so to doe because Samuel was reported, out of fear, to keep himself in the mountainous Parts of the Countrey, not daring to come down, but when he saw he had an Advantage by Stratageme or Ambuilt to effect something considerable. But while he prepared for this Siege, Stephen the Domestick of the Schools of the West, for the smallness of his Stature called Contostephanus, but a very great Enemy to Leo Melissenus, came to him by Night, and with most vehement words perswaded him to set all other Considerations aside, and return with speed to Constantinople, because Melissenus had a Design to Usurp, and for that purpose was hastening toward the City. The Emperour easily frightened with such a Story gave orders for the Army to march, and then Samuel seeing his time, fell upon them as a flying Enemy, and put them to flight indeed, taking all their Baggage, and therein the Emperour's Ensigns of Majesty, who with much ado got through the Straits, and escaped to Philippopolis. There he found Leo at his Station intending diligently what had been enjoyn'd him, whereupon sensible how they had both been abused, he reviled Contostephanus as a Liar and Authour of so great Infamy as this ridiculous Expedition must needs procure, and Stephen demeaning himself very arrogantly, and endeavouring to defend what he had done, he leapt'd from his Seat, and catching fast hold of him by his Locks and Beard pulled him down to the ground.

60. A great Earthquake happened after this in the Month of October, and the twelfth year of the Emperour Basilus, and Constantine, of whom we hear little or nothing, being wholly given up to Idleness and Pleasure, and willingly leaving all to the management of his Brother, who now casting off his former Neglect, took matters into his own Hands, and seriously applied himself to business. By the Earthquake were not onely many Churches and private Buildings overturned, but also part of the Globe of the Great Church, which he magnificently repaired with so great expence, that the very Scaffolding stood him in ten Centenaries of Gold. But his late Expedition into Bulgaria had that operation upon several of the Nobility, especially Bardas Phocas, that thinking themselves exceedingly neglected in that he would not consult with them, and thence taking a measure of what they must expect from him in time to come. Some two Months before the Earthquake in the Month of October, meeting at the House of Eustathius Malenius, who had been ignominiously dismissed the Service, at Charfanum they proclaimed the said Phocas Emperour, giving him a Diadem, and investing him with the other Imperial Ornaments. At the same time word was brought that Sclerus (whom Baronius strangely makes the same with Phocas, writing that Sclerus Bardas, surnamed Phocas, was this year Proclaimed and Crowned Emperour) was coming out of Syria being delivered out of his Prison at Babylon upon this occasion.

Civilis, Sclerus Bardas Cognomento Phocas Tyrannus, Imperator acclamatur, ac coronatur. Bardas, ad. A. D. 987, num. 4.

The Persians endeavour to cast off the Yoke of the Saracens.

The Nation of the Persians being subdued and inflaved by the Saracens, endured the Yoke with much Reluctancy and Repining, and the most Noble and Potent of them were watching but for a fit opportunity to shake it off. Of these one Inargus more concerned himself than all others, being of a great Family, very Eloquent, and a Complete Souldier, who observing Chofroes very imprudently and negligently to manage his Affairs, resolved not to let slip such an Advantage, but drew to revolt all the Achemonide or Achemenide, a Part of Perfia, and hired twenty thousand of the Eastern Turks (so they term them, as the Hunni or Hungarians the Western) and then openly makes War, killing all the Saracens where-soever he could light on them. Chofroes often in Person, and as often by his Officers ingaged with him in Fight, but still came off with los, which struck such terror into his Souldiers, that they could not endure to hear a Persian named. This made him think of his Romans now in durance, and to consider, that were not Sclerus a man very considerable, as well for skill in War and Courage as other Matters, he could never have waged war with the Emperour, nor brought him to such Straits as he did, nor would so many Noblemen have sided with him, and given him the Title. Communicating his thoughts with his Council, he delivered him out of Prison, and after much Carefing of him, desired that he would undertake the War against the Persians.

61. Sclerus at first pretended an Averfeness, affirming that He and his Fellows being kept so long in Prison, were thereby rendered unfit for Employment of that Nature. But Chofroes promising him ample recompence for the Injury that had been done him, with much Treasure and great Force for carrying on the War, he undertook it, yet so as he would not meddle with the Arabians, Saracens or other Subjects of Chofroes, but desired that the Prisons of Syria might be opened, and all Roman Captives set at Liberty, with whom and no other Army he would doe his work. By this means, getting together about three thousand Men, he caused them by bathing and other ways to recover their former strength, and new clothing and arming them, led them against the Persians, whom by a manner of fighting unufual to them, and especially by the Violence and Courage of his Souldiers he totally defeated, so that scarcely remained any to carry away the News, and Inargus himself fell in the Crowd. Now the Romans enriched with great booty, and many Horses would by no means return to Chofroes, but taking the Rode that led into the Territories of the Empire, by great Journeys without the Knowledge of the Saracens, they escaped thither. Thus some reported. Others affirmed that they went back to Chofroes, were courteously received by him, and that dying not long after he gave Order to his Son to conduct them with Honour and Safety, into their own Countrey. And a third story there was, they getting away without his Knowledge, he sent after them a great Multitude to bring them back, with which they fought, and reducing them to a smaller Number than themselves, such slaughter they made, then without any opposition prosecuted their Journey.

62. However it was, Sclerus with his Followers got safe into the Territories of the Empire, where understanding how Bardas Phocas had also assumed the Title, he found himself much at a Los what to doe. To make himself sole Emperour, he was not sufficiently provided, and to join himself either to Basilus or the other he esteemed a mean thing, and below him, and should he take the Part of one and make the other his Enemy, it might prove a matter of great danger, therefore he resolved to give words to both, and so ingratiate himself with the one, that he should not disoblige the other. To Phocas he sent and offered to suppress Basilus, and share the Empire with him, but secretly at the same time he caused his Son Romanus to go to the Emperour at Constantinople, under pretence of running away and revolting, with this Design, that if Phocas got the better, the Father should intercede for and bring off his Son, and if Basilus overcame, his Son should make the Father's Peace. Romanus was kindly received, preferred to the Dignity of a Magister, became a great Favourite and a Counsellour to Basilus in his Wars, who had now taken all matters out of the Hands of Basilus the President, and fearfull that for his so doing, he might as he had done to others practise something against him, had removed him from Court to his own House. There perceiving that he was very unsatisfied, and turbulent, and was hatching some Design for recovery of his Power, he banished him, and seized upon moit of his vast Estate both to enrich himself, and hinder him from attempting any new matters. The Monastery lately built by him, he rifled, and seized on all his Curiosities, which so afflicted the old Man, that he pin'd away and died.

Basilus

Achemenia pars Persidis ab Achemene fito Regis dile, ut ait Stephanus. Achemenes autem erat Rex Persarum, nomen esse An-mianus Rex Regibus imperans sonat.

Upon which Sclerus and the Romans in Syria are let out of Prison.

Who ingage and defeat the Persians.

And return into the Empire.

Cajoling Phocas, and sending his Son to Basilus the Emperour.

Sclerus and Phocas make an Agreement.

But when joy-ned Phocas trepan him and commits him to custody putting in for the whole.

But is possy-ed by Procurement of Basilus.

Who in effect is sole Em-perour.
Constantine Indulging himself in ease and pleasure.

Sclerus is let at Liberty.

But by Agreement with Basilus quite his pretensions.

Basilus being rid of him, and wanting some to assist and advise him, the more welcome received Romanus, knowing him to be both a prudent Man, and an excellent Souldier.

63. In the mean time an Agreement was made between Sclerus and Phocas, on these terms, that their Designs succeeding, Sclerus should for his share have Antioch, Phenicia, Palestine, Calofyria, Mesopotamia and Egypt; and Phocas obtain Constantinople, with the rest of the Provinces. This was confirmed by oath on both sides, and Sclerus joined himself with Phocas in Cappadocia, for the better carrying on of the War. But Phocas watching his Advantage, spoiled him of the Imperial Ensigns, and then committed him to Custody, which done he prevailed with his Souldiers to fight under him, and now seeming to himself to have sufficiently provided for his Interest, sent one Calocyus Delphinus a Patritian, with part of his Army to Chrysoopolis, over against Constantinople, on the shore of Aha, and with the rest of the Forces he himself removed to Abydus, by this means to block up Constantinople. Basilus by this time had received some Succours from the Rossians, to the Prince of whom, Bladimere, he had married his Sister Anne. With these Rossians by Night having waited over, he fell unexpectedly upon Delphinus, easily overpowerd and took him Prisoner, whom he caused instantly to be nailed to a Post, and having animadverted as he thought fit upon the rest, that he there took, then returned to Constantinople. In the mean while Phocas, with might and main endeavoured to get into Abydus, but the Inhabitants made stout resistance, being encouraged by Cyriacus the Drungarius of the Fleet, who was sent thither for that purpose. But presently Constantine the Emperour passed over, and was soon followed by his Brother Basilus, whom Phocas with part of his Forces speedily encountered, leaving the rest to continue the Siege of Abydus. Before the Armies joined doubtfull of the Event, and perceiving Basilus to ride up and down, to view the Troops, give directions and animate his Men, he resolved to single him out and kill him, by which Act seeming not at all difficult, their years and experience considered, he should put an end to the Quarrel, and secure the Empire to himself. Accordingly with all his Force he made towards him, but stopped in his Carreire, before he came near to the Emperour. Some reported his Horse threw him: the Emperour Constantine gave out that he fell by his Hand, but the general and most received opinion was that making toward an Hill near at hand, finding himself surprized he laid him down and died of Poison, which by procurement of Basilus, one Simoon a Servant whom he most trusted had given him, although it was also given out, that in his Passage from the Hand of some Enemy he received a mortal wound. At first it was only imagined that he there rested himself, but when he was found to be dead, and the Rumour was thereof spread into the Army, his Men then fled in disorder, and the Emperour's giving the Chace obtained a Victory at a very easie rate. Amongst the Prisoners were Leo, and Theognostus Melissen, Theodosius Melanytus and many others whom Basilus led in Triumph, being let upon Asses. Onely Leo Melissen he exempted from this Ignominy, because when the Armies were preparing for Battel, he rebuked with Tears his Brother Theognostus for reviling the Emperours, and beat him when he would not cease his contemptuous Language.

64. Basilus finding himself now Emperour indeed, upon the removal of such a Competitor, with his Fortune quite changed his Humour, scarcely thinking or doing what he had been accustomed to before. Considering what solicitude and pains his place required, he quitted all his former pleasures, left off all his brave apparel, renounced his wonted Intemperance both as to Wine and Women, and applied his mind wholly to the Art and Practice of Government, wherein he left nothing to his Brother but the mere Name and Lustre, assigning him a Guard, but that very small, and not answering the Dignity, which he did not at all take in evil Part, contenting himself with his Freedom and Ease, and prizing his Hunting and Conversation with his Friends, above whatever Domination and troublesome Command could afford. But Phocas being dead in the Month of April, the second Indiction, and the fourteenth year of Basilus and Constantine, Sclerus was thereupon set at Liberty, by such as kept him in the Castle of Tyropæum, and continued in the same mind of assuming the Title as formerly. Basilus laboured to take him off, expostulating with him for embroiling the Empire, and being the cause of so much blood-shed contrary to his Christian Profession; and herewith he was so much moved, or rather by consideration of his great Age, and the little means he had to compass his ends, that having received security for his Indemnity, and the Dignity of Curpalates, he made an Agreement, and and was content to lay down his Pretensions. When the Emperour saw him led to him by two that supported him, for by reason of his Age and Corpulency he could not walk, or as some gave out in his way to him he had lost his sight, he smiled to think in how great fear he had stood of such a Man, and perceiving that he still wore his Purple Shoes, which he had forgot to put off, having dejected himself of all other marks of Majesty, he refused to admit him to Discourse. He then put off the Shoes before the Door and approaching the Emperour's Seat, Basilis rose up to him, and taking him by the Hand caused him to eat and drink with him. According to the Agreement he was made Curator of the Palace, and such of his Followers as had under him enjoyed any Places or Estates, were permitted to enjoy their Estates and to keep their Places, or elsewhere preferred to others of like value.

And is kindly received.

Basilis revenges himself for the Incursions of his Neighbours during the Civil Wars.

65. Basilis, being freed now from all Usurpations and trouble of Civil Wars, consulted how to be revenged on Samuel the Regulus of Bulgaria, and others who during those Rebellions had taken the Advantage to infest the Borders of the Empire. He made a Progress into Thrace and Macedonia, and going to Thessalonica, there left a strong Party under Command of Gregorius Taronitis, to repress the Incursions of Samuel, and returning to Constantinople shortly after took another Journey into Iberia. David the Europlates or petty Prince of that Country being lately dead, had made him his Heir, he therefore took possession of his Inheritance, and forcing George the Brother of David to be content with the Inner Iberia, received his Son for an Hostage, and then took his way for Phœnicia, where the several Ameras of Tripolis, Damascus, Tyre and Beritas, had, during the Absence of Ameras of Sclerus, made a League amongst themselves and set upon Antioch, the Governour of which Damianus a Patritian they had slain in fight. But he now frightened them into a Compliance, forced them to submit themselves, and having received Hostages for their dutifull demeanour for the time to come, returned back to Constantinople. As he passed through Cappadocia, the Magister, Eustachius Meleminus entertained him with his whole Army, with which kindness he pretended he was much pleased, but inwardly dissatisfied that a Subject should be possessed of such an Estate, to the endangering of the Government, which was so often shaken, through the too great Wealth and Power of the Nobility; under shew of kindness he carried him with him to Constantinople, where he took care he should live very plentifully, but never would permit him to return home; and after his death seized on all his Estate. To prevent the Mischiefs thence arising by a Law, he ordained, that the Great men should not increase their Possessions or Lands, which (saith Cedrenus) had been formerly enacted by his Grandfather Constantine, and Romanus (the Elder) his Father-in-Law.

And by a Law decrees that Noblemen should not increase their Possessions or Lands.

66. The Constitution of Romanus the Elder, here mentioned, is yet extant and published by Benefidius, in the first Book of those three, which he set forth con- cerning the Oriental Law, bearing the name of a Novel. "It prohibits any of the conspicuous Magistri, or Patritians, "any in command or power, any Honoured with principal Dignities, whether employed in Functions, Civil or Military, Magistrates, chosen or substituted, any Metro- politans or Archbishops, Prefects or those that had the oversight of Religious Houses, or any other preferred to any secular Honour, by purchase gift or any other means, to get into their Hands, or come to the possession of any Territories or Lands. If any such should presume so to do, after the publishing of this pre- sent Constitution, it ordains that without Restitution of their Money, they be put out of Possession, and loose all their Labour and Charges, they had been at both in getting and bettering what they had so obtained. Besides this they shall forfeit the value of the Lands to the Emperour if they be the more eminent and Illustrious Persons; and if meaner condition, they shall be forced from them without any the least satisfaction made, and farther punished as they shall deserve. The reason of the making and Re-inforcing of this Law is, as we may very well observe from the course of this History, to be fetched from those frequent Usurpations, of the great ones, to which they were enabled by their great Revenues and Possessions, which both afforded them Treasure, and many Dependants out of their Tenants and Vassals. Hence do we reade of one Do- mestick of the Schools, able with his own Retainers to Wage War with several

The reason of that Law.

Ἰβὴν δὲ καὶ τὴν Καρδοπάνην ἐνέβηκεν δαδίδ. Ἦος ἐκ τοῦ Ὀδρενίου ἀπαρτὲς ῤῆγος ἴστος, οὐ βέβαιον ἔμεινεν Ὀδρενίου, ἢ ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον
ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον
ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον ῤῆγιον

Samuel the Bulgarian takes Thessalonica.
Killing in Co-vernour.

And waiting the Country adjacent.

But is found out by Uranus
the Empe-rour's General and defeated.

Ameras of the Saracens, and we Translate the word Territories, as well as Lands or Grounds. For such were intirely possessed by Basilis the Bed-Chamber-man, or President, as we have seen, that Zmises complained to the loss of his Life. Hence it was that the imperial Purple was so dangerous to be worn, such murdering of Princes, such alterations in the Government. And we see Basilis the Emperour was not only directed by a care of his own preservation, but much warranted by former Laws, in proceeding with Basilis the Eunuch so as he did.

67. But to return to our Story, Samuel the Bulgarian was now come against Thessalonica, the Conquest of which he knew would much conduce to the Mastering of the whole Country. He placed some of his Army in Ambush, and then sent others to face the Town to the very Gates, to draw out the Garison into the Snare. And the device so far took that Gregory the Governour sent out Afores his Son with a party to make a discovery of the Enemy, who fell into the Ambush while without any fear he pursued those that fled from the Gates. Upon notice Gregory issued out to relieve him, but being also intrapped and overpowered, he himself was slain, and his Son taken Prisoner, which being known at Constantinople, Nicephorus Uranus; who had corrupted his Keepers and escaped out of Prison at Babylon, the Commander of all the West, was speedily dispatched thither. Coming to Thessalonica he found that Samuel, grown insolent upon the Death of Gregory, had passed Tempe, crossed the River Peneus, and made an Inroad into Thessaly, Beotia, Attica, and through the Isthmus of Corinth into the very Heart of Peloponnesus. He marched therefore with his Army by the foot of Olympus to Larissa, whereleaving his Baggage, by great Journeys he proceeded into Thessaly, and passing the Pharalian Plains, and the River Apidanus, incamped himself on the Bank of Spercheus opposite to Samuel, who lay on the other side of the River at this time so swollen with Rain Water that no passage could presently be had to come to an Engagement. Yet Uranus by much searching at length found a Ford, and by Night passing the River, fell upon the Bulgarians as they securely slept, and made vast Slaughter of them; and Samuel with his Son Romanus were sorely wounded, and had been taken but that they lurked amongst the dead Bodies, and the following Night stole away into the Mountains of Asolia, by the Tops of which they elcaped to the Hill Pindus, and so into Bulgaria, here he was constrained to Marry his Daughter to Afores his Prisoner the Son of Gregory Taronitis, for being desperately in love with him, she had declared that if he might not have him, he would kill her self.

68. The Wedding being over, he sent his New Son-in-Law with his Wife to Dyrrachium, making him Governour of that Country. They had not been long there, but he having easily persuaded his Wife to Accompany him and taking the opportunity of the Emperour's Gallies which were then cruising on the Coasts, went to Constantinople where he was honoured with the Dignity of Magister, and the with the Title of Zofa or of the Robes. He brought Letters also to the Emperour from Chryselius, one of the principal Officers in Dyrrachium, who there by covenanting to deliver that City into his Hands on condition that the Dignity of Patritian might be conferred on himself and his two Sons; but this seems to have been prevented by the Death of Chryselius, which the maimed Text of Cedrenus hints to us, though it be not clearly expressed; however the Emperour became Master of the place not long after, although by some other means. But about the same time Paulus Bobus Magister the chief Man in Thessalonica, and Malacenus a Person eminent for wisdom and eloquence being accused of favouring the Bulgarians, were sent away and confined, the one to Constantinople, and the other to Palis in Thrace, which report flying to Adrianople, some of the most eminent there that had also been suspected out of fear betook themselves to Samuel. The Emperour that he might obtain the Friendship of the Venetians to their Prince or Duke gave in Marriage the Daughter of Argyrus, and Sister to him who afterward Reigned. He now invaded Bulgaria by the way of Philippopolis, which City he committed to the care of Theodorocranus a Patritian, and having taken many Castles or Forts in Triadiza, returned to Molyndopolis. Afterward he sent a great Army against such of the Bulgarian Garisons as lay beyond the Mountain Hæmus, commanded by Theodorocranus, and Nicephorus Xiphias a Protopatharian, who took both the greater and the lesser Peristhlabia, with Pliscoba, and victoriously returned Home.

Basilis invades Bulgaria by way of Philippopolis.

Another Invasion by way of Thessalonica.

69. The following year Basilis in person made another Inroad into Bulgaria by the way of Thessalonica, and received Berrhea from the hands of Dobromerus the Governour, who for his good service was rewarded with the Honour of Procen- sul.

Basilus puts out the Eyes of 1500, sending them to Samuel, who thereupon dies.

Coined the coils him.

But is kill'd by John.

Basilus pursues his Victory.

At length comes to Thessalonica.

Another invasion into Bulgaria.

Taking several of the Noblemen of the Country.

Upon which they pretend to submit to the Emperor.

and renewed skirmishes, horrid his Father and carried him off into the Castle of Prilapas. Of all the Prisoners to the Number, it's said, of fifteen thousand the Emperour caused the Eyes to be put out, and to every Hundred assigned a man that had one Eye left, under conduct of which Leaders he sent them away to Samuel, who beholding such a Spectacle coming to him in such Rank and Order was not able to bear up against to great a Calamity, but instantly fell down in a swoon. Those that were by with Spirits, and he came to himself again, and asked for some cold Water. Which having drunk, he fell into a Cardiognus, or Pain and Faintness at his Stomach, and died of it two Days after.

74. Gabriel who was also surnamed Romanus his Son, by a Captive Woman of Larissa, succeeded him, one superiour to him in strength of Body, but in that of mind far inferior. When he had not reigned all-out a year, he was as he went out to hunt, killed by John Bladisphlabus the Son of Aaron, whose Life he had once preserved. But before this happened, one Nestoritzas was sent by Samuel, with a considerable Force into Thessalonica, in the Government of which City, one Theophylact Botaniata had succeeded David Arianita. This Theophylact with his Son Michael, sallied out against him, put him to flight, and having got much Plunder in his Camp, then went to the Emperour as he lay in the Straits. Having passed the Straits and followed the Chace after Samuel, as far as he thought convenient, Basilus took in a Castle called Matzucius, and then passed on toward Strumpitza, from which place desirous to have a way cleared to Thessalonica, he put Theophylact upon that task, to clear the Hills of Fortresses, and open the ways through the Woods, and he undertook the work with all Alacrity, and prosecuted it with diligence, but was intrapped and compassed by the Enemy, in a place where there was neither means of escaping, nor good opportunity to fight, and cut off with most of his Men. The Emperour much troubled at the News durst not proceed but retreated, and in his way had a very strong Castle called Melenicus, through the powerfull Oratory of Sergius an Eunuch, whom he employed to the Garrison Souldiers, delivered up into his Hands. Having kindly entertained those that gave it up, and therein put a strong Party of his own Men, he removed to Mosynopolis, where on the four and twentieth Day of October, he heard of Samuel's death. Thence marching to Thessalonica, he moved into Pelagonia without doing any harm to the Country, save that he burnt Buteliana the Palace of Gabriel, and took in the Castles of Prilampus and Stypeius. Then passed he the River Izerna, with Boats and Bladders as he could and came to Budena, whence on the Ninth day of January, he arrived at Thessalonica.

75. At the beginning of Spring he again invaded Bulgaria, where having recovered the Cattle of Budena which had revolted, he caused two Castles to be built in the middle of the Straits, one by the Name of Cardia, and another by that of St. Elias, and returned to Thessalonica. As he here lay, one Romanus Cheirotmetus brought him Letters from Gabriel, wherein he promised to turn his Subject and Vassal; but he giving no credit to them, sent Xiphias and Constantine Diogenes at present the Governour of Thessalonica, with an Army into the Country of the Moglenians, which having wasted and laid Siege to the City, he himself came up with the rest of the Forces, and by a Ditch caused the River to be drained from the Walls, the Foundations whereof when he had undermined the Inhabitants with Lamentations and Prayers, gave up what they could not keep. Therein were taken Domitianus Caucasianus, the principal Counsellor of Gabriel, with Elitzes the chief Man of the Country, besides many other Noblemen, and a multitude of the inferior sort of Souldiers, of which such as were fit for service he transported to Aspracania, and caused to be burnt a Neighbouring Castle called Natia. On the fifth day after came Cheirotmetus, bringing with him some of the Servants of John Bladisphlabus, the Son of Aaron, with Letters to the Emperour, wherein he signified that he had taken away the Life of Gabriel, and that the Kingdom of Bulgaria, now was reverted to him who should own himself his Subject and Vassal. Basilus returned him an Answer in Golden Characters, after which within a little time Cheirotmetus returned and brought with him not only Letters from John, but from the Bulgarians who owned themselves the Emperour's Subjects. And to him came Caucanus, the Brother of Domitian Caucasianus lately mentioned, and was honourably entertained.

Another Expedition into Bulgaria.

76. But for all this the Emperour being assured, that John dealt deceitfully with him, and was practising matters quite contrary to his engagements returned into Bulgaria, and wasting the Country of Oftrobis, Gosens and Pelagonia, put out the Eyes of as many of the Inhabitants as he took. He proceeded to Achris, the Seat of the Bulgarian Princes, which having taken and settled all things there, he resolved to go to Dyrrachium, where matters very much required his Presence. So long as Trymalia, and the nearer Parts of Servia continued under the Government of Bladimere the Son-in-Law of Samuel, all things were there in repose, for he was a man very just, and a great lover of Peace and Vertue, but he being (through the Treachery of David the Archbishop) perfidiously murdered by his Command, after Gabriel's Death all were in great confusion and disorder, John sometimes by his Officers, and otherwhiles in his own Person falling upon the City. The Emperour purposed to visit them again, but for this time was prevented of his Journey upon this unpleasing occasion. He had left behind him a strong Party to haras all the Parts of Pelagonia, all which the Bulgarians having drawn into an Ambush, cut them off with their Commanders, being headed by Ibatzes a man of great Nobility, and as great Valour amongst them. Basilus much concerned for this inominious loss, returns into Pelagonia in pursuit of this Ibatzes, and from Thessalonica proceeds to Mosynopolis. He sends David Arianita, with a sufficient Power to attacke Strumpitza, who in room of it takes another Castle called Thermitza. Another Party he dispatches away under command of Xiphias, to take in the several Forts of Triaditza, and all those in the plain he took together with a Fort which they called Boion.

The Region of Chazaria subdued.

Upper Media put into the Emperour's Hands.

Bulgaria once more invaded by the Emperour.

77. In January the Emperour returned to Constantinople, and thence sent a Fleet into Chazaria commanded by Mongus the Son of Adronicus Ducas the Lydian, who by the assistance of Sphegnus the Brother of Bladimere, who married Basilus his Sister, subdued that Region, having taken Tzulus the Prince thereof in the first Conflict. At the same time Senacherrimus the Prince of the upper Media (afterward called Aspracavia) not able to resist the Saracens who pressed sorely upon him, gave up himself, his Family and Country into the Emperour's Hands. Hereupon for a reward he was made a Patritian, and in lieu of his quitted Dominion received the Cities of Sebastea, Larissa and Abara, with other large Revenues. Of Aspracavia was made Governour, Basilus Argyrus the Patritian, who for his ill administration or bad success was not long after put out of Command, and Nicephorus Comnenus was sent his Successor, who partly by force and partly by persuasion brought the Country to submit. But all other Designs, Expeditions and Accessions seemed to the Emperour of no value, so long as Bulgaria remained unconquered, which having invaded so often in his own Person, he was much concerned in honour to have the work perfected, and for that purpose could give himself but little rest. This same year being the fourteenth Indiction, he marched again into Triaditza, where he laid siege to the Castle of Pernicus, which he lay before and violently attacked for eighty days together, but those within as earnestly and pertinaciously making resistance after much loss of his men, he was forced to rise, and departed to Mosynopolis. Here having wintred and refreshed his Army, in Spring again he breaks into Bulgaria, where he takes a Castle and gets great booty out of Pelagonia, but having in vain attacked the City of Castoria, he retreats. That which moved him so to doe, was the Intelligence he had receiv'd, that Cracas was joyned with John having a vast Army, and that being assisted by the Parzinacæ, they were resolved to make an Inroad into the Territories of the Empire. Disturbed at this report he retired, but in his way took and burnt the Castle of Bosgradia, relieved Bezawa, and having demolished several other Forts, then made an Halt, having now received more welcome News, how that the designed Expedition of John and Cracas was come to nothing, the Patzinacæ refusing to join with them.

78. However proceeding in his Return, after this little Pause he took by storm the Castle Setena, where had been laid up much Corn, which being removed he commanded Fire to be set to the Place. Now hearing that John was not far off, he sent against him the Cohorts of the Schools (so they termed them) of the East, and of the Thessalonicians under Command of Constantine Diogenes, who was either not so wary, or had not so good intelligence as the Emperour. For John had placed an Ambush for them, which Basilus understanding and soliciting for his men rode on fast before, bidding all such as were Souldiers to follow him, which being perceived by those that John had sent out, they fled in great fear to their Camp, making much Noise with these words Bezeite Tzesar, by which we suppose

H h h z

John, Prince of the Bulgarians routed.Is afterward slain,And the Count-rey delivered up to Basilus the EmperourWho receives his new Subjects with-great kindnesIbatzes only standing out.

suppose was meant Ronne, here's Cæsar, (as most Nations Termed him) or the Emperour. John and all his Army thus putting themselves to the Rout, Diogenes and his Men pursued them, did great Execution, and took the Horses and Baggage of John with one of his Kinsmen, which done the Emperour returned to Bodens and so home to Constantinople on the ninth of January, the fifteenth Indiction, and the two and fortieth year of his Reign. John being by his retreat eased much of his fears, in confidence of his good fortune goes against Dyrrachium, where engaging in fight he is slain, uncertain by whom, after he had born the Title of Prince or King of the Bulgarians two years and five Months. The Emperour was no sooner certified of his death by the Governour of that City but rather flew than went to Bulgaria in hope that the long looked for Prey would now fall into his Hands. And so far good fortune complied with his Wishes, that when he was come on his way no farther than Constantinople the Brother and Son of the famous Cracrus, so often mentioned, there met him to give up Pernicus and five and thirty Castles more, whom he courteously received, and having admitted Cracrus to the Dignity of a Patritian, then held on his way to Mosynopolis. Thither came Ambassadors both from Pelagoma, Morobisdus and Lipenus to give up other Cities; and when he had reached Serræ there Cracrus himself met him with the Deputies of those that yielded up the five and thirty Castles, and were kindly entertained. And hither came also Dragomizus to surrender Strumpitza, and was also made a Patritian, because he brought along with him John the Governour of Chaldia, who being taken Prisoner by Samuel had continued in Prison two and twenty years.

79. When the Emperour drew near to Strumpitza, David the Archbishop of Bulgaria met him with Letters from Mary the Widow of John which hinted that on certain conditions she was willing to quit all pretences to Bulgaria. Here also met him Bogdanus the Lord of the Castles that stood farther within the Countrey, who also received the Dignity of a Patritian having formerly held with the Emperour, and killed for this purpose his own Father-in-Law. He proceeded now as far as Scopia, in which leaving a strong Garrison, he returned by the Castles of Stipeius and Profacus being every where welcom'd with the Prayers and well-wishes of his new Subjects. Then he went to Achris where he was received with the lucky Acclamations of the People. This Achris was situate upon an high Hill near to a vast Lake out of which the River Drinus issuing toward the North, after no long space turneth Westward and entrencheth Ionium (by which the Historian seems to mean the Countrey lying upon the Adriatick Sea) near the Castle Istifus. The Emperour now seized on the Treasure of the Bulgarian Princes which was very great, as besides other things several Rich Crowns adorned with Pearl, and an hundred Centenaries of Gold which he bestowed as a Donative upon his Souldiers. Returning to his Camp he there received the Widow of John Bladisthlabus with three Sons and six Daughters: and she brought along with her a Bastard Son of Samuel, and two Daughters of Radomere besides six Sons one of which had his Eyes put out by John at such time as he slew Radomere with his Wife and his Son-in-Law. She had other three Sons by John; but they were fled into the Hill Tinorus, one of the Tops of the Ceraunick Mountains, where much pressed with difficulties by reason that the Emperour had given order to beset the Mountain they sent to him to yield, and within a while came to him as he lay at Diabolis in his Journey from the Lake Prefpa, where on a Tribunal erected for this purpose he kindly received them, and comforting them with most gentle words honoured Profranus, who seems to have been the Eldest, with the Dignity of Mazister, and the rest with that of Patritians. And hither was brought, whom it most concerned him to see, Ibatzes deprived of his sight; how and by whom, it's not an unpleasant Story to relate.

80. Bladisthlabus being dead, and his Wife and Children with all the Nobility having yielded themselves and Countrey into the Emperour's hands, he alone refused to comply with the time and present posture of Affairs, and seized upon a Mountain most difficult of access. (Some called it Brochotus, others Pronissa) where was a neat Castle of the Bulgarian Princes, with Gardens and other things of solace and divertisement. This in no little measure perplexed the Emperour, who had sufficient cause, by reason of the Man's Qualifications, to suspect the consequence of this unexpected Usurpation. "He omitted his Journey as he had intended, and turning Southward, spent some time in soliciting him by Letters to consider what he did, and not to expose himself to certain destruction by entering to prize so impossible a thing on his own Head without any advice or assistance, to which he answered ambiguously, drawing out the time in length and in expectation,

But is reduced by the valour and cunning of Eustathius Daphnomein.

"pectation, he held Basilus against his will five and fifty days at Diabolis. The care and anxiety the Emperour was in being taken notice of by Eustathius Daphnomein a Patritian, whom he had lately preferred to the Government of Achris, he resolved upon a strange course, to rid him of this trouble, which he communicated to none but two of his Servants whom he could trust, and he knew would stand by him in any undertaking. The Feast of the Assumption of our Lady was solemnly observed by Ibatzes, and to it were invited as well strangers as Neighbours, and to it though not invited Daphnomein would go, and being discovered by the Sentinels, he openly declared who he was, and sent to let Ibatzes know that he was come to be merry with him. He wondered to hear that one should come of his own accord, and put himself into an Enemies Hands, but he had them bring him in and very kindly entertained him. Morning Prayer being over, and all others gone to their Apartments, he went to him and desired that they two might discourse in some convenient and secret place, for he had a matter of great importance, and which was for his own good to communicate to him.

81. Ibatzes suspecting nothing but that he would join with him in his Rebellion, led him into an Orchard very thick beset with Trees, so that they could scarcely either be seen or heard, whither being come Eustathius being strong and nimble, and watching an advantage struck up his Heels, set his Knee upon his Breast, stopped his Mouth, and called his two Men who watched their motions constantly for this purpose. They thrusting their Cloths into his Mouth, forced both his Eyes out of his Head, which done they let him goe, and all three with their drawn Swords, got up into one of the highest Chambers in the House, expecting what instantly followed. For as soon as the fact was divulged, a great multitude came running together, some with Swords, some with Spears, others with Bows, not a few with Stones, some with Wood, others with Fire, and others with other Combustible matter, Crying out cut their Throats, Burn them, Tear them Limb from Limb, Stone them, let no Body spare the Villains. Eustathius seeing and hearing this could have small hope to escape their fury, yet advised his Men not to let fall their Courage, nor by any means to resign themselves into their hands who would most certainly tear them in pieces in this Rage. "Putting his Head out of a Window by the motion of his hand he procured silence, and then told them that for his part there had not been the least enmity or grudge betwixt Ibatzes and him, the one being a Bulgarian and the other a Roman, as they should judge, being born not in Thrace or Macedonia, neighbouring Countries, but in Asia the less at a very great distance from Bulgaria. Therefore all that were wife amongst them, must needs conclude that it must needs be some extraordinary thing that had put him upon such an enterprize, and that nothing but Necessity it self could have engaged him in so dangerous an Attempt. He told them that what was done, was done by the Command of the Emperour, who had onely made use therein of his hands; and therefore if they were resolved to kill him, kill him they might, he was in their power, yet resolved with his Servants to sell his life at as dear a rate as he could, and fight it out to the last Breath. If they killed them, as it was no Mastery being so many to so few, they should not be unhappy in their death leaving behind them so powerful an Avenger, against whom as it seemed they were resolved to struggle as long as possibly they could. This Speech especially the dread they had of the Emperour therein mentioned produced such an Alteration in their minds, that they all thrunk away by degrees, and the wiser sort wished him Prosperity, and promised obedience. Eustathius, then without any opposition carried away Ibatzes to the Emperour. He rewarded this notable service with the Government of Dyrrachium and all the movable goods of Ibatzes, who was committed unto Custody.

82. At the same time Nicolitzas who had been so often taken and so often dismissed, having lurked in the Mountains, and been forsaken of well-nigh all his Men (who were frighted by a Company, sent on purpose to hunt him out) of his own accord came to the Camp, and declared it was with Resolution to yield himself to the Emperour, who would not see him but gave order that he should be kept Prisoner at Thessalonica. Basilus having all things according to his Wish in those Parts, and given leave to as many Romans as he had found in Captivity either here to remain or to follow him, removed to Castoria. Here were brought to his presence two Daughters of Samuel; which beholding Mary, the Widow of John, to stand by him, presently flew in her Face, and had made an end of her, if the Emperour himself had not interposed, and by good words mitigated their wrath, promising

Basilus having visited most places of Bulgaria,

ming them also to provide well for them. On Mary he conferred the Honour of Zofite, and sent her with her Sons to Constantinople. Then by the Industry of Xiphias, did he demolish all the Castles in Servie and Sofcus, and came to the Castle of Stages, where Elamagus Prince of the Belegardi presented himself to him in a servile Habit with his assistants. Thence proceeding towards Athens, in his passage thorough Zetunium, he beheld with Admiration the Bones of those Bulgarians, that were slain in the Defeat given to Samuel by Nicephorus, and much more the Wall called Scelos built on Thermopylae, at a Place called Rupena to restrain the Bulgarians. Arriving at Athens, he gave Thanks to our Lady for his good Success, and offered very largely in the Church. And thence returned to Constantinople, which he entered in Triumph through the great Doors of the Golden Gate, with a Golden crested Crown called Iapbus (from the pride, faith Zonaras, of those that wore this kind) Mary with the Daughters of Samuel, and the rest of the Bulgarians going before him. With the Shouts and Acclamations of the People he went to the Great Church, and there having given thanks to Almighty God, went and repos'd himself in the Palace. This Conquest of Bulgaria happened in the second Indiction, the forty fourth year of Basilus and Constantine. A. D. 1019.

83. After his Return Sergius the Patriarch was very earnest with him, to make good what he had promised in case of this Conquest, that he would merit the Alltelengyum, but could not prevail. His mind was wholly bent upon Covetousness and Dominion, to gratify which immediately after his Success in Bulgaria, the Neighbouring Nation of the Chorbari, by the Hands of their two Princes, Brothers, gave up themselves. There only remained Sermo the Lord of Sermium, who refused to row by this great stream, and therefore speedily made shipwreck of his life and all. Constantine Diogenes Governour of the Neighbouring Province, sent him to desire Conference, and if he feared any deceit or Ambush, he desired that each should come only with three Servants in his Company to the Rivers side that ran by them. Sermo agreed and met him, but when he expected a Discourse, Diogenes prevented it by thrusting a Dagger into his side, which he had hid in his Coat, and instantly slew him, which his Servants seeing fled as fast as they could, lest they should be serv'd in the same manner. Then gathering together such Forces as he commanded, he went to Sermium, which partly by threats and partly by promises he brought the Widow to surrender, which done she was sent away and married to one of the Principal Citizens of Constantinople; and Diogenes was made Governour of the newly (however) gained Territory for his pains. In the mean time, to make himself acceptable by something how little soever, Basilus supplies the City abundantly with water, by cleansing and repairing the Aqueduct of Valentinian. But his thoughts were quickly diverted from Employments of this Nature by a message brought, that George the Prince of the Abasgians had broken the League betwixt them, and invaded in hostile manner the adjacent Territories of the Empire. He presently marched against him with a complete Army, leaving behind him Xiphias and Nicephorus the Son of Bardas Phocas both Patritians.

84. Now whether they took it ill that they were left behind, or for other more tempting reasons, they got together a power of men, and broke out into Rebellion. This much disordered the Army, and the Emperor more out of fear that they should be beset with the Rebels on one side, and on the other by the Abasgians, with whom it was reported, that they held secret Intelligence. Basilus in this strait wrote Letters both to Xiphias and Phocas, but gave order to the messenger to deliver them, that the one should not know of any the other received. However upon the receipt of them, Phocas was so free as to reade his Xiphias, who denying that he received any, on a certain day sent for the other to speak with him, and when he came, having before hand laid his snares, took away his Life. Which the Emperor having understood, sent against Xiphias Theophylact, the Son of Damianus Delassenus who took him Prisoner, and sent him to Constantinople, to John the Prothonotary who shaved him, and made him a Monk in the Island of Antigonos. In this manner, Basilus freed from all danger of this Rebellion gave battle to the Abasgians, but with no Success at first; but in a second Conflict which happened on the eleventh of September, and the sixth Indiction, Liparites their General fell, and with him the greatest part of their Army. George fled into the more distant Mountains of Iberia, whence shortly after he sent and made his Peace, submitting to what Terms the Emperor pleased to impose, and gave up for an Hostage his Son Pancratius, whom Basilus honoured with the Dignity of Magister, and so departed home.

85. There

He animadverts upon the Accomplices of the Arch-rebels.

Preparing for an expedition into Sicily Basilus dies.

Constantine X sole Emperor.

His Management of Affairs.

Condemning and putting out the Eyes of several Romans.

85. There did he animadvert upon the Accomplices of Phocas and Xiphias, by confiscating their Estates, and condemning them to Prison; none he put to death but Pherfa a Patritian, who had first of all sided with the Rebels, had killed four Officers of the Neighbouring Princes, and beheaded one of the Emperor's Eunuchs with his own Hands. There was also one of the Emperor's Chamber cast to the Lions, for attempting to poison him for the sake of Xiphias. A little before this, Anne the Sister of Basilus, and a Widow of Bladimer the Rassian Prince died, after whose decease Chrysochir a Kinsman of her Husband, put Eight hundred men on board, and with them came to Constantinople, pretending he would serve the Emperor. But he requiring that he should lay down his Arms, and then to ask what he pleased, he refused to do it, and passing over the Propontis went to Abydus, where he defeated easily him that lay there for defence of the Coasts, and then went to Lemnus, where he and all his Men were cut off deceitfully by the Fleet of the Cibyrrazota, David of Achris the Governour of Samus, and Nicephorus Cabasila the Commander at Theffalonica. After this Basilus prepared for an Expedition into Sicily, and for that purpose sent before Orestes one of his most faithfull Eunuchs, with great Forces. But he was prevented by his Destiny from following, dying in the Month of December, and the Ninth Indiction, after he had lived Seventy six Cedrenus, Seventy two years faith Zonaras, and born the Title of Emperor as many, but reigned alone in effect, though his Brother also had the Name the space of fifty. He left his Brother his Successour, and desired him to see him buried in the Church of St. John the Evangelist and Divine at the Hebdomus, who therein fulfilled his will.

86. Constantine the Tenth of that Name, came to the management of the Empire in the Ninth Indiction, A. D. 1026, and therein did little or no good to it; but much mischief. Being a man of most depraved manners, he neither acted, nor thought any thing worthy of his Place and Dignity. His Delight was in running Races, jesting with loose and silly drolling Persons, and drinking whole Nights together, and thus was willing to spend his time, while his Brother (who was content it should be so) attended Affairs of State, and increased both the Reputation and Bounds of the Empire. In chusing of his Officers (the great Tryal and Indication of a Prince) he had only respect to those of his own humour, such virtuous Persons as himself, drunken Slaves and the most profligate Wretches, no Man either for his Birth, Abilities or Education, being at all considered. Nicholas, the chief Man of his Chamberlains, he made Domestick of the Schools, and of his Bedchamber. Nicephorus the next after him Provestiarius, and Simon who was in the third Place his Drungarius Bigla. One Eustathius far inferior to these, he created Captain of the Associates. To one Spondylus he gave the Government of Antioch, and that of Iberia to one Nicetas, both Persons very infamous. These Ministers under such a Prince undid all, bringing all things into disorder, and almost ruined the Empire, which since the time of Romanus, had so exceedingly flourished under Nicephorus Zimisces and Basilus. And not only did he prefer unworthy, and scandalous Persons, but every man eminent for any worth or goodness, as much as in him lay, he laboured to disgrace and undo, especially the most Noble or Illustrious Persons. He pulled out the Eyes of Constantine a Patritian, Son of the Magister Michael Burtzas, having born him malice, for discovering his naughty Courses to his Brother. And other most excellent Persons he blinded, as we shall see; for as he began so he proceeded, the same Causes ever producing the same effects, when not hindered by Incapacity of the Subjects, or the Intervention of more powerful Accidents.

87. At this time Nicephorus Commanus governed Aspracania (Baspracania or Basprania as it is variously written) a Man very wife, and as valiant as any of his time, with such Success, that he forced all his Neighbours to live quietly about him. But after some time finding his Souldiers begin to fail in their Courage against the Saracens, by all the means he could use, he endeavoured to resuscitate in them their wonted Courage, and upbraiding them much with the Alteration, procured them not only to promise but to take a formal Oath, that they would not forsake, but stand by him to the last extremity against the Enemy. This being reported at Constantinople, Constantine and his effeminate Ministers, incompetent Judges of matters relating to War or Fortitude, put him presently out of command, and being sent for up to the City he was condemned of Treason, or a designed Usurpation, and had his Eyes put out, to the regret of all good men: and in the same sort he dealt with Bardas a Patritian, descended from Bardas Phocas.

Returns in Triumph to Constantinople.

The Chorbari gave up themselves.

Sermium taken.

The Abasgians breaking the League, Basilus marches against them.

A Rebellion at home but suppressed and punished.

The Abasgians forced to submit.

Flaccus the Magister, whom he procured some of his Creatures to accuse of a Conspiracy against his Person. About the same time, George the Governour of Nanpactis, for his folly commonly call'd Morogeorgius, by his perpetual Exactions and other injuries to oppress the Townsmen, that they broke out into a publick Rage against him, kill'd him and rifled his House, for which Deed the Emperour not only us'd great Cruelty in punishing the Authours of the Riot, but caus'd the Eyes of the Bishop of the Place to be put out. There happened a Quarrel, and this was followed by a Combat betwixt Basilius a Patritian, the Son of Romanus Sclerus, and Prufianus the Bulgarian a Magister, and Captain of the Excelsarii, which judging to be a Crime no less than Treason, he banished them both. Being told that Basilius endeavour'd to escape, he commanded his Eyes to be put out; and Basilius when he expected the like measure, he most mercifully discharged. But he pull'd out the Eyes of Romanus Curcuas, who had married Prufianus his Sister, of Bogdanus, Gleba and Gudeles, and to give himself some diversion by variety, cut out the Tongue of one Zacharias (possibly out of his wit to make him like the Priest of that Name, who was struck dumb) pretending that they all had designs against him.

88. But to leave this odious Subject, let us see if we can find any other thing of publick Consequence, and worthy the mentioning, in his Reign. In his first year the Patzinaca broke into Bulgaria, and there did much mischief, killing many of the People with several Officers and their Companies. Against them he created Diogenes the Governour of Sirmium, General of Bulgaria, who falling on them as they fringed, after much slaughter forced them to return beyond the Ister. During his whole Reign there was a great Drought, which dried up both Fountains and Rivers. His Brother Basilius, how hard and difficult soever in the case of the Allelengum, yet herein was wont to gratify the poorer sort, that he did not exact Payments just when they were due, but bore with them till they could better do it, so that at his death, the Tribute of two years was behind. But Constantine notwithstanding the Drought, not only when he came to the Government exacted all the Arrears, but forced the Payment also of three years to come, which not only undid the Poor but much distressed the Rich, and those that were not wont formerly to complain. And now did a Fleet of Saracens infect the Islands Cyclades, which was happily defeated and dissipated by George Theodorocranus, the Governour of Samus, and Periboeas, who commanded Chius, twelve Ships being taken. On the Ninth day of November in the twelfth Indiction, the Emperour fell suddenly sick, and being given over by Physicians, then thought upon a Successeur. A messenger was sent to fetch Constantine Delassenus, living then in Armenia, whom he design'd to create Cæsar, and marry him to one of his Daughters. But Simeon too wrought out of his Love to Romanus Argyrus, that he altered his purpose, and another was sent to bid Delassenus stay where he was. Romanus then was brought to Court, and leave given to chuse whether he would loose his Eyes or part with his Wife, and marrying the Daughter of the Emperour he declared Cæsar. He paused at it, but his Wife fearing what might happen to him, voluntarily shav'd her self and renounced the secular Life for the saving of his Eyes; and procuring him the Empire. Constantine had by Helena the Daughter of Alynius, an Eminent Patritian, three Daughters; of which Eudocia the eldest being disfigured by the Plague was turn'd Nun, and Theodora the youngest refus'd to marry Romanus, either because they were too near a Kin, as she pretended, or for that his lawfull Wife was yet living: but Zoe the second was very well content to accept him for her Husband, and the matter of Kindred being discuss'd, and dispensed with by the Patriarch and Ecclesiasticks, to her he was joyn'd in Marriage, and declared Emperour. The third day after the Wedding, Constantine died, when he had liv'd Seventy years and upward, and Reigned three wanting one Month.

89. Romanus the Fourth of that Name, beyond all his expectation, together with Zoe, took Possession of the Empire in the twelfth Indiction, A.D. 1028, and at his beginning was very acceptable to his Subjects, though he had not come after such a Predecessour. For he not only took away the Allelengum, so much complain'd of, which Cedrenus tells us (I know not what ground there is to believe him) Constantine would have done, had he not by death been prevented, but he increased the Salaries wont to be paid out of the publick Treasury to those of the Quire of St. Sophia, discharged out of Prison such as were guilty of slighter Faults, and not only paid the publick Debts, but those of private Men, and redeemed the Captives out of Patzinacia. He did many good things relating relating to the Church not here to be discour'd of, relieved many that were in great poverty, or otherwise distressed, for the health of his Father-in-Law's Soul they tell us expended a great Sum of Money, and made reparation to such as he had injured either in way of Honour or Fortune. Romanus Sclerus who had Married his Sister and had lost his Eyes by Command of Constantine, he promoted to the Dignity of a Magister, and recalled out of Banishment Nicephorus Xiphias, who was turn'd Monk: And now as reconciled again, God gave convenient Rain, and abundance of all fruits followed, especially of Oil. But these Acts of mercy Romanus mix'd with others of severity, which being accompanied with Justice and publick safety, did not eclipse but more set off the other. Prufianus the Bulgarian for conspiring with Theodora the Sister of the Emperors, and affecting the Sovereignty was deprived of his sight, and his Mother Zostica expelled the City. Constantine Diogenes who had Married the Emperour's Brother's Daughter, and was Governour of Sirmium being removed to the Command of Thessalonica, was accus'd by Orestes, one that had serv'd Basilius, of a purpose to rebel, and for that was sent to govern the Thracians, where his Crime being clearly discovered, he was brought bound to Constantinople, and cast into the Tower, and his Complices six or seven men of eminency were beaten, and then carried in disgrace through the City into Banishment. Theodora was also banished from Court to Petrium.

90. On the last day of October a Comet appeared, seeming to move from West to East, and on the same day the Roman Interest suffer'd much damage, under Command of Michael Spondyles the Governour of Antioch. Great Rains also fell and continued to fall till March, which caus'd mighty Floods every where, by which, and the rottenness of Grains, most Cattel perished, and because that the Seed corrupted in the ground, great scarcity happen'd the following year. The Emperour to redeem much loss and disgrace, by this time suffer'd in Syria, resolv'd upon an Expedition to Berrea, sending before his Sisters Husband Constantine Carentenus a Patritian, with a flying Company, to discover the Passages, and infect the Enemy, but not to hazard a Battle till his Arrival. While he prepares for his Journey it happens, that George the Prince of Abasgia dies, whose Widow sends away her Ambassadors to desire he would renew the League made formerly with her Husband, and assign a Wife to her Son Pancratius, to which he willingly assenting, both renewed the League, and sent Helena his Brother Basilius his Daughter into Abasgia to be Married to Pancratius, whom he honour'd with the Title of Euprolates. Now Romanus hastens his Preparation for Syria, the state of which Countrey we must declare before we bring him thither by fetching matters a little higher. The Reader is to remember, that the Emperour Nicephorus very much enlarg'd the Bounds of the Empire, in Syria and Phenicia, where he recovered most of the Cities, and that Zimisces following on what was begun, extended its Dominion as far as Damascus. Basilius after them, being at first employ'd in Civil Broils, and afterward wholly taken up with the Bulgarian War, neglected the Eastern Parts, which gave the Saracens opportunity to lay their Heads together and consult, yet they openly attempted nothing during his Reign. But under the dissolute Government of his Brother Constantine, they neglected not their Advantage, the most potent Cities of the East now calling off the Roman Yoke, and asserting their liberty, and the Saracens openly set upon many places, took them, and put the Garrison Soldiers to the Sword. Above all, the Governour of Berrea (or Chalep as they call'd it) plaid his Pranks, by his frequent Incursions forely distressing Antioch, and the adjoining Roman Pale. Spondyles the Governour of Antioch, endeavour'd to restrain him but came off with loss and disgrace. And he suffer'd himself to be overreached by one Afarapius an Arabian a Prisoner in that City. This man perceiving his fickle humour vaunted of great matters he both could and would perform for the Emperour against the Saracens, if he were but set at Liberty; and particularly shew'd him a Platt of ground, on which if a Fort were but built and committed to his keeping, he doubted not but to do wonderfull things. Spondyles not only believed what he said, but set him at Liberty, built a Fort in the place, and therein putting a thousand men, gave him the Command of it, who now being where he would, entertain'd Intelligence with the Ameras of Tripolis, and with Tushere the Prince of Aegypt his General, who sent a Body of men, which he having received into the Castle, they put all the Garrison to the Sword, and then received it from his Hands. After this the Saracens rang'd up and down without controul. Romanus removed Spondyles, and put his Brother-in-Law Constantine Carentenus, lately said to be sent thitherward with an Army, into his place, resolving to follow in Perfon and prosecute the War.

The Saracens of Berræa offer Peace, which is refused by the Emperor.

Who marches on with his Army.

Which is consumed with Thirst.

And endeavouring to reach Antioch is shamefully beaten.

But the Baggage is retaken by one George, who for a Reward is made Captain of the Lower Media.

Theodistius sent with an Army of his most trusty Servants, and the Captain of the Associates, having raised him to take the Castle Menicus.

91. He was scarcely got on his way as far as Philomilium, when Messengers were sent to him from Berræa with Presents, to ask pardon for what was past, to promise him to return to their former obedience, and pay all the Tribute that was due. There were several excellent Warriours now with him in the Army, who earnestly advised him to hearken to them, and accept their Submission, and that for very weighty Reasons, alledging, that in the Summer time Water was much wanting in Syria, that the Saracens were accustomed to them, and could very well endure both Heat and Thirst, but the Roman Soldiers could not, especially being burthened with their heavy Armour. But Romanus, what his Predecessor had done in the like kind, was so tickled with a fancy of the great honour he should obtain, that he would not listen to them, but held on in his Expedition, and entering Syria, incamped before a Castle called Azaesium, two days journey distant from Berræa. Now intent upon his business, he sent out Leo Chorocephates a Patritian, Captain of the Excubitores, to scout about, to watch the motions of the Enemy, and find out some fitter place whereon to fix; but he fell into the Ambush laid for him in the Plain, and his Party was all defeated. Incouraged herewith, the Saracens hindered his men from foraging, and knowing well enough their greatest want, from fetching in any Water, which caused them out of mere necessity, and for vehement thirst, to straggle up and down, though with manifest danger of their lives, which usually they lost before they returned. To restrain and chastize their boldness Constantine Delassenus was sent with a convenient Power of men; but very sillily and cowardly managed the business, and ran back in great terror to the Camp, which struck all the rest of the Army with such Contemnation, that now no mention was made of any Battle, but every man considered how he might save one. And a Council of War being called, it was resolved, that the next day they should dislodge and march to Antioch.

92. Accordingly when the day came, being the tenth of August, in the thirteenth Indiction, and the second year of Romanus, all the Gates of the Camp were open'd, and they set forward for Antioch, most of them being sick of the Gripes, and vexed with a violent Thirst. They were no sooner come into a place convenient, but the Arabians set upon them, against whom they never turned Head, nor made any resistance, but the grofs of the Army running away most shamefully, some were taken, others killed, and more destroyed by being born down and trodden on by their Fellows, yet one Eunuch of the Emperours is said very stoutly to have demeaned himself in fetching off both his Servants and Waggon which had been taken, and as for the Emperor himself he escaped, but that with great difficulty, by the Courage of his Guards, to Antioch, as he had designed. At the same time was one George Maniaces Governour of a Province in these Parts, called Telucha. To him came about eight hundred of the Saracens, after this flight of the Emperor and his Army, told him the Emperor was taken, his Army utterly defeated, and used what Rhetorick they were able, to persuade him like a wife man to quit that Town, which he was not able to hold; if not, by Break of day he would be surrounded and miserably destroyed. He seemed to take their Advice in good part, and sent them out a great quantity of Meat and Drink praying them therewith to refresh themselves that Night, and promising in the Morning to come forth and deliver up Telucha and whatever was the Emperours into their hands. They gave credit to his words, and setting their hearts at rest, made use of what he had sent them to excess, which being his Design, at Midnight he issued out and killed them all Drunk and asleep as they lay. Two hundred and eighty Camels he took loaded with the rich Plunder of the late Encounter, and causing the Ears and Noses of the slain to be cut off, he went and presented them to the Emperor, who then in his Retreat was come as far as to the House of Phocas in Cappadocia. He for a Reward made George Captain of the Lower Media. When he left Syria he made Simeon the Servant of Constantine his Father-in-Law Domestick of the Schools, and the Command of Antioch he gave to Nicetas a Mishiea, giving it in charge to these two, that by all means they should reduce the Castle Menicus, which Musaraph had built. They attempted what he had enjoined them, but Musaraph breaking out upon them by Night, forced them to be gone, and burnt their Engines. This Romanus took in so evil part, that he created General with full power one Theodistius the Protospatharian, one with an Army of his most trusty Servants, and the Captain of the Associates, having raised him a great Army of Romans and other Nations together, gave him instructions to join with with Pinzarab the Ameras of Tripolis, who had lately revolted from the Amermannes of Egypt, and fled to his protection, and to take in the Castle Menicus, which most of all did discontent him.

Which he performs.

An Army sent into Italy which mis-carries.

Romanus much altered for the worse.

93. One Tasfer a Turk, the General of Egypt, did much distress Pinzarab, till hearing of the coming of Theodistius he then returned home. And Musaraph durst not truit to his new Castle, but deserted it, and flying to the Mountains about Tripolis, was there found out and slain. The Castle was by his Brother's Son delivered up to Theodistius with another called Argyrolastrum seated on a craggy Mountain, which done he returned back to Constantinople. At the same time one of his Brethren, a Protospatharian, Orestes, sent formerly by Basilus into Sicily, having no skill in matters of that Nature, for which he was sent, managed them with very ill success. His Army he suffered to be Idle and Luxurious, and when their Intemperance had cast most of them into Diseases of their Bowels, then did the Saracens (who had watched but for a convenient opportunity) set upon them and made great slaughter of them, to repair which loss the Emperor raised a great Army out of Greece and Macedonia, and sent it into Italy, the greatest part of which also mis-carried, through the unskillfulness of the General. This same year in the fifteenth Indiction to make his Estate more secure, he caused Prisfanus to be shaven for a Monk, and removed his Mother out of the Monastery where she was into Thrace, and Constantine Diogenes being taken out of the Town, he also constrained to take the Religious Tonfure and Habit. A great Alteration indeed was now observed, if not in the Humour yet in the Actions of Romanus, which were changed much for the worse after his return out of Syria. To repair his Disgrace there sustained, instead of an Emperor, to use the Expressions of Zonaras, he turn'd an Exactour and bitter Inquisitor, requiring old and out-worn Debts of the Fathers from the Children, which the length of time, it was expected, had utterly buried in Oblivion, upon which account many were driven from their Inheritances, and from having good Estates were forced to beg their Bread. Yet did he not bring any of this Money thus gotten into the Treasury, but this and much more taken out of the publick Revenue he consumed, building a stately Monastery and a Church to the Honour of our Lady; thus chopping and changing, pulling down and building up again. To Monks also he was very profuse, attuning them whole Provinces and Cities, and these the most fat and fertile of all the Empire, which was not suitable to that sort of life which these men ought to lead, but more fit for Delicate, Effeminate, and Voluptuous Persons, as Zonaras observes.

The League renewed with the Ameras of Chalepe.

A Conspiracy discovered.

The Roman Pale infested by the Arabians, Patzinaces, and Saracens, which last came short home.

94. In the fifteenth Indiction and the Month of September, came Amer the Son of the Ameras or Governour of Chalepe, with great Presents to renew the Peace for that place, with promise to pay the accustomed Tribute; which Accord to ascertain and ratify, was sent Theophylact an Athenian and Protospatharian, who renewed the League with that People. Zoe the Empress now went suddenly into Petrium, and there shaved her Sister Theodora, and made her a Nun; there being no other way, as it was said, to put an end to her Plots and Discontents. Romanus Married his Brothers Daughter to the Regulus of Armenia, with a great Portion, and prepared for another Expedition into Syria. As he was on his way at Mesajenia, Theophanes the Bishop of Thessalonica, discovered a Plot to the Empress of Constantine Diogenes and Theodora her Sister, to fly into Illyricum and there to Usurp the Imperial Dignity, to which two Bishops were privy, the Metropolitan of Dyrachium and the Bishop of Peritheorium. Hereupon both Diogenes and the Bishops were suddenly apprehended. Diogenes when in the Palace of Blachernæ he was examined, threw himself down headlong from the Wall, rather than he would discover his Friends, and was cast out unburied amongst such as laid violent hands on themselves: The Bishops were sent away to the Emperor, and by him were dismissed. On the eight and twentieth of July, being Friday, a blazing Star was seen to traverse the Heavens from South to North so big and shining, that it illustrated all the horizon. And a little after came News, that the Arabians had made an Inroad into Mesopotamia as far as Melitene, that the Patzinaces had passed Ister and invaded Myfia, and the Saracens, (Arabians they are also called, these Names being used promiscuously, had wasted all the Coasts of Illyricum with Fire and Sword, and were got as far as Coryra. The Issue of these Disturbances was, that the two former sorts of these Enemies having done what they came for, returned home unhurt, but the Saracens were sorely beaten by the Inhabitants of Ragysium, and Nicephorus the Son of Carantenus then Governour of Nauplium, and and having lost the greater part of their Ships, as they returned, perished by Shipwreck in the Sicilian Sea.

A great Famine and Plague.

95. This very year so great a Famine and a Plague both raged through Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, Armenia and Honurias that the Inhabitants left their dwellings and sought out other Habitations, whom the Emperor meeting as he returned from Mejanalla composed them to go Home again furnishing them with Money and other necessities; and they were much relieved by Michael the Bishop of Ancyra who omitted nothing in his power for their support. On the thirtieth of August happened a terrible Earthquake. On February the twenty eighth in the same year another Comet appeared passing from the North toward the South with a Noise and cracking, and was seen till the fifteenth of March, having as it were a Bow above it, in which Month also another Earthquake fell out. At the same time the Saracens of Africk with a Thousand Vessels and an infinite Number of Seamen and Souldiers aboard them fell upon the Islands. With part of which Nicephorus Carantenus engaged, defeated them and sent five hundred bound in Fetters to the Emperor.

A terrible Earthquake.

The Saracens
of Africk in-fested the Islands but are beaten.

This same year George Maniaces the Protospatharian, who commanded the Coasts upon Euphrates, by corrupting Salamenes a Turk the Governour of Edessa the City of Osroena, got it into his Hands, from which he sent a yearly Tribute of fifty pounds to Constantinople. So prosperous were the Affairs of Romanus abroad, whilst at Home Basilus Durns his Sisters Husband who had been deprived of his sight by Constantine now Plotted against his Life, though since his coming to the Government he had conferred on him the Dignity of Magister, and otherwise been very kind to him; for which he and his Wife were expelled the City. Not long after the Emperor encouraged by the Revolt of the Ameras of Tripolis whom he sent with a considerable Army into Syria, gave order to Tecneas a Protospatharian to make War upon Egypt with his Fleet and invade the parts about Alexandria which he did with such success that he sunk and burnt many Vessels and returned laden with very great Booty. In all other Quarters the Arms or fortune of Romanus was as prosperous though in one particular accompanied with a disaster. One Alimus a Saracen, Governour of a Fort called Percris near to Babylon, delivered the place up to the Emperor, but sent his Son to him expecting he should besides other gifts be sent back dignified by the Title of a Patritian. But it so happened By reason of the Indisposition of the Emperor that the young Man coming to Constantinople was wholly neglected, and no notice taken of him, which so enraged him that he returned to his Father and persuaded him, if possible to recover the Fort into his own Hands. This, by entering into a confederacy with the Neighbouring Persians, and through the carelessness of Nicolas Chryselius a Bulgarian to whom the Custody of it had been committed, he easily did, and put to the Sword six Thousand Roman Souldiers that then lay in Garrison. Now Alimus thought himself sufficiently revenged, when shortly after Nicetas Pegonites a Patritian being sent into these Parts with an Army of Rossians lays Siege to the Place, and with such earnestness and constancy enforces it, that he carries it by strength, and therein kills both Alimus and his Son. The News hereof was the more welcome at Court because there it met with an address made by Alda the Widow of George sometime Regulus of the Abasgians, whereby she delivered up a very strong Cattle called Anacuphe, for which Romanus invested her Son Demetrius with the Dignity of a Magister. And much about the same time Carantenus got another Victory over the Saracens six hundred of whom he sent bound to the Emperor.

Egypt invaded -fell the Romans who return with great Booty.

Percris near Babylon taken by them.

Another Victory over the Saracens.

A terrible Earthquake and Famine which caused Romanus
to be very merciful and kind to his Subjects.

96. But the joy conceived for all this good success was not long after allayed by the Terror of an Earthquake which on the seventeenth day of February sorely afflicted the Cities of Syria. And so great a famine followed throughout the East, by reason of multitudes of Locusts which devoured all the Fruits of the Earth, especially in Cappadocia, Armenia and Paphlagonia that many of the inhabitants were forced to sell their Children and to seek out new Habitations, of whom multitudes came into Thrace. The Emperor distributed three Nomismas to every man, and commanded them to return home, which by this time they might the better do because a vehement Wind had driven most of the Locusts into the Hellespont, the shores of which were all covered with them. Now in a manner he wholly employed himself in Works of mercy and compassion towards his People. Such Hospitals as had been erected for Poor and diseased People about Con- stantinople

Romanus
made away by his Wife Zoe.

Constantinople and had been demolished by Earthquakes or other ways he reedified for the same uses. He repaired the Aqueeducts by which Water was brought into the City; his Wife sent him to another World in such cares and employments being busied, after this manner. When he first arrived at the imperial Dignity, as Mentick led with Honour are wont to do, he flattered himself with hopes of many years, though he had then arrived at sixty, and of Children therein to succeed him, though his Wife was nothing less than fifty. So desirous he was of having a Son, that at the first he very earnestly used all endeavours that way, omitting no Ointments nor other means to render himself lusty and her fit for conception. He caused her to wear certain Gems about her as made to believe them very efficacious for fecundity, she refusing nothing of this Nature but farther using Charms and Incantments; though all proved ineffectual: which he perceiving, afterwards scarcely ever cohabited with her, or ever made her a kind Visit, being both by Nature and Age in himself little Prone to carnal Imbracements. Some years the bore this humour though with much Regrets, but at length her lust and hatred of him arose to such violence as to practise against his Life, being exasperated by a violent passion he had conceived for another Person. Romanus had about him a certain Eunuch called John who had served him while he was yet a private Man, and after his coming to the Empire had been preferred to great Employments. This John had four Brothers; Michael, Nicetas, Constantine and George, whereof the two later were Eunuchs as well as himself: Nicetas was a stripling; but Michael was come to Man's Estate, and a most beautiful Person. Both of them dealt in Silver and Adulterated the Coin, as the other three had formerly used a Circulatory or rambling kind of Trade.

Who falls in love with Michael.

Being very close together.

Yet suspected by Romanus.

Who in a short time after is Poisoned by them.

97. John by degrees procured for his Brothers access to the Emperor who preferred them all, and in particular made Michael Overseer of the Pantheon, and took him into his Bedchamber. With him Zoe the Empress fell most desperately in love, and her lust being more and more inflamed by the daily sight of him, though she extremely hated John, yet could she not forbear to talk with him, and in her discourse still seek occasion to ask questions and speak of his Brother. John being a crafty Man perceived by the great delight he took in talking of him, how matters stood, and giving him notice thereof charged him that if he applied her self any way familiarly to him, not to be shy and bashful but entertain her with all the Careless that Lovers are wont to do, to the very last point, which instructions he so observed that from looks they proceeded to dalliance, and lay frequently together. As Courtiers are quick to Espy, and the Women especially curious to pry and enquire into love matters, their entertainments how the private soever could not be concealed, but from the Court to the City became the discourse of all, and in every place; the good old Emperor being the only Man that was ignorant of it. At length from his Sister Pulcheria, and some others he received hints, which he only made use of so far as to ask Michael the question, whether there was any such matter, and, when he denied it, to make him swear, which he having done, he thought he would not forswear himself, and thence concluded it a Calumny. Now for this perjury Michael was reported struck with a dreadful disease, being at certain times seized with a Frenzy, a trembling and staring with his Eyes, which Romanus beholding pitied the Man and was the more confirmed in his incredulity, concluding his Wife could take no pleasure in the conversation of so miserable a Creature, who was not capable either of loving or being beloved. Others said that he knew very well what course of Life she led, but knowing her to be a most lascivious and insatiable Woman winked at what she practised with Michael, lest being hindered from his imbracements she should prostitute her self to more. However it was, she resolved to be rid of him, that what she now enjoyed by stealth and in fear she might openly and securely own, and for that purpose is said to have given him a slow working Poison which by degrees made an end of him. The Symptoms were a face much swollen, and discoloured, short and quick Respiration, and the falling off of all his Hair, signs pregnant enough and of a violent suspicion. Yet he continued languishing till the fifteenth day of April, on which having according to the Custom made the Roga, or paid Penions to the Senators, he went into a Bath and there by some thereto appointed to make more speedy work of it was stifled by holding his Head a sufficient time under Water, which done he was pulled thence and laid upon his Bed. He was speechless now but not quite dead, and the Rumour being spread that he was dying his Wife ran for haste amongst the rest and made great Lamentation for her dear Husband, who casting out of his Mouth some black matter matter presently departed the World, after he had Reigned five years and fix Months in the second Indiction. A. D. 1034. In his Youth he applied himself to learning, and was well seen in Greek Authours and the knowledge of the Civil Laws, although he boasted himself much more knowing than he was.

98. The same Night when the office of Christ's Passion was Sung, or the Service belonging to Good Friday, Alexius the Patriarch was sent for to Court, as it were by Command of Romanus, whither being come he found the Emperor Dead, and Zoe in the Golden Room Royally furnished for so worthy an occasion, produced Michael, and required him to Marry them together. The Patriarch amazed at the suddenness of the thing, was very backward, till John and the Bribed him by a present of fifty pounds to himself, and as much to his Clergy; by which overcome, he solemnized the Marriage. Zoe having thus introduced Michael the Paphlagonian (as for distinction he is styled from his Country) both into her Bed and Throne, therein purposed to use him but as a Drudge and Servant, and resolving to Govern her self, took into the Court such Eunuchs as had served her Father. But she was much deceived through the industry and craft of John her Husband's Brother, who sufficiently understanding her, and mindfull of Romanus his Fate, turn'd out all these Eunuchs, and removing from her all her most trusty Women, put into their places his own Friends and Acquaintance, by which and other means he so hamper'd her, that to her great grief she could neither do nor act any thing, not so much as go into the Bath without his knowledge and permission. Having thus secured all in the Palace, he wrote Letters into all Provinces which signified the Death of Romanus, and how by his Will and Determination Michael had succeeded in the Empire and Marriage of Zoe. All Men seem'd to be sufficiently pleas'd with the change, and wish'd prosperity to them, except Constantine Delassenus the Patritian, who took it in most high disdain that so obscure and ignoble a Fellow should be so preferred before Persons of most high Rank and Quality, of which at this time there were very many. John was much disturb'd to hear how much he concern'd himself, and resolv'd to draw him to their Party if possible, employing one Ergodotes an Eunuch, a Man very able to insinuate any thing, to him for this purpose, who offering him Oath for his Security, and requiring one from him for his Loyal deportment, was to bring him to the Emperor, where things should be concluded and made up betwixt them, to their mutual satisfaction. In the mean time he made the Senate his own by promoting all the chiefest of them and the leading men to places of Dignity and Revenue. And amongst the multitude as any be perceived to be in Capacity to do mischief by preferments he took off, and obliging such as were fit to do service, made all the People satisfied and at his Devotion.

99. But all this notwithstanding our Writers observe, that such things happened at the very first beginning as manifestly shew'd these devices how ever yet prosperous to have much displeas'd Almighty God. For on Eastern day fell such a terrible storm of Hail that it brake down Trees, Houses and Churches in great numbers, and so destroy'd the standing Corn that a great scarcity thereupon followed. And on the Lord's day following appeared so great a Comet that with the light it cast it obscured all the Stars, and some imagin'd the Sun was returning, though it was but the third hour of the night. And the Emperor was in a grievous manner tormented with his dislemper, which would not be overcome by any either spiritual or temporal means that could be used: some affirming he was possessed, and those that judg'd most favourably accounting it no better than a Frenzy or Lunatick Disease. Delassenus was not so easily to be brought off by Ergodotes as they imagin'd, requiring greater caution than his bare Oath for his security, which given he signified by a Messenger of his own that he should not refuse to come to Constantinople. To him then was sent one Constantine Phagitzes an Eunuch, the Emperor's Countreyman, and confident with the wood said to belong to the Cross of Christ, the Linen Cloth that had his Image upon it and the Epistle which they believed he wrote to Augarus, with the Picture of the Blessed Virgin; by the Religious Opinion of which he was induc'd to accept of the Faith given him, and went with Delassenus to the Court, where being honourably received, and dignified with the Title of Proconsul, he was richly presented and order'd to live at his ease in his own House near at hand. Now we are told a strange Story, how the Locusts which by the Wind were cast upon the Shore of the Hellepont, revived and did great mischief to the adjacent Countries, especially in the Province of Thrace for three years, which ended, they perished about Pergamus.

100. But,

100. But, Michael bearing onely the name, his Brother John exercised all the power of an Emperour, by virtue whereof he made his other Brother Nicetas Governour of Antioch. Nicetas going thither to enter upon his Charge the Townsmen refused to admit him, fearful that he would with severity punish them for having lately in a Tumult killed one Salibas who with too much rigour had gathered the publick Revenue. At length upon promise of pardon and oblivion they opened their Gates and received him, but when he had got possession without any regard to his promise he caus'd about an hundred Persons to be beheaded and fastened upon Poles, and sent eleven of the principal Citizens all of great Nobility (of whom Elpidius a Patritian was the chief) bound to Constantinople, having confiscated their Estates: and he wrote to his Brother John that the Gates had been shut against him not because of the Murder of Salibas but out of their Inclinations to Delassenus. He being formerly in suspicion, Credit was easily given to this suggestion and being brought before the Emperor on the third day of August, in the second indiction, he was condemn'd to Banishment in the Island Prota, against which breach of Faith Constantinus Ducas his Son-in-Law proclaiming and protesting, was for his Pains cast Prisoner into a Tower. The Estates of three very eminent and rich Men in Asia the Iles were upon this pretence seized and assigned over to Constantine the Emperor's Brother. And Simeon the Protoprovestarius one of Constantine the Emperor's Ministers for disapproving these proceedings as injurious and Breaches of Faith was expelled both from Court and City, and made a Monk at Olympus in a Monastery of his own founding. This same year for forty days together the Eastern parts were terrified with an Earthquake by which many Men perished at Jerusalem, besides the ruine of Houses and Churches. In the Indiction following and the Month of September a Pillar of Fire appeared toward the East with its Head inclining Southward. And at the same time the Saracens took Myra and those of Berræa cast out the Governour whom the Emperor had sent to them: Pancratius the Abasgian to revenge the cause of Romanus his Wives Uncle broke the League and recovered such Castles and Forts as had formerly been in the hands of the Emperours: moreover the Patzinacæ having pass'd Iber wast'd all Myfia as far as Thessalonica; and the Saracens of Africk by their Fleets, not a little indamaged the Islands Cyclades.

101. These matters were of very great consequence, but seem'd nothing to John the Governour of Orphans, as he is styled, who ruled all, in comparison of the dangers which at home threaten'd them from Delassenus, whom imagining he would never securely enough keep, from the Island he removed him to a Tower, and that kept with a very strong Guard: and George Maniaces he removed from Edessa, and made him Governour of the upper Media or Aspracania, to prevent the growth of interest by favour and intelligence, sending to succeed him one Leo Lependrenus. Nicetas shortly after dying in his Government of Antioch, he would intrust none with it but Constantine the other Brother, and now did he promote to the place of Protoprovestarius him that onely remain'd of the rest, for Simeon as we said had taken upon him the monastical course of Life. To make the Government of Constantine more acceptable to those of Antioch, their fellow Citizens were releas'd out of Prison, and the Emperor farther to establish the interest of his Family or rather to gratifie the solicitude of his Brother, who seeing him so sickly was afraid if he died both he and his Family should be destroyed by the Emper's, promoted Michael the Son of his Sister Mary to the Dignity of Cæsar. He attended now little but matters of Devotion bewailing to his last hour the Murder of Romanus, for which he thought to appease Almighty God by good Works and Liberality to the Poor, the building of Monasteries and other things which that Age esteem'd the most valuable. But as our writers observe they profited him nothing. Indeed had he made Resignation of his ill gotten Empire which occasion'd his Sin, had he put the Adulterers away which had provoked him, and in a private condition deplored his Crimes, they might have been Testimonies of his Repentance. But he still us'd the Company of Zoe and thought of parting with his Soul as much as the Empire. Out of ill gotten goods he made a shew of Liberality and yet vainly imagin'd he thereby expiated his former faults, and purchas'd pardon by the purges of other Men, the publick Revenue.

102. This same year in the Month of May did the Saracens of Africk and Sicily infect the Cyclades and the maritime Coasts of Thrace with their Incursions, but the Governours so attended their motions that most of them came short home, five hundred being sent alive to the Emperor and were fastned upon Poles all

Zoe and Michael Marry and are Crowned, succeeding Romanus in the Empire.

A terrible Storm of Hail.

A vast Comet appears.

The Locusts revived.

An Earthquake in the East and a Pillar of Fire seen in the Air at which time the Roman Territories on all sides are infected.

Michael promoted to the Dignity of Cæsar the Emperor being very Sickly.

The Saracens of Africk and Sicily infecting the Cyclades are forced to make Peace.

all along the Coast from Atramyctum to Strobelus. This so humbled the Ameras of Sicily, that he easily admitted of Peace which John offered him by one George Probatas, who was sent Ambassador for this purpose. The Ameras whose Name was Apolaphar Muchmet, was honoured with the Title of Magister, and being attached by his Brother Apochapfus, sent to the Emperour for assistance, according to the Conditions of the League made betwixt them. To repress Apochapfus therefore George Maniaces was sent into Lombardy, together with Stephen a Patritian the Husband of the Emperour's Sister, and Commander of the Fleet, and Constantine Chages, who governed the Cibyreats, gave the Saracens a notable defeat at Sea. In Winter happened a mighty Frost, which encouraged the Patzinice to pass the River Ister, and to harass Mysia and Thrace, as far as to Macedonia, and in Summer following vast quantities of Locusts did much damage to the fruits of these Countries. No fewer times than thrice in one year, did that People make Inroads into the Territories of the Empire, where they destroyed all things in their way, and tortured all Persons to death they took without any respect had to Sex or Age, amongst whom were five Officers of Eminence. But it fell out well for the Empire, that much about the same time, Nossiblabus and Hierosiblabus, two Princes of the Rossians died; and Servia, which after the Death of Romanus had cast off the Yoke, was now again in the third year of Michael recover'd to it. And the publick satisfaction for these things was no whit lessened by what happened in Egypt, the Amerumunes whereof being dead, his Wife embracing Christian Religion, together with her Son offered to make a Peace with the Romans, with whose desires Michael so far complied as to grant a Truce for thirty years.

103. The year following happened three several Earthquakes, whereof one to Edeffa, which could not possibly have escaped their Hands, but that Constantine the Emperour's Brother, sent timely Succours from Antioch, for which Care and Industry he was rewarded with the Office of Domestick of the Schools of the East. The Summer was so dry, that no Rain fell for six Months together, for removal of which Judgment, Processions and Supplications were made, but nothing fell from Heaven but a great storm of Hail which did great mischief to Trees, and damage to the Tiles of Houses. A Great scarcity hereupon following at Constantinople, John procured Corn out of Peloponnesus and Greece, much to the Relief of the Citizens. In the mean while the two Saracen Brothers in Sicily, whom we lately mentioned, making War upon each other, Apochapfus who seemed to decline, craved assistance of the Ameras of Africk, who sent it on this Condition to have part of the Island assigned him, and jointly they defeated Apolaphar, Maniaces not yet being arrived with his Auxiliaries. Apolaphar hereupon betook himself to Leo Opus the Governour of Lombardy, who with such force as the shortness of the time would give him leave to raise, passed over into Sicily, where he grappled with the Ameras of Africk, and repressed him, but the two Brothers beginning to look towards an Agreement, left strangers should deprive them of what they strugled for, and to plot against the Romans, he returned into Italy, and gave Scope to the Ameras to renew his Hostilities, which he did with all freedom, much to the loss of the Islanders. In the following year on the second of November, another Earthquake happened which lasted till January. And a great Famine followed throughout Thrace, Macedonia, and all these Quarters as far as Thessaly, whereat the Bishop of Thessalonica taking advantage, and refusing to pay to his Clerks, both what he ought and what he was able to discharge, was caught, notwithstanding all his cunning by the Emperour. Being convict of Perjury (in swearing he had but thirty Pounds, though he was found to have three and thirty Centenaries of Gold in ready money) all this Wealth was seized to the use of his Creditors and the Poor, and he was turned out of his Bishoprick, of the Revenues whereof so much only was assigned him, as was convenient for his maintenance.

104. Now did Pamratius Prince of Abasgia, make War upon Jasfas Prince of the upper Iberia, whom the Emperour being obliged to succour, John sent against the Aggressor his Brother Constantine, Domestick of the Schools with all the Forces belonging to the East, yet supported by a promise, that Delassenus should with him be sent as Councillour and Assistant, which being not performed (so great a Jealousie was had of the Man) his Courage and Conduct failed him, and he returned home without having any thing performed. At this time Zoe the Emperess endeavoured to poison John, which was discovered, and he pu-

The Parzince haras Mysia and Thrace.

A Truce for thirty years betwixt Egypt and the Romans.

Three several Earthquakes.
The Saracens
of Mesopotamia lay Siege to Edeffa, and it is relieved.
A Drought.

Another Earthquake.
And a Famine in Thrace, Macedonia, and Thessaly.

nishing sufficiently, the Conspiratours had a nearer regard both to her, and his own preservation, we must not forget (though our Authors seem to have done it all this while) that George Maniaces arriving in Sicily, to answer the request of the Ameras of that Island, the two Brothers made Peace betwixt themselves, and jointly made War against him, procuring out of Africk a great Power of Men for this purpose. Against these Africans he had such success, that a Brook is reported to have received a Tincture from their Blood, and animated if not strengthened by this Success, he presently brought under thirteen Towns, and by Degrees conquered the whole Island. At the same time in the East matters were in a different posture, where Edeffa escaped narrowly of being taken by the Saracens, in this manner. Parasbatzes an Iberian was Governour there; to whom came twelve Men of the Principal of their Nation with five hundred Horle, and as many Camels carrying Boxes on their Backs, wherein were bestowed no fewer, than twelve thousand of armed Men. The pretence was that the Camels bore Presents sent to the Emperour, but the Design was to get the armed Men into the Castle, and so to make sure of the Sentinels, as to master both it and the City. Parasbatzes the Governour kindly entertained the twelve Persons at a Feast, yet would not admit the Horsemen or Camels into the City; which refusal proved so fortunate, that the Conspiracy was discovered by an Armenian Beggar, who overheard one of those in the Boxes, discoursing and asking his Fellow where they were. The Governour secretly admonished by him to look to himself; left his Guests at their Feast, and with a sufficient Number of Men going out of the Town, pulled the Saracens out of their Nests, and killed them in the Place. This done he returned to his Company, the last course of whose entertainment was of the same sort; for he killed them all, except one of the chief, whom having deprived of Hands, Ears and Nose, in that Condition he sent him to make relation of their Success to his Countrymen.

105. In the mean time John who managed all things, was so in love with his Power and Domination, that his Jealousie and Fear to loose it, gave him but little quiet and contentment. His fear of Delassenus was grown to so great a suspicion, that he not only broke his promise with his Brother, in sending him his Assistant against the Abasgian, lest he improve any advantage put into his Hands; but thinking him too dangerous in the private Condition, as he was, resolved to deprive him of all Helpers and Abettours, and for that purpose sent into Banishment his two Brothers, and all his other Relations, being very desirous to rid himself of his whole Family. He was very cunning in his Contrivances, and not wanting to exercise his Wits for the hoarding up of Treasure, the usual Humour of Men of his Condition. No means he omitted, how indirect and unjust soever to accomplish this end. He raised the publick Revenue by greater Impositions upon Land, and other Courses unworthy as our Authors tell us to be related. In the mean time his Brother the Emperour, was vexed more than ever with his Disease, which notwithstanding all his Alms and Acts of Charity increased, and was more exasperated by accession of a Dropfie. At the same time his People were disturbed by almost continual Earthquakes, by one of which Smirna was made a miserable Spectacle, and in some provinces the Quinzy raged so much, that the living scarcely sufficed to bury the Dead. In Sicily, the War renewed by the Ameras of Carthage against Maniaces, who watching his opportunity fell upon him with such violence and execution, that few of his Men escaped with their Lives, and he himself got away in a little boat into Africk. Maniaces to prevent his flight, in case he should be defeated, had before the engagement given order to Stephen the Commander of the Fleet, and Brother-in-Law to the Emperour, to hover about the Coasts and intercept him; but through his Carelessness he escaped. This so far enraged Maniaces, and transported him, that as soon as he saw him he reviled him, and to severe words added as fowre blows, which he gave him on the Head with a Cudgel. This Stephen received with so great Indignation, that to be revenged he wrote to John, and accused him of plotting against the Emperour, to which his jealous Pate so far gave credit, that he ordered him to be sent Prisoner to Constantinople, where he was cast into close Prison, together with Basilius Theodorocranus a Patritian. The command of Sicily was given to Stephen, jointly with Basilius Pedradies an Eunuch, who so ordered their matters, that in a short space by their Rapacity, and negligence they brought all to nothing. It was Maniaces his course when he took any considerable Place, there to build a Fort to keep the People in obedience. Now the People perceiving the Careless Humour of the two new Commanders, and provoked by their Exactions, privily

Edeffa like to be taken by the Saracens, but the Design is discovered and they are cut off.

The Emperour's Disease increased by accession of a Dropfie.

The War renewed in Sicily, which is wholly overrun by the Ameras of Carthage Maniaces excepted.

kkk

pro

procured some Men to be sent over from Carthage, and falling upon these Ports, took them all with all the considerable Towns in the Island, Messana excepted, which was held by Catacalo Ambulius a Protospatharian, and Captain of the Armenian Legion, with three hundred Horse and five hundred Foot. To Messana now they lay siege, all that are capable of bearing Arms, being forced into the Field; Stephen and Pedates being fled into Lombardy.

106. For three days together Catacalo shut himself close up, and thereby caused the Saracens to believe him fearfull, and to despair of any way escaping the danger. They as fully secure and judging no otherwise, than that they had him as sure as a Bird in a Net, neglected all Discipline, stragling up and down, making merry, and giving up themselves to all Jollity and Drunkenness. On the fourth day which was Whituesday, he having finished his Devotions, took the advantage offered him, and about Dinner time made a brisk Sally upon them, wherein first making to the Tent of Apolaphar their Commander, he killed him as he was drunk, and then made vast Slaughter of the ordinary sort, so as all the Countrey was overpread with dead Bodies, so unexpected was the Onset: And incredible Wealth the Souldiers got in the rifling of the Camp. To leave all Sicily now in the Hands of the Saracens, Messana excepted, and to return into the East, we find Michael the Emperour at Theffalonica, fixed at the Tomb of Demetrius the Martyr, by whose means he hoped to be freed from his Disease, and thence would he not stir without absolute necessity compelled him, neglecting all Affairs of State which were cast upon the Shoulders of John his Brother. And never did man manage them more to the disquiet and discontent of the Subject, whom he oppressed by all ways and Methods he could, with whose cruel Actions other sad Accidents joining, made them very miserable. For Earthquakes and violent Storms of Wind and Rain sorely distressed them, yet with this little comfort, that together with the Comets which frequently appeared, they seemed to predict the impending Fate of the Tyrants. Their Sister Mary the Mother of Caesar as sensible of what was coming, having in a Journey to Ephefus observed several Acts of Injustice and Oppression, thereof certified John, was earnest with him to prevent such things for the time to come, for which she was much derided, he calling her Fool, telling her she talk'd like a Woman, and understood not what belonged to Government. But while he thus pleased himself in his Craft of governing, a thing fell out which much disturbed both his Brother and him. To defray his Expences at Theffalonica, John put ten Centenaries of Gold aboard a Vessel, which by a Tempest was split upon the Coast of Ilyricum, and Stephen Basilabius Prince of Serbia (or Servia) who had lately made his escape from Constantinople, and turning out thence Theophilus Eroticus, had made himself Master of that Countrey, seized the Money to his own use.

107. The Emperour when he understood that he had his Money, sent and made demand of it, threatening to recover it by force if fair words would not prevail, Stephen lighted the Threats, whereupon to make them good, George Probatas an Eunuch was sent with an Army, but by his Indiscretion and want of Conduct the Design miscarried, and having lost well nigh all his men in Straits and impassable places, he himself escaped with great difficulty. In the very same year the Bulgarians revolted upon this occasion. One Petrus Deleanus a Bulgarian, the Servant of a Citizen of Constantinople running away from his Master, in all places as far as Morabius and Belegrade (Castles of Pannonia, faith our Authour, beyond Ister, and bordering upon the Territories of the Turks) gave out that he was the natural Son of Romanus and Nephew of Samuel, by which he so moved the Bulgarian Nation, which having lately submitted unto the Yoke, was now again impatient of Servitude, that in Naisfus and Scupia, the principal Towns, as well as elsewhere, he was with lucky Acclamations proclaimed and owned as King; and as a Sacrifice to this new Idol the Romans were butchered wherever they were met with. As soon as this was known to Basilus Synademos the Governour of Dyrrachium, he judging it was the best way to suppress the mischief in the beginning, marched out with all the Forces of the Garrison against Deleanus, but coming to a place called Debra, a Quarrel fell out betwixt him and a certain Tribune in the Army, who taking the effectual way to ruin powerfull and popular men, accused him to the Emperour of Treason, whereupon he was turn'd out of Command, and clapt up close Prisoner at Theffalonica. The Tribune by Name Michael Dermocaitas could not for his good Service and Zeal receive a lesser Reward than the Command of the Malefactor, which he managed so extremely ill, that the People enraged by his Cruel Exactions, rose up against him as one man,

To which the Saracens laying siege are by a sudden Sally cut off.

Michael the Emperour fixed at the Tomb of Demetrius. John his Brother exercising great Cruelties.

The Bulgarians revolt chusing Deleanus for King.

So do the Inhabitants of Dyrrachium chusing Teichomere.

Teichomere removed and slain by the Wiles of Deleanus who alone governs Bulgaria.

Leading an Army towards Theffalonica.

Takes Dyrrachium, and mout part of the Province of Nicopolis.

A Conspiracy discovered and punished.

Alifianus run to the Bulgarians.

Is admitted Colleague with Deleanus.

Believes Theffalonica.

But is beaten and his Army routed.

man, and having driven him out of Town, and knowing how the matter would be reformed by the Emperour, openly revolted, making choice for their King one Teichomere a Souldier amongst them of good note both for Valour and Prudence.

108. Now were there two Kings, and consequently two great Factions in Bulgaria, whereof when neither seemed able to prevail against the other by force, by cunning and slight the matter was easily effected. Deleanus wrote kind Letters to the other, inviting him to partake of the Sovereignty, and so counterfeited a contented and self-denying Person, that he prevailed with Teichomere, to come to him and join their Forces together. Having now gotten a convenient opportunity, he calls all the Souldiers together, and desired them that if they believed him to be defended from Samuel, and were satisfied in their Election of him to be their King, that they would remove Teichomere, or if such was their pleasure he would willingly surrender his Interest to him, forasmuch as it was not to be thought, that Bulgaria could bear two Kings together. This produced at first a great contest amongst the Souldiers, which ended yet in the choice of Deleanus to be their King, and the stoning to death of the unhappy Teichomere. Deleanus being now possessed of the Kingdom without a Rival, led an Army presently towards Theffalonica against the Emperour, who would not stay his coming, but in a confused manner ran away to Constantinople, leaving all his baggage and Treasury behind to be brought after him by Manuel Ibatza one of his Domesticks, who carried it over to Deleanus. This Uplift so diligently managed his matters, that by Forces sent under Conduct of one Caucanus, he took Dyrrachium, and into Greece dispatched another Army under Command of one Anthimus. So much he prospered in his Enterprize, that the Province of Nicopolis, all except Naupactus gave up itself into his Hands, being impatient of the Domination of John, whose most cruel and exacting Officer they cut into pieces, and cast off the Yoke of Obedience. When Basilus conquered Bulgaria, he made no alteration as to Taxes, but contented himself with what had been paid to Samuel in kind, in this proportion, that whoever had a Yoke of Oxen paid a Measure of Wheat, another of Milium, and a Vessel of Wine to the publick. This John had changed into ready money; which they of Nicopolis took to very ill, that taking their opportunity they revolted from the Emperour, and joined themselves with their Countreymen. At this time a great Conspiracy was hatched against the Emperour by Michael Cerularius, John Macropolita, and many others, which being detected they were banished, and their Estates seized. And against Constantine the great Domestick, a Mutiny was raised at Mesanele, for which Michael Gabras, Theodosius Mesanytes, and other Centurions lost their Eyes. And Gregory Taronita a Patritian, the Principal contriver was covered with a raw Hide all over, but where space was left for breath and sight, and in that manner sent up to John to Constantinople.

109. In the Ninth Indiction, the Month of September, Alifianus the Patritian, the second Son of Aaron so often mentioned, and Governour of Theodosiople, fled secretly and betook himself to Deleanus upon this occasion. Being accused of some unjust proceedings, the Emperour or rather his Brother was so incensed against him, that before his Cause could be heard, he was forbidden the Court, or to come to Constantinople without leave, and more than this John seized out of him Fifty pounds of Gold, and which vexed him most took from him a very beautiful Woman, which he kept in the Countrey. Being not able by all his sollicitation to procure a redress of these grievances, he took the Armenian Habit, and passing for a Servant of Basilus Theodorocranus, got undiscovered to Ofprobos, where Deleanus then lying with an Army, very joyfully received him in appearance. He was sufficiently sensible how despicable both his counterfeit Person and Interest was in danger to prove at the appearance of one of the true Family, but perceiving all the Souldiers out of respect to his Lineage to bear him hearty affection, he saw there was no other way; but to offer him to share in the Sovereignty of the Countrey. Alifianus was wiser than to neglect so fair a beginning, and being admitted his Colleague was presently sent with forty thousand Men against Theffalonica, which then was held by Constantine the Patritian, the Emperour's Kinsman, who so manfully defended himself, that Alifianus having with all sorts of Engines attacked it for six Days together, perceived there was no other Course to be taken, but to starve them out. But the Defendants resolving to frustrate his expectations, made a General and unexpected Sally, and forced him to raise his Siege with such loss, that fifteen thousand of his Men are said to be slain, and the rest ran away with him to Deleanus, the Victory being ascribed to Saint Demetrius the Martyr, whom some of the Bulgarians swore they saw fighting, like a young Man at the Head of the Roman Troops, and destroying those against whom he fought by Fire which proceeded from him, so powerful had been the Prayers of the besieged at his Sepulchre, and efficacious the Ointment proceeding from his Tomb.

110. This defeat of Alufianus, increased the Jealousies already conceived betwixt him and Deleanus, and ripened their Hatred and Designs; for Deleanus would not be convinced but it was out of Treachery, and the other was rendered more peevish and out of humour by the apprehension of his Malice, and of the disgrace he had received by the overthrow. Now they thought of nothing, but how to circumvent and destroy each other, nor plotted any thing but how to get advantages to do it. But Alufianus was before-hand with his Colleague, whom having invited to a Feast, when he was drunk he caused his Eyes to be put out, and not trusting to his own Interest or the Humour of the Bulgarians, then sent to the Emperor and offered to return to his obedience, provided he might be accepted, and receive rewards due to his Loyalty; which was granted, and he repaired to Michael, then lying at Mosynopolis, who conferred on him the Dignity of Magister, and to make sure of him sent him to his Brother John to Constantinople. Michael was before this resolved in Person, to make an expedition into Bulgaria, upon hearing that that Province had revolted, having this saying frequently in his Mouth, that It was a shame for him who had added nothing to the Empire, to lose any Portion of it. The Dropick had already so far prevailed, that he was advised by those about him to altar his purpose, which was farther urged by the Principal Senators, but he by this opposition was the more quickened to undertake the Journey. And when on a certain Night he seemed overpowered by his Disease, and no hope there was, that he could proceed in his March the following day, to the great wonder of all Men he was in the Morning seen at the Head of his Men, and very stoutly led on into Bulgaria, where designing to fall upon the Revolters, and reduce them by force, this opportunity was presented of getting the Victory without fighting. For of their two Princes, the one being deposed, and the other revolted, the Bulgarians without an Head, and here and there dispersed, very easily returned to obedience. Deleanus having got into his Hands, he sent to Theffalonia. Then piercing into the more Inner Parts of the Country, he came to the wooden Rampart made formerly by Manuel Ibatzes at Prilapus, to restrain the Emperor's Incursions, but this he broke down, and having dispirited some Bulgarians who began to unite themselves, he took Ibatzes, with whom and Deleanus he returned in Triumph to Constantinople. Having done this work, and perceiving his time to be but short by the prevalence of his Disease, he cast off all Cares of State, and forsaking the Palace betook himself to a Monastery of his own building, and there putting off the Purple and all Ensigns of Majesty, was shaven for a Monk. He gave himself up to Religious Exercises, wholly refusing to admit the Emperess to his presence, and perpetually bewailed his Sins, especially the Murder of Romanus the Emperor, till such time as his Disease oppressed his Vitals, which was on the tenth Day of December, in the tenth Indiction, after he had Reigned seven years and eight Months, or thereabouts. He of himself was mild enough in his Government, though the contrary Humour of his Brothers made his Reign be ill spoken of. The only Crime laid to his Charge is, that about Romanus his death; which yet most ascribe more to his Brother John than him.

Alufianus circumvents Deleanus and returns to the Emperor.

Who marches towards Bulgaria.

Reducing it into obedience returns in Triumph to Constantinople.

Is shaven.

Dies.

The Empire devolved upon Zoe.

111. By the death of Michael, the Empire was again devolved upon Zoe, as by hereditary right. Michael surnamed Calaphates his Nephew by his Sister, the Wife of Stephen, who ordered matters for ill in Sicily, was as we said promoted by him to the Dignity of Cesar. Yet afterward, as if he repented of what he had done, he was ordered to live out of Constantinople, and forbidden to come to Court without licence first obtained. But when Michael was gone into the Monastery, his Brothers wrote Letters as in the Emperor's Name; whereby he was recalled into the Palace, but his Uncle John gave him his Lesson, which was by all means to please Zoe, and do nothing without her approbation. Thus instructed, they bring him into her Presence, where he falls down at her Feet, and putting her in mind how she had adopted him for her Son, at the time of his Advancement to the Title of Cesar, and ingage most solemnly to her, that upon the Death of his Uncle he should only enjoy the Name of Emperor, but but she all the Power, whom as a Slave bought with money is wont to do his Lady and Patroness, he would observe and obey to the utmost. She being of her self very easy, and finding the business of Government more troublesome than she had imagined, after three days deliberation complied with them, and (adopting him for her Son, saith Cedrenus, though others write that this was done before) caused him to be adorned with the Imperial Diadem, of which he was unworthy, not so much in respect to his obscure Birth and Family (his Father's Trade having been to pitch Ships) but to his disposition and manners, though before the Trial he was reputed active and industrious. As an ill Omen, of what a giddy humour he would prove, at his Coronation he was taken with such a Vertigo and Mist before his Eyes, that he had like to have fallen into a swoon, and with Ointments and Perfumes, could hardly be recovered. But thus did Michael Calaphates, the fifth of that Name, become Emperor of the Romans in the Tenth Indiction, A.D. M. XLI. Before his Admission, Zoe would secure some matters her self. First John his Uncle, she removed into a Monastery. Then Constantine the Domestick of the Schools, she deprived of his Command, and confined him to his House, as she did also George the Protovestiarius.

112. It's observed of the Reign of Michael, that during its continuance, there was still an Earthquake in one part or other of the Empire. Such were his Actions, that they quickly produced an Alteration in his Fortune. He was deceitful and highly ingrateful, having no regard either to the obligations of Nature or Friendship, of so lavish a Tongue, that never regarded what he said, his Heart and Lips never agreeing: In adversity most base and servile, and born to punish the Crimes of his Uncle John, and to procure the Ruine of all his Family. For some time however his Uncle had been outed by the Emperess, yet he used his advice, gave him great Titles and most fair words; but either to please the Emperess, or rather to gratify his own Humour by degrees, bore himself to him after a quite contrary Fashion; being so far from giving him any respect, that he took all occasions to cross and to affront him. The only Person of his Kindred to whom he bore any respect was his Uncle Constantine, whom he prevailed with Zoe to have recalled from his Confinement: on him he conferred the Title of Nobilissimus, and would have him near him, suffering him to affront his Brother John in his Presence without any reprehension, which caused John to depart at a good distance from the City. Hereupon Michael broke out into open Enmity against him. He had formerly sent for him to Court, but when he was to come, on purpose absented himself at the Theatre, to behold the Circenian Games. Now again he sent a Gally for him to give an account of his proud Carriage, and when he was come near the Palace, ordered him to be carried away into Banishment: And thus he rewarded him, by whose Craft and Design he had both received the Dignity of Cesar, and the Imperial Power. Having thus removed him, he dealt no better with his other Relations, many of whom not only men in Size, but bearded by reason of their Age, nay both Husbands and Fathers he caused to be gelded, and made Eunuchs. He had now obtained the Conquest over his own Kindred, but another Triumph remained, which required more than Herculean pains. This was to reduce the Emperess Zoe to a private Life, and this he resolved upon by the advice and assistance of his Uncle Constantine, and first attempted it by these means.

113. This most ignoble (adoptive) Son causes odd rumours to be spread (say our Authors) against his most Noble Mother, reporting her guilty of many Crimes, particularly of witchcraft and sorcery, and that she Plotted to take away his Life. Having thus made his way he casts her out of the Court, banishes her into the Princes Island, causes one who had so well deserved of him to be shaven, and instead of the Purple which had defended to her from her many Ancestours, to put on the Habit of a Nun. Cedrenus writes that before he did this he resolved to try how the affections of the Citizens of Constantinople stood, after this manner: The next Lord's day after Easter he ordered a solemn Procession to be made to the Church of the Apelles, in which he appeared with his Diadem on his Head, and waited on by all the Senate. All the People ran to the show, and those that lived in the Streets through which he passed from the Palace adorned the Walls and Windows of their Houses, as is usual, with the best and richest Hangings they had to Grace the Solemnity, and were not wanting to follow him with usual Acclamations. This the vain and miserable Man concluded to proceed from their intire affection

Who makes Michael Calaphates Emperor.

His Character.

Disgracing and using ill all his own Relations.

And deposing Zoe the Emperess.

Zenar's Tom. 3. in Michael Calaphates.

fection to him, and in the night following put his device in practice in the manner formerly related. "The day following he caused a writing published to be read by the Prefect of the City to this purpose, that he had banished Zoe because she was an Enemy to his Government, and removed Alexius from the Patriarchate for consenting to her Designs, promising his People all protection and all good things if they remained firm in their Duty and Allegiance to him. As the Prefect was concluding, some one amongst the multitude was heard to say, We will not have Stauropta Calaphates for our Emperour, but we will obey Zoe our Mother to whom the Empire is justly defended by hereditary right, to which presently all the People acclaimed as with one voice. Let Calaphates his Eyes be pulled out. Then with stones and all other things that came to hand they fell upon the Prefect (this was Anastasius, a Patritian, formerly one of the Ministers of Zoe's Father) and had certainly kill'd him had he not speedily got away.

114. Zonaras writes that Michael, after his deposing of Zoe accusing himself secure, fell to his pleasures and former delights, and therein was suddenly surprized. For at what had happened to the Emperess all the People was affected no otherwise than each one is wont to be at his own Calamity and misfortune: the Men bethought themselves of what her Ancestours had performed, and the Women concerned for her Sex as well as Birth failed not to contribute their passions for making up a publick discontent. The whole City out of a discontent broke out into a publick Rage and sedition, and every Man resolved to venture his Life in vindication of her to whom the right belonged. The Patriarch out of fear of being deposed had taken up his residence in the great Church, where hearing the joyful News of those commotions he expected to hear of the deposition of Michael. Thither repaired all the Eunuchs that had belonged to the Father of Zoe, with Constantine Cabasilas the Patritian, and now they durst shew themselves to all the rest of the Senators, who with Unanimous consent sent for Theodora out of Petrium and in the Church saluted her Emperess together with her Sister Zoe. Then with all the multitude they made to the Court, thence to expell Michael, who at first was little sensible of the danger wherein he stood, till seeing the People so much bandy together and his Guards out of conscience incline to the side of the Women, he was then very much affrighted. His Uncle the Nobilissimus to provide both for his own security, and his Estate, sent and fetch'd back Zoe into the Palace, and against the Nobility oppos'd some Companies of Souldiers who restrain'd their violence a little though with the loss of many Lives, till they brought her to the Theatre and there shew'd to them their Lady and Mistress, having devested her of her vail and restored to her all the imperial Ornaments. They imagin'd this would quiet the People, but so far was it from it that the sight of two together, so divers as to their Birth and Education, the more irrag'd them, which they testified not only by most reproachfull words but by casting of Stones and all other expressions of Fury and Indignation.

115. Michael now despairing to doe any good resolv'd to depart into a Monastery, and there take the Religious Habit, but his Uncle would not permit him, telling him an Empire was not so easily to be parted with, that it was manfully to be defended, and to be parted with by a generous and resolute death worthy of so great a Prince. Resolution being taken accordingly, all that were in the Court were Armed, and it was esteem'd very good fortune that Catacalo Ambustus was lately arriv'd out of Sicily with the welcome News of what had happened at Messana, whose presence and Assistance not a little encouraged the Emperour. The multitude Attacking the Court in three several Parties, the defendants were also divided into so many, who being well Armed killed many of the unarmed People, who with Stones, peices of Wood or any thing they could light on engag'd with the Souldiers, and three Thousand Men are said to have perished in this Attempt. But however the Citizens at length by their Numbers prevail'd: and breaking into the Palace made Booty all the Treasure, and what else they could there find, tore in pieces the Rolls of the Tributes and sought diligently how to take Michael, who seeing that there was no more contending nor striving against so great a stream, took a Pinace, and with the Nobilissimus fled to the Monastery of Stadium where they both took the Religious Habit; and so this contest ended after three days and as many nights. Zoe who was left in the

Upon which a tumult arises in the City of Constantinople.

Theodora sent for and saluted Emperess together with her Sister Zoe who is brought back into the Palace.

Cedrenus.

the Palace having now recovered the Sovereign power disdain'd to think that her Sister should Reign with her, but the Senate and People would needs have it so, and she was forced to acquiesce in their Resolution and admit Theodora into the Palace. Then from an high Place did she make a speech, first to the Senate, and then to the People, giving them thanks for their great kindness exprest to her and her Family, wishing and promising them all returns of kindness, and she desired to know their opinions what should be done with the Emperour, for such he was, and according to the Rules of the Government for such he could not be denied.

116. The Universal Cry was that the wicked wretch as they Term'd him, should be made away; some named the nailing him to a Pole, others to a Cross, and others more mercifull, propounded the saving of his Life by the loss of his Eyes. Zoe pitied the Man (as a Creature it's likely of her own making, for we naturally love those to whom we have been in the place of Parents or Benefactors) and was for sparing him; but Theodora full of Animosity for her long confinement, and desirous to vent her Anger against any one, gave order to Capanares, one who was lately made Prefect of the City, to goe speedily and pull out the Eyes of him and the Nobilissimus. His Errand and Voyage being known, the multitude followed him to the Monastery, where the two Princes upon notice of their coming betook themselves into the most secret Retreats of the Church of St. John Baptist, but the People the more incensed for the death of so many of their Relations and Neighbours dragg'd them out by the Heels through the Forum to the place called Sigma above the Monastery of Peribleptus and there pulled out their Eyes, Constantine bearing it very patiently, but Michael with Reluctancy and Lamentation desiring them to doe it to his Uncle first who had been the Author and cause of all the Evils of which they complained, and he had the favour to close his Eyes with the sight of that Spectacle. After the blinding of them they were both banished, Constantine and others of his kindred to several places and Michael to Elegnis on the twenty first day of April the tenth Indiction after he had Reigned four Months and five days. The two Emperesses (or rather Zoe alone) being thus made sure of began to settle the Commonwealth and their own Estate by bestowing Honours upon the Senators, and distributing Money amongst the People as the case required: and commands were sent into all the Provinces that no Offices of Magistraty should be sold which before had been the ordinary course, and all Acts of Injustice and Oppression were severely forbidden. There being great occasion for Money, the Nobilissimus was fetch'd back to the Court, and being questioned concerning the publick Treasure, was by threats brought to discover three and fifty Centenaries of Gold hid at his House, which being found he was returned to the former place of his confinement. Then was Nicholas the Prefident made Domestick of the Schools of the East having been the Eunuch of their Father, and of the West, Constantine Cabasilas the Patritian. And John Maniaces whom Michael had dismissed out of Custody from a Patritian was honoured with the Dignity of Magister, and with full Authority sent General of an Army into Italy.

117. Though matters were thus well ordered, yet the State seem'd not settled except an Emperour was created, which all Men wish'd, and that should be lawfully married to Zoe. And the being as desirous of an Husband as they were of an Emperour had already cast her thoughts and affections upon several. The first was Constantine Delassenus, who was sent for to Court as upon some other occasion; but he spake so roughly and seem'd so intractable that he was rejected. The next was one Constantine Catapano the Husband of another Woman, though her Paramour; but his Wife not enduring the thought that he should part with him in that manner chose rather by Poison to send him to another World, that neither of them might enjoy him. Being thus prevented as to him the resolved upon one Constantine Monomachus, whom John having banished to Mytilena, because a rumour was spread that he should Reign, he had recalled, and while the yet thought of Marrying the other Constantine had made Pretor or Judge of the Greeks. He was a Man both Noble as to his extraction and very handsome. His first Wife dying he married the Niece of Romanus the Emperour by his Brother, but by that Alliance got not any preferment; yet coming by that means often to Court he had opportunity to be in the Emperess's sight and became very familiar with her, and she was so kind to him (as to say truth her humour was ever free and generous) that from her bounty he received great summs of Michael and the Nobilissimus have their Eyes put out and are banished.

Zoe and Theodora being Emperesses.

Plutarch.

Δαρενός ἐπὶ τῇ πόλει.

The Citizens attack the Court.

And force the Emperour to fly in his Pinace to Stadium where he takes the Religious Habit.

of Money. This made some suspicious and credulous Persons talk hardly of them and Michael the Successor of Romanus out of mere jealousy thought for some pretended Crimes confined the Man to Lesbos where he continued all his time, and found not the other Michael that followed more favourable to him. Being now sent for to the City he was stopped at the Church of St. Michael in Damocrania and Stephen of Pergamens an Eunuch of the Chamber meeting him adorned him with Purple and brought him in a Pinace to Constantinople where he was Married to Zoe by one Stytes a Priest of New Rome, as Cedrenus calls him, for Alexius the Patriarch refused to solemnize the Nuptials because of the third Marriage, so terrible a matter in those days, yet did he set the Crown on his Head the day following. Thus did Constantine firnamed Monomachus obtain the imperial Dignity on the eleventh day of June in the tenth Indiction. A.D. M. XLII. And the power of the two Sisters became extinct after it had continued scarcely three months which though it pleased the People, out of respect to the Nobility of their House and their hatred to Michael, yet to the prudent sort seemed very uncouth and indecent. For odd they thought it to see two Women sit together upon the Tribunal, to have all Royal Ceremonies performed to two of that sex at the same time, incircled with the usual Guards and attended by the Senators and principal Magistrates: to see causes debated before them, all affairs of State handled in their presence; to behold them giving audience to Ambassadors, presiding in the Senate and the other publick and solemn Assemblies of the Empire.

118. The general satisfaction for having an Emperor was no whit diminished by the first Observations made upon the Carriage and Demeanour of Monomachus. For the Senators he immediately obliged by preferring them to places of Dignity and profit, and the People by distribution of Money, as he thought he had Interest and Opportunity. For satisfaction of the Provinces he sent abroad his Edicts, by which giving notice of his Promotion, he promised all good Offices, and the removal of all Grievances whatsoever. John the Great Actor in the days of his Brother, he removed into Lesbos, Michael his Nephew, lately deposed, into Chius, and Constantine Nobilissimus into Samus, whereby he farther pleased the People. But Wife men and such as pried nearer into his Actions and the Methods of his Government observed, that without any Prudence or grave consideration he conferred Dignities, and bestowed Money, as well the unfit as fit, the unworthy as worthy receiving his Favours; and he never regarded whether there was Money or no Money in the Treasury. But this could not hinder him from being Popular, or not obvious to the eyes of the Vulgar, to whom other things did farther commend him. For he frankly and freely forgave such from whom he had received Injuries when a private man; and he was so wise as to give content at home, making himself acceptable to the two Women by a Pleasant and Debonnair Carriage, and he little cared to perplex himself and soure his humour by much and difficult business, but rather indulged his Pleasures and took his ease. He seemed to Countenance men of Ingenuity and Learning, though of the latter he scarcely had received any taste. But the Provinces were in no good condition, however matters stood at Court and in the City. On the sixth of October in the eleventh Indiction a Comet appeared traversing the Heavens from the East to the West, and kept on its Course as long as that Month continued, being afterward esteemed to forerun and predict those Calamities which shortly after happened. Stephen Boistlabus who, as was said, escaped from Constantinople, had seized on the Mountains of Illyricum, of the Triballi and Servi, and thence like a Beast of Prey fell down upon the adjacent Territories of the Empire, and did very great mischief to the Inhabitants. Hereupon the Emperor sent Orders to Michael a Patritian the Son of Anastasius the Logotheta, and then Governour of Dyrrachium, to raise what force he could out of the adjoining Provinces, and hunt him out. But it's both the weakness and grievous punishment of the folly of a Prince, to chuse unfit Persons for the management of business. This Michael had not the least skill in Martial Matters, was an Effeminate and Dissolute Person, brought up in Idleness and Luxury and now ordered his Affairs like such a General, with sixty thousand men he marched into the Territories of the Triballi, and that through such difficult, rough, steep, and narrow ways, that only two Horsemen could ride abreast. The Servi living at those Straits, observed his motion and suffered him without Interruption to pass them into the Champion Countrey, and there to burn and plunder at his pleasure, but watched his return and possessed themselves of all the Straits and difficult Passages. And when loaded with booty and without fear or wit he re-entred, they fell upon Constantine Monomachus married to Zoe, and chosen Emperour.

He obliges his Subjects.

And accepts of the Emperres.

He sends an Army against the Triballi.

Which is destroyed at his return through the Straits.

on him and his Army with Stones, Earth, Darts, and all other things convenient from the higher ground, that of the miserable Souldiers who could not in the least defend themselves nor stir any way forty thousand were slain. The rest passing the Holes and Valleys which were now filled up with the Carcasses of their Fellows got up to the Mountains as they could, and by Night together with their Prudent General escaped.

119. At the same time a great danger threatened the Emperour from Italy, where George Maniaces usurped the Sovereignty for these Causes and upon these occasions. When first this George was by Michael sent into Italy to assist Apollaphar the Prince of Sicily against his Brother and the Africans, he took to his assistance five hundred Franks Commanded by one Arduin the Lord of a certain Region subject to none other, and by their assistance did he obtain all his Trophies in that War. When he was removed from his Charge, Michael Doceanus the Protospatharian, a silly Man, omitted to pay these Franks their monthly Wages as he had been wont; and when their Captain came to him, and desired him to be more courteous to the Souldiers, and not defraud them of their Wages, he contumeliously beat him, which caused the Franks to Revolt. He to chastize and reduce them would not use all the Force he might, but engaged them with the Offician Legion, and a part of that of the Thracians upon the River Aufidus at Cannae, and there lost the greater part of his Army, where the Romans long before had been ignominiously beaten by Hannibal. Yet did not this experiment teach him any wisdom, so as sufficiently to furnish himself for another Engagement, but only rallying together such as had been lately beaten with some Pisidians and Lycanians, which made up the Legion of the Phoberati, he fell rashly upon the Franks again, now strengthened by considerable Supplies, and from them received a great Overthrow. Michael the Emperour having Information of his Conduct; sent one Boioannes to succeed him, a Man of much repute for matters of War, Descended from Boioannes, who under the Reign of Basilus reduced all Italy as far as Rome to his obedience. But he having none but beaten and discouraged Men to lead against the Enemy, was so far from driving them out, that he could not defend his own Poits, but was defeated at Monopolis and taken Prisoner; after which the Franks so bestirred themselves, that they brought under Italy, four Cities only remaining to the Romans, (our Authours mean the Emperour) viz. Brundisium, Hidriis, Tarentum and Baris.

Italy taken from the Emperour by the Franks except four Cities.

120. Now Michael the Emperour being dead, and Calaphates deposed, Maniaces, as we said, was sent into Italy, and there, though he laboured under the same difficulty of want of Men as those before him had done, yet so far exceeding them in the Art of a General, that he drove the Franks from Capua, Beneventum and Naples, and brought the Countrey into a reasonable good condition. Whilst he employed himself there in his Command, Romanus Sclerus who was his Neighbour where his Estate lay in the Easterly Parts, who bore him mortal hatred for an Injury he thought done to him, did him such mischief as forced him upon an Attempt, the Issue of which proved destructive to him. The Sister of this Sclerus was the Emperour Monomachus his Mistress, who on her so doted, that besides all other things he desired, he preferred her Brother to be Magister and Protospathar. Puffed up with this advancement, and now thinking he might do any thing, he both injured him in his Estate and Lands, and lay with his Wife very licentiously. Maniaces having notice hereof, boyled with Rage, and by no means could digest the Affront, but as he was thinking how to be revenged for these Injuries his thoughts were farther employed by another, for Sclerus procured him to be turn'd out of his Employment in Italy. This made him desperate, for he could not but expect still worse at Court where his Enemy had so great an Interest, and drove him into a Resolution of Usurping and taking Arms against the Emperour. He killed him that was sent to succeed him, one Pardus a Protospatharian, a Fellow not at all fit for such an Employment, but only because he was known to Monomachus, and then took the Diademe with other Ensigns of Majesty, and was by the Forces of Italy which he easily cajolled to this Service, saluted Emperour. Putting his Army Aboard he passed over into Bulgaria, with the News whereof they were so struck at Constantinople, that Letters were written to him in the Emperour's Name, which promised Pardon to him and his Followers for all that was past, besides good Rewards, if they would return to their former obedience. But he continuing fixt in his Resolution, an Army was got together, and committed to the Conduct of Stephanus Sebastophorus, who brought the tidings of his Promotion to Monomachus when he met him at Damocranea. At a place

Maniaces usurps in Italy.

Entering Bulgaria,

place called Ofrobis they met, and then Stephen had the worst of it, Maniaces leading on his own Men, and fighting stoutly in the Head of them. And all now received and acknowledged him for Emperour in the Field, when suddenly he fell down dead from his Horse, having it seems received a mortal wound in his Breast, though not known from what Hand. Now was the Scene quite changed: they who a little before did him reverence as Emperour, now railed at him as a Traitor, and his Head being cut off, his Men submitted to the present Power. Stephen for his great Conquest returned in triumph to the City, where for a shew the Head of Maniaces was carried on the point of a Spear, and some of those whom the Death of their General, not the valour of Stephen had subdued, to encrease the Pageantry followed it as a Trophy upon Asses; the worthy Conquerour bringing up the Rere on a Milk-white Steed.

121. But into so great danger was Monomachus brought by his Mistresses, a Lady so considerable, that Zonaras thinks it not a thing below the Dignity of an Historian to give an account of their Amours; he having Buried two Wives, had no mind to Marry a third, but it seems judging Fornication better than a breach of that humour so much applauded in those days, used the company of this Woman, being a Widow, and the Kinwoman of one of his Wives, at first privately, but afterwards without any dissimulation. She was Young, very Beautiful, and defended of the Noble Family of the Scleri, which attracted his Affections to her, but she was not at all in his debt; the testifications of her Love to him were full as large and significant. They could neither of them be at quiet if they were not together; and when he was Banished the followed him, not able to live but in his company, where by all her Arts she endeavoured to make his condition as easie as might be, both with her society, advice and supply of his wants, so far as her Estate would allow, having a strange fancy all along that one day he would arrive at the Sovereignty. And when at the Sovereignty he arrived, at the height of his Prosperity he forgot not her that had been his chief comfort in his distress, but got the consent of the Emperess that she might be sent for to Court and provided for, with which Zoe was well enough content, the greatness of her Age having now mortified Jealousie in her, together with her experience of the misfortunes which this life affords. Now was Sclerena removed from Mitylena to the City, where at first she was in no splendour either as to House or Attendance, but by degrees was served like an Emperess, and her House turned as into a Court. For Monomachus, where she lay built very sumptuously both for her convenience, and that under pretence of overseeing his Workmen he might have oftner occasions to make her Visits. At first he was shie and cautious of being discovered in his Amours, but at length cast off all dissimulation, and used her not as a Concubine and Vice-wife, but as one to whom he had been lawfully Married. Now all the Treasury is at her Command, and not enduring her absence hardly for a moment, he obtains the consent of the Emperess for bringing her into the Court, where by his endeavours a great friendship was contracted betwixt them, so as Zoe grudged her neither the Name nor Honours of an Emperess, and contented her self with his company when she knew he was not with his Mistresses. Thus lived he and his Sclerena together, hoping still for a nearer conjunction, at least which would more satisfy the World, when on a sudden death prevented it, snatching her away, to his great discontentment, a little before the Civil War of Maniaces, occasioned by his Power and Intercession for her Brother, as some write, though by a Sedition there happened upon her account it appears that she lived longer.

122. But the Civil War raised by Maniaces was not all the Difficulty where-with the Emperour struggled at the same time. Theophilus Eroticus the Governour of Cyprus, a man greedy of Novelty, when he heard of the Death of Calaphates, and the confusion which thereupon happened, thinking it a seasonable time for putting in practice what he had designed, put all the Inhabitants of the Island into a Tumult, and excited them to the Murder of Theophylact a Protoprotoparban, a Judge there, and the Chief Collector of the Tributes. But it succeeded well that Constantine Chages a Patritian being ready at Hand, without any more trouble to the Emperour or much ado, seduced the Island, and therein taking the Rebel brought him to Constantinople, where a Woman's Coat was put upon him, and therein he was shewn at the Circensian Games, which done, and his Estate confiscated, he was then dismissed. On the second of May following the Eyes of John the Brother and Great Minister of Michael the Paphlagonian were put out, some say by command of Theodora, but as most affirmed by order of Monomachus himself, out of revenge for his long Confinement, which misfortune he survived

An account of Constantine, with Sclerena his Doxy.

The Island Cyprus reduced to obedience.

vived but eleven days. In the month of July Stephen Sabastoporus was accused of Conspiring against the Emperour, to prefer Leo a Patritian to his Place, and make the Son of Lampus Governour of Melitena; for which Stephen was condemned to a Monastick life, having all his Estate seized, and Lampus was cruelly tortured, shewed up and down the Forum, and deprived of his Eyes, after which he soon died. At the same time, the same month the Rossians again took Arms, who had for a long time held so good correspondence with the Empire, that there was mutual commerce, and the Merchants went to and fro without the least Interruption. Now it happened that at Constantinople there was a quarrel amongst the Trades-men, and it so fell out, that one of those Scythian Merchants was killed. The Prince of the Countrey, Bladimer by Name, a passionate Man and restless, took the matter so heinously, that without any delay he raised all his Subjects that were fit to bear Arms, and besides procuring many Auxiliaries out of the Northern Nations, an Army of a hundred thousand Men he put into their usual Boats, whereof each was made of one Tree, and so proceeded against the City. The Emperour as soon as he knew of his Design sent to him, and offered all reasonable satisfaction if he would lay down Arms, and pressed him much not for slight causes to break that Peace which for so many years had been preserved inviolable betwixt the Nations; but he returning a fawcy Answer, and treating the Messengers with much disrespect, he then provided for his own security. All Scythian Merchants and others that were spread up and down the Empire he caused to be secured for fear of any Conspiracy. Then got he ready all the Gallies and Vessels he could compass, and putting aboard as many Forces as the time would permit him, he himself in a Pinnace led them against the Enemy, whom he found in the Straits about Pharus. Besides his Fleet a strong Party of Horse waited and attended his motions all along the Shore.

123. There the Fleets faced each other, but neither would begin the Fight; the Scythians keeping themselves within the Haven, and the Romans attending what course they would Steer. The time being spent, and Night approaching, the Emperour sent to Bladimer the second time to move him to Peace, but he as peremptorily and fawcily as ever, rejected his offer, declaring he would not lay down Arms except he should have paid down three Pounds of Gold for every Man he had with him. This Answer being so insolent and Extravagant, Monachus prepared himself to Fight. He gave order to Basilus Theodorocranus a Magister, with three swift Gallies to make a gentle onset to skirmish with the Rossians, and provoke them to Fight, to see how they would order their matters. But he instead of skirmishing passed into the middle of them, burnt with Wild-fire seven of their Vessels, sunk other three with all the Men in them, and took another, having either killed or driven out all those that were aboard. Then did the Emperour make up to them with his whole Fleet, which perceiving, they concluded that if they could not sustain the violence of three Gallies, they should never be able to endure the whole flock, and therefore shifted for themselves as they could, ran upon the Rocks and Shelves, and lost most of their Vessels; and such as escaped to the Shore the Emperour's Horse fell upon and killed so many, that fifteen thousand of their dead Bodies were afterwards found upon the Shore. The Scythians being thus defeated, after a farther stay of two days the Emperour returned to Constantinople, leaving a sufficient Power under command of Nicholas one of the Chamber, and Theodorocranus with orders to look well to the Maritime Coast, not to suffer the Barbarians to land, and that the whole Fleet should be still in the Bay of Pharus. But however it happened, twenty four Triremes separated from the rest of the Fleet, pursued the Enemy so far till they passed the Bay wherein they lay, and were driven beyond them. The Scythians perceiving this, and how Wind and all things served, resolved to intercept their passage, which they easily did in the Straits, by lying thick from one shore to the other. There being no way to escape, Constantine Caballarius a Patritian, the Captain of the Cibyræota with his and other Gallies endeavoured to make a passage, but was killed as he manfully fought, and his Ship with four others, together with the Men fell into the Hands of the Rossians; the other Ships were split upon the Rocks or run ashore. The Men were some drowned, some killed or taken by the Enemy, and such as escaped came in much shame and confederation to their Friends. The Rossians having beyond all expectation done so much mischief, made the more comfortable Retreat. But being forced to return awfully by Land as by Sea (so many of their Vessels had miscarried) they fell into the Territories of the Government of Catocalo, Besta Ambustus, who then commanded the Coast about Ister, and

The Rossians break the League with the Empire.

Are met by the Empe-rour's Fleet, and defeated.

But some of the Gallies pursuing too far, are destroyed by the Enemy.

and were most of them killed and taken, of the later of which he sent five Hundred bound in Chains to the Emperour, having, to his great Commendation when first these Scythians arrived, been very watchfull in his Charge, so as to hinder their landing, and destroy many of them. And his Care and Industry, he continued to this very last.

124. In the twelfth Indiction the Month of September, the second year of Monomachus, so great a Tempest happened, that in a manner destroyed all the Grapes of that year. On the Ninth Day of March following, which was consecrated to the Memory of the forty Martyrs, the Emperour being about his Devotion, was stopped by a Sedition of the People. Going on Foot in Procession accompanied with his Guards, and followed by the Acclamations of the People, from the Palace to the Church of our Saviour in Chalce, he there took Horse to pass on to the Church of the Martyrs, when from amongst the Multitude this Voice was heard. We will not have Scleræna be Emperess, nor our Sovereign Ladies Zoe and Theodora Porphyrogenita, to die upon her Account, which cast all into Confusion and Tumults, wherein the Rabble demanded the Life of the Emperour, and they had taken it had not the two Emperesses shewed themselves to them from an high place, and by good words appeased them. But the Emperour was frighted from his Procession, and was glad in a whole Skin to escape into the Palace. The following year, he thought himself concerned in honour to make challenge of a City which he found belonged to the Empire upon this occasion. At such time as George Prince of the Abasgians, made War upon the Romans, he was assisted by one Jobanesces, the Lord of a City called Anium. But when Basilus the Emperour invaded Iberia, and was too hard for George, then Jobanesces fearing he should be punished for what he had done fled to the Emperour, and gave up himself with the Keys of the City into his Hands, which rendition Basilus, accepting, honoured him with the Dignity of a Magister, and made him Governour of Anium and Armenia the Great for his Life, with this caution of writing, that after his death it should revolve upon the Empire as Part thereof. But Basilus being dead, and many years after him Jobanesces, his Son Cacicus entered upon the Government, and it being not observed kept his Fathers Territories in good Peace and Friendship with the Romans. Now Monomachus finding the writing in the Archives, was resolved to make demand of the Restitution of Anium, and all the Great Armenia as the Heir of Basilus. Cacicus professed himself the Friend and Servant of the Emperour, but seeking for Excuses and Delays, Monomachus resolved to recover his Right by Force of Arms, and committed an Army to the Conduct of Michael Bestia, Jasties newly designed Governour of Iberia, with order to make War upon Cacicus.

125. Cacicus considering into what straits he was brought, made all preparations he could for defence, and had rather the better of Jasties, to whose aid then was sent Nicholas Domestick of the Schools, formerly of the Chamber to Constantine the Emperour with a great Army, to suppress Cacicus by mere Numbers if nothing else will do it, and moreover the Emperour wrote Letters to Aplepharius the Governour of Tibium, and that Perfarmentia which lies upon the River Araxes, to fall upon him on his side the Countrey. Aplepharius wrote back again, that on this Condition he would do it, if the Emperour would under his Hand make a grant to him of whatsoever he should take from Cacicus, which he did accordingly, an Instrument being written and confirmed by the Golden Bulla. He having received this, applied himself to his work, and took many Castles and Forts belonging to Cacicus, who being thus beset on all sides, and despairing to extricate himself out of such difficulties, made Peace with Nicholas, and by him giving up himself and the City to the Emperour, afterward went to him, and from him receiving the Dignity of a Magister, with Ample Revenues from Cappadocia, and elsewhere, lived thenceforth a quiet and peaceable Life. Now did Monomachus demand the Castles and Forts, which Aplepharius had taken as part of the Dominion of Anium, which he refusing to surrender, and alledging the Golden Bull whereby they were granted to him, Command was sent to Nicholas, with the Roman and Iberian Forces, and those that had belonged to Cacicus to make War upon him, and recover them by Force. Nicholas accordingly sends Jasties to lay siege to Tibium. Aplepharius being a very good Soldier, and knowing himself not in a condition to grapple with the Romans, keeps himself within the Walls, and beforehand lays all the Ground adjoining under Water by Sluces made from the River, and he places in the Vineyards which were

A Tumult in the City of Constantinople concerning Zoe and Theodora.

Constantine challenges the City Anium and Armenia the Great as belonging to the Empire.

And sending thither an Army hath them delivered up.

Then they lay Siege to Tibium.

Bar by an Ambush are all cut off.

on higher Ground a Number of Archers, whom he bid expect the sign he should give them by Trumpet, and in this posture expect the coming of the Enemy. The Officers of the Romans finding him close in the Town, and the Grounds under Water, concluded it was out of fear and desperation, and hastened out order to get to the Walls by the ways that were left passable, and take possession of what was already their own. Then did Aplepharius give the sign to those he had placed in Ambush, who from the Vineyards with Arrows, Darts and Stones, made great slaughter of these unwary Men, who were so intangled in Thickets, Ditches and Water, that not able to defend themselves or fly, an innumerable Number of them there perished, and Jasties with some other Officers, escaped with the News of the Adventure and Success to Nicholas. The Emperour having notice of the Defeat, put both Nicholas and Jasties out of their Offices, and in place of the latter made Ambustus Governour of Iberia. In the Room of Nicholas he made General one Constantine Captain of the great Sodality, as it was termed, an Eunuch descended from the Saracens, but most faithful to him, who had much served him when yet in a private Condition. These coming sufficiently furnished into the Province, thought not fit to lay siege to Tibium the principal Town, but took in several Forts belonging to Anium, very strong and situate on Craggy Rocks, which Aplepharius often attempted to relieve; but in vain. Thence they removed to a strong Castle near to Tibium, called Chelidonium, about which they drew a Trench, and had taken it or starved out the Defendants; but that the Usurpation of Tornicus in the West, obstructed both this and other Proceedings.

126. This Leo Tornicus being formerly Governour of Iberia, had upon a surmise of a Conspiracy for advancing himself been turn'd out of Command, been shaven and put into a Monastery, though the Emperour's near Kinsman by his Mother. His dwelling having been at Adrianople (formerly called Orestias, from Orestes the Son of Agamemnon) he had the Macedonians much at his Devotion, who exceedingly esteemed him, for he was a Man both beautiful and of excellent parts, and had a certain way peculiar to himself of gaining love from those with whom he conversed: but what got him most Reverence, a Report or Prophecy went about, that in time he should come to be Emperour. These and other things caused Monomachus his Kinsman much to dislike him. On the other side, Eupropia the Emperour's Sister used him with great respect: being a Woman indeed of a very generous mind, very noble and rich, but not at all acceptable to her Brother, who stood in awe of her, because of her eminent Wisdom. And to be even with him, the neither received any thing from, nor frequented the Court, but when she met him was wont to carry it very high towards him, would rebuke and chide him, and when he fell into passion for her so doing, would by silence condemn and dissemble it. He perceiving her great affection to Tornicus, on purpose to separate them made him Governour of Iberia, where all things prospering under him, and he flourishing in great repute, thence some took occasion of calumniating him to the Emperour, who caused him to be shaven and to take the Habit of a Monk. But the Macedonians, as was said, being much addicted to him, carried away by Night out of Constantinople, and at Adrianople saluted him Emperour, whither great Confluence there was made of Soldiers from all those Parts, either through desire of Plunder and Innovation, out of love to him or hatred to Monomachus who had much disliked, and as much distrusted of late the military Men. Thus encouraged, he resolved with all speed to march for Constantinople, which he had great hopes would instantly be put into his Hands by the Citizens, who for certain Causes bore neither at present any good will to the Emperour, and the Armies of the East had their Hands sufficiently full in those Quarters. With these hopes he incamped before the City, with intention to use violence if fair words would not prevail. The next Morning coming up with his Army to the Walls about Blachernæ, he summoned the Town, and by great promises invited those that kept the Gates to open them; but they not only refusing, but reviling him with ill Language, he then gave the Onset.

Leo Tornicus usurps.

Laying Siege to Constantinople.

127. The Emperour all this while was very solicitous, not being (at least as he thought) sufficiently provided for so surprizing a Mischief. In the first place he sent into Iberia to Constantine, to come to him with all the speed he could make, whatever his business at present should be. But for making effectual opposition against the Enemy now endeavouring to scale the Walls, he brought the Citizens and others together, not exceeding a thousand Men. Now as to the Management of this affair, accounts are very different. Cedrenus writes of his going out into the Field, with a contemptible Number in respect of the Enemy, and how his Men were beaten back, and driven into the Trench, he himself with difficulty escaping into the City, which might have been taken with the greatest ease, had the Usurper prosecuted his Victory; not only the Gates, but the Walls themselves about Blacherna, being left desolate. On the other side Zonaras tells us, that the Emperor never went out of the City, but in his Imperialibus shewed himself upon the Wall, thinking thereby to strike some awe into the Rebels. But the Macedonians on the contrary, being accustomed to scurrility, with bitter Invectives reviled him, singing Songs, and using Gestures, chosen for such an occasion, and such as issued out with Loaths and Ignominy they beat in again, or else killed or drowned them in the Trench before they could there arrive. But this opportunity which now in a manner begged his acceptance, Tornicius did not improve, pursuing those that sallied to the Walls, but never considering whether he could goe any farther. Monomachus seeing this, laid hold of the Advantage to bring the Citizens upon the Wall again, and to re-inforce the City, having narrowly escaped the shot of an Arrow, which fell upon one of the under Servants of his Bedchamber, though without any hurt. The day following, Tornicius renewed the Assault, but had no more any such advantage, for he was both repulsed, and was nigh being killed by a Stone of a Talent weight, which was cast out of an Engine, by which danger he was so affrighted and discouraged for want of Success, and above all when he perceived, that his Men began to fall off from him to the Emperor, that fearing to be delivered up into his Hands, he raised his siege and retreated to Arcadiopolis, where he joined Forces with John Batatzes. All the Cities of Macedonia and Thrace had submitted to him, Redestus excepted, which now he sent several of his Captains and Kinsmen to besiege, and afterward followed with all his Army, but attacked it without Success. By this time the Eastern Forces were arrived, and the Emperor sent them directly into Thrace against him, under Command of Michael Jasites the Magister, who incamping himself against him at Arcadiople, would not suffer his Men to doe any Injury to the Countreymen, such of Tornicius his Souldiers as he took he used very civilly, and by good words and promise of Pardon, endeavoured to draw away all the rest. Now Winter was at hand, and the Arts of Jasites had such influence upon them, that they began to consider, that they could not undergo both the Incommodities of the Season, the want of Provisions, and sustain the Violence of so powerfull an Enemy all together, by degrees they fell off to the Magister. For some time, notwithstanding, Tornicius would not quit his hopes, as long as obscure Persons only revolted. But when the great Commanders of his Army fell off, then with Batatzes who alone stuck by him, he consulted how to escape, and when that could not be they betook themselves into a Church, whence Jasites caused them to be fetched, and sent them bound to the Emperor. On Christmas-Eve by his Command their Eyes were put out, such as were most eminent in the Rebellion, were ignominiously led about the Forum, then banished, and their Estates confiscated. The ordinary fort were all sent away into their own Countries.

Μεγάλης ἐκκλησίας ἐξαρξ.

Ἰωναν.

128. Thus was Monomachus happily delivered from this Civil War, but another from abroad now fell upon him, to the Empire the most mischievous of all others, because made upon it by the Turks, who in conclusion by their furious and victorious Arms put an end to it, and erected one of their own in its Place. The Turks, say our Authours, were an Hunnish Nation, inhabiting the Northern Parts of the Mountain Caucasus, most populous and free, as having never submitted the Neck to the Yoke of any Person or People, but laid one of their own upon several others by Degrees, and first upon this occasion. After such time as the Saracens had overturned the Kingdom of the Persians, and had not only subdued Persia, but Media, Babylon, Assyria, Egypt, Africk, and no small Part of Europe it self, they began to fall out among themselves, and their vast Empire was divided into several Portions, so that Spain, Africk, Egypt, Babylon and Persia had their several Princes, and these Wars one with another. At such time as Basilius was Emperor, Muchumator Mahomet the Son of Imbrael, was Prince of Persia, the Chorasmis, Oretani and Media, having War with the Indians and Babylonians, and put hard to it sent to the Prince of the Turks for assistance, desiring three thousand Men, which he accordingly sent him under Command of Tragelipax, or Tangrolipix Muculet the Son of Michael, hoping by this means to have a Passage opened into Persia, which was hitherto stopped by the several strong strong Forts which stood upon the River Araxes. Mahomet making use of these Auxiliaries easily mastered Pisaftrius Prince of the Arabians whose Men could not endure the force of their Arrows. After this he would have used them against the Indians; but they desired to be dismissed and to have the Garrison removed from the Bridge of Araxes by which they must of necessity pass, and when he refused, and went to offer violence, they revolted and betook themselves to the Wilderness of Carbonitis and the Mountains, not daring to abide a Battle because they were so small a Number. Upon the Saracens they fell down continually, and did much mischief to the adjacent Parts, so that to destroy them Muchmet sent an Army of twenty Thousand Men commanded by ten of the most Noble of his Nation. The Captains thought it not safe to enter the Desert being not provided of necessities for so desolate a place, but incamped themselves at the entrance, which Tangrolipix understanding fell upon them by night when they little expected it, easily defeated them, and finding in their Camp many Chariots and Horses with much Money, now would not like a Fugitive practise Robberies and make incursions by stealth, but openly shew himself as a fair Warrior. And all Malefactors and discontented Persons that could, now came in to him from the Neighbouring Countries, especially such as loved to maintain themselves by Rapine and Violence, so that in a short time his force was increased to fifty Thousand Men.

129. Mahomet enraged at the defeat put out the Eyes of the ten Commatiders and threatened such Souldiers as had escaped to lead and shew them abroad in Womens Cloaths, which caused them now when he prepared to renew the War to run from him to Tangrolipix, who now came and offered Mahomet Battle. He notwithstanding the revolt of these Men had got another Army together of Saracens, Persians, Caberians and Arabians, of about five hundred Thousand and with an hundred Elephants bearing Turrets on their backs gave Battle to his Enemy in a place called Aspahan, which was fought with much vigour on both sides, but he riding about to animate his Souldiers chanced to fall from his Horse and broke his Neck, whereby the Quarrel was decided, for his Army then submitted and Tangrolipix by universal consent was declared King of Persia and all Mahomet's Dominions. Tangrolipix thus promoted presently cleared the Bridge of Araxes, and then his Countreymen in great multitudes flocked to him, wherewith having sufficiently strengthened himself he took the Title of Sultan (by which Absolute Emperor or King of Kings is meant) and invading the Saracens and Persians divided all the Country amongst the Turks. Having here settled his Affairs he resolved to make War upon the Neighbouring Princes and first overthrew in several Battels and killed him of Babylon whose Dominions he then seized into his hands. After this he sent Cuthimuses (his Brother's son) call him, others his Uncle's Son) against the Arabians from whom he received a notable defeat, and in his flight asked leave of Stephen a Patritian the Emperor's Governour of Media (at that time called Baspracen) to pass through that Country, which he denying, he made his way by force and worshipping Sephen who opposed him took him Prisoner, and in his passage through Trabrezium sold him to the Lord of the Place. Returning to the Sultan he abused himself of the blow received from the Arabians, whom he would undertake to subdue if he might but be sent the second time; and by the way he spoke of Baspracen, how fertile a Country it was and easy to be Conquered being held by Women, as he termed these Roman Souldiers with whom he had fought.

130. But the Sultan was so enraged at him that he designed to put him to death for the loss in Arabia, and as for Media, he feared to make War against the Romans being awed by the fame which the Emperours Nicephorus, Zimisces and Basilius had obtained in the World, and concluding with himself that the valour and power of the Empire was still the same. But while he deliberated hereof Cuthimuses for fear, fled and seized on a City in the Country of the Chorasmis called Pasar, a very strong place. When now the Sultan was moving against the Arabians who had the same success against him, as his Kinsman, and he returned home with the like disgrace. This should have made him have better thoughts of Cuthimuses, but he belieged him in Pasar, whence he made many sallies, and did much damage to the Sultan, who now besides this Iron in the Fire made himself still more work by sending an Army of about twenty Thousand Men to Conquer Media under command of Afan the Deaf his Brother's Son. Afan entering the Country destroyed all things in his way, sparing neither Sex nor Age. The Country was then Governed by Aaron Besta the Son of Bladithabab and Brother of Prusianus, who finding himself too weak to grapple with the Turks wrote

But refusing to fight with the Indians. He revolts.

But not pursuing his Victory is forced to raise the Siege.

And retreat to Arcadiopolis.

There he is defeated by his Followers, and punished for his Rebellion.

The Turks make War upon the Empire.

Tangrolipix, a Turk allies the Saracens against the Arabians.

And defeating Mahomet is declared Sultan and King of all the Dominions of the Persians and Saracens.

Seizes on the Dominions of Babylon.

But is beaten by the Arabians.

Then he sends an Army into Media.

wrote to Catacalo Bessa, Ambustus the Governour of Axiom and Iberia to come to his aid with all the speed he could make, which he accordingly did, using great expedition. When they came together and it was propounded whether they should fall upon the Turks by night or openly give them Battel by day, Catacalo was pleased with neither but advised to have the Camp left with the Baggage and carriage Beasts and to lie in Ambush till the Turks should be busie in the Plunder of it. The Device took so well that Asan coming to give them Battel and perceiving there was no body left in their Camp, presumed they were fled out of fear, and boldly bad his men enter and seize on the Booty. Then did the Romans about vening rise from their Ambush and taking them in so much disorder killed most of them with their Captain, very few escaping through the Mountains into the Cities of Perfermenia.

131. The Sultan was grievously perplexed at the News yet to repair his loss by better success he got together of an Army an hundred Thousand Men consisting of Turks, Caberi and Limnise, which he committed to Abram Alim his half Brother for a second attempt upon Media. Upon notice of their coming Aaron and Ambustus again united their forces and Councils. Catacalo's advice was to fight them e'er they came into the Roman Territories while they were weary, a great part of them wanted Horses, and such Horses as wanted shoes whereas the Roman Souldier was full of courage animated by his late success. On the contrary Aaron affirmed that they ought by no means to hazard a Battel against such a multitude, but that all the strong places were to be fortified, and all they had was to be put within the Walls: till they could send to the Emperour, and from him receive orders what to do in so difficult a case. This course was taken, and having put all the Women and Children and all their best things into the strong places they two went to the Emperour, and withdrew into a plain of Iberia by the Natives called Ojurtu. The Emperour wrote back to them that they should attempt nothing till Liparites Prince of part of Iberia should joyn with them, to whom he sent as he was a Friend and Ally of the Empire not to fail it at this time. Liparites at his Leisure raised his Men when in the mean time Abram having entered Media, and perceiving that the Roman forces had out of fear withdrawn themselves into Iberia resolved to march after them with all speed, and fight them e'er they should be increased by Accession of new supplies. The Captains having notice hereof, left they should be surprized before the coming of Liparites wrote to him to hasten, and betook themselves to a place, very difficult of Access. Alim not being able to come at them, went to Atze a Village of great capacity wherein lived a great Number of Merchants and Tradmen not onely of the Country, but Syrians also, and Armenians, and of other Nations, and the inhabitants trusting to their Numbers though they had no Walls stoutly defended themselves, by stopping up the Passages, and from their Houles casting down Stones, Wood and Darts upon the Turks, whom thus they held in play for six days together. This coming to the Ears of Ambustus in the Roman Camp he most earnestly urged that they might not stay for the Loitering Liparites, but take this advantage while the Turks were thus busied at the Village, and fall upon them: but Aaron refused to joyn with him affirming he would do nothing but what he was warranted by the Emperour.

132. Abram finding what he did not expect, so great resistance, and that he could not by force of Arms Conquer one Village, the Wealth of which he most vehemently thrilled after, resolved to consume all he could not get and set it on fire, by which the inhabitants being forced out; (though an hundred and fifty Thousand are said to have perished partly slain by the Sword and partly burnt in the fire, into which many it's reported cast themselves) he found much Silver and other things that were not combustible. Besides he got many Horses and other Cattel, and so led away his Army well enriched in quest of the Romans. Liparites being by this time come to them, they were come down into the Plain, and had pitched at the Foot of an Hill on which stood a Castle called Capetrum. The Turks now marching in no order but running in *Herd*s together, Ambustus moved that in this condition they might fall upon them; but now Liparites refused to fight out of a superstitious humour, because it was Saturday which he reckoned amongst unlucky days, being the eighteenth of September and the second Indiction, in the seventh year of Monomachus. But Abram understanding by his Scouts where, and in what condition the Enemy lay, marched up to them in due order of Battel, which they perceiving, put themselves how unwillingly soever into the like posture to receive them: Ambustus led the Right and Aaron the the Left Wing; the middle of the Battel being left to the Conduct of Liparites. To Ambustus was opposite Abram himself, to Aaron another of the Turkish Commanders called Chorofanites, and to Liparites one Aspam Selarius the half Brother of Abram. The fight began a little before Sunset, and both Ambustus and Aaron defeated their Opposites, and pursued them till Cocks crow. But Liparites enraged for the loss of a Kinsman, to be revenged engaged more desperately than prudently and was taken Prisoner, being much expected by his Friends who returning from the pursuit and lighting from their Horses gave God thanks for the Victory in these words, singing, What God is so great as our God? Expecting with great longing to hear what was become of Liparites whom at first they concluded to be in pursuit of the Enemy they were at length put out of all doubt by the coming of one that had served under him who affirmed him taken and led away bound to such place as he that took him pleased. The Roman Captains notwithstanding their Victory were so struck with the News, that passing that night without sleep, in the Morning they consulted what was to be done; and all resolved to depart home. Thereupon Aaron with his Men returned to Ibame the Metropolis of Bajpracan or Media, and Catacalo with his went back to Anium. But Abram overjoyed that he had taken Liparites, and thereupon thinking himself the most happy Man alive, omitting all other business conveyed him himself five days Journey, and then sent him away to the Sultan who made a shew of joy for the taking of so considerable a Man; but envying his Brother the good fortune, as he had formerly Stomached Culmamus for his bad, resolved to make him also away, and for that watched his opportunity.

133. The Emperour having News of the Captivity of Liparites desired above measure to have him freed, and for that purpose sent one to the Sultan with Presents of the value of his Ransom offering also to make a Peace and Alliance with him. The Sultan that he might seem a generous Prince rather than a Man of violence and Robbery sent him Liparites Gratis, receiving the Presents that were sent him, but he gave them all to his Prisoner, advising him to have him in his mind, and no more to bear Arms against the Turks. And he sent in Ambassage to the Emperour their Seriph, who had the same Relation to their Caliph, as the Syncllus at Constantinople in old time had to the Patriarch, succeeding him in ordinary course when he died. The Seriph at his audience speaking many things arrogantly and boasting according to their fashion required, that the Romans should become Tributaries to his Master, and when the Emperour would hear of no such matter returned home. This Hint caused Monomachus in expectation of War to provide for the security of the Provinces, when violence was offered to them by an Enemy in another Quarter, the Patzinacæ a People of Scythia. This People being of that sort of Scythians then termed Royal, the most powerfull of them all was divided into thirteen Tribes, which though they all made up one Nation, yet each received Denomination from its own Prince. They possessed beyond Ister the Champion extending from Borysthenes to Pannonia, not being any where fixt but wandering from place to place, and always dwelling in Tents. Their Prince at this time was Tyrach the Son of Kilter a Man of Noble extract, but very Lazy and heavy. But there was one Kegenes the Son of Baltzar, by Birth obscure, but of great fame for Arms which he had obtained in his Conduct against the Uzeian Hunnish Nation whom making incursions he had often repulsed with great loss, Tyrach not daring to shew his Head, but lurking in the Fens about Ister. The People reverencing Tyrach for his extraction, but much more admiring the other for his valour, he grew so jealous of him that he resolved to take his Life, which often attempting secretly without success, at length he openly sent a Company to seize, and kill him. But Kegenes having timely notice of their coming made his escape into the Fens of Borysthenes whence he sent and procured his Friends and his own Tribe called the Tribe of Belemarne with another which had the name of Paganan to revolt from Tyrach.

134. With these two Tribes he engaged and fought Tyrach, assisted by eleven, being oppressed with multitudes and being defeated, resolved the only means of his safety, was to go over to the Emperour. He went to Dorofolus, and there passing into a River Island with his Men to the Number of twenty Thousand, sent to Michael the Son of Anastafus Governour of the Country to let him know who he was, and the reason of his coming, which was to put himself into the Emperour's protection, whose interest he doubted not very much to promote. The Governour having communicated his desires to the Emperour received orders to receive him courteously with his Men, to provide them of all necessaries and send him to Constantinople where

Which is cut off by the Romans.

Another Expedition into Media.

Laying Siege to Atze.

Which is burnt and Sack'd by the Turks.

They meet and engaging the Roman Army are defeated.

But take Captive Liparites one of the Roman Generals.

Sending him to the Sultan.

But by presents is redeemed and sent Home, and with him an Ambassador from the Turks to the Emperour.

Tyrach Prince of the Patzinacæ.

From whom Kegenes Revolts.

Putting himself under the Protection of the Emperour.

where he was entertained with all the kindness he could expect. He promised to be Baptized and to persuade his Countreymen also to turn Christians, and was Honoured with the Dignity of Patritian: then were assigned to him three Castles with large Grounds on the Bank of Ister and he and all his Men received Baptism. When he was conveniently settled he made frequent inroads into the Territories of Tyrach, where he killed all the Men, and sold the Women and Children to the Romans for slaves. Hereupon Tyrach sent the Emperour to expostulate for that being a Friend and Ally of the Patzinacæ he had received their Enemy and Fugitive, and required that he would not any more afford him any assistance for the invasion of their Country; otherwise he denounced War against him. Of this message the Emperour made very light, and laughd at it as unreasonable, whereupon the Messengers departed as they came. He wrote to Michael and Kegenes to look narrowly to the Bank of Ister, and to send him word in case any considerable Army made any attempt to pass that River, to prevent which he sent an hundred Gallies to hover about those Coasts. But to render these Gallies useless, Tyrach expected the coming of Winter and a Frost, which having crufted over the River to the thickness of fifteen Cubits, he then passed over with all the Power he could make, and with his Numbers, which amounted to eight hundred thousand Men, overwhelmed, as it were, the Roman Provinces. The Emperour having speedy notice hereof, as speedily sent away to Constantine Arianites the Magister and Governour of Adrianople, and to Basilius Monachus the General of Bulgaria, with the Forces of Macedonia and Bulgaria to join themselves with Michael and Kegenes, which accordingly they did. The Roman Armies being united, Kegenes as he saw his advantages, being better acquainted than any other with the humour of his Countrey Men, made many Assaults upon them, who having on this side the River light upon Wine and Drinks made with Honey, of which before they had never tasted, thereof drank so intemperately, that great multitudes of them died every day. This being made known to Kegenes, he prevailed with the other Captains to fall upon them now when they were distressed by Cold and Sickness; though with some Reluctancy, to engage in Fight with so great Multitudes.

135. A sudden and fierce onset being made upon them, they were so much therewith affrighted that this added to their other distress, they threw down their Arms, and yielded awell Tyrach and the most Noble, as the rest of the multitude. Kegenes very vehemently urged that they should all be put to Death, which he executed on many upon whom he light, with this saying, that A Snake is to be killed in Winter while he cannot move his Tail, lest when Summer comes (animated afresh by the heat of the Sun) he do more mischief. But the Roman Captains abhorring so great cruelty, thought fit they should be bestowed in the Desert places of Bulgaria, a Tribute put upon them, by which a good Revenue would accrue to the Emperour, and he might be furnished with Souldiers against the Turks or other Enemies. They prevailed against Kegenes, who yet to do what lay in his power, killed all he had taken except such as he could make Money of, and went his way. The rest of the multitude Basilius the Governour of Bulgaria dispersed through the Plains of Sardica, Naifus and Eutrapelus, taking from them all their Weapons lest they should afterward attempt any thing. Tyrach and an hundred and forty others were sent up to Constantinople, where they were kindly entertained by the Emperour, Baptized, had Honours and Wealth conferred on them, and lived with greater content and pleasure than formerly. But by this time the Sultan displeased by the Answer to his Message, had gathered Forces out of Persia and Babylonia, and renewed the War: Monomachus upon notice, besides other preparations caused fifteen thousand of the lately Conquered Patzinacæ to be Armed, and giving them four Commanders of those who abode at Constantinople, whom he richly presented and adorned with costly Armour, sent them on Iberia under Conduct of Constantine Hadrobalanus a Patritian. They went on their way as far as Melitena, but drawing near to Damatrys, and consulting what to do with themselves, they abhorred so much the thoughts of going into Iberia, by the Advice of Catalune one of their Officers they resolved to return back to their Countreymen, and following his example in taking the Sea with his Horse, swam over it being narrow, for they had no Boats, and by a prodigious adventure got back to Traditza. There arming their Companions as they could they did much mischief to the Roman Territories, and some of them removing to the River Ofmus, and the Countrey lying about Ister, thence they made excursions into Thrace and Macedonia, having the better of such Captains as opposed them, till at length they made a Truce with the Romans for thirty years.

136. In

136. In the mean time the Sultan was with all his Force entred into Iberia, where the Inhabitants had shut up themselves and their Wealth in the strong Towns, so that being come as far as Comium, and there understanding that the Roman Army was to Rendevouz at Cæsarea, he would not venture to proceed, but returned in great wrath because he could perform no greater things. Passing into Baaspracan or Media, and there finding all in the same posture, in Indignation he was resolved to attacke some of the Garrisons, and fell upon a City called Mantzikierte, situate in a Champion Soil, fortified by a triple Wall, and furnished largely with Water and all other necessities, of which the Inhabitants had timely provided themselves. Thinking because of its situation with ease to become Master of it, he attacked it with all forts of Engines for thirty days without intermission; but nothing could he gain upon it, the valour and industry of Basilius a Patritian the Governour, a very prudent Person frustrating all his Attempts. Wearied with the frequent Repulses he received, he purposed to raise his Siege, when Alcan the Captain of the Corasmii begged of him but to continue it one day longer, and commit it to his management, which was readily granted. By break of day Alcan having his men and all things in readines, placed the Sultan and the most eminent Persons about him on an Hill near the Eastern Gate to be Spectatours of what should follow; and then to that Gate applied all his Engines and Devices, because in that place the Wall seemed lower, and the place where he should stand somewhat higher, so that it afforded advantage to doe execution upon those within the Walls. The Army he divided into two parts, whereof the one he ordered to stand upon that Ground to shoot into the Town, the other with Forks and other rustical Instruments to bear up a sort of Engine called Laesa, and bear it to the Walls. This Laesa was a kind of Hurdle or Tent made of Boughs, and above covered with an Ox Hide, born with Feet or Pillars which stood upon Wheels. This they were to thrust to the Walls, which under covert of it they were to demolish; for he concluded that all Arrows or Darts would be kept off by the Hide above, and they might work at the Walls as he pleased, especially seeing his Archers placed upon that advantageous Ground would not permit any to appear upon the Battlements. But Basilius perceiving what he aimed at, gave order to such as were to defend the Walls not to appear nor shew themselves, but to have in readines great Stones, Arrows and Darts, and expect the sign, which was, Christ help us; and he had prepared some very great Beams which were tharped at one end. Now Alcan seemed to himself by his showers of Arrows, to have driven all from the Battlements, and therefore the Laesæ were put to the Walls, which being come so near that they could not go back, Basilius gave the watch-word, and out came they that had the guidance of the Beams, and let them fall upon the Laesæ: then did others ply them with great Stones and other things, whereby the Tops of them were quite broken, and they within were exposed to all Arrows, Darts and other things that came to Hand, and all perished, amongst whom Alcan himself: he being known by the goodness of his Armour, two Young Men issued out and by his Hair drew him in at the Gate, which done, Basilius caused his Head to be cut off and shot amongst the Turks. At the sight of it the Sultan was much troubled, and broke up his Siege, pretending he was called away by more urgent Affairs, and threatening the next spring with greater Forces to make another Journey into the Roman Territories.

137. The Emperour being solicitous about his return, and desirous to be Revenged of Aplephar, who having broken the League made with Constantine, had invaded his Dominions, gathered all the Forces of the East together, and over them appointed for Commander one Nicephorus an Eunuch, and formerly his Chaplain when a private Man, but who since had for love of the World renounced his Orders. Him he now graced with the Title of Governour and General of the Camp, and sent him into the East, not because of any valour or skill he had, but because he knew him faithfull to him. This Nicephorus proceeding as far as the Iron Bridges, as they were called, and Cantzacium, light not upon the Turks (for they upon hearing what Preparations were made against them under Command of Abimilech the Brother of Cutlunus, were returned Home) but forced Aplephar within the Walls, and wasting the Countrey, compelled him again to make Peace, and renew the League, for confirmation whereof he gave up as Hostage Artaphar the Son of Phatium his Brother, Prince of the Region of Cantzacium, whom having received, Nicephorus as having performed enough, returned to Constantinople. In the mean time the Patzinacæ, as we hinted, passing over Hæmus, and viewing the Plain which lay betwixt it and Ister, and extends it self as far as the Sea; and perceiving how well

M m m 2

The Patzinacae make fresh incursions into the Empire, upon which Kegenes is sent for to Constantinople.

well it was Wooded and Watered, there fate down (the Inhabitants called it, An hundred Hills) and thence made Incursions into the Dominions of the Empire, the Subjects of which they not a little molested. Upon this occasion Kegenes was sent for by the Emperour to Consult, and lying with his Forces in a Field near to the City, while as yet he knew not wherefore he was sent, three of the Patzinacae his Countreymen made an attempt upon his life, and wounded him by Night though not mortally, for some of his Guard coming timely in, they struck not courageously, but endeavouring to escape, as much more Assistance came in with Baltzar the Son of Kegenes, they were taken. They appealed to the Emperour; whereupon Baltzar put his Father into a Chariot with four Wheels, and after him drew them bound, and so with all his Horse, he himself, together with his Brother Gulin followed on Foot, and entered the City till they came to the Cirque, then leaving there the rest, he himself went to the Emperour. At sight of him the Emperour demanded why he had not at first put to Death the Assassins, to which he answered, because they had appealed unto him. Hereupon Monomachus grew suspicious, and sent immediately for the Men, who being asked the cause of the Attempt, affirmed they did it for his sake, and for the Empire and City, to which Kegenes was a Traitour, having a design by break of Day to have entered, killed all, and with the Plunder to return to his own Countreymen.

And is there kept Prisoner.

138. Now whereas the Emperour should have made strict Inquisition, and sifted out the matter, he gave credit to the improbable and ill coherent tales of these Fellows, and causing Kegenes to be brought to Court, under pretence of Cure and Physick, kept him close up, separated his Sons the one from the other, and pretending great kindness to his Men, and flattering them with large allowance of Meat and Drink, endeavoured by degrees, and as he could to disarm them, and commit the principal of them to custody, giving free leave in the mean time to the Assassins to go where ever they pleased. Yet thought he for all this to cover his design, though the Patzinacae proved far more cunning, and deceived the Deceiver as he thought himself. They took very thankfully what he sent them, and made shew of much contentment and obedience; but considering all these particulars they were well satisfied as to their Inclinations, and by Night got them away from the Camp, and travelling hard on the third Day by great Journeys passed the Hamus, and joined themselves with their Countreymen. Now being all united and having Arms sufficient, they came over the Mountain to a Castle called Aula, not far from Adrianople, and thence wasted the Countries adjacent, which as soon as Constantine Arrianites the Magister and General of the West understood, he drew out some Forces against them, and lighting upon some Straglers and Parties had at first the better of them, but engaging their main Body near a Fort called Dampolis, there he was defeated, with the loss of many men; and returning to Adrianople gave notice thereof to the Emperour, signifying that there was necessity of bringing another Army into the Field, and that no good could be expected from those who had been already beaten against so resolved and numerous an Enemy. The Emperour had had notice of the defeat before his Letters arrived, and had sent to Tyrach and the other Noblemen of the Patzinacae, then residing at Constantinople, whom having richly presented they engaged by Oath to pacify and quiet their Nation. He sent also for all the Forces of the East, which having passed over from Abydus and Chrysopolis, he then assigned them Nicephorus the Rectour for their Captain, to whom he joynted Catacalo the General of the East, and Ersebius a Frank Captain of his Countreymen, yet so as to be obedient to his Orders. Constantine marching with his Army over Hamus, came to a place called Diaceae, and there incamped and fortified himself, purposing the day following to leave all his Baggage there, and so with the Army disintangled from all Incumbrances to Fight the Enemy, whom he so contemned as not fearing to have the better of them, it only perplexed him how to prevent their running away, and escaping his Victorious Arms. Nay the Souldiers being as confident as their Captain; some of them had prepared Ropes and Thongs wherewith to lead away their Prisoners.

Upon which an Army is sent against them.

139. In the mean time Tyrach and the rest of the Nobility whom the Emperour had dismissed were come to the Patzinacae, and conspired with the rest for the best promotion of the Affairs of their Countrey, so far were they from accomplishing what they had sworn at their departure. Constantine consulting what was fittest to be done, Ambulus was for falling on them while they were yet dispersed and out of order, which the General out of Gallantry refused, saying that Ingeni Cedra- ni Lacuna ex Historia Scythica Europaea supplentur.

They

But is put to Flight.

So that more Forces are raised.

Which are also defeated.

A Conspiracy at home, but discovered and punished.

Kegenes recalled out of Prison.

The whole Force of the Empire engaged against the Patzinacae.

Who had the boldness to come near to Constantinople but pay for it.

They would run away into the Woods, and for his part he had no Dogs to Hunt them out. But this fault was quickly amended, for the Patzinacae drew up in order towards him, and then the next Morning he prepared to give them Battel. He himself led the middle Battel, Ambulus the Right, and Francopolus the Left Wing; but without much labour they lost the day, the Romans ignominiously betaking themselves to their Heels, only Ambulus and those about him fighting manfully were slain: the Patzinacae durst not make any considerable pursuit for fear of Ambushes, hardly imagining they could be earnest in running upon so little provocation. The Emperour at the News was much nettled, but not able to recall what he had done in the choice of a General, resolved if possible to repair the loss the following year. In the third Indiction, and the eighth year of his Reign he sent for his Army out of the Eastern Parts, which he committed to the Conduct of Constantine Captain of the Friends or Associates, and commanded him to joyn with the Forces still in Thrace, and chastize (if possible) the obstinate Patzinacae. He went to Adrianople, and there uniting his Forces, incamped himself within a Rampart; and the Patzinacae hearing of his coming, shortly after came up to him on the eighth day of June. While he was in a Council of War consulting what to doe, Samuel Burtzes one of his Officers without any orders led the Foot he Commanded, he set upon the Enemy, who far exceeding him in numbers fore distressed him, so that he sent several Messengers to the General for Assistance, who though he could have wished him punished for his rashness, yet considering it was the Emperour's business, concluded he must not neglect it, and so was constrained to give the Signal for Battel.

140. He went in to the Succour of Burtzes, but could not prevail against the obstinate Enemy, who much animated by vanquishing the Foot already, easily discouraged the Horse, so that Horse and Foot both ran ignominiously within the Rampart, and there secured themselves, after the loss of many Men and several Persons of Eminence, as Michael Doceianus a Patritian, and Constantinus Arrianites the Magister, who died on the third Day after of his Wounds. The Patzinacae besieged them in the Rampart, and had certainly taken it, but that they were discouraged by an accident, an arrow out of an Engine killing one Sultrus, and his Horse under him, when at the same time it chanced, that Glabas Nicetas drew near with some Succours from Adrianople, which they imagining to be Basilus with the Forces of Bulgaria, would not abide his coming, but dispersed themselves. While matters went thus abroad, at home in the City, a Conspiracy was discovered against the Emperour, whereof were Authours, Nicephorus and Michael the Sons of Nicephorus, with others of their Relations. Inquisition was made after all Offenders, but none were punished, but Nicephorus whose Estate was seized, and then he sent into Banishment. Monomachus rid of this Danger, set himself wholly to vindicate the Honour of the Empire against the Patzinacae. Kegenes he took out of Prison and sent him to them, he engaging to take them off from their outrageous Courses. All the Forces he could raise out of his own Subjects, and his Allies he caused to be got together, in particular the Franks and Barangi, over every Nation he appointed for Commander some Eminent Person of their own, and over all made General Nicephorus Bryennius a Patritian, whom upon this occasion he called Ethmarcb, and sent him against the Patzinacae, who now very much despising the Romans, freely and without any fear laid all waste they could come at in Macedonia and Thrace. Their Cruelty they exercised more than ever, not sparing the Infants that hung at the Breast, and some of them were so bold as to come as far as Catafrytae, not far distant from Constantinople, and were paid well for their boldness. For the Emperour set out a Party against them, collected out of his own Guards, and others under Command of Johm, surnamed Philosophus a Patritian, one of the Eunuchs belonging to the Chamber of Zoe the Empress, which falling on them by Night when drunk and sleepy, made an end of them all, and sent up Cart-loads of their Heads to Monomachus.

141. But in the mean time Kegenes to perform his promise made to the Emperour, came near to his Countreymen and sent to them to let them know his mind, to which they returning this Answer, and confirming it by Oath that they would be governed by him, he trusted and went to them, but was no sooner come, but they cut him to pieces, and those very small ones. Bryennius coming to Adrianople, took care for preservation of the Countrey; for the Emperour thinking not yet enough done, sent after him Michael a Patritian, and Acclutbus, or Captain of his Guards, with a new supply, and to have the chief Command,

but

but with Order to be careful how he engaged in Battle, and in the first place to repress the Incursions of the Enemy, into the poor harassed Countries. He accordingly, having joined with Bryennius, set upon them as they ranged in Parties. One he cut off at a Place called Goloa, and another near a Castle named Toplizus, which so discouraged them, that they dared no more to appear in the Country, lying at the Foot of Hæmus, but transferred all their Power and Rage into Macedonia, which they wasted with a select Party, able if need were to resist all opposers they could expect from thence. Bryennius and Michael having notice of this their Cunning, by Night disarmed, and keeping their Design very close, by great Marches came to Chariopolis which they entered, and as the Patzinaca merely returned home in the Evening from their Plunder, to their Camp not far from the City, in which they did not think any Army at all could be, fell upon them as they lay sleeping and secure, and easily put them to the Sword. This defeat so awed them, that for the two following years they did not range about so licenciously as formerly, but very cautiously and as it were by stealth.

142. The Emperour was in some measure freed from his apprehensions of them, but in the mean time perceived not what danger he was in from a Snake he had taken into his bosom. There was one Romanus Boilas, who being an obscure man served in the Wars, of a ready Tongue, Cedrenus tells us, but Zonaras will have him a Stammerer, not able to speak plain, which defect having received partly from Nature, he had increased by affectation and custom, thinking it seems it would make the more notice to be taken of him. With this man the Emperour, as soon as he came to the Knowledge of him, was wonderfully taken, pleasing himself exceedingly with his trifling and insignificant Wit, so as he had constant access both to him and to the Women when he pleased, and was not wanting to himself, but made use of his time and opportunities to hoard up much Wealth. This so far imboldened him, as from a mean Condition to procure the Dignity of a Senator. But his ambition disdained such moderate bounds; mean men when got into Power usually carry their Heads and Noses high, and snuffing up much of the upper Air, cannot once be brought to think of their former Friends or Condition, till an Ebb of Fortune discover their Folly to them again as well as their Original and Principles. Being Senator he was never quiet till he became the most inward Councillour, and chief Minister of the Emperour, to which having arrived, what wanted there now but to be Emperour himself, and for this vast preferment as he wanted no opportunity, (having continual access both into the Bedchamber, and other the most secret retiring Rooms) by the death of the present Prince to bring his ends about, so he thought himself abundantly meriting the Dignity, and had a Confidence large enough to bear any thing that might make for that purpose. Being then possessed with a vehement desire of reigning, he cunningly attempted all he knew to be dissatisfied with the Emperour. To such as abhorred the thought of making him away, he pretended abundance of Love, as having onely tried their Loyalty and good Affection to their Prince, to whom he would not fail to make it known. But such as approved of the thing he encouraged to the utmost, may obliged them to it by Oath, and watched for a convenient opportunity to put it in Execution. And to Execution he had put it, but that he was detected by one of the Conspirators, as he had the very Sword in his Hand, which should have done the deed. Hereupon much Inquisition was used for conviction of his accomplices, whose Estates were confiscated, and their Persons banished; but no other punishment was inflicted upon himself, but that the Emperour for some time shewed some averfence or dissatisfaction in his Company, which in a little time wore off again, and he returned to his wonted Trust and Familiarity.

143. In the mean time (to return a little into the East) the Sultan as we said bearing a mortal Spight to his Brother Abram, continually sought occasion to take away his Life, which he perceiving fled to Cutlunus his Kinsman, with whom he joined Forces and Interest to make War upon the Sultan. They gave him Battle at a Place called Pafar, but there Abram was taken Prisoner and put to death. Cutlunus with six thousand Men, and Melech Abram's Son sent to the Emperour, desiring to be received into his Protection, and in the mean time till an answer should be returned, laid siege to a Town in Perfarmania called Carfe, which he took, the Castle excepted. But the Sultan with an Army pursuing him came into Iberia, whom to avoid he fled as far as Saba and Arabia the Happy. In Iberia the Sultan laid all waste before him, to stop whose progress the

Em-

Emperour recalled Michael Acoluthus out of the West, and sent him into that Province, who there in Chaldia gathering together the dispersed Franks and Barangi, used his endeavours to repress his Motions and Hostilities. The Sultan having News of his sudden Arrival, concluded with himself that he meant to fight, and considered that should he engage and overcome the Emperour's Servant and Officer, it would not at all redound to his Honour, and should he be beaten by him it would tend exceeding much to his disrepute, whereupon he departed with all his Forces to Tabresum. At the same time Michael the Son of Stephen, and his Successor in his Principality over the Triballi and Serbi, entered into the League with the Emperour, and receiving from him the Office and Dignity of Proropatharius, was admitted a Friend and Ally of the Roman Empire. At the same time the Prince of Egypt courted him with Presents. But nothing gave him or could give him satisfaction, so long as the Patzinaca still went unpunished, to chastize whom he now again raised, and got together all the Force he could make both out of East and West, over which he appointed General Michael Acoluthus, and besides this he commanded Basilus Syncellus, with the Bulgarian Army, to join with him in the Expedition. The Patzinaca having notice of the Contrivance, incamped themselves at a Place called Great Prijfchlaeu, which they fortified by a deep Trench and a Bulwark, resolving therein to endure a Siege. And the Romans besieged them till they were weary, and began to be in distress for Necessaries, which drove them into a Consultation what was to be done. It was resolved that the Siege should be raised, and accordingly a deep silence being enjoined late at Night they departed. This was not unknown to Tyrach, who sent out a great Number to stop the ways through which they must pass, and then did he set upon them as they went at their backs whereby great Multitudes were killed, when the fled from him the other receiving, and killing them in the narrow or unknown Passages. Amongst others fell Syncellus; those that escaped got with Michael to Adrianople. The Emperour exceedingly afflicted for the perpetual Loss and Disgrace received from this People, made yet once again Preparations so great, that he resolved if possible to root them out of the Earth, making new Levies, and hiring Souldiers wherever he could. They from a Fugitive understanding his Resolutions, to divert so great a storm as was gathering, sent and desired Peace. And he condescended to a Truce for thirty Years.

144. The Truce was very seasonable, considering into what condition his great Expence had brought him. Whereas the great Charge of his Wars should have made him frugal and circumspect in other matters, it was so far from it, that the more he expended out of the Necessity, the more he would profusely and vainly cast away, the certain Argument of a weak and easie Prince. He had an ambition to appear bountifull and liberal, but in it was not the least Skill or Discrimination, not being able to distinguish betwixt Magnificence and Prodigality. In bestowing the publick Treasure, he never observed any Rules of to whom, when, or how much, and so plunged himself into so great Necessities, that by honourable or dishonourable means, by right or wrong he must have Supplies. That which was taken notice of most to beggar him, was the building of a Monastery to St. George in Mangana, as it was thought chiefly, that under pretence of visiting and overseeing the Workmen, he might have opportunity more frequently to visit his Sclerana, who followed several Games, and particularly that of Hunting in these Parts. Hereby and by his other Courses, the Treasury was quite drained, to recruit which he invented several mean, sordid and unjust Courses, employing most rapacious Fellows in the gathering the Revenue, who exacted it without any respect had to Right or Equity. And one thing there is, which makes him guilty of the Decay and Ruine of the Empire; to be sure the East was lost through his Mis carriage in this profuse way. For whereas certain Provinces, those upon the Borders especially, were free from Tribute and Impositions for this Reason, because they maintained so many Souldiers to keep the Straits, to watch the Roman Pale, and secure it from the Incursions of Barbarians, he disbanded these Souldiers, and dissolved the Garrisons of such Parts, particularly the Army of Iberia, so necessary for resistance of the Turks, consisting of fifty thousand Men, they were disbanded by Leo Serblus, on purpose to raise a Revenue out of that Country: an Act of most pernicious and infamous Consequence, which sets a Mark upon him to all Posterity, as a dreadful warning to all profuse Princes. Zoe the Empress dying at Seventy Years of Age, he howled and roared for her, and behaved himself much unlike a Man, compared her with Angels, and when

Several of their Parties being cutoff they make not their Incursions so openly as heretofore.

Another Expedition against the Patzinaca.

But with great Loss to the Empire.

At last a truce for 30 years is concluded.

Constantine the Emperour is very profuse.

He disbanded the Souldiers upon the Frontiers to the Ruine of the Empire.

Zoe the Empress dies.

A Conspiracy at home but discovered and punished.

Civil Wars among the Turks.

out of the moisture of her Tomb a Mulhrome sprung up he affirmed it an evidence sent from Heaven that she was there received amongst the intelligent Powers. But his love was so great to her that presently after her Death he made choice of another object enamoured of the Daughter of a certain Alan Prince, which then lay as an Hostage at Constantinople, that he brought her into the Palace; called her Augusta, gave her Royal maintenance, and had it not been for the Awe and respect he bore to Theodora, or especially for the Infamy of a fourth Marriage he had made her Empress and given her a Diadem. But the Domination of this new Lady was not long lived. For after his death, she was reduced into the State and condition she was in before, except she made use of her time and saved any thing, the short space that her Beauty ruled.

145. For now Monomachus grew towards his end, being almost quite spent by the Gout, which presently after his advancement so seized on his Limbs that he could neither stand nor go, but was held up or carried when ever he had occasion to stir. Afterward his intemperance toward Women increasing the distemper, the humour fell also into his Hands and upon his Shoulders, and at length tormented him throughout both in all his Joynts, and inwardly in his side, so that he could not but with great pain and trouble fetch his Breath. His case now seeming desperate both to himself and others, those that were about him consulted about a Successour. The chief Man now in favour and power was one John the Principal Logotheta, an Eunuch and otherwise a pityfull fellow, of obscure Original, and as despicable as to his parts, utterly as unfit for business as to write or speak according to true Grammar; but him the Emperour intrusted with all and designed him Prince of the Senate, having removed from the place of chief Minister one Littrudes a Person of quite different Qualifications because he was wont to deal plainly with him, and oppose any thing he knew contrary to reason. This John together with Constantine the Protonotarius Dromi, Basilus the Canicels Prefectus and others, perceiving him drawing on, put him in mind of settling matters and recommended to him Nicephorus the Proteuon (or Primat); as one might call him, but that this Title is appropriate to Ecclesiasticks as the most fit Person to succeed him, to which he assenting they sent notice to him then being at his Government in Bulgaria secretly as they thought and without the knowledge of Theodora. But he wanted not Friends to let her know their contrivance how private soever, and leaving Monomachus dying in this new Monastery she entered a Pinace and accompanied with several that were faithful to her went to the great Palace in Constantinople where she was published, declared and owned Empress by all, as right Heir to her Ancestours. This News thereof brought to Monomachus increased his distemper and he lived little longer than to testify his sorrow by a sigh, with which he ended his days after he had Reigned twelve years and eight months. That we may not dismiss him without his due commendations as well as tax him for his faults, the provision he made for the Poor, for the Aged and Strangers in his Monastery is applauded by our Writers. And whereas the Revenues of the great Church were so lost and diminished that Service was there only laid on the Lord's day, he so provided for it that Mass was there every day celebrated, and for the Communion he largely supplied the Altar with Plate, adorned with Gems and Pearl very richly. Yet his Reign is ill spoken of for the reasons above alleged, and was more taken notice of by the People for some ill Accidents that happened toward the end thereof. For in the seventh and eighth Indictions so great a Plague there raged in the City that the quick could scarcely Bury the Dead. And in the Summer of the seventh so great Tempests, that they killed both much Cattel and some Men.

146. Theodora Porphyrogenita having got possession of what the People granted to be her Inheritance, first punished those that had been for the promotion of Nicephorus, by the Confiscation of their Estates and Banishment. Then to her Eunuchs did she distribute the greatest Places and Offices in the Empire. Theodorus she makes Domestick of the Schools of the East, and sends him thither to restrain the inroads of the Turks, taking away from the Magister Isaacus Comnenus the Mastership of the Camp. For Monomachus had Transported all the Macedonian forces into the East under Macedonian Captains, amongst which was also Bryennius, a certain Rumour or Prophecy running abroad, that the Turks should be suppressed by such an Army as Alexander the Great used in Conquering the Persians. She made Nicetas the Logotheta Dromi, Manuel the Drungarius Bigla, and for his great abilities she employed Leo Strabospondylus as her Master of State, who had formerly served the Emperour Michael. Assisted by these and other Officers though she was very,

very old, yet would she govern her self, and refused to make any Emperour. To Leo she committed the chief management of all affairs; but she her self would sit upon the judgment seat, give Audience and answer to Ambassadors, create Magistrates, pronounce Laws, and interpose her Opinion and Resolution both in publick and private matters: and her Government succeeded well enough. For against her no man opposed himself, nor disobeyed her, and she maintained her Authority seizing the Estate and banishing Bryennius because upon hearing of the Death of Monomachus he had with the Macedonians under his command removed to Chrysopolis without her orders. No Nation made War upon her, neither did any publick Calamity happen in her time, the seasons of the year being all good and natural. Though old as she was yet being of a strong constitution and able enough for business, she promised her self many years. But though herein she flattered her self and was flattered into this belief, it's said, by a Monk, yet e'er two years came to an end the found she was deceived, being seized with the Black Palfion, a disease always dangerous, and which caused the Physicians to despair of her recovery. Then did those about her consider whom to prefer to the Government by whom these happy days might be continued. They pitched upon Michael Stratoticus one of Constantinople, innocent and harmless, but utterly unfit for such an employment both in respect of his ignorance, for from his youth he had only been used to War; and his great Age, for he was very Decrepit. But the Eunuchs and Leo judging him fit for their turn because they could govern him at their pleasure, they persuaded Theodora to make him Emperour, which she did by adorning him with a Diadem, after he had given his Oath to do nothing without their knowledge and consent. These matters finished Theodora ended her Life when she had Reigned one year and nine months about the end of August.

Naming Michael Stratoticus for her Successour dies.

Michael Emperour.

Against whom Theodora dies the President sets up.

But is punished for his folly.

147. Michael Stratoticus by her death became Emperour and Monarch, and was for such declared on the last day of August in the ninth Indiction, A. D. M. LVI. As soon as the News of his promotion came to the Ears of Theodosius the President, the Cousin German of Monomachus he was thereby so much disturbed as not considering the difficulty of the thing he undertook nor what danger he incurred, he got together his dependants, Servants and such of his Friends laid things little to heart, and in the Evening with that Train at his Heels passed up the Streets from his House toward the Palace, crying out that he was injured, and that the Empire of right descended upon him as being next in Blood to the late Emperour. Coming to the Prætorium he broke open the Prison, and let out the Malefactors to assist him, which he did also at Chalce. In the mean time the Eunuchs in the Palace having received the Alarm made what Preparations they could to suppress him, both by Land and Water, which he understanding turned from the way leading thither and went to the great Church where he hoped to be received and owned by the Patriarch and Clergy. But things fell out quite otherwise; for when he came to the Church, they shut the Doors upon him; and though upon occasions of Innovation many people used to flock and run together, yet none now appeared, and on the contrary such as had appeared for him began by degrees to desert him and fall off. So that at length being by all deserted he betook himself with his Son to the Church, not as a Prince but a suppliant, and was thence taken away very speedily and confined to Pergamus as a place of Banishment. After which sort the chiefest of those who had taken part with him were punished. And for his folly he became a Song to the ordinary fort.

148. Stratoticus thus freed from this rash Adventurer was Emperour without the contradictions of any. To shew that he was govern'd by those that rais'd him, such things as they understood he did very well, but in such matters as he himself had been continually versed none did ever worse. The Senators as they were Men of interest and influence he promoted, such generally as were not fit for so great Employments as those to which he preferred them; using the same course and method to Men of more ordinary Rank. But as to military Men, he acted quite otherwise, his own Companions, nay his equals once, Men of considerable commands in the Armies. To these Officers when they came into the City he did not shew the least respect either by act or deed, and the two principal he much disguised, Men both of them of great Nobility, bearing the Title of Magister, and by their skill and actions having as much Reputation as their places were usually capable of. These were Isaacus Comnenus and Ambulius Catacale, the latter of which in a meeting of Officers in Easter (when the Emperour's bounty was wont to appear towards Men of this quality and Employment) he deprived of his Government of Antioch, and into his place immediately put Micha-

N n n

cl

Constantine Monomachus dies, Theodora is declared rightful Emperress.

She settles her Government.

el his Kinsman whom at the same time he preferred to the Dignity of a Magister, giving to him the surname of Uranus that he might seem to derive his Descent from that Noble Family. Catacalo he accused as having very badly discharged his Office, in that the Numbers of Souldiers were diminished in his time, and he gave no content to those that had business with him; and when the most Ancient and most eminent Officers of the Army stood up in his Defence he fell into opprobrious Language both against him and them, wherein he did not spare Comnenus. This carriage very much discouraged some and provoked others of the Army, who could hear of the Liberality of this new Emperour unto others but not receive so much as one good word from him themselves, though Men of his own Profession; yet did they not thence conceive so great Indignation as to Plot or design any thing against him till another Tryal. So Writes Zonaras, from whom Cedrenus differs in this that he gave Comnenus and Catacalo ill Language, for he Writes that he gave them two good words, but would not gratifie them in any thing they desired. And he farther instances in others he disoblged. Bryennius he recalled out of Banishment, gave him the command of the Cappadocians, and with the Macedonian Legions sent him against the Turks, a Commander of whom Samuch by name, now much infested the Borders of the Empire. But when he earnestly desired him to have his Estate restored which Theodora had taken from him he refused, and when still more importunately he urged him to it, he put him off with that Common saying, that Wages are not to be required till the work be done, whereby he so exasperated him that he expected but an opportunity to be revenged.

The Turks infest the Borders of the Empire

Erbebius Revolts to the Turks.

149. Imprudent also was his carriage to Francopolus Erbebius who had done very good service under Maniaces in Sicily, and studied the Interest of the Empire. He desired of him to be Honoured with the Dignity of a Magister, which he not onely refused to confer on him, but with Scoffs and much scorn rejected him, which Affront being a Barbarian (saith our Writer) and impatient in his nature, he took so heinously that not thinking what others were attempting, to be revenged he got him Home into Armenia, and drawing over to him three hundred of those Franks that served the Emperour went into Media and joyned himself with Samuch the Turk to make War upon the Romans. For some time they accorded, but at length as commonly it happens differences arose, and were multiplied betwixt the two several Nations, and they began to Plot, and contrive means how to affront and at last to destroy each other. Samuch seemed to carry it fair, but Erbebius never trusted him, but dayly expected the Turks would make some attempt upon him and his Men, whom he charged ever to look to themselves, not so much as to Sleep or Eat but with their Weapons at hand. At length the thing broke out and the Turks set upon the Franks as they were at Dinner who aware of their coming and having their Horses ready, instantly mounted, fought with and defeated them, killing the greater part; the rest escaped into a Town not far off called Chlear. Erbebius after the pursuit was earnest for returning to their Camp, but it happening that there being a League and friendship betwixt him and the Ameras of that Town, his Men would needs go thither to refresh themselves. He most vehemently endeavoured to dissuade them, urging that they were by no means to trust those that were of a different Religion and Nation, who would make no difficulty at all of breaking their Oath, they counting it a matter of Piety and Merit to kill as many Christians as they could. But there was no good to be done, they continued obdurate, and he was forced to go with them into the Town, all he could doe was to beg of them to be vigilant and careful, always to be upon their Guard. But they once got in fell to their Baths and Cups which invited Aponasar the Ameras to take the advantage offered him, so that Communicating his Design with Samuch and the Saracens living thereabouts, he gave secret orders to those that lodged the Franks to lay hold of and bind fast their Guests, or if that could not be done to kill them. The sign being given, some accordingly they make fast and others they kill; the rest escaping by leaping down from the Walls. Erbebius was taken and kept as a Prisoner. This advantage the Ameras made of what he had done to curry favour with the Emperour. He sent him word he was at his service and in Testimony of the Reality thereof, had destroyed those that had been Traitors to him, and at present had their Captain fast in Prison.

But is suppressed and taken by the Ameras of Chlear.

150. But Stratoticus his rough and crabbed Carriage produced such effects in a short space that he had but small cause to rejoice at the Calamity of the Franks. The Eastern Officers being rejected by him as was said now betook themselves to Leo Strabopondylus the Protosyncellus and chief manager of affairs under under him desiring his mediation in their behalf that they might not be the onely Men that must be neglected, and not taste of his Liberality, which they could not but take notice was very large towards others, who had neither watch nor fought as they had done, and endured all manner of hardships from their very Childhood. Leo heard them and had so much of the Courtier as to commend every Man a part and speak of his valour and Merits; but did nothing of their business, submitting to the Emperour's humour who would neither allow them good deeds nor good words, which at a small expence he might have done. This made them outrageous so as first to revile Stratoticus one to another, and from reproachfull words to pass to exhortations to stand by one another, and revenge so great Injustice, which Combination they confirmed by Oath secretly in the Church. By the advice of Ambustus they Communicated their Design to Bryennius as one who could assist them with a numerous Army, and easily gained his concurrence. When they consulted whom to prefer to be Emperour, Ambustus had all their suffrages, as one who by his Age, valour and experience excelled all others, but he really adverse to the burthen; named Isaacus Comnenus as the fittest Person they could chuse, and to him they all assented; which done and confirmed by Oath they received Provisions from the Emperour and departed each to his Quarters as was imagined. Amongst the rest Bryennius went to his charge and with him was sent John Opfaras a Patritian with Gold to pay his Souldiers. Bryennius at the Muster required so much to be given to every Souldier, which John refused, affirming he would fully obey the Emperour's Orders, and contending together about this matter Bryennius grew so Angry that he fell upon him and pulling him down to the Ground by his Hair and Beard soundly buffeted him, which done he committed him to Custody and afterward distributed the Gold to his Souldiers as he pleased. At that time it happened that Lycantes a Patritian who commanded the Licanians and Pyfidians was near at hand with his Forces, and hearing what had happened, concluded with himself that none but one who Aimed at the Sovereignty it self would have committed such an Arbitrary and Insolent Act, and being utterly ignorant of what the other Commanders of the East had resolved, with a sufficient power fell upon the Camp of Bryennius, took him and delivered him into the Hands of Opfaras whom he had set at liberty, who colouring his Revenge with a pretence of Loyalty put out his Eyes and sent him to the Emperour together with the Relation of what had passed.

Michael's unkindness to the Souldiers makes them conspire against him.

Saluting Isa-acus Comne-nus Empe-
rour.

151. But the chief Officers of the Eastern Parts, such as Romanus Sclerus, Burtzes, Bataneiater, the Sons of Basilus Argyrus and the rest understanding what had passed, having hitherto concealed their Inclinations, and expected the time when to stir, when they heard what had befallen Bryennius concluded that upon Examination he would reveal the conspiracy, and therefore thought it safest to prevent such a discovery by a timely rising. They all went into Paphlagonia to Castamo the House of Comnenus, and compelled him to go along with them to a spacious Plain called Gwaria, whither from all parts adjacent they sent for the Souldiery, and then by universal consent saluted him Emperour on the eighth day of June in the tenth Indiction. Having taken the Title he incamped himself as strongly as he could in the place, expecting the forces of the rest of the Conspirators, especially of Ambustus, at whose slowness he conceived some diffidence, which was shortly changed into a supposed certainty by a Message he received that he had changed his mind, broken his (unlawfull) Oath, and resolving to adhere to Stratoticus was gathering together an Army for suppression of the Confederates. This mightily perplexed Comnenus when he considered how dangerous an Enemy he should have at his Back, and therefore fortifying himself in his Camp he resolved not to stir till he heard farther. But Ambustus had not changed his mind, but mistakes caused disorder on both sides. For Ambustus in his way from Constantinople meeting one of the Emperour's Messengers had sent a blunt message by him to Nicetas the Logotheta Dromi which sufficiently discovered the Design; and when he came into the East and found not Comnenus stirring or as it seemed at all concerned, he imagined that he and the rest had changed their Resolutions and would declare nothing, so that he should be left to shift for himself alone, and be condemned out of his own Mouth. Therefore he was much concerned how to avoid the Danger; for he neither had any Army in readiness, those Forts he had being unable to grapple with the Emperour, neither had he had any Communication as yet with the other Souldiers of the Eastern parts that lay about his Government, therefore not knowing how to trust them he had been very slow and wary in Preparations, and this was the cause of his Delay. Besides, there lay near him in their Winter Quarters, two Regiments of Franks and one of Ressians, of which he stood in great fear, left upon discovery of his Design they should seize him, and send him to the Emperor. But when by Degrees he thought he had secured himself, then first he broke his mind to his Servants and Dependents, and having got about him about a thousand Men, then he try'd the Inclinations of such as he could less trust, first to bring over the Officers and Governours, and then the ordinary sort. He counterfeited Letters as from the Emperor, by which he was ordered with three Regiments of the Associates, and two of the Colonienses and Chaldeans, to go against Samuel. Those with their Officers, he either by Promises or Threats procured to take the Military oath to him, and having furnished himself with an Army of several Nations, then marcht towards Comnenus, having sent to let him know he was on his way.

152. Comnenus distrustfull and much out of heart before, was much elevated by this Message, and having joined his Forces with his, now set about his Work as being out of Danger. Yet did he commit his Wife and his Treasure, to his Brother John to be kept in a Castle called Pemolisa, seated on a Rock near the River Alys. He having taken order for raising of Money throughout the East, and appointed his Receivers, passed the River Sangarius, and being every where received with applause and acclamations by slow Journeys moved toward Nice, which he desired to get into his Hands to be a Receptacle for him upon occasion, and therefore he gave time to those that had adhered to the Emperor to remove from it, which they did as soon as they heard of his coming, the Souldiers to their particular Homes to look to the Safety of their Houses, Wives and Children, and the Officers to the Emperor with News of what happened, amongst whom the most eminent was Lycanthus, Captain of the Eastern Troops, Theophilast Maniaces and Pneminus Iberus, Captains of the Troops of the Charfiani. Stratoticus having Intelligence of the Revolt made by almost the whole Force of the Empire, yet refused to offer any Conditions of Peace, but prepared for a vigorous resistance. All the Western Regiments he sent for, and gave the Command of them to Macedonians, Persons of greatest Quality and Experience in matters relating to War, and now most wisely he Courted both Officers and Souldiers, presenting them with good Gifts. In the same manner he treated the Charfiani, and such of the Eastern Forces as had not revolted, of whom he appointed Commander Theodorus the Domestick of the East, the Eunuch of Theodora the Empress, joining with him Aaron Ducas the Magister, Brother to Comnenus his Wife, a Man of a very great experience. These being sent against the Revolters came to Nicomedia, and thence sent some to break down the Bridge of Sangarius, that Comnenus being forced to go about, they might be sure not to miss him. From Nicomedia they removed to the Mountain Sopbo, and there incamped themselves, and prepared for Fight. Comnenus having notice hereof immediately got into Nice, and there left all his Baggage and Carriages, and having strongly fortified the City, removed and incamped himself some twelve Furlongs distant from it towards the North. The Armies being near together, several Parties of them knowing one another used Arguments on both sides to draw off their opposites, these of the Emperor's side reviling Comnenus as a Traitor, and they of his Party despising the Emperor, as a despicable dotting old Man, ruled by Eunuchs.

153. The Captains on both sides at first encouraged this Discourse, but when Comnenus found that it did no good, he would not permit his Men so freely to go abroad, which the Domestick and the Macedonians especially judged to proceed from fear, and therefore resolved to give him Battel. The rest assenting, they removed and pitched at a Place called Petroa, some fifteen Furlongs distant from the Enemy. Comnenus his Men now calling for Battel aswell as they he led out, and prepared to fight. The left Wing he committed to Ambulfus, the right to Romanus Sclerus, and he himself led the middle Battel. The Domestick and Aaron in forming their Battalia committed their left Wing to Basilus Trachaniotes, then Captain of the West, and the most eminent of all the Macedonians, and the right Wing Aaron led himself assisted by these Officers, Lycanthus, Pneminus and Randolph the Patritian a Frank. They fought in a Place called Ades by the Inhabitants, and at first Aaron seemed to have gotten the Day, for he beat the opposite Wing, took Romanus Sclerus Prisoner, and drove them back as far as their Camp, which he might have taken, and obtained a full Victory had he not been too cautious, for Comnenus had also the worst of it, and had thoughts of flying back to Nice. But Ambulfus bore down all opposite to him where he fought, and

Who marching towards Nice.

Causeth Michael the Em-perour to send for the Western Forces to engage him.

Whom a Bat-tel ensued.

In which Comnenus had the better.

The Emperour offering Conditions to him.

But not intending to perform them.

But is forced to it by the Revolters and the Patriarch.

and pursuing them to their Camp broke into it, and having plundered their Tents cut them down, which fight so animated Comnenus and his Souldiers, and on the contrary discouraged the Souldiers of Aaron, that the Emperor's Party was defeated, a great Multitude falling in the Fight, and especially of Macedonians both Officers and Souldiers; and not a few were taken Prisoners. This ill Success so perplexed Michael, that he had sent to Comnenus and offered to lay down, if those about him had not kept him from it, and urged him rather to dye than quit the Supreme Dignity. However certain of the chiefest Senators, and Men of the greatest Wisdom were sent to treat with him, viz. Constantine Leichudes, Theodorus Alopis who had both the Title of Proedri or Presidents, and Constantine Pfellus chief of the Philosophers, who offered him to be adopted Cesar, and Pardon and Indemnity to all his Followers. The Souldiers would not hear of this, nor permit as they said, that their General should be seen in an Habit inferior to what he wore at present, which yet they were thought to speak more out of Flattery than Design. However Comnenus took the Messengers aside and told them as a secret, that he should very willingly admit of their Proposals, provided the Emperor would indulge him some of his Power, so as to be able to reward those that had served him.

154. And Zonaras reports, that to deceive his Souldiers he gave them two several Answers in Writing, of which that which was made known, with Scorn rejected the Conditions, but the other accepted them. The old Man was overjoyed to hear of his Acceptance, and returned, that it should not be long before he took him to be his Colleague in the Empire, though for some Reasons at first he must defer it. With which Message he sent the Senators back together with Promise of Confirmation of what had been granted before, and of establishing the Officers of Comnenus in their present Employments. Comnenus and all the rest liked well enough of it, and required a Confirmation by a Golden Ball; only Ambulfus opposed, who would by all means have the old Man deposed, and contended that whom they had already depriv'd by Oath, they could not without Perjury re-admit to the Throne, and he urged that if they laid down their Arms, the Issue would be that Comnenus would be poyson'd, and they for their shares should have their Eyes pull'd out of their Heads. And to this Cedrenus adds, that the Senators themselves did prevaricate and perfwade Ambulfus, that he should thus oppose the Articles of the Treaty, and moreover made Comnenus to believe, that the People at Constantinople did greatly affect him, where should he but once shew his Face, the old Man would quickly be deposed, and he be put into his place with universal satisfaction and applause. While thus the Negotiation was disturbed, the Emperor himself by his false and underhand dealing, went about to prevent what he had so readily promised, and by endeavouring to keep by deceitfull means lost all. By gifts aswell as good words and promises, he now endeavoured to oblige all the People, and having so made his way caused both Senators, and the Citizens to subscribe a Writing, and take an Oath with direfull Imprecations, that they would never give to Comnenus the Title of Emperor, nor own him for their Sovereign Lord, which they took being overpowered, and Comnenus far distant as yet from the City. But he being now come nearer, and lodging at Damatrys within less than a Days Journey, by break of day several Senators and others came to the great Church, and required the Patriarch to come to them to consult of an important Affair. The Patriarch shut his Doors, and refused to come to them, but sent two of his Kinsmen to know their business, on whom the Company by this time much increased laid hands, and threatened to strangle them except he would come down. Hereat he came down in Pontificallibus, as he pretended unwillingly, though some were of opinion that he did but counterfeit, and they compassing him about required him to go from them to the Emperor, and demand back again the Writing which they had subscribed, for seeing he had declared Comnenus should be his Successor, they must either incur Perjury or very much danger by opposing him. The Patriarch bid them be of good cheer, and gave them good words, and this appeared also to be a pretended and feigned business. For omitting this they shortly after declared by Common consent, Comnenus to be Emperor, and all that opposed him should lose their Estates, and be accounted Enemies of the Roman Empire. This the Patriarch procured and decreed in the Church, and sent Messengers both to Comnenus and Stratoticus, to the one that he would haste to the City, and to the other that he would resign, and depart from the Palace which did not belong to him; whereby he shewed that he had been the the Authour and Principal caufe of the Revolt. The Bifhops or Metropolitans, as Cedrenus calls them, that went to Stratoticus, delivering their Message, he demanded what the Patriarch would give him in exchange for the Empire, to which they replied The Kingdom of Heaven, whereupon he put off the Purple and Violet shoes, and took the Habit of a private Man; although Cedrenus idly thinks the Patriarch's promise to have been scarcely valid, except he had returned to a private Life at the beginning of the Defection, and thereby prevented the effusion of fo much Bloud as had been fhed before his constrained Refignation; as if a lawfull Prince was bound to give way to an Ufurper. Stratoticus being departed to his own Houfe in the Caffe, after he had Reigned one year, Ambulfus Curopalates by order of Comnenus, the next Day being the laft of Auguft, in the Tenth Indiction, A. D. M.LVII. together with many Noblemen took poffeffion of the Palace. At Evening Comnenus himfelf made his Entry, and the next Day being the firft of September, in the Eleventh Indiction, going in a folemn Proceffion to the great Church, and there being on a Scaffold crowned by the Patriarch, was declared Emperour of the Romans. Here the Hiftory of Cedrenus leaves him and us.

155. Iftacius Comnenus having obtained the Empire, is faid to have afcribed it not to Almighty God but himfelf, and his military skill, which they thence gather, becaufe he immediately caufed Money to be ftamped with his Image, holding a drawn Sword. But fuch Men as had affifted him he largely rewarded, and took care when they had their Money that they departed home, left being together in the City they fhould devife fome new thing, and make any Commotion amongft the People. The Patriarch he exceedingly Reverenced, and highly preferred his Nephews. Whereas the provifion of things for the Church formerly belonged to the Oeconomus, and Keeper of the Veffels, whom the Emperour was wont to Name; for his fake left the Difpofition of thefe matters abfolutely to the Patriarch. His Wife he now named Emrefs, and to his Brother John gave the Offices of Curopalates and Grand Domeftick. Whereas he took notice that his Predeceffours ever fince the time of Bafilius Porphyrogenitus, had ill diftributed and employed the Revenue, making odd Affignments, as of fome to Monafteries and the reft to the gratifying of their pleafures and Appetites whereby the Treafury was ever kept empty, he would doe this not by degrees, as a good States-man imitates a skillfull Phyfician, but on a fudden and all at once, as if he had ftamped the Sword in his Hand upon the Coin, not fo much to fignifie what a Fighter, but a Reformer and Cutter of ill Members and Diftempers from the Commonwealth he meant to be. The Afts of Stratoticus he abrogated without deftinction, took away all he had given, and not only his, but the Afts of other Emperours he refcinded, therein fparing neither the Senatour, if concerned nor thofe of the Common fort. Daily in thofe courfes he grew more fevere, and at length fell upon the Monafteries to which he affigned onely Neceffaries, and took the reft of their Revenues to his own ufe. By thefe means he incurred the Odium of all forts, and forgetting on what Rock his Predeceffour had fplit of Souldiers as well as of the reft, no advice, reprehenfion, fear or hatred being of power fufficient to refrain him. As for reprehenfions he wanted them not, the Patriarch being very infolent in that Point, that if he had not what he asked he would not onely upbraid him, but threaten as he had fet him up to pull him down again, which he not brooking, and to prevent mifchief Banifhed the Prelate together with his Nephews, whom yet he reftored to their former Dignities again, when fhortly after their Uncle died. He preferred to be Patriarch Conftantine Lichudes the Prefident and Proveftiarius, but not till fuch times as he had wrung out of his Hands the Charter of Privileges and Immunities granted by Monomachus, to his Monaftery of Mangana.

156. He had fome Bickerings with the Hungarians and Patzinaca, both of whom without much trouble asked Peace. But as he lay at the end of September at Lubrius, fo great a quantity of Rain and Snow fell, that he and his Army were both in danger to mifcarry, and he was juft but removed from under a great Oak when the Tree fell, for which to teftifie his Deliverance he built a Church to St. Theila, on whole Day he efaped the Danger, but fuch a Building as teftified the meannefs of his Spirit, which his Coufin and Succellour John the Son of Alexius afterward repaired moft Magnificently, in the Name of our Saviour Jesus Chrift. Not long after Comnenus deftined himfelf of the Empire, which how it came about, Writers do not agree. Moft faid that as he was Hunting, he was blafted with a Wind or with Lightning, and thence contracted fuch a

Comnenus lays down, and chufes Conftantine Ducas for his Succellour.

Diftemper, that defpairing of Recovery, and fenfible how he came by his Power, to Obliterate his Offence in fome manner, he laid down what he had unjuftly taken up. And in the choice of a Succellour he would not be fwayed by any carnal report, neither making choice of John his Kinfinan, Theodorus Doctianus his Sifter's Son, nor his Daughter's Husband, but pitched upon Conftantine Ducas the Prefident, whom he thought very fit and able for the difcharge of fo great a Place, and then retired into a Monaftery, where he difcharged all the meaneft Offices, and lived the remainder of his Days, after he had Reigned two years and three months. A Man, to fpeak of his good as well as bad qualities, very Stout, arrogant in his Difpofition, very quick in difpatch of Bufinefs, and moft skillful in Military matters; not Learned himfelf, but a lover and encourager of Learned Men. A Man exceeding Chaff, infomuch as being from Home falling ill, and told by Physicians that the Company of a Woman would relieve him, he refufed utterly to meddle with any other than his own Wife, whofe Name was Acatharina, a Lady very Vertuous and Religious. When his Ambitious affecting the Empire was objected to him, he faid, that, He could not bear the Reign of a Fellow-Servant who denied him his juft Reward.

Conftantine Ducas Empe-
rour.

157. Conftantine (Ducas) the Twelfth of that Name, thus without any trouble became Emperour of Conftantinople, in the thirteenth Indiction, A. D. M.LX. He began his Reign with a Promotion of feveral Perfons, and Reftitution of thofe whom Comnenus had fpoiled of their Dignities. Yet was his Life prefently laid at by fome Conspiratours, who to make him come by Boat out of the Countrey where he was diverting himfelf, made a ftory be told him that there was an Infurrection in the City; and then had corrupted the Mafters of his Gally, called Protocarabi to Drown him. He hearing of the Tumult hafted indeed to Conftantinople; but it happened that his Gally was not then at Hand, fo as he took another Boat, and the Conspiratours meeting, it refolved to run over his Boat, and fo to fink him, which they were attempting, when thofe in the Veffel with him by their loud cries and warning fo affrighted the Rowers, that they had no power but to obey. Yet upon Difcovery of the Treafon, he contented himfelf onely by confifcating the Eftates of the Traitours. He boafed himfelf to be Defended of the Family of the Ancient Ducas, Andronicus Pantheus and Conftantine, but that Family when Conftantine affected the Empire, was fubverted in the Reign of Conftantine the Son of Leo the Philofopher, yet under Age, no Heirs Male being left; fo that his Anceftours were faid to claim from a Woman, and he was thought no Genuine and true Ducas, but as it were fuch by adulteration, and therefore by moft was by way of Diminution not called Duca but Ducica. But he was a Man Pious towards God, of good Morals, and a lover of Juftice: of none of the quickft Wits, but a lover of plain dealing and fincere Men, but loved Money exceedingly; and it was his care how to invent ways of encreafing his Treafure. Two things therefore he efpecially employed himfelf in: in encreafing the Publick Revenue, by felling Places, and new farming out the Customs; and in hearing of Caufes and deciding Controverfies, wherein he did not always obferve the Prefcript of Laws, but fometime ufed his Will for Law, and otherwhiles had refpect to Perfons. And as he was hard and tenacious, this was his Maxim, "By no means to make War, but by fair means to take off all Nations from their Hoftilities, both to fave the great expence of Expeditions, and that he might not be diverted from attending the Trade of getting Money. This caufed him to neglect his Mufters, and even to Difband the moft Valiant and fit for Service, as it happened, whereby the Barbarous Nations grew more bold, and got Ground of this Roman Empire.

He is exceeding Covetous even to the almoft ruine of the Empire.

The Uxi in-felt the Empire.

158. In the Eaft fome of the Provinces were haraffed, and fome fubdued by the Neighbouring Nations: neither were thofe of the Welt in a good condition, becaufe the Souldiers were both few and lazy. The Uxi a Scythian People having Beaten and taken Prifoners Magifter Nicephorus Batanates and Magifter Bafilus Apocapes paffed the River Ifter, and having waited all the Countrey near to it, proceeded into Macedonia, and thence into Greece, making havock of all things, which though it much troubled the Emperour, yet that he might not fpend any thing would he not raife any Forces, faying, that The Enemy could not be Beaten back, but endeavoured by Gifts to take off their Captains. But being reviled for fuffering the Empire out of his miferablenefs to mifcarry, he marched out of the City againft the Enemy, but as is reported, with no more than an hundred and fifty Men, and for getting more, and Conquering the Barbarians, betook himfelf rather to his Prayers than any other means, and they fo well fucceeded, that

Upon which Michael Stra-toticus re-figns, and Iftacius Comnenus affumes
the Government.

He is very fevere.

He had fome Skirmifhes with the Hungarians and Patzinaca.

But are destroyed by the Patricians and Bulgarians.

Constantine being Sickly appoints his three Sons, Constantine, Michael and Andronicus under the tution of their Mother Eudo-cia to succeed him.

And dies, A.D.
M. LXVII.

that when he was considering how to raise an Army, News was brought, that there was no Enemy left against which to send it; for the Patricians and Bulgarians had fallen upon the Uzi, wearied and weakened, and had utterly cut them off, their Captains hardly escaping over Ister. This happened in the sixth year of his Reign, preceded by a great Earthquake which happened on the twenty third of September, by which many Churches and Houses were overturned. In the month of May, the fourth Indiction appeared a Comet, following the Sun, at first of the bigness of the full Moon, but as its Tail increased, so the Body of it seemed to diminish: it was seen for forty days with its Tail turned toward the East. By this time the Emperour had contracted a Disease, which made him despair of life, and to apply himself to settle matters relating to the Government and Succession. By Eudocia his Wife he had three Sons, whereof Michael and Andronicus when a private Man, but Constantine after he was Emperour, who upon this account was the only Porphyrogenitus, and for that cause was first adorned with Ensigns of Empire. Afterwards he named Emperours the other two, and left the Empire to them all, but Named his Wife their Empress and Lady, and left the management of Affairs to her, for which she seemed to him fit, as well as for the Education of her Children: but first he took an Oath from her committed to Writing, and left with the Patriarch, that she would not Marry again: as he exacted the like from the Senators, that they would admit none but his Sons for Emperours. He had made his Brother Cæsar, and used him as his Councillour and Assistant in his most important and secret business. Though he himself was unlearned, yet he revered Learned Men, being wont to say, that He had rather been enabled by Learning than Sovereignty. For such as conspired against him he said he would use them no worse than to use them for Slaves, the Laws having deprived them of Liberty. Dying after a Reign of seven years and six months, leaving (as we said) the Administration to his Wife, so that as we began the Second Part of our History with a Constantine, we conclude this with one; and as we began this Part with a Woman, at the Time of Charles the Great, so now we end at one in the Year M. LXVII. the year following the Conquest of England by Duke William the Norman.

F I N I S.

THE TABLE.

- A Basilians are forced to submit to the Romans 422, Renew the League 425.
Adaluald King of the Lombards in Italy 44, is deposed 45.
Africa subject to the Saracens is seized by the Turks 447.
Egypt subject to the Saracens 446, is overrun by the Turks 447.
Ella arrives in Britain 95, is King of the South Saxons 139, begins the Civil Wars 170, dies 140.
Agilulf King of the Lombards 40, Demolisheth Padua and other places 42, crowns his Son 43, dies 44.
Aistulf King of the Lombards seizes on the Exarchate 62, invades the Roman Territories 63, but is forced to quit them by Pipin.
Aldermen the several sorts of them 275, and 281.
Ale and Alehouses the Antiquity of them here 317.
Allalengium what 416.
Alexander Emperour his Character and Death 380.
Alfred the first anointed King of the English Saxons in Britain 197, his Wars and Peace with the Danes 198, is deposed by them 199, recovers his Kingdom and renews the Peace 200, dies 203, his Character 104, his Wife and Children 207, his Laws 297.
Amalus 11.
Amalasuntha 35.
Amazons why so feigned 15.
Amphibalum what 103.
Angli their first Seats where 123, the Name whence 124, their Possession here 132.
Angles-East their Kingdom here 157, to the ruin of it 158.
Angles-Mercian their Kingdom here 159, to the end of it 167, the valuation of them 307.
Angles-Northumbrian their Kingdom here 143, the division of it 145, and end 156.
Arabs invade the Empire 343, making other inroads are suppressed 416, again 427.
Aremorica seized on by the Britains 107, who fix there 108.
Aribert the first King of the Lombards 47, who divides the Kingdom and dies, ibid.
Aribert the second 53, is drowned 55.
Ariold 45, dies 46.
Arthur King of the Britains 97, his Wars 98, 99, death and interment 101.
Asgardiani who 8.
Aspracavia or upper Media submits to the Empire 419, is invaded by the Turks 447, again 448.
Aspurgiani who 8.
Assyria subject to the Saracens 446, is overcome by the Turks 447.
Athalarick King of the Ostrogoths in Italy 34, dies 35.
Athelstan Monarch of the English Saxons 216, invades Scotland 217, kills the King thereof 218, forces the Welsh King to pay him Tribute 219, dies 220, his Laws 304, &c.
Attrebatii who 133.
Aurelius Ambrosius King of Britain 92, his Wars with the Saxons 93, he dies 95.
Austria what 56.
Auchari King of the Lombards in Italy 38, his Conquest 39, Death 40.
- B Babylon inhabited by the Persians 410, but still subject to the Saracens 446, is seized on by the Turks 447.
Bardas the Usurper is shaven 342.
Bardas Phocas General of the East usurps 401.

The TABLE.

401, but is forced to take Orders 402, recall'd 409, and made General against Sclerus 410, is saluted Emperour 411, but poisoned 413.
 Bardas Sclerus usurps 407, defeats the Emperour's Forces 408, seizes on the City of Nice 409, is beaten and imprisoned at Babylon 410, released 412, sets up again, but after quitting his pretensions 413, is kindly received by the Emperour 414.
 Basilus his Pedigree 369, made Emperour 368, wastes the Territories of Militene and Manichees 369, invades Syria 370, relieves the Western part of the Empire 371, his Wars in the East 372, Crimes laid to his charge 373, he dies 374, new models the Civil Law 380.
 Basilus Son to Romanus crown'd 393, succeeds with his Mother 394, begins to reign 407, invades Bulgaria 413, defeats their Army 416, his Character 417, after several other expeditions he reduces Bulgaria under the obedience of the Empire 420, returns to Constantinople 422, forces the Abalgians to submit, ibid. dies 423.
 Belgæ who 133.
 Bernici the several Kings thereof 145, its Limits 155.
 Bertard King of the Lombards in Italy 47, dies 51.
 Bocland what 283, the manner of passing it, and by whom tenable 285, its difference with Folcland 286, its jurisdiction and privileges 287.
 Boetius his Character 31.
 Breden what 209.
 Brigantes who 133.
 Britains their Character then 83, and 111, their Language 106, their famous Men 112, their Country how then call'd 114, an account of them that were expelled by the Saxons, Angles and Jutes 133, their Country called England 187.
 Bulgari invade the Roman Pale 343, fall upon Mesymbria 346, and defeat Michael the Emperour 347, are beaten by Leo 348, raise the siege of Constantinople for Michael Balbus 354, quarrel with the Empire 375, which ends in a Peace 376, another quarrel with them 381, incamping near Constantinople 382, besieging Adrianople 383, thence to Constantinople again 384, they make fresh incursions 386, laying siege to Adrianople 387, invading Macedonia are met and a League struck up with the Romans 388, Civil Wars at home 389, the League with the Romans renewed 394, their Country invaded by the Russians 340, seized on by them 400, invaded by the Empire 401, their King taken and Country subdued 403, they invade the Western parts of the Empire 410, are invaded by the Emperour 411, they again infest the Empire 415, but after several expeditions their Country is wholly reduced to the obedience of the Empire 420, they revolt 434, but are reduced again 436, some bickerings with them 462, they defeat the Ozi, who return from wasting the Empire 464.

 Burghmote what 282.

C.

Cantium whence fo called 133.
 Celtosichæ whence fo called 120.
 Ceorles who 285, the value of their Heads 306.
 Cerdick lands in Britain 5, begins the Kingdom of the West Saxons 168, dies 169.
 Charles King of the Franks invades Italy 68, makes a new donation to the See of Rome 64, conquers Desiderius King of the Lombards in Italy 70, is crowned King there 75, settles the Government 76, makes his Son his Colleague 77, is created Emperour by Pope Leo 80.
 Charzaria the Region submits to the Empire 419.
 Chichester when and by whom built 141.
 Clito and Clitanculi who 273.
 Cnut King of the Danes 238, wastes England 239, is Colleague with Edmund King of the English Saxons 141, is sole Monarch here 242, divides the Kingdom into four parts 243, beats the Swedes and Norwegians 245, suppresseth the Rebels in Scotland 247, his Character and Death, ibid. his Laws 322, &c.
 Constantine Porphyrogenitus Emperour 382, recalls Zoe his Mother 383, is seized on by Romanus 384, deposeth Zoe his Mother and marries 385, admits Romanus to usurp 386, deposeth him 390, assumes the Government 391, dies 392.
 Constantine X. succeeds 394, begins to reign with Basilus 407, is sole Emperour 423, his management of affairs and death 424.
 Constantine Monomachus Emperour sends an Army against the Trabelli 440, suppresses Maniazes the Usurper in Italy 422, defeats the Rossians 443, takes Anium and Armenia the Great 444, suppresses another Civil War 446, his Dominions invaded by the Turks 447, taking one of his Generals which he redeems 449, defeats the invading Patzinacæ 450, opposes the Turks 451, and Patzinacæ 452, with the whole force of the Empire 453, another expedition against them, and then a Truce for thirty

The TABLE.

ty years 455, his management of affairs and death 456.
 Conflantine Ducas XII. Emperour 463, dies 464.
 Corbati submit to the Roman yoke 422.
 Coritani who 133.
 Counts the antiquity of them 278.
 Cunibert King of the Lombards in Italy 51, kills Alachis the Usurper 52, dies 53.

D.

Danes a Catalogue of their Kings 115, their Wars with the Saxons 126, an account of their first arrival in Britain 183, the time when 185, several Battels fought with various success 190, they sack Winchester 192, invade Mercia 123, forcing the Saxons to purchase peace 198, which they break 199, a League enjoys 200, other Companies arrive 201, more 208, but are warmly received 210, most of them submit 214, they seize on York 216, wasting East England and other parts 229, which they conquer 235, and at length become Masters of all England 242, the beginning of their Monarchy here 243, domineering over the English 251, till the end of it 252, the Laws made by their Kings here 322, &c.
 Danegeld what 236, remitted 355, the original of it 328.
 Damoniit who 133.
 Deiri the several Kings thereof 145, its Limits 155.
 Desiderius King of the Lombards in Italy 66, invades the Exarchate 67, is beaten thence 68, delivers up himself and Kingdom 70.
 Diceratum what 342.
 Dikes four of them and where 209.
 Dimetæ who 133.
 Dower the form thereof 314, how much was wont to be assigned 315.
 Drinclean what 328.
 Dubonni who 133.
 Durotriges who ibid.

E.

Edgar Monarch of the English Saxons 222, his Naval preparations 223, he destroys the Wolves 225, dies 226, his Laws 316.
 Edmund Monarch of the English Saxons 220, is slaid at Puckle-Church in Gloucestershire 221.
 Edmund surnamed Ironside Monarch of the English Saxons 240, fights with the Danes 241, but divides the Kingdom with them and dies 242, his Laws 311, &c.

Edred Monarch of the English Saxons 221, dies, ibid.
 Edward the Elder conquers the East Angles 158, joins the Mercian Kingdom to his own 167, is Monarch of the English Saxons 207, quells a Rebellion at home 209, forces the Danes to truckle 214, subdues the Scots 215, dies, his Wife and Children, ibid. his Laws 301.
 Edward Monarch of the English Saxons 226, being slaid obtains the surname of the Martyr 227.
 Edward the Confessor Monarch of the English Saxons 252, Marries 253, banishes the Danes 254, remits the tax of Dane-geld 255, is kind to Foreigners, ibid. upon which civil Commotions arise 256, which end in the banishment of some Normans 258, he dies, his Character 264, being the last King of the West Saxon Family, ibid. his Laws 329, &c.
 Edwi Monarch of the English Saxons 222.
 Egbert King of the West Saxons in Britain seizes on the English Kingdom of the Jutes 138, on the East Saxons 143, and on the Northumbrian Angles, is the first English Monarch 187, dies, ibid.
 England when first fo called 187.
 English Saxon Monarchy began 187, overrun by the Danes 243, restored 252, Conquered by the Normans 270, their Government what 272, their Governours who 273, in Parliament 275, out of Parliament 276, the publick Division and Government of the Land 278, the Government of Cities and great Towns 281, the private Division and Government of the Land 282, the original of their Laws what 290, their Laws made by several Kings 291, &c. their valuation of Mens Heads 306, of Mens Oaths 307, their punishment for Crimes, and satisfaction what 308, their Money 309, Theft made capital by them 311, their manners & rites of Marriage 313, their forms of endowing 314, what, and how much they gave to their Wives 315, Ale and Alehouses in use with them 317, Juries 318, & 321, their Wealth and Taxes what 334, their Customs, Dispositions and Courage 335, their computation of Time 336, their manner of passing Lands and Writing 338, the antiquity of their Language 339.
 Ethelred Monarch of the English Saxons 192, opposes the invading Danes 195, dies 196.
 Ethelred Monarch of the English Saxons 227, buys off the invading Danes 228, pays a second sum to them 229, a third 230, masters them here 231, pays a fourth sum 233, raises a Tax for Shipping 234, quits his Kingdom.

The TABLE.

The TABLE.

237, recovers it and dies 240, his Laws, 316, &c.
Ethelwulf Monarch of the English Saxons 188, his Genealogy 191, and Wealth 192.
Eudocia Empress 454.
Exarchate subject to the Empire 38, seized on by the Lombards 62, delivered up to the Bishop of Rome with an account of Cities 65, invaded by the Lombards 67, but a new Grant thereof made to the See of Rome 69.

F.

FEE what 282, the antiquity of them 283.
Feoda whence so called 70, its Origine 71, the forfeiture and several sorts of them 73.
Fee-tail the antiquity of it 300.
Fews deadly or enmity the Law of them 312.
Folkland what 28, by whom tenable
285, its difference with Bockland 286.
Folcmote two sorts of them 282.
Franks invade Italy 64, give up the Ex-archate and Pentapolis to the Pope 65, another expedition thither 68, making a new donation to the See of Rome 69, they seize on Italy 70, settle the Government there 76, their King crowned by Pope Leo 80, they take all Italy except four Cities from the Empire 441.
Friburg what 288.
Fridgild what 308.

G.

GAdani who 133.
Gani who 238.
Gastald what 283.
Gepidae who and why so called 12.
Gefithcundmon who 295.
Gild the signification of it 299.
Gildwite what 323.
Glocester whence so called 171.
Godabert King of the Lombards in Italy
47, is slain by his Brother 48.
Godwin Earl of Kent 284, is privy to the death of Alfred 249, is made Earl of the West Saxons 251, assists in restoring of Edward 252, Marries his Daughter to him 253, he and his Sons take up Arms 256, and go into Flanders but are restored and he dies 258, his Issue 259, his obtaining of Boleham 262.
Gothi minors who 16.
Goths the original of them 7, their first excursions 10, their Habits 18, their Kingdom in Italy wholly destroyed 36.
Gregory Bishop of Rome 41.
Gregory II. absolves the Subjects of the Emperour from their Allegiance 58.

Gregory III. 59.
Greves who 281.

H.

HArdecnute King of Denmark 248, visits his Mother at Bruges 249, is the last King of the Danish Monarchs in Britain 250, dies 251.
Harold Monarch of the Danes in Britain 248, his way to secure himself 249, he dies 250.
Harold the Son of Godwin takes up Arms against King Edward 256, runs for Ireland, ibid. returning is restored to his Estate 258, chastizes the Welsh Rebels 260, is Shipwreckt 262, his Engagement with Duke William of Normandy 263, he is chosen Monarch of the English Saxons 265, defeats the Norwegians and Tostli his own Brother who invaded the Land 267, he engaging with Duke William is slain 269, several miscarriages of him 271.
Healsfange what 313.
Heasten the Dane arrives in Britain 201
but is cut off 202.
Hengist and Horsa with their Saxons arrive in Britain 90, & 130, when and where they landed 131, begin the Kingdom of the Jutes in Kent 133, cause a Massacre and are slain 134.
Heregeld what 334.
Hererocks who 277.
Heriot the rates of them 326.
Heruli their Kingdom in Italy 1, to the ruine of it 6, their original 13.
Hide of Land what 270.
Hildebrand King of the Lombards in Italy 61.
Hinguar and Hubba the Danes arrive in Britain 83, the reason of their coming 184, the time 185, where they landed,
193, are slain 199.
Hornegeld what 335.
Howell the Welsh King 219.
Hundred what and whence so called 278, the occasion of it 279, the Government thereof 280.
Hunns their original 14, the description of them 15.

I.

ICeni who and whence so called 133.
Ida begun the Kingdom of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain 143, his Character 144, Death 145.
Ina seizes on the Kingdom of the South Saxons in Suffex 141, being King of the West Saxons in Britain 177, writes the British and English by Marriage 178, his Laws 292, &c.
Indictions what 23.
Infangthef what 287.

Ingui-

Inguinaria Peltis what 39.
Inundations most severe 301.
Ireland invaded by Egfrid King of the Northumbrian Angles in Britain 152, the cause of it 153.
Irene the Empress dies in banishment 341.
Isaacus Comnenus saluted Emperour by the Army 454, assumes the Government 462, lays it down 463.
Italy overrun by Odoacer King of the Heruli, who is beaten by Theodorick
King of the Goths 6, who reigns there 19, but are wholly driven thence by Narces the Roman General 36, seized on by the Lombards 38, invaded by the Saracens 47, an expedition made thither by Constant the Emperour 49, Stirs among the Lombards there 56, invaded by the Franks 67, again 68, who seize on the Kingdom of the Lombards there 70, settle the Government 76, and their King being created Emperour reduces it into the form of a Province 80, all of it taken from the Roman Em-perour except four Cities 441.
Jutes their original 8, their first Seats 123, their name whence 124, their possessions in Britain 132, the beginning of their Kingdom in Kent 134, the end of it 138.

K.

KEnt whence so called 133, the Kingdom of the Jutes begun there 134, ended 138.
Kings of England how they styled themselves 273, the valuation of their Heads then 306, their usual Subsidies, Revenues and Profits 334.
Kingiton whence so called.

L.

LAshtite what 304.
Laws of the Lombards the first model by King Rotharis 47, the second by King Gremould 51, the third by King Liutprand 55, the fourth by King Lachis 61, their customary ones 70, &c.
The original of the English Saxon Laws what 290, of the Common Law 291, written Laws made by several of the English Saxon Kings 292, &c.
The Civil Law new modelled by Basilus and Leo VI. 379, 380.
Leiden whence so called 110.
Leo V. Emperour beats the Bulgarians 348, his character 349, he is murdered 350.
Leo VI. Emperour 374, bath his Forces defeated by the Bulgarians 375, his Wives 376, he sends a Land Army into the East 377, is excommunicated for marrying thrice, ibid. which is taken off 378, his Death 379, he new models

the Civil Laws 80.
Leth or Laths what 304.
Liutprand King of the Lombards in Italy 55, invades the Exarchate 56, turns it into a Dukedom 57, he besieges Rome 58, raises it 59, makes a League with the Church for twenty years 60, invades the Exarchate again and dies 61.
Lombards their original 14, their Kingdom erected in Italy 38, their Habit what 41, their Kingdom in Italy wholly destroyed by the Franks 70, they revolt from the Romans 417.

M.

Megbote what 308.
Man the Island 147.
Manchester whence so called 214.
Manichees being persecuted revolt from the Empire 363, wasting the dominions thereof 369, but are wholly overcome 370.
Meanvarri who 161.
Michael Rangabes Emperour 345, repells the invading Saracens 346, engaging with the Bulgarians is defeated 347, and turns Monk 348.
Michael Balbus forceth Leo to usurp 347, is made Patriarch and Comes Excubitorum 348, conspires against Leo 349, is saluted Emperour 350, his Character 351, a Rebellion against him 352, being besieged in Constantinople 353, is relieved by the Bulgarians and puts the Rebels to death 354, finishes the Civil War 355, Marries a veil'd Virgin 356,
dies 357.
Michael III. Emperour 363, makes War upon the Saracens but with all success 364, his Character 365, and death 368.
Michael IV. Emperour 430, makes his Nephew Cesar 431, makes a Truce with the Saracens in Egypt for thirty years 432, is very sickly 433, goes to Thesalonica 434, dies 436.
Michael Calaphates Emperour 437, turns Monk and bath his Eyes put out 439.
Michael Stratiaticus Emperour 457, his unkindness to the Souldiers 459, makes them conspire against him, which ends in his deposition 462.
Mortagon Prince of the Bulgarians relieves the besieged Emperour 354.

N.

Neultria what 56.
Nicephorus Emperour 341, makes War upon the Arabians 342, makes an expedition into Bulgaria 343, but is there overthrown and slain 344, his Character 345.
Nicephorus Phocas saluted Emperour by the Army 344, crowned at Constantinople

P P P

tinople 395, makes War upon the Saracens 346, leads an Army into Cilicia 397, engages the Russians to invade Bulgaria 398, is murdered 399.
Nova Scythia whence so called 8, & 120.

O.

OAths how valued by the English Saxons 307.
Odoacer King of the Heruli in Italy 1, takes courses to secure his Interest 2, conquers the Rugi 3, is beaten by Theodorick the Ostrogoth 4, burns the Suburbs of Rome 5, is slain 6.
Offadini who 133.
Ordeal what 257, the manner of Examinations by a three-fold Ordeal 324.
Ordovices who 133.
Ostrogoths whence so called 11, their Territories 17, their Kingdom begun in Italy 19, wholly destroyed 36.
Ouse what 209.

P.

Parliament English of whom it consisted 273, when summoned 474.
Patzinac invade Bulgaria 424, infect the Roman Coast 427, again 432, their Country where 449, quarrelling with the Empire are beaten 450, which ends in a Truce for thirty years, ibid. but they break it 452, defeating the Emperor's Army sent against them 453, but come short home 454, another Army sent against them and a Peace for thirty years 455, breaking it are forced to submit 462, they defeat the Wzi 464.
Peace of the King what 329.
Peuda 149, begins the Kingdom of the Mercian Angles in Britain 154, his management of affairs and death 160.
Pentapolis the Cities thereof 65.
Pipin the Father of Charles the French King invades Italy 64, whose Son is crown'd King thereof 77.
Port arrives in Britain 95.
Protofrator what 274.

R.

Rachis King of the Lombards in Italy 61, turns Monk 62.
Ravenna seized by Odoacer II. blocks up by Theodorick 5, the Goths are Masters of it 19, recovered for Justinian the Emperor by Narses 36, Governed by Exarchs 38, besieged by the Lombards 56, taken and turn'd into a Dukedom 57, recovered 58, once more besieged by the Lombards 61, and taken by them to the ruine of the Exarchate 62, which they could not long keep 63, being forced to quit it to the Pope 64, the Cities thereof 65.

Reafau what 199.
Regni who 133.
Relief what 327.
Repandune who 163, 198.
Robbers when so called 292, how many make a Troop of them, an Army how many, ibid.
Rollo with his Normans and Danes invade France 198, which they harass till Normandy 201, they come thither 208, but are warmly received 210.
Romanus seizes on Constantine the Emperor 384, Marrieth his Daughter to him 385, is crown'd Emperor himself, 386, crowns his Sons 387, is deposed and shaven 390.
Romanus the Boy sole Emperor 392, crowns his Son 393, dies 394.
Romanus IV. Emperor 424, makes an expedition into Syria 425, but returns with loss 426, which alters him for the worse 427, he is poisoned by Zoe the Empress 429.
Rossi who 365, invade Bulgaria 398, seize on the Country 400, but are defeated by the Emperor 404, cut off by the Patzinac 406.
Rotharis King of the Lombards in Italy 46, his Laws and Death 47.
Roxilani or Rusli who invade the Roman Coasts 389.

S.

SAC what 287.
Saifon and Saifoneag what 114.
Saracens invading the East are repell'd 346, again 352, they seize on the Island Crete 356, Sicily and Calabria 357, defeat Theophilus the Emperor's 359, invade the Territories of Cernate 360, beat the Emperor's Forces 361, and raise the City Amorium 362, waste the East 363, make another Incursion on the Roman Coasts 364, but in the next are beaten themselves 365, they of Tarsus renew their hostility 370, Dalmatia wasted by those of Carthage 371, those of Tarsus and Crete infect the Empire 372, they of Africk take Syracuse 373, another Incursion 375, one more 376, they infect the Sea Coast 377, renewing their excursions are defeated 378, but in the next adventure remain Victors 379, they make Peace with the Empire 383, they of Tripolis infect the Sea Coast 387, those of Syria defeated 388, they of Chalope beaten 391, their Country invaded but with loss to the Romans 392, they are beaten on all sides by the Romans 393, & 397, endeavouring deavouring to revolt are suppressed 400, they join with Bardas Sclerus the Ufurper 408, pay tribute to the Romans 409, they suppress the rebellious Persians 412, infecting the Sea Coast are defeated by the Roman Forces 424, they beat Romanus the Emperor 426, and waste the Empire 427, those of Africk infect the Islands 428, again 431, those of Sicily renew their Inroads 433, hire the Turks to help them against the Arabians 446, but are conquered by those Hiredlings 447.

Saxons their Original 8, their ancient Seats 122, their Name whence 124, a Catalogue of their Kings 125, their Wars with the Danes 126, and others 128, they take Ship for Britain 130, when and where they landed 131, their Possessions here 132.
Saxons East their Kingdom here 142, overthrown by Egbert King of the West Saxons 143.
Saxons South their Kingdom here 139, seized on by Ina King of the West Saxons 141.
Saxons West their Kingdom here 167, from Cerdick the first King to Egbert 187, from him to the death of Edward the last of that family 264.
Scandia its several Inhabitants 7.
Scote what 309.
Secundine 163.
Servi their Country where 440.
Shire what and whence so called 278.
Shiremore 281.
Silures who 133.
Simon Prince of Bulgaria quarrels with the Romans 375, and in Battel defeats them 376, then makes peace 381, but upon an Affront incamps near Constantinople 382, lays siege to Adrianople 383, thence to Constantinople again 384, defeating the Emperor's Forces 386, lays siege to Adrianople again 387, dies 388.
Skjoldinger what 9.
Slaves two sorts of them 284.
Soc what 287.
Stauracius Emperor 342, marries another man's Wife 343, invades Bulgaria 344, where being wounded turns Monk and dies 345.
Stephen Bishop of Rome goes into France 63, receives the Exarchate and Pentapolis from Pipin 65, dies 66.
Stonehenge 91.
Suevi their Seats where 17.
Suones Sittones whence so called 7.
Swane King of the Danes deposeth his Father 220, invades England 229, wastes it 235, becomes Master of most part thereof 236, is killed 237.

T.

Tainland what 286.
Team what 287, 334.
Thanes who 278, 286, the valuation of their Heads 306.
Theatres their Original 25.
Theft made capital 312, the chiefest vice of the English Saxons 334.
Theodora Wife to Theophilus 358, raises persecution in the East 363, gives an account of the Treasury 564, is shaven, ibid.
Theodora married to Zimifces 402.
Theodora Daughter of Constantine 424, is saluted Empress 438, reigns with her Sister Zoe 439, alone 456, dies 457.
Theodorich King of the Ostrogoths invades Italy 3, overthrows the Gepids and Bulgari 4, is made Colleague with Odoacer 6, sole Master of Italy 19, his way of Government 20, his acts of Mercy and Misifcence 25, 26, he subdues the Allemans 30, turns cruel 31, dies 33.
Theophilus Emperor 357, his Character 358, sends an Army into Lombardy 359, is beaten by the Saracens 360, turns Melancholy and dies 362.
Theophano her Parentage 391, being Empress marries Nicephorus Phocas 395, dislikes him 398, is banished by Zimifces 400.
Thrihingas what 281.
Thrymfa what 308.
Tithing what and whence so called 278.
Titiones who 36.
Toll what 287, anciently payable 314.
Triballi their Country where 440.
Trenobantes who and whence so called 133.
Turkill and other Danes arrive in Britain 234.
Turks assist the Saracens against the Empire 361, invade Bulgaria 375, invade the Empire 389, the Original of them 446, they defeat the Saracens and Arabians 447, send an Army into Media 448, which returns with a Roman General taken captive 449, make fresh Incursions 450, but with ill success 451, Civil Wars at home 454, they invade the Roman Territories 458.
Tufcia the Lombard Dukedom its demaens 70.
V.
VAluation of mens Heads 306.
Vesuvius its eruptions 26.
Villains whence so called 283.
Visigoths whence so called 11, their Kings and progresses 11, 16.
Vortigern King of the Britains 89, invites the Saxons thither 90, dies 92.

The TABLE.

W.

Wales the King thereof 103, the division of it 104, its ancient Inhabitants 133, the value of a Welshman's Head 293, 306, subject to the English Saxons and Danes 206, 247, Laws concerning them 321.

Wandals the Original of them 18.

Wapentack what and whence so called 280.

Were what 307.

Weregild 308.

Westrogoths whence so called 133.

William Duke of Normandy makes a visit to Edward King of England 257, engages with Harold for this Crown 263, sends to Harold to make good his promise 265, which being refused he intends to visit him 266, Lands, makes proposals and prepares for Battel 268, obtains the Victory 269, is crowned King here 270, turning out the English and preferring his Normans 271.

Wite what 307.

Z.

Zimices Emperour 399, reduces the Saracens to obedience 400, makes War upon the Bulgarians 403, conquers them and the Russians 406, is poisoned 407.

Zoe Emperess 424, poisoneth Romanus her Husband 429, Marries Michael IV. 430, is deposed by Michael Calaphates 437, restored 438, Married to Constantine Monomachus 440, dies 455.

F I N I S.